Marke that <sup>r</sup> means, by wh after Davids example we must grow in the knowledge of the word of God: is, First, meditation of <sup>r</sup> wh we have heard or read. Secondly, prayer for grace to believe and practise it. Thirdly, thanksgiving for grace received. Fourthly, godly conference thereof, one of vs with another. All these shall a man finde carefully practised by David and truly the greatest cause, why notwithstanding being so much preaching here is so little profiting in godlinesse, is <sup>r</sup> men before hearing, prepare not; in hearing pray not; after hearing, neither meditate thereof themselves; nor speake thereof unto others.

How to read the holy Scriptures or any booke of Divinitie with profit.

First we are diligently to marke the Theme, question or maine point wh<sup>ch</sup> is handled in that booke or Chapter which we reade, and how the discourse of y<sup>e</sup> Author tendeth to prove or illustrate it, with y<sup>e</sup> severall argumentes wh<sup>ch</sup> are produced to this end. Of if we want skill to doe this, yet we may observe, if not by our owne collection, yet by helpe of the Authors p<sup>ar</sup>ties, the forme & substance of all wh<sup>ch</sup> he delivereth in the contents of y<sup>e</sup> Chapters or Sections. wh<sup>ch</sup> will give great light to y<sup>e</sup> understanding of all the rest, when as we know the maine scope at wh<sup>ch</sup> he aimeth, & how he frameth his discourse, & what argumentes & testimonies he useth to prove or inferre y<sup>e</sup> point wh<sup>ch</sup> he propoundeth. To wh<sup>ch</sup> purpose, it is also profitable to observe (as neere as we can) what was the occasion of the Authors writing, and to consider y<sup>e</sup> circumstances of the persons, to whose use y<sup>e</sup> writings were intended, & of the times wherein he wrote. wh<sup>ch</sup> the state of the people & liued in the, unto wh<sup>ch</sup> times they were most addrested, and in what vertues & duties they were most defectiue; and how the Author exhorteth downe y<sup>e</sup> one, and perswadeth them to the other. The order also and method wh<sup>ch</sup> he useth, y<sup>e</sup> coherence of the parts of his discourse, and how he passeth from one point to another, will give much light to y<sup>e</sup> understanding of what we read; wh<sup>ch</sup> if we neglect, & confusedly goe on, jumbling all together, we shall make even those things, which are plain & easie, hard & intricate; we shall observe little in much reading, & remember less, and reape little profit by much paines. /

TO THE RENOWNED PIERES

and noble Lordes, the Consuls, and the

I. Caluine.

Feuer it seemed expedient that the pageants of vertues should be shewed openly to the imitation of others (which might bee a spurre as well to the lasie lingerers, as to the restie runners): surely the slouthfull dealing and sluggish behaiour which is vsed in these our corrupt daies maketh it seeme necessarie: that the greater parte of men which rather start backe, then willingly step forward, should be constrained at the least with shame of negligence to doe their dutie. For we see euery man busilie bent to a certaine contention who shal excell in wicked practises, and that both in priuate and publike affaires: that no Monarch doth seeme to be inferiour to the nations that border vpon him either in policie, or vigilancie, or power, or bold attempt, whereby hee may enlarge the boundes of his empire: that no citie or common weale doeth giue place to any in craftinesse and all captious dealing: that no man is the second in subtiltie among the proud and ambitious: finally there is no man which hath not conspired with his company, and that in the way of contention, slyly to incite the rest as it were with a becke to all vitious vanitie, and hee that is ringleader in all naughtines soonest stirreth vp other to his lewdnes, whereas in the rankest route of ribalds is scarce one found out that fauoureth honestie: which maketh me thinke it very profitable that such rare vertues as sometime raigne in noble personages, should be aduanced to the lostie theater or stage of due commendation, to the intent that they being spied a far of might allure the greater number to like them and liue accordingly. And this I confesse (right honourable) was the cheifest cause that moued me to publish this my labour abroad, vnder the title of your names. For although I shall perswade my selfe to haue profited very well, if any that begin of their owne accord to creepe forward, shalbe encouraged by mee to runne faster: yet did not I so muche respecte this, as that I might perswade other to ioyne hands with you, or at the least to tread the same path that you doe. Notwithstanding I haue not purposed to recite as out of a rolle all the godly qualities wherwith you are thoroughly furnished. only it shal suffice at this time to set forth h one vertue wherwith you haue bound to your honours as with a more holy bond, as well mee, as diuers other faithfull seruants of Iesus Christe. This one thing is worthy highly to bee praysed that five yeeres when as an horrible feare hadde affrighted the mindes of all men in euery place: when as the ouerthrowe that our enemies hadde giuen vs did threaten a miserable ruine to the Churches throughout Germany and almost an vtter extinguishing of the Gospell, you euen at that time beeing placed in the fore front of the battaile stode stoutly to the free confission of your faith, which was hated to death, and retayned with all constancie

THE EPISTLE.

Ande that sincere doctrine of pietie which before you received: which is a manifest argument that when you were tossed with greuous cares and dangerous turmoyles, you desired nothing more then to fight manfully vnder Christs banner. But that which followeth will surely make your names immortall: if you doe not only set out amongest your selues the true worship of God and imploy your faithful labour, to containe your citizens within the sheepfold of Christ:
 but also gather together the disperfed relikes of his church, thrust out of nations which are as it were members of the same alrent and pulled in peeces. Doubtles it did greatly reioyce my heart (considering the troublefom time) to heare that the true worshippers of God, which fled in exile from England & other countries, were gently receiued and entertained among you and that you did not onely releaue and ease their heauie banishment but that you had also a due consideration of the glory of the soane of God, in so much that you made his Gospel to be sounded in your citie, euen by the tongues of aliants, and that in a strange language. The like courtesie was shewed of late by the Magistrates of Tigurine to the afflicted citizens of Lo. whom they did not onely receiue and foster within the walles of their Citie when at home they could not worship God as they would: but also erected a Temple for them wherein they might celebrate Gods holy seruice: neither were they diswaded by the diuersitie of tongues from suffering Christ to speake Italian euen in the midst of Tigurine but I let them passe to come againe to that I was about to say of you. As soone as I vnderstood that your courtesie stretched so farre as to suffer my countymen to haue a holy congregation in your citie perceiuing my selfe bound vnto you by a priuate benefit: I thought good to testifie my thankfull hart by this gift which now I present vnto you. For as the condition of our countrie men is rightly to be lamented, who dwelling in their natiue soyle, seeme by the tyrannous fieredie of the Pope to be cleane banished from Christs kingdome:
 so on the contrary parte, it is not a little to bee reioyced at that they haue a resting place granted them in a strang countrie, where they may render due honour vnto the true God. And surely this holy hospitalitie which you haue shewed, not so much towards men as to Christ him selfe, shall be a meane as I trust, to moue God to power his rare benefites vpon you, and stil to continue his liberality towards you which do alreadie flourish in all prosperitie. Doubtlesse it constrained mee (as I signified before) to dedicate this my booke vnto you, which is a Commentarie vpon the Harmonie made of three Euangelists:
 in making whereof I haue taken some paines which no lesse fidelitie then industry. But as it is to small purpose to declare how seriously I haue trauailed here in to do I submit my selfe to other mens iudgements, for the learned, wise, and discrete Readers, who as they take great delight in the cōmon vtilitie, so they be not a hame like rude and barbarous saytises, to learne and augment their knowlege by reading and studie. But as for peruers and ouerthwart wranglers, I little esteeme, I meane not cowardly Mōsters, who for the maintenance of the Popes tyranny fight in openplace against vs, but also those vnnaturall drones which being mingle d among vs, desire nothing more, then cleane to extinguish all light of learning, to this intent that they may cloake and couer their owne ignorance. For although like dogs they despitfully barke at me, yet will I vse

DEDICATORIE.

this exception alwaies, that I need not submit my selfe to their censure or iudgement, eyther by the law of God or of men, which are not onely to be kept vnderlike children for their blamefull and infamous vnskilfulnes: but also most seuerly to be punished for their malicious obstinacie, and too stubborne impudencie. But what soeuer they say, I trust the better sort will graunt, that it is lawfull for me to acknowledge without arrogancie, that faithful labour, which I haue employed to the profit of Gods Church. There came forth two yeeres since the Gospell of Iohn, with my interpretation, which I trust hath not been fruitelesse. And thus like an apparitor, I haue endeouored to my power, to set forth Christ riding princelike in his foure wheeled chariot, very gloriously: By reading of which worke, when the gentle readers haue profited themselves, they will not loath to confesse, that they haue not studied it in vaine: which Euangelicall history being described and set forth by foure witnesses, appointed by God himselfe, I doe not without cause compare vnto a chariot, for of this sweete and pleasant consent God seemeth purposely to haue made as it were, a triumphant chariot for his sonne, out of which he might plainly appeare to be scene of all his faithfull people, & by the swiftnes wherof he might lightly passe and as it were raunge ouer the whole world. Neither doth Augustine vnfitly compare the foure Euangelistes to trumpets, the noyse wherof doth sound in all coasts, that the Church of Christe being summoned out of the foure quarters of the world, might flocke and gather together from the East and the Weste, from the South and the North, vnto an holy consent of faith. Wherefore their absurd curiositie is the lesse to be borne with al who being not content with these Gospels (which be as it were proclamations proceeding from heauen) thrust out their owne toyes, and corrupt imaginations, which do nothing but defile the puritie of faith, and cause Christes name to be scorned and had in derision of the vngodly. As for you, which doe farre excel the common sorte, since you detest in minde all that corrupt leuen, wherewith the true sinceritie of the Gospell is infected, and shewe your selues to delight in nothing more then in maintaining and allowing the plaine and simple doctrin, as it is set forth by Christ himselfe: I am not onely perswaded that you will very wel like of this my watchful worke, which expoundeth the treasure of glad tidings: but also I haue a good hope, that this signe or token of my good will and loue to you ward, will be aswell acceptable, in that I haue dedicated the same vnto you. Thus I bid you farewell, right honorable Lordes, and wishe that Christ may direct you with his holy spirit strengthen you with his power preserue you vnder his protection and enrich your Citie and common weale with his plenteous benediction. At Geneva, the first of Aug. The yeere of our Lordes natiuitie,

The end of the Table.

TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE
Fraunces Earle of Bedford,

Lords of her Maiesties most honorable priuie Counsell grace and peace from God, with the encrease of that true honour, which is from God and lasteth for euer.

He choice (right honorable) whiche Luke the Euangelist made, in dedicating this historie of the gospel, which hee wrote to that noble man Theophilus, and which that man of worthie memory M. Iohn Caluine tooke in dedicating these his labours to the Lords of Frankeford, driueth me to dedicate this my small labour of translating this booke into the English tongue, and though it is but little that I haue done in comparison of the labors of the other two, and not woorth the offering to men of great estate: yet least that I should seeme singular in dissenting from these two singular instruments in the Church of God, and that in one and the selfe same booke, I haue presumed to make bolde of your Lordships name, hoping that your H. will not mislike to haue it written in the forehead of this booke with noble Theophilus and the Lords of Frankeford, specially sith that I doe it in testimonie of my dutifull loue to you, for the manifolde grace of GOD in you, and benefites which I haue receiued from you. Men doe commonly in their Epistles write, either in the commendation of the worke or in the prayse of their patrone, or in discharging of themselues of the discredite which their enemies would lay vpon them: but I craue pardon of your honour if in studying to bee short, I omit these thinges. For first the verye name of the gospell of Iesu Christe, and then the names of Matthewe, Marke, and Luke the Euangelists, & of M. Caluine the gatherer of the Harmonie & the writer of the Commentarie, do yeeld more credite and commendation to the matter, then all that I can say of it all the dayes of my life. Only this I say of M. Caluines labours here that in my simple iudgement it is one of the profitablest workes for the church that euer he did write, Next for your praises, as you like not to heare them, so I will not offend you in setting them down nor giue other occasion to condemne me of flatterie. They which haue best knowen you, say, that you began a good course in your youth that you witnessed a good confession in the late time of persecution, that your constancie hath beene testified by your troubles at home, and trauels in forraine countries you haue continued your profession in the middest of your dignitie, Lordships, and liuing left by your parents and in the seat of gouernment, wherein our Soueraigne and most gracious Queene hath placed you, not falling asleepe in securitie in this so peacable a time. My good L. continue to the ende, so shall you bee safe. I speake not this as if it were your owne strength that hath holden you vp al this while, but meditate somtimes. I pray you vpon the 71. Psalme, and pray that Lord as D. did, who kept you in your youth that he will keepe you in your old age, now that your head is hoare and hayres gray And I beseech the mighty Lord to thrust them forward which are drawen back by their youthly affections & to raise vp them that fell away for feare of troubles & to waken those which in this quiet and calme time do sleepe in securitie, or waxe wanton with the wealth of the worlde, that we may meeete the Lorde with true humilitie and earnest repentaunce, to see if hee will bee intreated to continue

The argument of the Gospell of Iesus Christ, according as it is sette forth by MATHEWE, MARKE, and LVKE,

THAT we may read this Euangelicall hystorie to our profite and commoditie, is (shall not be litle anauailable to vnderstand the sence of this word EVANGELI-LIVM, which we call in English the GOSPEL: for thereby we shall easily discerne what mooued these heavenly witnesses to commit these things to wryting, and to what ende all things that they haue wrytten, are to be referred. For these hystories were not so named by other men, but that the authours themselues did so intitile them it is manifest by Marke: which sayeth in plaine woordes that he declareth the beginning of the Gospel of Iesus Christ, Moreover the prefecte and plaine definition of <sup>the</sup> Gospell is gathered specially out of a certain place in Paule, where he saieth that it was promised of GOD in the scriptures by the Prophets as concerning his son which was borne of the seede of Dauid, Rom. 1. 3 and declared mightely to be the sonne of God through the spirit of sanctification by the rising againe of <sup>the</sup> deade. First he sheweth that it is a testimonie of saluation offered which was promised long agoe to the fathers by continuall successe of ages, wherein doeth appare a plaine difference betweene those promises which did hold in doubt the mindes of the faithfull, and those glad tidings whereby God witnesseth that he hath now througely performed all thinges which before he would haue them to hope for. Like as a little after the same Paule sayeth that the iustice of God is sette forth in the same Gospell which before was signified by the lawe and the Prophets. And therefore in an other place, the 2. Cor. 5 Apostle calleth it an ambassage wherein is daily declared vnto men a reconciliation which is once for all concluded betweene God and the world, by the death of Christ, He signifieth also that Christ is not onely a pledge of all good things that were graunted vnto vs by God but also that in him they are fully and wholly offred vnto vs, according as he sayeth else where, that al the promises of God are fulfilled in Christ euen so be it Amen. And doubtlesse that free adoption whereby we are made the children of God as it proceedeth from the euer lasting good will of the father so it is opened vnto vs in that that Christ (who is the onely natural son of God) taketh our flesh vpon him did chuse vs to be his brethen. Neither ought we to seeke any where else, but only in the sacrifice of his death expiation or blessing where with our sinnes are blotted out: so that the crosse or sentence of death cannot fall vpon vs, Righteousnesse, saluation and perfect felicity haue a sure foundation in his resurrection, Wherefore <sup>the</sup> Gospell may be defined to be a solemne publishinge or proclamation, where in the son of God is declared to haue beene offred vppon in the flesh to the intent that hee might renew the wicked world and restore men that were dead, to life. Neither is it without cause called good & glad tidings since in it is comprehended <sup>the</sup> summe of our felicityes for the end thereof is that it, hauing begun in vs the kingdome of God and hauing abolished the corruption of our flesh might bring vs being renewed through the spirit vnto the celestial & heavenly glory. In which sense it is oft times called the kingdome of heauen, and a reparation of a blisseful life, atchieued by Christ & sometimes it is called the king- Mar. 1. 3

THE ARGUMENT.

16. 16. dom of God. As when Marke sayeth that Ioseph looked for the kingdome of God, doubtlesse it is to bee vnderstoode of the cominge of M<sup>ss</sup>.ias: whereby it is manifest that the name of the Gospell dooth properly pertaine to the Newe Testament: and that those wryters speake very confusely, which thinke it to be like common to all ages, and that the prophets may as aptly be called ministers of the Gospell, as the Apostles. Christi woordes sound farre otherwise who making mention that the law and the Prophets were of force till the cominge of Iohn, declareth that then v<sup>y</sup> Kingdome of God began to be preached. And Marke (as before was mentioned) significth that the Gospell did beginne with the preachinge of Iohn: but this name and title was not without good aduisement giuen to these 4 histories, wherein is declared, v<sup>y</sup> Christe to take vpon him v<sup>y</sup> office & function of a mediator. For since in the birth death and resurrection of Christ is comprised the sum of our saluation, & they are the very matter wherof it doeth consist, they may very well & fitly be called Euangelists. that is to say, bringers of merrye newes, whiche portraite out before our eyes Christe sent of his father, so that by faith we may acknowledge him to be the only authour of our felicitie. The force and effecte of his coming is more plainly put downe in other bookes of the Newe Testament. And Iohn in this respect differeth farre from the other three who is wholly occupied in expressing the vertue of Christ, and the fruite that we reape thereby where as the rest stand more vpon this point that our Christ is the sonne of God which was promised to be the redemer of the world. In dede they doe teache heere and there the doctrine of Christes office, that we may be certified of his fauour towards vs, and to what ende he was giuen vnto vs: but this (as I sayde) is the cheefest matter they handle, that Christe Iesus did fully finish all thinges in his owne person what soeuer was promised by God euer since the beginning of the world. For their purpose and intent was not by their wrytings to abolish & destroy the lawe & v<sup>y</sup> Prophets as diuers brainesicke persons doe vanely dreame, that the Old Testament hath bene to none effecte euer since v<sup>y</sup> reueritie of the heavenly wisdom hath beene reuealed vnto vs by Christe and his Apostles. Nay they rather pointing out Christe vnto vs as it were with a finger put vs in minde to seeke at his handes what soeuer the lawe and the Prophets haue ascribed vnto him. if herefore then wee shall fruitefully and effectually read the Gospell when we shall learne to conuerse it with the promises of the olde Testament. As concerning the three Euangelists which nowe I take in hand to interpret. Mathewe is sufficiently knowne, and some thinke Marke to haue liued frimarily with Peter as his scholl<sup>r</sup>: and to haue receiued the Gospell which he wrote word by word out of Peters mouth, so that he supplid ouerly the roume of the Scribe or Notarie. But this matter needeth no curious disputation for it lieth appertaineth vnto vs to knowe more, then that he is a lawfull witnesse ordained of God and that he publisheth nothing in wryting, but that which was reuealed vnto him & putte into his hand by the holy Ghost. But Ieromes opinion seemeth to haue small grounde, who thinketh his Gospell to be a brieue summe, drawne out of the Gospell of Mathewe. For he differeth from him in handling his matter euen in the enterance: neith<sup>r</sup> doth he obserue the same Methode that Mathewe doeth, & he reckoneth vpp<sup>e</sup> diuers thinges leste vntoucht of the other and some thinges mentioned in Mathewe, he declareth more at large. I thinke it more probable, and so may I gather by the worke it selfe, that he had neuer seene Mathewes booke when he wrote his owne, much lesse did he of purpos<sup>e</sup> make an Epitome or Abridgement of it. And the very same doe I iudge of Luke. For, as concerning the clauses wherein they seeme to differ, I thinke not that they brought them in of setse purpose,

THE ARGVMENT.

But when they all determined truly and faithfully to set forth those things which they had thorowly knowne and approoued, every one of them followed what order hee thought best himselfe. And like as this came to passe, not by blinde chance & fortune, but by the diuine providence of God: euen so the holy Ghost ministred vnto them a marueilous consent, vnder a contrary stile & forme of wryting. The which Harmony it selfe, were sufficient to confirme their credits, had they not else where receiued greater & more stedfast authoritie. Now as for Luke he credibly witnesseth of himselfe, that hee was a companion of Paule continually conuersant with him. But that which Eusebius reporteth, is very childish & that Paule was the true author of Lukes Gospell, because in a certaine place he maketh mention of his owne Ghospel. As though it were not manifest by that which ensueth in the text that Paule speaketh of his common preaching and not of any one booke wrytten. For he sayeth: For the which Gospell I suffer affliction as an euill doer, euen vnto bondes. And who knoweth not that Paule was accused not for any Booke he had Compiled, but for that hee was a Minister of the woorde and preached openly the Gospell of Christ: whereby it appeareth that Eusebius was a man very painful but of smal iudgment since without diligent heed he heapeth vp together so many senceles notes wherof I thought good to admonish the readers lest they chance to stumble at such like blockes, which lie heere and there scattered throughout all his workes. Moreouer, because I haue chosen a kinde of interpretation, which may perhaps displease diuers at the first blush, I meant to yeeld a reason of my doing trusting thereby to satisfie the vnpartial and godly readers. This first is without controuersie, that none of the three Euangelists, can be truly & rightly interpreted, vnlesse he be conferred with the two other. Wherefore faithfull and skilfull Interpreters, herein take much paines, that all things may be reconciled which are spoken by the three Euangelists. But since that meane wittes cannot easily conferre the Euangelists together, whilest still they turne and retorne from the one place to the other I thought this brieue Methode would seeme pleasant & profitable, if by a continuall processe or discourse like as it were in one table the three histories were ioyned together: wherein the readers may see and discern at once what is dissonant and agreeable to them all. So I will ouerslip nothing which is wrytten by any one of the three: and I will declare in one discourse what soeuer is handled by diuers. Now, whether my paines be well bestowed (as I hope) or no, let euery manne iudge according to the profite he taketh in reading. Truly it was so farre from my thought to catch after praise and commendation by my newe inuention that I freely confesse (as be commeth euery good nature) that in this manner of interpretation I haue imitated other. And I most if all men followed Bucer, a man of holy memorie and a famous teacher in the church of God, who (in my iudgment) hath traveled therein so no small purpose. And like as he hath had great furtherance by the diligence of ancient wryters, which haue taken paines in the same studie before him: so I professe my selfe to haue bene as much eased by his labour and industrie. But where as I differ from him in some place (the which liberty I graunted my selfe ofte as seemed necessary,) I thinke that he himselfe, if he now liued on earth would not be offended with it.

Luke 1.

Matthew

Marke.

Orasmuch as many have taken in hande : to set fourth the storie of those things, whereof wee are fully perswaded.

2. As they haue deliuered them vnto vs, which from the beginning sawe them their selues and were Ministers of the word.

3. It seemed good also to mee (most noble Theophilus) as soone as I had searched out perfectly all things from the beginning, to write vnto thee thereof from point to point.

4. That thou mightest acknowledge the certaintie of those things, whereof thou hast beene instructed.

Onely Luke doth make a preface to his Gospell, that breifly he may shew the cause whereby he was moued to write. That he speaketh to one man, it seemeth to bee absurd : when that rather it was his dutie by open sounde of trumpet to call all men together to the faith, Therefore it seemeth not to bee conuenient, that hee shoulde dedicate to his Theophilus onely that doctrine which is not proper to one or other, but common for all. Hereof it came to passe, that diuers thought it to be a name appellatiue, and all godly men to be called Theophilos, of louing God : but the Epitheton that is ioyned with it differeth from that opinion. Neyther yet is that absurditie to be feared, which constraigned them to seeke such refuge. Neyther doth the doctrine of Paule lesse belong to all men, because that of his Epistles, he directed some to certain Cities. and some to certaine men. And truly if wee considered the estate of their times, we should confesse that Luke heerein did godly and wisely. There were tyrants ready on every side, which with feare and terrors woulde hinder the course of wholesome doctrine. This gaue an occasion or libertie to Sathan and his ministers, to scatter cloudes of errors, which might dimme the pure light. And because that in keeping the puritie of the Gospell, the common sorte were little carefull, and fewe did diligently consider what Sathan would deuise; and howe much danger lay hidde in such deceites. Therefore as euerie one did excell other with rare fayth and singular giftes of the holy Ghost, so with greater studie and diligence hee ought to apply himselfe, that hee might as much as in him lyeth preserue the doctrine of godlines pure and free from all corruption. Such (as holy laycers vpp of bookes, wherein lawes are written) were chosen of GOD, faythfully to deliuer to their posteritie the heauenly doctrine committed to them. Wherefore Luke doth dedicate his Gospell to Theophilus, that hee should faithfully keepe the same, which things Paul also doth enioyne and charge his Timothy with 2. Ep. 1. 14. & cap 3. 14.

1. For as much as many. He seemeth to alleadge that, as a cause of his writing, which rather should haue withdrawne him from writing. For it were but a needeleffe labour, to write againe a hitorie already entreated of by many, if they had done their dutie, Neither doth he charge them with any word, eyther of deceite, or of negligence, or of any other fault: Therefore it is as much as if he should say, he would doe a thing already done. I answere, although he spareth them that had written before, yet doth he not thoroughly allow the labours of all of them. Hee doth not plainly say, that they haue written of things slenderly proued, but challenging the certain knowledge of these things vnto himselfe, modestly doth disable some of them of certaine and vndoubted knowledge. If any doe object, that if they had erred, hee should haue sharply inuicied against them: I answere againe, it may be, that they did a litle offend and that of an vnaduised zeale, rather then of malice: and therefore, that there was no cause why he should more vehemently haue enforced himselfe against them. And it is credible, that there were certaine pamphlets, which were not then so hurtfull: but if they had not bene speedily preuented, they might afterwar des haue more greiuously annoyed the fayth. But it is worth the labour to note, how God by Luke hath applyed a remedie against those superfluous writings, and that by his maruailous counsell, he hath brought to passe, that by common consent, all other being reiected, these onely doe keepe their credit, in which his reuerent maiestie most manifestly doth shine: And so much lesse to be borne with is the dotting folly of them, which thrust into the world fond and filthy fables, vnder the name of Nichodemus, or any other.

We are fully perswaded. The participle, which Luke doth vse, doth signifie things very well approued and voide of doubt: in the which the olde interpreter hath bene oft deceiued. And by this vnskillfulnesse hee hath left vs diuers excellent places corrupted. Amongst the which is that place of Paule, Rom. 14. 5. Where hee commaundeth, that euery man be fully perswaded in his minde: Least the conscience being tossed with doubtfull opinions, should wauer, and neuer stand sure. Thereof also commeth the nowne Plerophorias, which he corruptly hath translated plenitudinem, i. a fulnes, when that it is a certaine and strong perswasion grounded of faith, in the which godly mindes doe safely take their rest. And there is, as I sayd, a secret contrariety: For he challenging vnto himselfe the credit of a faithfull witnessse doth take away the credit from others, that deliuer contraries. This phrase (Iner nos) amongst vs, signifieth as much as apud nos, with vs. But hee buildeth fayth, as it seemeth, very slenderly, that buildeth vpon the report of men, which ought to be built vpon the onely word of God, and the full perswasion and assurance of fayth is wrought and sealed by the holy Gholt. I answere, that fayth is not satisfied with any testimonies of men: except the auctoritie of GOD doe hold the chiefest places. Yet, where the inward confirmation of the spirit doeth goe before, there may some place bee giuen them in the historical knowledge of things. I call that historical knowledge, which wee haue conceaued either by our own beholding of things don, or by the speach of others. For we may not giue lesse care to them that are eye witnesses of the manifest works of God, then we are to giue credit to experience. Adde this also, that Luke followeth not priuate aucthours, but thē that were also ministers of the word: By which cōmendation hee extolleth them about the degree of mans aucthority. For he sheweth, that they vttered the Gospell to him, to whom the Lord had cōmitted the office of preaching the same. From hence also riseth that assured safety, wherof he speaketh a little after, which vnlesse it leane vpon God, may easily be disturbed. It is of great waight & force, that he calleth thē ministers of the word, of whom he receiued his Gospell. For the faithfull doe gather hereof, that against witnesses no exception can be taken (as the Lawyers say) and which it is not lawfull to refuse. Erasmus (who out of Virgill borrowed that which he translated to haue been some part) did not sufficiently weigh, how much the calling of God is to be esteemed, or of what aucthoritie the same is. For Luke doth not speake prophanely: but hee biddeth vs in the person of his Theophilus to looke vpon the commaundement of Christ, that wee may with reuerence heare the sonne of God, speaking vnto vs by his Apostles. If any man had rather take and vse this phrase Word, for the thing or substance, which is Christ, let him vse his owne sence. That some doe vnderstand by it Christ, it shoulde please mee very well, but that it were forced against the sence of the text, and too farre stretched. It is much that he sayth, they were beholders or eye witnesses. But in that he calleth them ministers he exempteth them from the common order of men, to that ende that our sayth might haue his stay in heauen, and not on earth.

This in summe is Lukes munde, that hauing faithfully ingraued in letters that which thou hadst learned before with liuely voyce, thou mightest the more safely repose thy selfe in the doctrine which thou hast receiued whereby it doth appeare, that God doth euery where prouide, leaui wee depending vpon the doubtfull wordes of men, our sayth shoulde sayle, or wauer. Whereby the vnthankfulness of the worlde is so much the ielic excusable, which as it were of purpose rashly desireth strayed and dispersed rumours: whereby it might bee vnconstant, and dooth wilfully forsake so great a benefit of GOD. But let vs holde that excellent difference, which the Lorde hath put betweene them, least foolish light beliefe doe vaunt it selfe for faith. In the meane while let vs suffer the worlde, as it is worthy to be deceiued with the baights of foolish curiosnes, so to commit and giue ouer it selfe willingly to the deceites and iuglings of Sathan.

3. Assuone as I had searched out perfectly. The olde translation hath (omnia affecto) I hauing followed all things. The Greeke worce is metaphorically deduced from them, which treade in others steppes, least ought shoulde escape them. For Luke woulde declare vnto vs a diligent studie and manner of learning. Euen as Demosthenes vseth the sameword, when as he boasteth himselfe to haue bene so diligent in examining the embassage, which hee accuseth: saying that hee saw all things that were done, as if he himselfe had bene a beholder of them.

Matthew

Marke.

5. In the time of Herod, king of Iudea there was a certaine priest, named Zacharyas, of the course of Abia, and his wife was of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elizabeth.

6. Both were iust before God, and walked in all the commaundements and ordinances of the Lord with out reproofe.

7. And they had no child because that Elizabeth was barren, and both were well stricken in age,

8. And it came to passe, as hee executed the priestes office before God, as his course came in order,

9. According to the custome of the priestes office, his lot was to burne incense when hee went into the temple of the Lord.

10. And the whole multitude of the people were without in prayer, while the incense was burning.

11. Then appeared vnto him an Angell of the Lord, standing on the right side of the Altar of incense

12. And when Zacharyas saw him, he was troubled, and feare fell vpon him.

13. But the angell said vnto him feare not Zacharyas, for thy prayer is heard, and thy wife Elizabeth shall beare a sonne, & thou shalt call his name Iohn.

Luke very aptly doth begin his Gospell with Iohn Baptist, euen as if hee that shoulde speake of the light of the day, should beginne w.th the morning : For like vnto the morning he did goe before the sonne of righteousness, which now was about to rise. Other also make mention of him, but they describe him executing of his office. But Luke doth purchase authoritie to him not yet borne, when that hee declareth the wonders of diuine power euen in his infancie, and sheweth him to be appointed of God to bee a Prophet, before that men could knowe what manner of man hee shoulde bee, And for this purpose he doth it, that with greater reuerence he might be heard, when that he shoulde take vpon him that publike office, to go forth for the aduancement of the glory of Christ.

5. In the time of Herod. Hee was the sonne of Antipater, whom his father did promote euen to the kingdome, for the augmentation of the which, hee had so great care, and did with so great diligence labour, that therefore there was giuen vnto him the surname of Great. Certaine doe thinke that hee was named heire of Luke, because hee was the first foireine King that raigned there, and therefore to be a fitte time for their deliuerance, because that their scepter was now transposed to a strange nation. But they that so say, doe not very well vnderstand the Prophecie of Iacob : whereas the comming of the Messias is not simply promised after that the Iewes shall bee deprived of their empyre : But after that the same shoulde bee taken away from the tribe of Iuda: neither yet in this holy Patriarkes minde, that the tribe of Iuda should be deprived of their Princely gouernance, before the comming of Christ: But that the rule of the people should bee established in that stocke, vntill Christes comming: in whose person, the sure euerlasting continuance of the same should be. And although that what time the Machabeyes flourished, the tribe of Iuda was brought into a narrow streight, and shortly after Duke Iohn, the last of that stocke was slaine yet notwithstanding was not that rule altogether extinguished: For yet there remained the Synedrion, as it were a chosen counsel of the stocke and posteritie of Dauid, whose auctoritie was great: And did continue to Herod, who with most horrible slaughter of Iudges, reuenged punishment layd vpon him before: because that he being condemned of murder, was constrained to goe into voluntary exile, that he might escape the losse of his head. The reigne therefore of Herod, because he was a straunger brake not the scepter of the tribe of Iuda, but because that what residue of renoume soeuer there remained in that stocke, by his theeuish dealing was abolished: That the kingly dignity fayled long before, and that the rule by little and little fell almost downe: that discontinuance doth not repugne with the prophesie of Iacob. For to the outward shew God hath promised two diuerse things, the throane of Dauid to last for euer: that after it were ouerthrowne, he would repayre the ruines of the same: the power of that kingdome to be euerlasting: and yet notwithstanding a young slippe should rise out of the stocke of Iesse: both the which things ought to be fulfilled.

God did suffer the rule which he had erected in the tribe of Iuda to be kept downe for a season, that the greater might be the diligence of the people, to hope for the kingdome of Christ. When the hope of the faithfull was as it were cut off by the destruction of that chosen counsell, sodenly the Lorde shone forth. And now this belongeth to the course of the historie, whilst that the time of this thing being done, was noted. But not rashly, vnder the name of the king was also noted the miserable state of the time, that the Iewes might know, that they should turne their eyes vnto the Messias, if that they assuredly had in estimation the league of God.

Zacharias of the course of Abia. It is knowne by sacred historie, that the families of the Priestes were deuided by Dauid into certaine orders. In the which thing Dauid attempted nothing against the commaundement of the lawe, God did appoynt the Priesthood to Aaron and his Sonnes, the rest of the Leuites he appointed to lesser offices: In that thing nothing was altered of Dauid: but his deuice was partely to beware least any thing shoulde bee done tumultuously among the people: And partely to preuent ambition, and also to bring to passe, that a few should not take all the charge to themselues, and the greater part sit idle at home. And in that distribution Abia, the Son of Eliazar possessed the right place. Zachary therefore was of the Priestly stocke, and also of the posteritie of Eliazar, who succeeded his Father in the high Priestes office. But how Elizabeth, when that she was of the daughters of Aaton could be cosine to Mary, I will shewe in his place,

And Luke doth mention the stocke of Elizabeth for honours sake : for it was lawfull for Zachary, according to the lawe, to take vnto him to wife, a daughter of a Leuite, of the common sort : Of this equall wedlocke therefore it doth appeare, that this man was not despised in his degree.

6. Both were iust before God. A right and good testimonie doth he giue vnto them, not only that they behaued themselues holily and vprightly before men, but they were accounted iust before God. And also Luke doth breifly define that iustice. That they walked in the commandements of the Lord, both are diligently to be noted. For although that to this ende Zachary and Elizabeth are prayfed, that we might know that the Lanterne which bare light before the Sonne of God was not chosen out of an vnknowne stocke, but out of a most famous holy place : yet notwithstanding vnder their examples there is shewed to vs a rule of liuing godly and rightously. There ore in framing of a mans liue well, this is chiefly : that wee should endeavour our selues to be approued before God. And we know a sincere heart & pure conscience, chiefly to be required of him, Therefore an ouerthwart order it is, if any man little esteeming the vprightnes of his heart, should only frame his outward life in obedience of the law. For it is to be kept in memorie, that God, (to whom we are commanded to haue regard) looketh not vpon the outward visor of workes, but especially the heart. Further nor, in the second place let obedience be added : that is, let not any man name vnto himselfe, without the word of God, a newe kinde of right conscience, which shall please him : but let vs suffer our selues to be ruled by the power of God. For neither is this definition to be neglected, that to be righteous, which frame their life after the preceptes of the law, in the which it is agreed, all fained worshippings to be nothing regarded with God, and the course of mans life to be wandring and erronious, as long as it shall depart from his law. Betwene preceptes and iustifyinges there is this difference, that the latter name is properly referred to the exercises of godlines, and diuine worshippings : the first is more vniuersall, and it doth adwell appertaine to the worship of God, as to the dutie of charitie. For hukim which with the Hebreues doth signifie statutes or decrees, the Greeke interpreter hath translated iustifications, hukim commonly in holy scripture doth signifie ceremonies, in the which the people exercised themselues in worshipping of God, and confession of faith. And although hypocrites in that poynt are meruillous curious and exquisite : yet they haue nothing like with Zacharias and Elizabeth.

For sincere worshippers of God, as these two were, doe not greedily snatch vnto them naked and vaine ceremonies, but being bent vpon the trueth, they spiritually obserue them. But lewd and counterfeite men, although they dayly weary themselues in outwarde ceremonies : yet because they do not obserue them, as they were commaunded of the Lord, they doe nothing but loose their labour, Chiefly in these two words Luke dooth comprehend the whole law. But if Zachary and Elizabeth were vnblainable as concerning the keeping of the law, they had no need of Christ. For the full obseruing of the law doth bring with it life, & where there is no transgression, the

arrained state doth cease. I answer, that these reports of praise, wherewith all these children of God royally are adorned, are to be taken with some exception. For it is expedient to consider diligently, how God should deale with them euen according to his couenant, which he made with them, whereof the cheifest point is free reconciliation, and dayly forgiuenes, whereby hee pardoneth them their offences. Iust and vnreprouable therefore are they thought, because that all their life doth witness them to be auowed to righteousness, the feare of God to reigne in them, while there is a certaine example of godlynes. But when their godly endeouour did farre differ from perfection, it coulde not please God, without forgiuenes and mercie: Wherefore the iustice which is prayed in them, dependeth vpon the free mercie of God. Wheret y it cometh to passe, that he accounteth not what vnrighteousnes so euer remaineth in them. So it is necessary to vnderstand what soeuer is found in scripture of the righteousness of men, that it ouertrow not forgiuenes of sinnes, to the which it leaneth, no otherwise then the building to the foundation. They that say that Zachary and Elizabeth were simply iust by faith, because that they freely pleased God by the mediation, doth writeth Lukes word's into a contrary sense. As concerning the matter it selfe, they saye neither fly nothing, nor yet all I graunt the righteousness which is ascribed to them, ought not to be imputed to the desert of works, but to the loue of Christ. The Lord yet notwithstanding, because he imputed not sinne vnto them, hath thought their holy life, although vnperfect, to bee woorthy the title of iust. The foolishnes of the P. pistles will easily be refelled: For they lay this, which is attributed to Zachary against the iustice offaith: the which as it is certaine to proceede from the same: so ought it to be made subiect and brought vnder to the same: or as they commonly say, to be brought into a ranke vnder, to auoyde contention betwene them. And that which they so point in respect of that one worde is fruitous. They say the commaundments of the Law are iustifications, therefore that they iustifie vs. As though we denied true iustice to be taught in the law, or that we should fly the fault to be in the doctrine, because it doth not iustifie: and that rather the cause is not in our weake flesh. Therefore that a hundred times I may graunt life to bee contained in the precepts of the law: yet notwithstanding nothing thereby shall come vnto men, which by nature are altogether turned away from the same. And now being borne againe by the spirit of God, yet notwithstanding they are farre from the pure obseruation of the same: Albeit, as I shewed of late, it is a faint and a vaine cauillation about the worde, when it signifieth nothing else, then statutes and appointed ceremonies.

7. And they had no child. It was appointed by the singular prouidence of God, that Iohn should be borne contrary to the common and accustomed order of nature. The same thing also was done in Isaac, in the which God determined to shew a token of his loue, not often teene, & worthy of remembrance. Elizabeth was barren, euen in the flower of her age. And old age doth finish childbearing euen in fruitfull women: therefore in these two lets a double miracle of diuine power doth appeare, and that to this ende, that the Lord would witness that prophet to be sent of him, as it were with stretched hand from heauen. And a mortall man was hee borne of earthly parents: but a meane aboue nature, (if I may so say) no otherwise commended him, then if he had fallen from heauen.

9. According to the custome of the Priestes office. The law did commaund to burne incense twise dayly: that is to witte, in the morning, and in the euening. That the Priestes had their order disposed among them, that Dauid did appoint euen as we haue said before. Therefore the law of God doth especially comãd that, which here is sayd of incense. The other things came from Dauid, that euerie familie should haue their course, notwithstanding Dauid did appoint nothing, but out of the commaundement of the lawe. For he onely did shew the way, whereby they might fulfill their charge enioyned them of God.

The name of the Temple here is taken for the holy place, that therefore is to be noted, because that sometime it signifieth the Poarch. It is sayd that Zachary went into the Temple, into the which it is not lawfull for any to goe, but for the Priestes; Therefore Luke doth say, the people stood a farre off, betweene whom and the altar of incense was a great distaunce. For betweene them was the altar, where vpon the sacrifice of beastes were offered. And it is to be noted, that Luke doth say, before God. For as oft as the Priest did enter into the holy place, he did goe as it were into the sight of God, that he might be a mediatur betweene him and the people. For the Lord would haue this thing testified vnto his people, that the entrance into heauen was not open to any mortall men, except the priest did goe before.

Nay how long soeuer men liue here vpon earth, they cannot come to the heauenly throane, that they may find fauour there, but in the person of the mediatur. Therefore when there were many Priestes, it was not lawfull for two of them together to execute the solemne office of intercession for the people: but therefore were they deuided into companies, that one onely should enter into the sanctuary. and therefore there was but one Priest at once.

Furthermore hither belonged that sweete perfume, that the faithfull might bee admonished, that the odour of their prayers ascended not into heauen, but by the sacrifice of the mediatur. And it is to bee sought out of the Epistle to the Hebrewes, how these figures shall agree to vs.

12. Zacharias was troubled. Although that therefore God doth not appeare vnto his seruantes, that he should feare them: yet it is profitable, yea and necessary for them to be moued with feare, that they being dismayed with themselves, might learne to yeelde iust honour to God. Neyther dooth Luke onely shew Zacharias to haue beene troubled: But he addeth, a feare fell vpon him. Whereby he declareth to haue beene so dismayed, that he was subdued to feare. Neyther doth feare of the presence of God so much strike men, that it should instruct them to reuerence, but that it might humble the pride of the flesh, the which is so hautie, that they will neuer submit themselves to God, vnlesse they be violently driuen to it. Whereof also we doe gather, that men onely in the absence of God, (that is, when they hide themselves from his sight) are proud, and flatter themselves. For if they had God as a judge before their eyes, it should be necessary for them to fall downe flatte.

And if that this did befall to Zacharias ( to whom the prayle of righteoufnesse was giuen ) at the beholding of an Angell, which is but a sparke of diuine light. what shall become of vs wretches, if that the maiestie of God should bring vs to his shining brightnes? And now by the example of holy fathers we are taught, that no other are moued with the liuely feeling of the diuine presence, but that they quake and tremble at his sight, and also that they are foolish and dull, which doe heare him without feare.

Feare not zacharias. It is to be noted, that the glory of GOD is so fearefull to the godly, that they are not altogether deuoured of feare: but onely they are throwne downe from their vaine boldenesse, that they might humbly looke vppon him. As soone therefore as GOD hath vanquished the pride of the flesh in his faithfull, with his outstretched hand, he rayseth them vp againe. Hee dealeth otherwise with the reprobate. For as oft as they are drawn to the iudgement seate of God, meere desperation ouerwhelmeth them. And God doth giue againe this, as a iust rewarde vnto their vaine pleasures, in the which they haue made themselues drunken to wantonnes of sinning. Wherefore this comfort is to bee embraced of vs, in that the Angell doth vphold Zachary, that it is not to be feared, where God is present with vs, For they deceiue themselues much, who, that they might enioy peace, doe hide them from the face of GOD, seeing wee should seeke peace at him.

Thy prayer is heard. Zachary might seeme to haue done amisse, and contrary to the trade of his office, if hee entring into the holy place in the name of all the people, as a priuate man should pray for the obtaining of offspring. For the Priest taking vpon him to bee a common person, should be as it were forgetfull of himselfe, and should pray for the common safegard of the congregation. If we shall say, that it was not inconuenient, that Zacharias hauing perfourmed his cheifest part of prayer, should then secondly haue some priuate consideration of himselfe, it were not an vnapt answer. But it is scarce probable, that Zachary should then haue prayed for the obtayning of a Sonne, whereof he was past hope by the olde age of his wife, Neyther is there any certain moment of time gathered of the woordes of the Angell. Wherefore simply I interpret, that his desire was now heard, which long before he had poured out before God: Furthermore the desire of hauing offspring (so there be no excessse) is godly and holy, as may be gathered out of Scripture, which esteemeth this not in the last place among the blessings of God.

Thou shalt call his name. The name of Baptist I thinke was giuen vnto him, to declare the effecte of his office: Iuchannan For the which the Greekes say Iohn, with the Hebrewes doth signifie the grace of God. But many thinke the Sonne of Zachary so to bee called, as beloued of God. I doe not thinke that fauour heere to bee commended, which God thought him priuately to bee woorthy of, but that which his message was about to bring to all men. The time doth encrease the authoritie and and estimation of his name: because that before he was borne, God imprinted in him a signe of his loue.

16. And manie of the children of Israel shall hee turne to their Lord God.

17. For hee shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elia, to turne the heartes of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient, to the wisdom of the iust men, to make readie a people prepared for the Lord.

14 Thou shalt haue ioy. The Angell doth signifie greater ioy, then that Zacharias could comprehend, of his new offspring: For he declared, that he should haue such a sonne, as he durst not wish for: And streight wayes hee goeth further, that that ioy should not be priuate, whereof onely the parentes should take their delectation, or that it might keepe it selfe in priuate houes, but should be common also to straungers, to whome the profit of his natiuitie should be declared. Therefore it is like, as if the Angell had sayd, not a sonne to haue bene borne alone to Zacharias, but a teacher and a prophet to all people.

The Papistes abused this place, that they might bring in a prophane custome, in celebrating the birth of Iohn. Let passe this, that they worshipped this day too much contrary to all good order, with daunsinges, leapings, and all kind of lasciuiousnesse, with libertie of banquetting, which order they feigne to be sicred vnto them: and that they suffer themselues in that celebration to be deluded with magicall artes, and deuilish deuises, no otherwise then as in the ceremonies of Ceres.

At this present it shall be sufficient for me briefly to declare the Angelles words to haue been wristed of them vnwisely, to the annuall celebrating of his byrth day: when the Angell simply did commend the ioy which should come to all godly men, by the fruit of his doctrine: For they reioyced for a prophet to be borne vnto them, by whole ministerie they were brought in hope of saluation.

15. For hee shall be great. He confirmeth that which hee sayd of ioy: because that Iohn was appointed to a thing great, & vnaccoutomed: Neither yet are the vertues wherein he did excell so much here praised, as the greatnes & excellency of his office is extolled. Like as Christ, when he affirmeth him to be the cheifest among the children of women, he hath not respect so much to the holines of his life, as to his ministry, that which streight wayes after followeth. He shall neither drinke wine nor strong drinke, is not so to be vnderstood, as though it were an especiall vertue of Iohn, to be a refainer from wine: but because that by that especiall marke, God would note his seruant, whereby the world might know an euerlasting Nazarite. The priests also refrayned from wine and strong drinke, when they supplied their courses in the temple. The same abstinence was prescribed to the Nazarnes, vntill their vow were fulfilled. And God would shew by a notable token, that Iohn in all his life was a Nazarite, dedicate vnto him, as we read also the same of Sampson. But vnder this colour there is not to be feigned a worshipping of God, in abstinence from wine, as Apes, that with ambition will follow whatsoeuer they may perceiue of their fathers deedes. Onely let all men haue temperaunce in estimation: they that find hurt in drinking of wine, let them willingly abstaine: they that lacke, let them take the want of it in good part. For that which pertayneth to the name of Sycera, I willingly agree to their iudgement, which shew with the Hebrewes doe thinke to be called euery kind of made wine.

Iud. 13. 5.

Hee shall bee filled with the holy Ghost. This more inward note, wherewith all the Angell sayth Iohn shall be signed, was farre excellenter, then the outward and visible signe. In these wordes I thinke nothing els to be noted, then his apparant towardnesse, which might shew a hope of his excellencie to come further, I say not such towardnesse, as is also in prophane men, but such as might accord to the greatnesse of his office.

The sense therefore is that the power and grace of the spirite should not then onely shewe it selfe in him, when that hee should aspyre to his office: but that euen from his mothers wombe he should excell in the giftes of the spirite, which as certaine signes shoulde testifie what hee should bee: For from his mothers wombe, is as much to say, as from his first infancie. I grant truly the power of the spirit to haue wrought in Iohn, when he was yet included in his mothers wombe. But in my iudgement the Angell here meant an other thing, that Iohn being yet an infant, shoulde be brought as it were into the theatre with a singular commendation of the grace of God: of the fulnesse it is not meete, that we should more subtilly dispute, or rather trifle with sophisters.

For the scripture doth by this name signifie no other thing, then the excellent, and not common abundance of the giftes of the spirite. To Christ alone we know the spirit to haue beene giuen without measure, that we might all drawe of his fulnesse: and to bee giuen to other by a certaine measure. But they that aboue our common capacitie are indued with more plentiful grace, are sayd to be full of the holy Ghost.

1. Cor. 12.
Ephe. 4. 7.

But as the larger power of the spirite was an extraordinarie gyfte of GOD in Iohn: so it is to bee noted, the spirit not to bee bestowed vpon all menne by and by in their infancie, but when it shall please God.

Iohn from the wombe did beare the token of his dignitie to come, Saule beeing yet but a Sheeheard, did beare no Kingly shewe, yet

at length he beeing chosen King, was sodainely chaunged into a newe man.

By this example therefore let vs learne, that the free woorking of the spirit is free in men from the first infancie, to the last poynt of age.

19. And many of the children of Israell. In these wordes he declareth a detestable diuision, which then was in the Church. For it was necessary, to haue such Apostles, in whom conuersion to God might haue some place.

And truely there was so much corruption of doctrine, so much deprauiing of manners, such a confuse government, that it might be accounted a miracle, to finde a few to persist in godlinesse. If such exceeding dissention was in the olde Church, there is no cause, that the Papiſts should with a vaine cloake defend their superstitions, as if it were impossible the Church should erre: For because that vnder this name they doe vnderstand not the true and elect Sonnes of God, but the company of the wicked.

But we see more heere to be attributed to Iohn, then should agree to man. For when conuersion vnto God doth renew in men a spirituall life, it is not only the proper worke of God, but it doth excell euen the creation of men. Therefore by this meanes the ministers may seeme to be equall with G O D yea, and to bee preferred in as much as he is a creator, seeing it is more to be borne againe into a heauenly life, then to be borne mortall men vpon the earth.

The answer is easie: For the Lord, when he attributeth such praise to his outward doctrine, he doth not separte the same from the secret power of his spirit. For, because God chuseth men vnto him for ministers, whose ayde he vseth in the building of his Church, together by them he woorketh with the secret power of his spirit, that their labour might be effectuell and fruitfull, as oft as the scripture commendeth this efficacie in the ministerie of men, let vs learne to yeelde the thing receiued to the grace of the spirit, without the which mans voyce to no effect should be spread abroad in the ayre. So Paul, while he reioyceth himselfe to be the minister of the spirite, challengeth nothing apart vnto himselfe, as though with his voyce he shoulde pierce the heartes of men, but hee declareth in his ministerie the power and grace of the spirit. These sayinges are woorthie to be noted: For Sathan very artificially worketh to diminish the effect of doctrine, that he might weaken the grace of the spirite ioyned to it. I graunt that externall preaching seperately by it selfe can doe nothing, but because it is an instrument of diuine power for saluation, and an effectuell instrument by the grace of the spirit: let not vs separte those things which God hath ioyned. But that the glory of conuersion and of faith, may remaine whole towards one God. The scripture doth admonish vs oftentimes, ministers through themselues to be nothing, but then he compareth with God, least any taking the honour from God, should bestow it amisse on them.

In summe, the minister is sayd to turne them, whom God dooth conuert, through the woorke of his minister. For hee is nothing but the hand of God

God

God, & in this place both are expressed very well, now of the effect of doctrine there is enough spoken. That the same is not in the appointment or hand of the minister to conuert men vnto God, of this wee gather because that Iohn did not conuert all commonly to God: (the which thing without doubt hee would haue done, if all things had beene giuen him that he desired) but he turned them onely, whome it pleased God effectually to call. In conclusion, the same is taught here of the Angell, which Paule taught to the Romans: Faith commeth of hearing, but by faith none are lightened, but they to whom the Lord hath inwardly reuealed his arme. Rom. 10. 17:

17. Hee shall goe before him. In these wordes hee defineth what the office of Iohn should be, and by this note he distinguisheth him from the rest of the Prophetes, to whom a peculiar and proper message was commanded, when that Iohn for this thing onely was sent, that he might go before Christ, as an officer before a king. So the Lord speaketh by Malachy. Behold I send, my Angell, which shall prepare my way before me. In summe, to no other poynt belonged the calling of Iohn, but to prepare an audience for Christ, and to get him disciples. And in that no expresse mention is here made of Christ, but that the Angell maketh Iohn a fore-walker or standert bearer of the eternall God: hereof the eternall diuinitie of Christ is gathered. Mal. 3. 1.

With the spirit and power of Elyas. The spirit and power I take for the power or excellency of the spirit, wherewithall Elyas was endued. For neither must we inuent the dreame of Pythagoras, that the soule of the Prophet should goe into the body of Iohn. But that spirit of God, which wrought mightily in Elyas, should after exercise like power and effect in the Baptist. but the latter name is added expositiuelly, to expresse the kinde of grace, wherein Elyas most did excell: namely, that he being furnished with heauenly power, might merueilously restore the decayed worship of God: For such repaying passed the power of man. Now that which is begunne of Iohn was no lesse merueilous, wherfore it is no meruell, if it behooued him to be adorned with the same gift.

That he may turne the hearts of the fathers. Here the Angell doth note what especiall similitude Iohn had with Elyas. Therefore hee said he was sent that he might gather people dispersed into vnitie of faith: for the turning of fathers to sons, is a reduction from discord to loue. whereof it followeth that there was a certaine breach, the which might cutte, or as it were rend the people. We knowe in the time of Elyas what a horrible defection of the people there was, how shamefully they were degenerate from their fathers, they were so deuided, that they could be nothing lesse thought, then the sonnes of Abraham. Elias brought them againe into a holy consent. such a gathering together of fathers with children there began to be by Iohn, the which Christ at length finished: wherfore Malachy when hee speaketh of bringing againe, doth signifie that the state of the Church should be so deuided (when the other Elyas should come) as it is sufficiently knowne by histories, to haue beene then, and shall more apparantly be seene in their places. The doctrine of the scripture was polluted by innumerable lyes, the worshipping of God was corrupt with more then grosse superstitions, religion was deuided into diuers sectes. The priestes openly wicked and Epicures, the common people it selfe was drowned in wickednes. Furthermore nothing was founde. That is sayd here, the heartes of fathers to children, it is vnproper. For it behooueth rather to conuert the sonnes, which were truce breakers, and had gone from the right faith of fathers. But although the Euangeliste doth not so warily expresse the order, yet the sense is not obscure, that God to bring to passe, by the worke of Iohn, that they againe should grow together into holy concord, which first were diuided amongst themselues: Eyther part is had of the Prophet, which notwithstanding ment nothing else then to signifie mutuall agreement. But because that men oftentimes do conspire among themselues, that some should more alienate some from God: the Angell doth therewithall define, what manner of conuersion it should bee, which hee doth promise: yea such as should call the disobedient to the wisdome of the righteous. That therefore is to be noted, that wee knit not our selues fast with the wicked, vnder the false cloke of concord. Because the name of peace is goodly and pleasant, as oft as it commeth in the scriptures, it is greedily snatched of the Papistes, to procure vs enuy: as though that we (which endeuour to call the world from disloyall reuolting to Christ) were the aucthours of discorde. but by this text, their foolishnesse is very well refelled: because the Angell doth shew the manner of true and lawfull conuersion, hee maketh the stay and bande of it to bee the wisdome of the righteous. Accursed therefore bee that peace and vnitie, wherein men agree amongst themselues against God. Furthermore, it is not to be doubted, but that fayth is vnderstoode by the wisdome of righteous men, as of the contrary the vnfaithfull are called disobedient.

Truly an excellent testimonie of fayth, whereby wee learne that wee then are wise to saluation, when wee are obedient to the woord of God. The worlde also hath his wisdome, but corrupt, and therefore deadly: and which is condemned of vanitie. Although the Angell signifieth ouerthwartly shadowed wisdome, wicked and accursed before G O D, wherein the sons of this world please themselues. Now wee vnderstand men so to be reconciled amongst themselues, that chiefly they might come againe in fauour with God. That which straight wayes followeth of making ready a people, prepared for the Lord, doth agree with that part, that Iohn should bee the cryer of Christ, that hee might walke before his face, for the ende of his preaching was to make the people dilligēt to heare the doctrine of Christ. Although the participle Katakeuasmēnon doth not so much signifie perfection with the Greekes, as the forme and aptnes, whereby thinges are made fitte for their vse. The which signification shall not ill agree with this place, that Iohn was sent to prepare and frame that people for Christ, which otherwise being rude and vnpolished, would neuer shew it selfe easie to bee taught.

Luke 1.

Matthew

Marke.

18. Then Zaccharias sayde vnto the Angel, where by shall I knowe this? for I am an olde man, and my wife is of a great age.

19. And the Angell answered, and sayd vnto him: I am Gabryell, that stand in the presence of

of God, and am sent to speake vnto thee, and to shew thee these good tidings.

20. And behold thou shalt be dumb, and not be able to speake, vntil the day that these things be done, because thou beleuest not my words, which shall bee fulfilled in their season

18. Then Zacharias sayde vnto the Angell. Here followeth the infidelitie of Zacharias, and the punishment which the Lord layd vpon his vnfaithfulnesse. He prayed for the obtaining of offspring. now, when it is promised, as forgetfull of his vowes and fayth, hee distrusteth. Albeit at the first blush it might seeme a harde thing that with his answere God should so greiuously be offended. He obiecteth his old age: euen so did Abraham, whose fayth yet is so much prayesed, that Paule should say, his body which now was dead, was not considered. Nor the vnfruitfull wombe of Sara: but simply that he reposed himselfe in the truth and the power of God. Zachary doth aske how, or by what argument he may bee the more assured. And Gedeon was not reprehended, though that twofold he required a signe: And also a little after there is the like exception giuen of Mary: How shall this thing be, when I know not man? The which notwithstanding the Angell dooth dissemble as if there were no fault in her: how cometh it then, that the Lorde shoulde so seuerely chasten Zacharyas as guiltie of most greivous sinne? Verily I graunt, if the words onely should be looked on, eyther that they did all offend alike, or Zachary not to haue offended at all. But when it is conuenient to iudge the doinges and sayings of men, according to the affection of the hart, it is rather to be stood to the iudgement of God, to whom the priuie secret places of the heart are open. The Lord without doubt doth see something worse in Zachary, then his words do shew: And therefore the Lord waxed angry with him, that by distrust hee should put away his promised fauour to him. It is not our dutie to prescribe a law for God, but let it be free for him to punish that in one, which offence hee doth pardon in others. But it doth easily appeare, that the cause of Zachary differed from the cause of Abraham, Gedeon, or Mary. That in words is not discerned. The knowledg therefore is to be left to god, whose eies doe pearse euen to the fountaine of the heart. So God discerned betweene the laughter of Sara and of Abraham: when notwithstanding, the one differed not in likenesse from the other. Furthermore the cause of distrust in Zacharyas, was, that hee staying in the order of nature, did attribute lesse to the power of God, then was meete. For ouer straightly and sparingly doe they thinke of the works of God which beleue not him to be able to doe more, then according to nature is credible, as though his hande were subiect to our sense, or included in earthly means: but it is the propertie of faith much more to beleue, then the reason of the flesh could say might come to passe. zacharias doubted not, whether it were the voyce of God, or no. But when he was ouermuch bent vpon the world, an ouerthwart doubting crept into his minde, whether that should come to passe, that he heard or no. And in that thing he did no final iniury to God. for it were as much, as if he should dispute whether god might be accounted true or no, who he surely knew had spokē in which was sufficiēt, although it is to be known Zacharias not

Rom. 4. 19

Iud. 6. 17

not to haue been so vnbeleeuing, that altogether he should shrinke from faith. For there is a generall faith, which doth take hold of the promise of eternall saluation, and the testimonie of free adoption. And euen as after God hath once receiued vs into fauour, he specially promiseth many thinges that he will feede, that he will take vs out of perils, he will be a detender of our innocencie, and preserue our life: so there is a perticular faith, which answereth to euery such promises. Therefore sometime it may be, that some man trusting in God of forgiveness of sinnes, and of saluation, yet in some point should waiver: for either he should feare to much in the danger of death, or be too much carefull for dayly sustenance, or ouer doubtfull in his counsailes. Such was the incredulitie of Zacharie, because that hee hauing the roote and foundation of faith, did onely stick in this one point, whether God would giue him a sonne. Wherefore let vs know that they doe not by and by fail and depart from the faith, when their infirmitie in some particular affaires doe disturbe or moue them, nor faith to faile at the root, as oft as the boughes doe shake at diuerseiuasions or blastes. Graunt that Zachary meant nothing lesse then to call to tryall the assurance of the diuine promise. But when that generally he was perswaded God to bee true, hee was drawne by stealth into a shrewd estate, by the craft and deceites of Sathan. So much the rather it becommeth vs to be readie bent to watching day and night For which of vs shall be sure from the deceites of Sathan, into the which wee see a man of singular holines to haue fallen, who diligently in all his life took heede to himselfe?

19 I am Gabryell. In these wordes the Angell doth shew, that the credit was taken not from him, but from God, of whom he was sent, and whose message he brought: and therefore he reprobeth Zachary, that he was disobedient against God. To stand before God, signifieth as much as to be readie at commandement, as if he should say, that he was no mortall man, but a heauenly spirit, neither rashly to haue come, but as it became the minister of God, faithfully to fulfill his office: whereof it followeth, that God the authour of the promise is vnworthily hurt, and despised in the person of his messenger. To that purpose tendeth the saying of Christ, Hee that doth despise you, despiseth me. For although the preaching of the Gospell is not by Angels, brought vnto vs from heauen: yet because God doth witness by so many miracles the same to proceed from him, and Christ the prince and cheife of Angels published the same once with his own mouth, that hee might sanctifie and establish the same for euer, no lesse man esteem ought to persist in it, then if all the Angels openly crying from heauen should witness the same. Nay, the Apostle in his Epistle to the Hebrewes, not being satisfied to say, that the voyce of the Gospell, which is founded out by the voyce of men, is equall to the law giuen by Angels: but doth gather his argument from the lesser to the greater: If the word (saith he) brought by Angels being reiected, was not without punishment, much lesse shall they escape reuenge, which this day despise the voyce of Christ, who can strike the heauen and earth. Let vs therefore learne to performe obedience of faith to God, the which he doth more account then all sacrifices.

Gabryell doth signifie might or strength, or the gouernance of God, and this name was giuen to the Angell for our sake, that wee might learne to attribut nothing as proper to Angels, whē that what vertue soeuer they haue is diuine, and of God. The Participle Pareftecos is of the preter tense: but in such wordes it is very well knowne, the preter tense to be put in the place of the present tense, especially where continuall action is signified.

Furthermore, the Angell, as it was lately sayd, doth affirme in those words himselfe to be the perpetuall messenger of God. That phrase of shewing good tidings doth amplifie the fault of Zachary, that he should be vngratefull to God promising him gently a thing ioyfull, and to be wished for of all.

20. And behold, thou shalt be dumbe. This kinde of punishment was like to be layd on Zachary, that hee beeing dumbe might looke for the comming of the promise, the which when he ought to haue heard it with silence, hee as it were brake it off with greiuous repining murmuring. Fayth keepeth silence, that it may be attentiuē to the word of God. Furthermore, it hath also the courses of speaking: That it may answere Amen, according to that of Osee. 2. 23 I will say to them, you are my people, And they shall say to mee, thou art our God. And because that Zachary answered rashly to the worde of God, this fauour was not granted to him, that streightwayes he should breake forth into giuing of thanks. but the vse of his tongue, which was ouer hastie was taken from him, for a time: Yet notwithstanding G O D doth gently mitigate his paine. First, because he doth end the same in tenne monethes: then that hee suffered Zachary not to be depriued of that benefit, whereof hee was vnworthy. He vseth the same gentlenes dayly towards vs. For as our fayth is small, and wee obiect many impedimentes, it is needefull that the trueth of G O D, by some meanes should breake out, that it might continue his course towards vs. That is the meaning of the Angell, when accusing Zachary of vnbeleife, hee doth yet pronounce, that thing should be finished, which Zachary did not beleue: Therefore Zachary is not a little cheered, when he heareth that his faith is not ouerthrowne of God, by reaso of his fault: but that at length it should appeare victorious. And sometime it commeth to passe, that the Lord doth performe and fulfill that, which was promised to vnbeleeuers, how much soeuer they resist: of the which thing we haue an example worthy of remembrance, in king Achaz: Isa. 11. 7. who when he forsooke his promised safegard, was yet deliuered frō his enemies, but that tēded not to his profit, but for the saluatiō of the chosen people. There is another thing in Zachary to be considered, to whom the Lord doth so forgiue the lacke of fayth, that therewithall hee yet correcteth it.

Matthew

Marke.

21. Now the people waited for Zacharias, and marueiled that he tarried so long in the temple.
22. And when hee came out hee coulde not speake vnto them: then they perceiued, that he had scene a vision in the Temple, for hee made signes vnto them, and remained dumbe.

23. And it came to passe, when the dayes of his office were fulfilled, that hee departed to his owne house.

24. And after those dayes his wife Elizabeth conceived, and hid her selfe sixe monethes, saying:

25. Thus hath the Lord dealt with me in the daies wherein hee looked on mee, to take from mee my rebuke among men.

21. And the people waited. Luke declareth that the people also was a witness of this vision Zachary taried longer in the temple then the wont was: Heereon suspition grewe, some vnaccustomed thing to haue befallne to him: he being come out, by gestures and signes doth shew, that he is become dumb. And it is credible, that some tokens of feare remayned in his countenance, wherby they gather that God had appeared to him. And there were in that age few or no visions: but the people did remember that they had beene common before in their fathers time. Wherefore not without cause did they iudge of these manifest signes. For it was not common, that sodenly without sicknesse he should be dumbe: And that after longer delay then neede was, hee should come so amazed out of the temple. Furthermore, the name of the temple, as we now sayd, is vsed for the holy place, where the altar of incense was: from thence the Sacrifice being finished, the preistes were woont to goe into their porche, and thence they blessed the people.

23. When the dayes were fulfilled. Luke doth put the word Liturgian for the executing of the office, which did goe by course in order to euery one, euen as we haue sayd. That it is sayd, that Zachary returned to his house, the time of his charge being past: hereout we gather the priests so long as they were in their courses did refrain from their houses, that they might altogether be giuen and fixed to the seruize of God. For this purpose there were Galleries made in the sides of the temple in the which they had chambers. The lawe did not forbid the priest fro his own house: but that it restrained them from touching of their wines, when they shoulde eate the holy bread: It is probable that when many with small reuerence did handle the holy things, this remedie was inuented, that they being remoued fro al allurementes, might keepe themselues cleane & free fro al polution: neither was the lying with their wiues only forbidden thē but also the drinking of wine & strong drink. Therefore when the order of their diet was changed, it was profitable not to departe from the temple, that the sight of the place might teach them to seeke & esteem of purity, euen as it was appoynted of the Lord. It was also profitable that all occasion of wantonnes should thereby be taken away, that with more diligence they might apply their charge. The Papistes this day vnder this pretēce do defend their tyrannous lawe of vnmarried life. For thus they reason seeing the priests in times past were commanded to abstaine from their wiues, when they were busied in holy affayres: now worthily may perpetuall continence be required of our priests, which not by course of times, but dayly, do sacrifice: Cheisly, for that the dignitie of holy rites is far more excellent then vnder the law. But I woulde knowe, why they doe

2. Reg. 6. 5.

Leuit. 10. 9

doe not also abstaine from wine and strong drinke. For neither is it lawfull to seperate those commaundements, which God hath ioyned that onely halfe should be obserued, and the other part neglected. The company with their wiues is not so expressly forbidden, as the drinking of wine. If vnder the colour of the law, the Pope doth inioyne to his priests single life, why doth hee permit them wine? Nay, by this reason hee ought to shut vp his priestes in some innermost roomes of his Temples, that they being shut in prisons, might passe all their life without the fellowship of women and people. Now we see plainly they wickedly pretend the law of God, from which they depart: But notwithstanding a full answere dependeth of the difference of the law and the Gospell. The priest did place himselfe before God, to purge away the sinnes of the people, that he might bee as it were a mediatur of God & men: it behoued him, vpon whom that office was layd, to haue some note, whereby he being exempted from the common order of men, might be knowne as the figure of the true mediatur. For this purpose were appointed the holy garments and annoynting: Now in the publike ministers and pastors of the Church there is no such like thing, I speake of the ministers, which Christ instituted to feed his flock, not of those which the Pope maketh, rather butchers to sacrifice Christ, then priestes. wherefore let vs repose our selues in that sentence of the holy Ghost, which pronounceth that matrimony is honourable in all men.

Heb. 13. 4.

24. Shee hidde her selfe. This seemeth to bee absurd, as though that shee shoulde bee ashamed of diuine blessing. Some thinke that the thing being yct doubtfull, shee durst not come abroad, least that she should make her selfe a laughingstocke, if her opinion should bee made frustrate, which she had conceaued. And I doe so accompt of the promise made, that she was assured it shoulde come to passe. For when shee perceaued such grieuous punishment to bee layde vpon her husband, for the vnaduised fall of his tongue, how coulde shee sine monethes space nourish such doubt in her heart: and her wordes doe plainly declare that her hope was not wauering, or doubtfull. For when she saith the Lorde hath doone it, shee wisely and without feare declareth the Lords knowne fauour.

There might bee two causes of her hiding. First that the myracle of GOD shoulde not bee layde open to the diuers speaches of men, before it shoulde apparauntly bee knowne. For it is the custome of the world to speake oftentimes rashly and very vnreuerently of the workes of God.

The other cause was, that when men of a sodaine shoulde see her great with childe, they shoulde the more bee stirred to prayse the Lorde. For those workes of God, which by little and little rise vp amongst vs, in processe of time are naught set by. Therefore Elizabeth hid and absented her selfe not for her owne sake, but for the cause of others.

25. Thus hath the Lorde delt with mee. Shee setteth forth the goodnesse of GOD priuately, vntill the appoynted time shoulde come of publishing the same vnto the worlde. It is to bee supposed that her husband by writing had enformed her of the promised childe, in that the more certainly and with the chearefuller minde shee sheweth that GOD is the authour of this benefitte. And that shee approoueth in her next woordes. In the dayes wherein hee looked on mee, to take from mee my rebuke among men. Shee declareth, that the cause of barrenesse was, for that the fauour of God was turned from her.

Amongst the earthly blessings, which God doth giue, the scripture accounteth this as chiefe, that he vouchsafeth to giue vs children. For if the increase of bruit beasts is a blessing of God: then how much more excellent man is then beastes, so much more to be esteemed and accounted of, is the increase of men then of beastes. Neither is it a slight or cōmon honour, that when God alone deserueth to be accounted a father, he yet admitteth earthly men into the fellowship of this name with him. Therefore that doctrine is diligently to bee considered, that children are the inheritance of the Lord. Psalme. 127. 3. and the fruite of the wombe his rewarde. But Elizabeth had a farther regard: because that beyond the common order of nature, she being barren and olde, had now conceaued by a wonderfull miracle of God.

To take from me my rebuke among men. Barrenesse was not without cause esteemed as a reproach, seeing that the blessing of the wombe was accounted amongst the especial testimonies of Gods fauour & loue. Some thinke that this did specially appertaine to the people of the old law, because that Christ was to come of the seede of Abraham. But that belonged onely to the tribe of Iuda. Others more rightly affirme, that the increate of the people of God was prosperous and happy, for that it was said to Abraham, Gen. 13. 15. Thy seed shall be as the sand of the sea, & as the stars of heauen: But the generall blessing which reacheth vnto all mankind, & the promise made vnto Abraham, which is peculiar to the Church of God, ought to bee ioyned together.

Let parents learne to be thankfull to God for their childré, but let them that want, learne by the same to humble theselues. Elizabeth accounteth that this reproach is but before men, because that it is but a temporal chastisement, by which we are nothing the further from the kingdome of heauen.

Luke 1.

Matthew Marke.

26. And in the sixth moneth the Angell Gabriell was sent from GOD vnto a Cistie of Galile, named Nazareth.

27. To a virgin affianced to a man, whose name was Ioseph, of the house of David: and the virgins name was Mary.

28. And the Angell went in vnto her, and sayde, Haile, thou art freely beloved, the Lorde is with thee: Blessed art thou among women.

29. And when she sawe him, shee was troubled at his saying, and thought what maner of salutation that should be.

30. Then the Angell sayde vnto her, Feare not Mary: for thou haste found fauour with God.

31. For loe, thou shalt conceiue in thy wombe, and beare a sonne, and call his name Iesus.

32. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the most high: and the Lord God shall giue him the throane of Dauid his father.

33. And he shall reigne ouer the house Iacob for euer, and of his kingdome shall be no ende.

26. In the sixth moneth. The order of Gods counsell is wonderfull, and much differeth from the common iudgement of men. In that he woulde that the beginning of the generation should be more famous in his forerunner, or cryer, then in his owne sonne. The prophecie of Iohn Baptist vttered in the temple, is knowne in euery place. But Christ is promised to a virgin, in an vnknowne towne of Iuda, and this prophecie remaineth buried in the bosome of one maide. But so it was requisite to bee, that euen in Christes birth that might be fulfilled. That God by foolishnesse might saue them that beleueue, 1. Cor. 1. 21. But so was this treasure of this secret mysterie layde vpp with the Virgin, that at the length in his time it might come forth to all the godly. This secret reposing of it is (I graunt) contemptible: but such as was most meete both for the tryall of the humilitie of our faith, and also for the beating downe of the pride of the wicked.

And let vs (although the reason do not at the first appeare) learne with modestie to submit our selues to God: neyther in this let it greiue vs to learn of her, that bore Christ the eternall wisdome of God, in her womb. Nothing is more to be taken heed of, then that wee through our proud contempt bereaue not our selues of the knowledge of the incomparable misterie, which God wil should bee hid in his little ones, and such as seeke for knowledge. This seemeth to me to be the cause, why he chose a virgin espoused to a man. The imagination of Origen, that he so wrought it, that he might keepe secret from sathan the saluation, which he prepared to giue to men, hath no liklyhood with it. The vayle of matrimonie was therefore spread before the eies of the world that he whom they commonly supposed to be the sonne of Ioseph, the godly at length by fayth should know to be the sonne of God. And yet Christ came not forth in such base and meane sort, but that the heauenly Father shewed forth in him euen at the beginning, the glory of his Godhead. For the Angels declared, that the Sauour was borne. But their voyce being heard, onely of the Shepherds was not spread farre.

There was one wonder famous amongst the rest, that the wise men which came from the East, did euery where reporte, that a starre appeared vnto them, as a testimonie of the birth of the great king: yet wee see howe GOD kept his Sonne, as it were in secrete, vntill the time came, that hee should fully be shewed. Then hee erected, as one should say, a Theatre, from whence he might plainly be beholden. The participle, Memestemenen, which the Euangelist doeth vse, doeth signifie, that shee then was a Virgin, promised to a husbände, but not deliuered as a wife to a husband, husband. For it was a custome amongst the Iewes, that the parentes shoulde keepe their daughters at home with them, for a time, after that they were espoused vnto men: Or else that law for the slandered wife, which is in Deut 22. 13. were in vaine. Luke sayth that Ioseph was of the stocke of Dauid, because that the families were wont to be accounted by the names of men: of the which matter we will speake more in another place.

28. Haile thou that art freely beloued. Because that the message was wonderful, and almost incredible: therefore the Angell began with a commendation of the fauour and grace of God: And seeing that by reason of our dull vnderstanding, our mindes are driuen to such a straight, that they cannot comprehend the wonderfull greatnesse of God his works. This is the best remedie that we stirre vp our mindes to meditate and consider the infinitenesse of his grace. Therefore since that the vnderstanding of God his goodnesse is the gate of fayth: The Angell tooke this (and not without cause) as the best order, that by occupying the minde of the Virgin in meditating of the fauour of God, shee might be the better prepared to receiue and vnderstand that incomprehensible mysterie. For the participle Kecharitomene, which Luke doeth vse, signifieth the free fauour of God, as appeareth more plainely in the Epistle to the Ephesians. 1. 6. where Paule intreating of our reconciliation with GOD sayth that God by his beloued Sonne Echaritosen, that is, receiued vs into his grace, and through his fauour he embraced vs, which before were his enemies. Afterwardes the Angell sayth, that God was with her. For vpon whom God vouchsafeth once to bestow his loue, vnto them hee declareth himselfe to be mercifull and bountifull, and to them hee giueth and bestoweth his giftes, and therefore is the third parte of the sentence added, Blessed art thou among women: For hee vseth this worde Blessing as the effect and prooffe of the fauour of GOD. For in mine opinion, it is not heere vsed for a praying of her, but doeth rather signifie a happynesse or blessednesse.

So Paule vseth to pray, that the faythfull might haue first grace, then peace: that is, all kinde of good things, signifying thereby that we are then become blessed and rich, when wee are beloued of God, the authour of all good things. Then if the blessednesse, rightousnesse and life of Marie doe come of the free loue of God: and that her vertues and all her excellencie is the meere liberalitie of God: Then deale they very preposterously, that teach vs to aske those things of her, which shee with vs receiue from another.

But very grosse is the folly of the Papistes, which as it were by a magickall coniuring, haue turned this salutation into a prayer. And by want of reason they haue beene thus farre drawne, that their Preachers might not pray in the pulpit for the assistance and grace of God his spirite, but by their Hayle Mary. And besides that, this is to be accounted as a salutation onely they rashly take vnto themselues the office of an other, which God inioyned not to any but to the Angell: but twise more foolish is that imitation, that they salute one that is absent.

29. When shee sawe him, shee was troubled. Luke doth not say that shee was troubled at the sight of the Angell, but at his saying: why then dooth hee also make mention of the sight? This, (as I interpret it) was the cause: Mary seeing some portion of heavenly glory in the Angel, through the reuerence of GOD, shee conceaued a sodaine feare. Therefore shee was troubled, for that shee perceiued, that it was not a mortall manne that did salute her, but an Angell of GOD. But Luke dooth not say, that shee was so troubled, that shee was thereby amazed: but rather sheweth the signe of an attentiu and very ready minde, when that hee presently addeth, that shee thought with her selfe what manner of salutation this should be: that is whereto it tended, and what it meant. For presently shee thought that the Angell was not sent to her for nothing.

And by this example wee are admonished: First, that the workes of God are not sleightly to be passed ouer. Then likewise wee ought so to weigh and consider them, that reuerence and feare may goe before.

30. Feare not Mary. In that hee willeth her not to be afrayde, let vs alwayes remember howe weake our fleshe is, and that it cannot bee, but that wee shoulde bee afrayde, so oft as but the least sparke of GOD his glory doth appeare. For when we earnestly consider the presence of God, wee cannot imagine a vaine or ydle presence. Therefore when wee are all in daunger of his iudgement, out of feare there riseth a trembling, vntill hee sheweth himselfe as a father. The holy Virginn sawe amongst her people such a vile heape of sinnes, that there was good cause why shee shoulde be afrayde of the greater vengeance.

Wherefore, that the Angell might put this feare away, hee sayth, that hee is a witnesse and tydings bringer of that, which is wonderfull good. Luke vsed this Hebrew phrase, to finde fauour, for to haue GOD mercifull. For it cannot bee sayde, that hee found fauour, that sought the same: but hee to whome it was offered, and seeing that examples of the same are sufficiently knowne, it were but vaine here to alledge them.

31. For loe thou shalt conceaue in thy wombe. The Angell frameth his woordes, firste, to the Prophesie of Esaye, and then to other places of the Prophets, that it might thereby the better sincke into the Virginnes minde. For such Prophesies weerknowne and common, euery where among the godly: yet with all it is to bee noted, that the Angell did not whisper that onely in the eare of the Virginn, but hee brought that gladd tidings of saluation, which not long after was to bee spread throughout the whole world.

Wherefore it is not doone without the counsell of GOD, that hee so plainly expresth the consent betweene the olde Prophesies and the present message of the conning of Christe, The worde Conceauing, is sufficient to confute the witlesse fancie, as well of Marcyon, as of Manicheus. Forthereby may bee easily gathered, that Mary did not bring forth an aiery body or Ghost, but such fruit as shee before had conceaued in her wombe.

And thou shalt call his name Iesus. Mat. 1. 21. rendreth the cause why this name was giuen him. For that hee shoulde saue his people from their sinnes: so that in the very name Saluation is promised, and the cause is shewed to what ende Christ was sent of his Father into the worlde. As hee sayth himselfe, that hee came not to destroy, but to saue the world. John 12. 47. Let vs also remember that this name was not giuen him by the will of man, but by the Angell, at the commaundement of God, that our faith might be fastened in heauen, and not vpon earth. It is deriued of Iashang which with the Hebrewes is Saluation: and from thence commeth that worde, which signifieth to saue. Furthermore they doe but fondly reason, which endeavour to deriue it of that Hebrewve nowne ihushug.

It appeareth that the Rabbynes did deale very maliciously, in that they neuer giue him that honourable title of Christ, but in euery place write Iesu: or rather imagine him to haue bin some base or degenerate Iew. Therefore their writing deserueth as much credit and authoritie, as doth the barking of a dog. That they obiect that he should be farre inferior to the dignitie of the sonne of God, if he should haue a name common with others, may also be pretended of Christ. But the answer to them both is very easie. For that which before was shadowed vnder the law, is fully and wholly performed in the Sonne of GOD: or that he had the substance of that in him, which was before but figured. The other obiection is of no greater force. They deny that the name of Iesu is holy & euerent, before whom euery knee Philip .2. 9. ought to bow, vnlesse it did onely belong to the Son of God. Paule doth not attribute vnto him a magicall name, in whose syllables the maiesty were included: but his words were to this purpose, as if he should haue said great power was giuen vnto Christ of his father, vnder the which al the world should bow. Therefore let vs bid such faigned inuentions fare well, and let vs knowe that the name of Iesu was giuen vnto Christ, that the faithfull might learne to seeke in him that, which before was shadowed vnder the lawe.

32. Hee shall be great. The Angell saide the same <sup>of</sup> Iohn Baptist, whom yet hee woulde not make equall with Christ. But the Baptist was great in his order: And presently after he declareth that the greatnesse of Christ extolled him farre aboue all creatures. For this hath hee alone proper and peculyar to himselfe, that he shoulde bee called the sonne of God, as the Apostle proueth Heb. 1. 5.

I graunt that sometimes in the scripture the Angelles and kings are adorned with this title: but these are in common called the sonnes of God, for the excellencie which God hath giuen them. And it is cleare, and not to be doubted, but that God exempteth his sonne from all the rest, when that he peculyarly saith vnto him, Psalme 2. 7. Thou art my Sonne: Therefore Christ is accounted here neither among Angels nor men, that he might be accounted one of common sort or company of the children of God: for that which is giuen vnto him, it is lawfull for none other to take to themselues.

It is true that Kinges are the children of God, but not by right of nature, but because the Lorde hath bestowed that honour vpon them. Neither doth this title belong vnto Angelles, but as they vnder their chiefe head

excell amongst the creatures. And we also are children but by adoption which we obtaine by faith, for we haue it not of nature. But Christ is the onely, and the onely-begotten sonne. That interpretation is very false & deceitfull, which that filthy dog Seruetus wresteth, the word of the future tence, that hee might prooue that Christ was not the eternall sonne of God: But that he began then so to be accompted when that hee tooke vpon him our flesh. Hee argueth that Christ was not the son of God, before that he being clothed with flesh, did appeare in the world, because that the angell said: He shall be called. I except against this, & affirme that the words of the Angell do signifie nothing else, but that such a sonne of God should be made manifest in the flesh, as was eternall: For to bee called is referred to the apparant knowledge. But there is great difference here betweene these two enterpretations, whether hee began now to be the sonne of God, which was not before, or that he was made knowne vnto men, that they might know him to bee the same which was promised in times past. And truly, sith that God in all ages was called a Father of his people, it may thereby be gathered, that the Sonne was in heauen: from whome & through whom this fatherhood came to men. For men should arrogate too much vnto themselues, if they durst be so bold as bragge, that they were the sonnes of God: but as they are the members of the onely begotten son. where fore it is certaine that the holy fathers had not the assurance of that so honourable a calling. But as they had their confidence in the Sonne, the mediatur. But what profit wee haue by this more perfect knowledge, whereof wee now speake, Paule doth teach vs in an other place. For that nowe wee may freely not onely call, but cry out that God is our Father. Rom. 8. 15. & Gal. 4. 5.

God shall giue vnto him the throane of Dauid. We haue said that the Angel tooke out of the Prophets these titles, which he giue h vnto Christ, that the holy virgin might thereby know the better, that hee should bee the Redeemer, which was in times past promised vnto the fathers. When as the Prophets do speake of the restitution of the Church, they call the whole hope of the faithfull to the kingdome of Dauid: So that it was a common rule amongst the Iewes, that the safegard of the Church was reposed in the prosperitie of Dauids kingdome. Neither did there any thing more aptly or fitly agree to the office of the Messias, then that he should againe restore the Kingdome of Dauid. And therefore the Messias is sometimes called by the name of Dauid: as in Ier. 30. 9. They shall serue the Lord their God, and Dauid their king: Also in Ezechi 34. 24. and 37. 24. My seruant Dauid shall bee prince amongst them: And in Ose. 3. 5. They shall seeke the Lord their God, and Dauid their king. The places also whereas he is called the son of Dauid, are sufficiently knowne and vnderstood. In summe, the Angell declareth that the Prophecie of Amos 9. 11. of raising the tabernacle of Dauid, which was fallen downe and overthrowne, was fulfilled in the person of Christ.

33. Hee shall raigne ouer the house of Iacob. Seeing that saluation was peculiarly promised vnto the Iewes, euen as the couenant was made with Abraham their Father: and Christ, as Paule witnesseth, Rom. 15. 8. was a minifter of circumcision. the Angell doth not without cause appoint his kingdome in that nation, as if it were the proper seate and abiding place of the same. But this differeth not from other Prophecies, which doe enlarge & stretch the kingdō of Christ to the vttermost parts of the earth. For God by a new and wonderfull adoption did plant the Gentiles (which before were strangers) into the house of Iacob, so yet that the Iewes as the first borne should hold the principall degree, as it is set downe in the Psalme 110. 2. The Lord shall sende the rod of thy power out of Sion. Therefore the throne of Christ was placed amongst the children of Israell, from whence hee made the whole world subiect vnto him. But as many as are gathered by faith to the sons of Abraham, are accompted as the true Israel. And although the Iewes through their defection seperated themselues from the Church of God, yet the Lords will was, that certaine remnants of them shoulde remaine euen vnto the ende, because that his calling is beyond the power of men. The body of the people in shewe is vtterly cut off. But wee must remember the mysterie whereof Paule speaketh to the Rom. 11. 25. That at length it shoulde come to passe that God woulde gather some of the Iewes from the dispersing and scattering abroad. In the meane season the Church which is scattered through the whole worlde, is the spirituall house of Iacob, because she fetched her beginning out of Sion. For euer. The Angell declareth in what sense the perpetuities was so oft promised by the Prophets to the kingdome of Dauid. It flourished only in the times of Dauid and Salomon, in power and riches. Roboam the third successor, scarce held a tribe & a halfe. From that time it ceased not to be shaken with diuers miseries, vntill at length it was broken downe. Now the Angel declareth that when in the person of Christ it shall bee established, that shall not againe be destroyed: & to proue the same, he vseth the words of Daniel, which are set downe 7. 14. And of his kingdom shall be no end. Although the sense of the words is, that God is the euerlasting gouernor of the kingdom of Christ and of the Church, so that it shall neuer perish from off the earth, so long as the Sun and Moone shall shine in the heauen, yet the true perpetuities belongeth vnto the glory that is to come. Therefore the faithfull doe so by continuall course some of them succeed others in this life, vntill at the length they bee gathered together into heauen, where they shall raigne without ende

Marke.

Luke 1.

34. Then sayd Mary to the Angell: how shall this be, seeing I know not man?

35. And the Angell answered and said vnto her: the holy Ghost shall come vpon thee, and the power of the most high shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be borne of thee, shall be called the sonne of God.

36. And beholde thy cousin Elizabeth, shee hath also conceived a sonne in her olde age, and this is her sixte moneth, which was called barren.

37. For with God nothing shall be vnpossible.

38. Then Mary saide, Behold the seruant of ohs

the Lord, be it done vnto mee according to thy worde:
So the Angell departed from her.

34. Howe can this bee. The holy Virgin seemeth as hardly to restrain the power of God, as Zachary did before. For that doth she account to be vnpossible, which is beyond the common order of nature, for thus shee reasoneth. I know no man, howe then shoulde I beleue that this shoulde come to passe which thou tellest me? It is not needfull that we should greatly labor to cleare her of all fault, for by fayth shee ought to haue risen to the omnipotent power of God, which is not tyed to naturall meanes, but surmounteth the whole world, and yet shee now stayeth in the common course of generation: yet it is to be knowne that shee doth not so doubt or demand, as if shee would haue the power of God made subiect or equall to her senses, but being stricken with a sodaine admiration, shee is onely moued to aske this question. And that shee obediently and gladly receiueth this promise, may be gathered by this: That whereas there were many doubts on the contrary part, shee yet did stay but at this one. Shee might easily haue objected: where is that throane of Dauid become, seeing that all the dignitie of that Empire had now a long time bin abolished, & all the glorious beauty of the kingly stocke was extinguished. So that if shee had weighed the matter with the iudgement of the flesh, she should haue taken all that she heard of the Angel but for a fable, wherefore it is not to be doubted, but shee easily gaue place, & was throughly perswaded of the restitution of the church, a thing according to the flesh incredible. And it is probable that the prophesie of Esay 11. 1. was commonly spoken of euery where, whereas God promiseth to raise a grasse to grow out of the contemned stocke of Isay. Faith therefore being through the grace of God conceiued in the virgins minde caused her without doubt to beleue the message that was brought her of erecting of the throne of Dauid. If any except and say that there was also an other Prophesie, that a virgin should beare a sonne, I answer that the knowledge of that mysterie was as then very darke. The fathers hoped that they should haue a king borne, vnder whom the people of God should be blessed and happy. But the meane lay hidden from them, as if a vayle had bene put betweene them and it. Therefore it is no marueile that the holy Virgin asketh a question of that shee knoweth not. But that some do imagine of her words, that shee had made a vow of perpetuall virginitie, it is ouer weake and altogether absurd. For then very vnfaithfully had shee done in that shee suffered her selfe to be bestowed on a husband, and so making a mocke of God, had despised his holy ordinance of matrimonic. Although that in Poperie there had crept in a barbarous tyrannie in this matter of matrimonic, yet they neuer durst go so far, as to permit the wife without the consent of the husband to vow continencie, furthermore, it is a childish inuention to imagine a kind of monerie amongst the Iews. Yet that obiection is to be answered, that the virgin had respect vnto the time to come, and therefore should signifie that she should not dwell together with her husband. But this coniecture is probable and plaine, that the greatness, or rather the maiestie of the matter did so strike the virgin, that shee had all her senses tyed & bound with admiration. When shee heareth that the Son of God shall be borne, shee considereth a matter not common, & this is the reason why shee excludeth the knowlede of man. Thus being amased, shee crieth out, how can this be? Therefore doeth God so gently pardon her, and so louingly and fauourably answer her: because that hauing Gods workes in admiration, shee did reuerently and soberly demand how that could come to passe, which she was perswaded to be far aboute the common and accustomed course of nature. Furthermore, this question was not against faith. Because that it arose rather of an admiration, then of distrust, The holy Ghost shall come vpon thee. The Angell doth not so set the maner, as it had been needfull he should haue done, that would satisfie the curiosite of many. But he calleth the Virgin simply to consider the power of the holy Ghost, that with silence and quietly, she might religne her selfe wholly ouer vnto him. The word to come vpon, doth signifie that this is an extraordinary worke, wher the means of nature do want. And the next part of the sentence is added to expound the former, The power of the most high shall ouersadowe thee. For the spirit is as it were the essential power of God, through whose worke he sheweth and exerciseth himselfe, as well in the gouernance of the world as in miracles. There is an apt Metaphore in the word ouersadowe. For the Scripture doth oft compare the power of God (wher wth he preferueth and defendeth his) vnto a shadow. But there seemeth to be an other more peculiar sence and vnderstanding of this place: namely that the worke of the spirit should be secret, euen as a cloud set before shoulde stay the eyes of men from seeing. And as in working miracles, God doth keepe secret from vs the counsell of his workes: So it is our partes with modestie to reuerence that which he would haue kept hidden from vs. Therefore that holy thing that shall be borne. This is a confirmation of the former sentence, for the Angell teacheth vs, that it behooueth Christ to be borne without the company of man and woman, that he might be holy and the Son of God, that is, that he should not be in a comon estate amongst men, but that in holinesse & glory he should excell all creatures. The heretikes which faine, that when he was borne man, and was after made the Sonne of God, doe wrest that causall coniunction, that he should therefore be called the Sonne of God, because that hee was wonderfully conceived by the power of the holy Ghost, but they reason very wickedly. For although that he was manifested the Sonne of God in flesh, it followeth not but that the word was begotten of the Father before all worlds. Or rather, he the same that was the Sonne of God in his eternall Deitie, appeared also the Sonne of God in his humane fleihe. But this place dooth not onely teach vs the vntie of the person in Christ, but also sheweth that Christ, euen in that he had put on the humane nature, was also the Sonne of GOD. Therefore as the name of the Sonne of God was from the beginning proper to the diuine essence of Christ, so now the Deitie and humanitie ioyned, it agreeth to both the natures together, because that the secret and celestially working of his generation exempteth him from the common order of men. Often also other where as he affirmeth himselfe to be very man, he calleth himselfe the sonne of man. But the veritie of the humane nature is no let but that his diuine generation might procure him a peculiar honor aboute all others: namely in that hee was conceived by the holy Ghost beyond the ordinarie maner of nature. Of this there groweth a good cause of the assurance of our fayth, that wee might more boldly call God, Father. For his onely Sonne would needes become our brother, that hee might in common make his father to be also ours. It is also to bee noted, that Christe as hee was conceiued by a spirituall power, is called a holy seede. And euen as it was be-hoouefull that hee shoulde be very man, that he might wash away our sinnes, and in our flesh that he might ouercome death and Sathan, and that he might so bee a perfecte mediatur: so it was necessarie, that he that shoulde purge others from sinne, shoulde be free from all vncleannesse and spotted. Although yet that Christ was borne of the seede of Abraham, yet brought hee no infection out of that corrupt nature, because that the holy Ghost kept him pure and cleane euen from the beginning. Neither that he himselve alone should excell in holinesse, but also that hee should sanctifie his. Therefore the maner of conception doth testifie that we haue a mediator seperate from sinners.

36. And behold Elizabeth. With an example done at home by her, the Angell doth strengthen the faith of Mary in hope of the myracle, For if neither the barrenesse, nor the old age of Elizabeth could hinder God, but that hee would make her a mother, when shee shall see such a spectacle of Gods power in her owne kinswomã, there is no cause why Mary should still contain her selfe with in the accustomed boundes of nature. He expressly noteth the sixth moneth. For seeing that the woman cõmonly perçeiueh in the fifth moneth, that her childe hath life, in the sixth month, she is put out of all doubt: It had bin the part of Mary so to haue credited the simple word of God, that there should haue been no need by any other meanes to strengthe her faith, but least she should wauer any more, the Lorde vseth this new supportation to stay her in his promise. With the sãe fauour doth he daily ayd & hold vs vp, yea and as our faith is weaker, so with the more fauour doth he ayd vs. Therefore least that we should doubt of his truth, he gathereth diuers testimonies which may cõfirme the sãe vnto vs. It is demanded how the kindred cãe between Elizabeth, which was of the daughters of Aarõ, & Mary which was of the stocke of Dauid And also it seemeth to be against the law Num. 3.6 which forbiddeth women to marry out of their owne tribes. As concerning the lawe, if the ende be considered, it did forbid onely those mariages whereby inheritances may bee mixed. But there was no such danger, if that a woman of the tribe of Iuda was married to a Priest, to whome the inheritance could not be translated. The sãe reason was also, if that a woman of the tribe of Leuie was bestowed out of her kinred. And it may bee that the mother of the holy Virgin was of the tribe of Aaron, & that the kinred so came betweene her daughter and Elizabeth.

37. For with God shall no worde bee impossible. If you will vse this phrase worde in his proper and natie signification, then the meaning is that God will performe what so euer hee hath promised, because that there is no let equall with his power. And the argument shall thus bee framed: This hath God promised, therefore hee will performe it. because that no impossibilitie may bee objected against his woorde. But because that woorde according to the phrase of the Hebrew tongue, is oft vsed for a thing or substance, we may more plainly expound it thus, nothing is impossible with God. Yet that axiome must bee alwayes holden that they doe peuisly wander out of the way, which dreame of the power of God besides his word, if any be found. For his omnipotencie is to be considered, so as it may be a foundation for the further building of our hope & faith. And now we shall not onely doe very rashly and vnprofitably, but also very perillously, if we dispute what God can do, vnlesse withall we consider what he will doe. Furthermore, the Angell doth here in this place, as God doth in diuers places of the scripture, for that vnder a generall doctrine, hee confirmeth one especiall promise. And this is the true and righte vse of a generall doctrine, if we apply the promises therein set downe, to the present matter, when soeuer we be vexed and troubled: for so long as they be generall and indefinite, they are colde. Furthermore it is not to be maruailed at, that the Angell doth tell Mary of the power of God, for the distrust of his power, doth make vs not to beleue his promises. All men with tongue confesse that God is omnipotent: but if he promise any thing beyond the reach of our capacitie, wee are at a stay. And whereof commeth this? but for that wee will attribute nothing more to his power, then our senses can discern. Therefore Paule to the Rom. 4. 20. commending the faith of Abraham, sayth that hee gaue the glory to God, because he was able to fulfill what soeuer hee had promised. And in another place when he speaketh of the hope of eternall life, he proposeth the power of God before him. In the 2. Tim. 1. 12. he sayeth I knowe whom I haue beleueed, and I am perswaded that he is able to keepe that which I haue committed vnto him. This seemeth to be but a small portion of faith, and that none, no not the wicked will derogate from God the title of omnipotent: But who soeuer hath the power of God surely and deeply fixed in his heart, hee shall easily ouercome all other lets and hinderances of his faith. Yet it is to be noted that the effectuall power of God (if I may so speake) is apprehended in a true faith: For God is mighty, and will be acknowledged, that he may declare himselfe to bee true in deede.

38. Behold the seruant of the Lord. The holy virgin will argue and dispute the matter no further, and yet it is not to bee doubted but that there were many things which might hinder her faith, yea, & altogether turne her minde frō the speech of the angel. But she taking the aduantage frō the contrary reasons, enforced her selfe to obedience: & this is a right prooffe of faith, whē we restraine our minds, & hold thē as prisoners that they dare not oppose this or that against God: so on the other side liberty to contēd, is the mother of infidilitie: & these words are not of small weight. Behold the seruant of the Lord, for she offereth & dedicateth her selfe wholly vnto God, that hee may freely vse her according to his owne wil. The vnbeleeuers withdrawe themselves frō his hand, & as much as they can, they hinder his worke: But faith doth present vs before God, that we may be ready to obey. Then if the holy virgin was the seruant of the Lord, because that shee obediently submitted her selfe to his gouernement, there is not a worse contempt, thē by fleeing to deny him that obedience which hee deserueth & doth require. To bee short as faith only maketh obedient seruants to God, & deliuereth vs into his power: so infidelitie maketh vs rebels and runagates. Be it done vnto me. This clause may be expounded two wayes, eyther that the holy Virgin passeth into a prayer and request: or els continuing in the same matter, shee proceedeth in resigning and deliuering her selfe vnto God.

God. I simply interpret it, that shee being perswaded of the power of Gods and willingly following whether he calleth, shee doth also subscribe vnto his promise, and so doth not only waite for the effect, but also doth earnestly desire the same. And it is to be noted that shee rested vpon the word of the Angel, because shee knew that it came from God, weighing the dignitie of the same, not of the minister, but of the authour.

Luke. 1.

Matthew

Marke.

39. And Mary arose in those dayes, and went into the hill countrey with hast, to a citie of Iuda.

40. And entred into the house of Zacharias, and saluted Elizabeth.

41. And it came to passe, as Elizabeth heard the salutation of Marie, the babe sprang in her bellie, and Elizabeth was filled with the holy Ghost.

42. And shee cryed with a loud voyce, and sayd: Blessed art thou among women, because the fruit of thy wombe is blessed.

43. And whence commeth this to me, that the mother of my Lord should come to me?

44. For loe, as soone as the voyce of thy salutation soüded in mine eares, the babe sprang in my belly for ioy

45. And blessed is shee that beleued: for those things shalbe performed, which were told her from the Lord.

39. And Marie arose. This iourney whereof Luke maketh mention, testifieth that Maries fayth was not vnfruitfull, because that Gods promise was not so soone forgotten as the Angell was out of sight, but that remayned fast in her minde. And her hast witnessed her earnest and ardent affection. Heereof it may be gathered, that all other businesse being set aside, the Virgin as it was meete did account of, and preferre this fauour and grace of God. Yet it may be demaunded for what purpose shee tooke this iourne. It is certayne that she went not thither only to make search & enquire, for she nourished the sonne of God as well in her heart by fayth, as conceived in her wombe: neither can I subscribe to the iudgement of some, which thinke that shee went thither to salute her. For it seemeth more probable to me, that partely to increase & to confirme her faith, partely that they one with an other might set forth the glory of God, was the cause that moued her. And there is no cause why we should account it an absurde thinge, that shee by the sight of a myracle did seeke for confirmation of her fayth, because that it was not in vaine that the Angell did propose the same vnto her. For although that the faithfull are content with the bare and onely worde of the Lord, yet in the meane time they despise not any of his works, which they thinke may any whit preuaile for the supporting of their faith. And especially it behooued Mary to accept this ayde profered her, vnlesse she would haue forsaken that, which the Lord had willingly giuen her. Furthermore the seeing one another, might stirre vp as well her as Elizabeth, to a greater thankfulnes, as by the text it appeareth. For the power of God was more euident and notable, in that at onced they see his grace powred vpon them both, because that comparison did adde no small light. But Luke doth not declare which was that Cittie wherein Zachary dwelt, but only maketh mention that it pertained to the tribe of Iuda, and also that it was placed in a hill countrie: whereof is gathered that it was further from the towne of Nazareth, then was Hierusalem.

41. As shee heard the salutation. It is a naturall thing, that the childe in the wombe of a woman great with child, should moue at a sodaine ioy, But Luke would note vnto vs some extraordinary thing. It appertaineth nothing to the matter to entangle our selues in subtile quettions, whether the infante knew that Christ was present, or whether this was a sense or feeling of godlinesse. Let this one thing rather suffice vs, that the infant leapt by the secrete motion of the spirit. Neither doth Luke attribute any proper sense to the Infant, but doth rather signifie that this was a portion of the worke of G O D in the mother, that the infant sprang in her wombe, That he sayth that shee was filled with the holy Ghost, the meaning is, that she besides the accustomed manner was sodenly indued with a spirite of prophesie, For shee was not without the gifts of the spirit before, but then the power appeared farre more plentifull and wonderfull.

42. Blessed art thou. Shee seemeth to place Mary & Christ in like degree, which were nothing meete nor conuenient, but I willingly admit their iudgement which thinke that the cause of her blessednesse is rendred in the second parte of the sentence. For it is oft vsed to put a copulatiue in stead of a woorde causall, therefore Elizabeth affirmeth that her Cousen is blessed because of the blessednes of the Son. And although this was not the cheife felicity that Mary had, to beare Christ in her wombe: nay, this dignity in order came behind that, that shee was by the spirit of Christ borne againe into a new life, yet was shee worthily called blessed, whom God made worthy this singular honour, that shee should beare vnto the world his sonne, in whom shee was spirituallly regenerate. And to this day wee cannot make mention of the blessing brought vnto vs thorough Christ, but also that we must remember how honorably the Lord aduanced Mary, in that he would that she should be the mother of his only begottē son

43. Wiencce commeth this to me? This modestie is to be noted, that Elizabeth considering the great graces of God in Mary, doth giue vnto her that honour that is due, and yet lifteth her no higher (whereby God might bee offended) then was conuenient. For there is such wickednesse planted in the world, that there are but few that fall not into one of these 2. vices: for some pleasing themselves too much aboue measure, doe maliciously despise the giftes of God in their brethren, that they alone might be aloft. And there are others which do so superstitiously extoll men, as if they should make idols of them, for them to worship. Heereof it came, that they leauing Christ, as it were in the lower rowme, did giue the chiefeft seate vnto Mary. Contrariwise Elizabeth in praying her, doth not so obscure the glory of God, but rather referreth all thinges to God himselfe, And yet as shee acknowledgeth that G O D hath giuen his grace vnto her, and to others, shee enuieth not to giue him the highest degree, and modestly sheweth that shee hath receiued more then was due to her.

In that shee calleth Mary the mother of her Lord, there is noted the vnitie of the person in two natures, as if shee should haue said: hee which is begotten a mortall man in the wombe of Mary, is also eternall God: for it must be remembred that the simple woman doth not speake of her owne wit, but shee onely vttereth those things which the holy ghost doth teach her. And this name doth properly belong to the Son of God manifested in the flesh, vnto whom all power is giuen of the father, & which was ordained the cheife Prince of heauen & earth, by whose hand God gouerneth all things. Yet he is especially the Lord of the faithfull, who willingly and gladly submit themselues vnder his government. for he is not the head but of his owne bodie. Therefore Paul saith, 1. Cor. 8. 5. Although that many are called Lords in the world, yet vnto vs, that is, to them that are of the hould of faith, there is but one Lord. Furthermore, when shee amplifieth this grace of God whereof she speaketh, by the sodaine motion of the infante which shee bare in her wombe, it is not to be doubted but that shee would declare that shee felt something supernaturall and diuine.

45. Blessed is shee that beleued. Seeing that it appeareth by that which Luke hath sayd before, that Elizabeth spake by the secret direction of the spirit: it is the same spirit that affirmeth that Mary is blessed because that she beleued and in praying the fayth of Mary, he generally teacheth vs wherein the chiefe felicitie of men consisteth. Blessed Mary which beleued in her heart the promise of God, conceiued and bare saluation to her selfe and to all the worlde. This was speciall to her. But because that wee haue no drop of righteousnesse, life, or of any good thing, but as the Lord offereth the same vnto vs in his word there is one faith which pulleth vs from out of extreame pouertie and miserie, and maketh vs partakers of the true felicitie: and there is great waight in this clause: For those things shall be performed which were told her. This is the meaning that faith giueth place to the promise of God, that they may take effecte in vs. And it is certaine that the truth of God doth not depend vpon the will of men, but rather that is true. Rom. 3. 4. That God remaineth alwaies true, although all the world (which is giuen to vnbeleife and lying) should endeouour to weaken and hinder the same. But because that vnbeleeuers are vnworthy to inioy the fruite of the promises, therefore the scripture teacheth, that the same promises are onely by fayth made effectuell to our saluation, for God offereth his benefites generally to all, and fayth openeth her bosome to receiue the same, but vnbeleife suffereth the same to passe by, that they may not once come neare vs. If Mary had beene vnbeleeuing, yet that could not haue hindered the purpose of God, but that he would haue performed his worke, by some other meanes that he would haue liked. But shee is called blessed, because that by fayth shee receiuing the blessing offered her, made the way readie to God for the performance of his worke. So againe vnbeleife shutteth the gate against him, and stayeth his hand from working, least that they should taste the comfort of saluation, which disappoynt him of the glory of his power. Also the relation betweene the word and faith is to be noted, and hereof we learne what it is to beleue: namely, when we subscribe and consent to that which GOD doth speake, and doe certainly assure our selues, that hee will performe that which he hath promised.

The clause From the Lord, signifieth as much as the simple doe commonly say on the behalfe or part of God, for the promise was brought by the Angell, but it came from God alone, whereby we gather, that whether God vseth the ministerie of Angels or of men, yet his will is, that there shall no lesse reuerence be giuen to his word, then if he himselve openly should appeare from heauen,

Mathew.	Marke.
		46. Then Mary sayd, my soule magnifieth the Lord.
		47. And my spirite reioyceth in God my sauour.
		48. For hee hath looked on the poore degree of his seruant: For behold, from henceforth shall all ages call me blessed.
		49. Because hee that is mightie, hath done for mee great things, and holy is his name.
		50. And his mercy is from generation to generation, on them that feare him.

Now doth hee set downe and shew the song of the holy Virgine, notable and worthy to bee reported, whereby it playnely appeareth how shee excelled in the gift of the spirite. And there are three partes of this song, for Marie with a solemne thankes giuing, doeth first declare the mercie of God which shee had found in her selfe. Then in generall wordes shee commendeth the power and iudgements of G O D: At length shee applyeth the same to this present matter, where shee speaketh of the redemption promised in times past to the Church, and nowe performed. My soule magnifieth. Here Marie declareth her thankfulness, as we sayd euen now. And because that the hypocrites for the most part do set forth the prayfes of God with full mouthes and no affection of the heart, therefore Mary sayth that shee doth prayse God, euen from the innermost affection of her minde. And truely, they doe nothing else but prophane the holy name of God, which not from their heart, but with the tongue onely doe declare his glory. Furthermore, when as these wordes Soule and Spirite are diuersly taken in the Scripture, yet when that they come together, they doe signify two especiall faculties of the soule: for the spirite is taken for the vnderstanding, and the Soule for the seate of affections. That wee may the better vnderstand the minde of the holy Virgine, it is to bee noted, that that is put heere in the second place, which in order ought to be first: for that the will of man might be stirred to prayse God, it is necessary that the reioycing of the spirite shoulde goe before, as Iames teacheth chap. 5. 13. Is any man merry? let him sing, for sorrow and heauinesse do restraine the minde, and also they do hinder the tongue from vttering and declaring the goodnesse of God: Therefore when as the minde of Mary was filled with ioy, her heart brake forth into the prayse of God, and it is not without cause that shee attributeth the epithite of Sauour vnto G O D, when as shee speakes of the ioy of her heart: for vntill that God be knowen as a sauour, the mindes of men are neuer freely nor truely merry, but doe alwayes remaine maine ambiguous & carefull. Therefore it is the onely fatherly fauour of God, & the saluation which proceedeth frō the same, which filleth vs with ioy. In summe, this is first to be learned, that the faithfull may glory & ioy, that their saluation is in God. Then they ought to follow the next, that they hauing found him a louing father, should giue him thanks. The word soterus doth signifie more in Greeke, then Seruator doth in the Latine, euen such a one as doth not onely once deliuer, but is also the author of perpetuall saluation.

48. For he hath looked. She sheweth the cause why she had thee ioy of her heart grounded vpon God, euen because that he of his fauour & loue had looked vpon her, for in that she calleth her selfe poore, she resigneth all worthines from her selfe, & ascribeth the whole cause of her ioy, to the free grace and goodnesse of God, for humilitie in this place (as some vnlearned & ignorāt men haue foolishly thought) doth not signifie submission or modestie, or a habite of the minde, but signifieth a vile estate and an abiect condition, therefore this is the sense. That I was vile & despised, was no hinderance to God, but that he vouchsafed to turne his eyes vnto me. Then if the pouertie of Mary bee opposed to excellencie, (as the matter it selfe declareth, & it plainly appeareth by the Greeke word) we see that Mary casting downe her selfe, doth onely exalt God. And this was not a shew of fained humilitie, but a simple & plaine confession of her thought, which she had engendred in her minde: for as she was of no account in the world, so she did no whit the more esteeme of her selfe. From henceforth shall call me blessed. She sayth that this benefite of God shalbe remembered in all ages: And if it were so notable that all men euery where shoulde declare the same, then it was not lawfull for Mary, vpon whom the same was bestowed, to bury the same in silence. But obserue that Mary accounteth nothing of hir own felicitie, but that she acknowledgeth that it were giuen her from above, and thankfully accepteth the grace she hath received: I shall (saith shee) bee accounted blessed throughout all ages. Doth she say this, as if shee had obtained this prayse by her owne power or industrie? No, but shee rather dothe commend the onely worke of God: whereby we perceiue how much the Papistes differ from her, for what good thinges soeuer shee had of God, they made small account of, and vnadvisedly they set her forth with their owne vaine inuentions: They abundantly heape vp together for her magnificall and more then proud titles, as that shee shoulde bee the Queene of heauen, the starre of saluation, the gate of life, the life, the sweetnesse, the hope and the health: yea sathan also carried them so farre into impudencie and madnesse, that they gaue her power ouer Christ for this is their song: Aske the father command thy sonne. Seeing that it plainly appeareth that none of these proceede from the Lorde, the holy Virginn in one woorde abandoneth them all, while shee esteemeth all her glory to be in God his benefites, for if shee bee for this one thing onely to bee renowned, because that GOD hath dealt mightily with her, then there is no place left for those fained titles which they else where haue borrowed. Furthermore, there is nothing more reprochfull to her, then to haue her Sonne spoyled of that which was due to him, and that shee her selfe shoulde be clothed with those sacrilegious spoyles. Now let the papists go, & let them cry that wee are iniurious to Christes mother : because that reiecting the lyes of men, wee onely set forth the benefites of G O D in her, and wee graunt her that which is most honourable for her, but these preposterous worshippers take it from her . For wee doe willingly receiue her as a teacher , and wee obey her doctrine and her preceptes, and it is not vnknowen what she hath sayde. which the Papistes not regarding, but treading the same, as it were vnder their feete, doe discredit her wordes as much as they canne. But let vs remember that here is a common rule set downe, to be vtied of vs in prayling eyther Angels or men : namely that the grace of G O D may bee set forth in them : So also there is nothing to bee prayd at all, that proceedeth not from thence. When she sayth, that God, that is mighty, hath done great things, she declareth that God was not holpe with any other ayd, that his only power might the more appeare. Now we must repeat that, which she sayd before, that she was looked vpon, although she was an abiect and contemned. Whereof it followeth, that those prayles of Mary are preposterous and adulterous, in which the power and free fauour of God is not altogether and wholly extolled.

49. And holy is his name. This is the second part of the song, wherein the holy Virgin in generall sentences commendeth the power, iudgements, and mercy of God. And this clause ought not ioyntly in one sentence to bee read with the former, but aparte. Mary had extolled the grace of God, which shee had found in her selfe, and taking occasion of this, she cryeth out that his name is holy, and that his mercy flourisheth in all ages.

Furthermore, the name of God is called holy, because it deserueth great reuerence, that so oft as there is mention made of God, there shoulde appeare withall a reuerend maiestie of him. The next sentence (wherein the perpetuities of the mercy of God is prayd) is taken out of the accustomed forme of the covenant, Gen. 17. 7. I will bee thy God, and the God of thy feede after thee for euer. And in Deut. 7. 9. I am God that shew mercy euen to a thousand generations: In which words hee doth not onely shew, that he is alwaies like himselfe, but hee declareth his continuall fauour, which hee beareth towards his: so that euen after their death, he loueth their children & their childrens children, and their whole offspring. So with a continuall course of loue he did shew himselfe to the posteritie of Abraham, because that hee had receiued Abraham in to his fauour, he made a league with him for euer. But because that all that come of Abraham after the flethe, are not in deede the sons of Abraham, therefore Mary restraineth the effect of the promise to the true worshippers of God, as Dauid also doth, Psa. 103. 17. The mercy of the Lord endureth for euer, vpon them that feare him, and his righteousnes vpon childrens children, vnto them that keepe his covenant. God therefore so promisseth, that he will shew himselfe mercifull to the children of his Saints throughout all ages: that so hee may yet take away the occasion of all vaine hope from hypocrites: for they that are degenerate children of his Saints, & haue fallen from their godlines and faith, do in vaine & rashly glory that God is their father.

Wherefore by this exception their vanitie and pride is ouerthrowne, which are puffed vp with a false pretence of G O D his grace, without faith.

God made an vniuersall covenant of saluation with the stocke of Abraham : But as the stones watered with the raine, doe not become softe therewith. so the hardnesse of heart is such a hinderance to the vnfaithfull, that the promised rightnesse and saluation cannot enter into them. Yet God, that his promise might be certaine and sure, hath reserved vnto himselfe some seede. By the feare of God is vnderstood all godlines and religion, which cannot be without faith. But here a question may be demaunded, for what cause is God called mercifull, if no man do so finde him, but hee that deserueth his fauour? For if the mercie of God be vpon them that feare him, then godlinesse and a good conscience doe procure his fauour to men: and so by this meanes men should by merits preuent his grace. I answer that this also is a portion of his mercie, that God planteth a feare and a reuerence of him in the children of the godly. For he doth not meane heere the beginning of grace, as if they should imagine that God were idle, and should looke downe from heauen to espie who they were that were, woorthy of the same, but he onely driueth the hypocrites from their pieuissh securitie, least that they should think they had God bound to them, because that they according to the flesh, are the children of godly parents, when that the end of God his covenant is far otherwise and the condition much contrary, namely this: He will haue a people alwaies in the world, of whom he will be purely worshipped.

Luke. 1.

Matthew

Marke.

51. Hee hath shewed strength with his arme, hee hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts.

52. He hath put downe the mightie from their seates and exalted them of lowe degree.

53. He hath filled the hungrie with good things and sent away the rich emptie.

54. He hath upholden Israell his seruauant, being mindefull of his mercie.

55. As he hath spoken to our fathers, to wit, to Abraham and his seede for euer.

51. He hath shewed strength. Is as much as if he should haue sayd, hee hath wrought mightily, and the arme of God is opposed against all other helps, as in Esa. 59. 16. God looked and there was none to helpe. Therefore his arme did saue it, and his righteousnesse it selfe did sustaine it. This then is the meaning of Mary, that God was satisfied with his owne power, and had no fellowes in his worke, and called none to helpe him. That which presently is spoken of the proude, seemeth to be added for two causes, partely because that the proude which endeouer after the maner of Gyants to striue against God doe nothing preuayle: and also because that God doth not stretch forth the power of his arme, but for the sauegard of the lowly, and that he might ouerthrow the proude, which arrogantly take too much to themselues. And to that purpose belongeth that exhortation of Peter, 1. Pet. 5. 6. Humble your selues vnder the mighty hand of God. The maner of speach is also to be noted. Hee scattereth the proud in the imagination of their hearts. For (as their pride & ambitio is great, so is their couetousnes insatiabile) in their deuises, they heap together as it were a great mountaine, and that I may speake one word, they build the tower of Babel: for they being not satisfied in that they haue foolishly attempted this or that about their strength, they forthwith heape newe consultations of madde presumption to their former deuices: when God for a while hath with silence from heauen laughed at their notable purposes, then at a sodaine hee disperseth & ouerthroweth their whole heape, as if a man should pull downe a building, which before was strongly and soundly built and compacte together, and should dispearce the same farre off into diuerse places.

Hee hath put downe the mightie. If you translate it Princes, the sense will bee the plainer: For although that dynastai, are so called of the Greeks by reason of their power, yet they are interpreted gouernours and chiefe magistrates. But many haue thought this word mightie, to bee a Participle. Mary sayeth that they shall bee pulled out of their thrones, that the vnknowne and simple may be lifted into their places. So that which prophane men doe call the place of Fortune, shee doth attribute to the iudgements and providence of God. Yet we must know that there is not giuen to God an absolute power, as if he should by a tyrannous authoritie tosse and turne men hither and thither as balles, but a most right and iust gouernement, and hath a notable reason for what soeuer he doth, though it be often hid from vs: for sodaine chaunges doe not please God, as that hee should in a mockerie lift them vp aloft, whome hee had determined sodainely to throw downe, but rather the wickednes of men doth turne and alter the estate of thinges, because that no man acknowledgeth that the estate of euery man is in the will and hand of God. But they that are placed aboue others, do not onely contumeliously and cruelly handle their neighbours, but also most sharply doe they deale against the authour of their saluation. Therefore some are lifted vp into high degree of honour, and some are slipte downe, or rather cast downe headlong out of their thrones, that wee indeede might learne, that what soeuer thing is aloft and exalted in the worlde, is subiect to God, and that all the world, is vnder his gouernement. Dauid declarereth the cause and end of these changes, Psal. 107. 20 and also Dan. 2. 21.

Wee see how the Princes of the worlde become arrogant without measure how they runne into luxuriouse, how they swell in pride, and howe the sweetenesse of prosperitie hath made them drunken. It is not to be wondered at, if God cannot beare with such vnthankfulnesse, and this is the cause why for the most part their state is not durable, whom God hath lifted vp on high. And againe, the glory of Kings and Princes, doeth so amaze the common sort of men, that few there bee that thinke there is any God about them. But if that Princes brought their scepters with them from their mothers wombe, or that the continuance of their kingdomes were perpetuall, then all knowledge of God, and of his providence, would presently vanish away. The Lord therefore placing the low aloft, hee leadeth the pride of the world as prysoner in his triumph, and with all hee teacheth his, simplicitie and modestie.

Now wee knowe why Mary sayde, that it is GOD that throweth the Princes from their thrones, and exalteth the lowly: namely, that he might teach vs that the worlde is not turned and rowled by the blinde force of Fortune.

Fortune, but what chaunges so euer are seene, they all come to passe by the prouidence of God: and also that God himselfe with great equitie doth gouerne those things which seeme to trouble & peruert the whole order of the worlde. The which thing she more fully confirmeth in the next vers. He that filled (saith she) the hungry with good things, & sent away the rich empty. Hereby we gather that alterations please not God of themselues, but for another cause: That is, because that the great ones, & the rich, and the mighty, being puffed vp with their fulnes, do challenge all things to theselues, & leaue nothing to God himselfe. wherefore we must diligently take heed that we be not carryed away with prosperity, we must also beware of the vnconstant fulnes of the flesh, least that God sodenly make vs empty. But this doctrine, that God filleth the hungry with good things, bringeth great comfort to the godly, which feele their owne poerty: and as though they were hungerstarued, doe sigh vnto God.

54. Hee hath vpholden Israell. In this last parte, Marie doeth apply these generall sentences to the present purpose. And the summe is, that God now performeth the saluation, which in times past was promised to the holy Fathers.

But first there is an apte Metaphore in the worde vpholden, for the estate of the people was so throwne downe, that amongst the most there was no hope left that it might be againe restored, therefore it is said that Israell is vpholden, because that God with his outstretched hand raised it vp, it being throwne prostrate, and lying vnder feete. Religion was defiled many wayes, in the publicke doctrine there was left almost nothing sound.

The gouernement of the Church being wholly confused, did breath out nothing else but cruell barbarousnesse: The polliticke order was vtterly ouerthrowne, the Romaines and Herode as sauage beastes, did rend in peeces the body of the people: So much more notable was their restitution, for that it was then when all things being ouerthrowne, not lawfull for them to hope after it.

Here he useth the name of childe, which may as well be vnderstoode a seruant, as a sonne, but to take it for a seruant is most apte. And Israell in this place (as in many others) is called the seruant of God, because that hee was receiued into the houshold of God.

Being mindefull. Mary sheweth the cause why this people ready to fall into ruine, was receiued of GOD: nay why God raysted them vppe, being nowe all ready fallen downe, because that in preserving the same, he might shew a token of his mercy, yea in woorde expressly he declareth that God was mindefull of his mercy whereof hee might haue seemed to haue beene somewhat forgetfull, seeing that he suffered his people to be so miserably vexed and afflicted: for it is commonly vsed to attribute affections to God, euen as in their causes men thinke him either to be angry or to be mercifull vnto them. And because that mens mindes cannot conceiue the mercy of God, but as the same is offered and testified to vs in his woorde: here Mary calleth her selfe and others to the promises, and teacheth that GOD is saythfull and constant in performing the same.

In this sense God is often called louing and true : because that wee can neuer account of his fatherly goodnesse towards vs: but that wee must also remember his worde, by which band he bindeth himselfe vnto vs, & the same being put in the middle, he knitteth our saluation with the goodnes of God, with a knot that cannot be vnknit. But in the same wordes doth Mary shew, that the couenant which God made with the fathers in times past was of his free grace for there she fetcheth the promised saluation out of the meere mercy of God, as out of a fountaine : and hereof we gather that she was well exercised in the doctrine of the scripture. The Messias was then commonly looked for : but there were but few which had their faith grounded vpon so sincere a knowledge of the scripture.

55. To Abraham and to his seede. If thou readest it ioyntly, the chaunging of the case seemeth to be absurd: for then thou shouldst rather haue vsed the accusatiue case, then the ablatiue, but in my iudgement there is no simple apposition: because that Mary doth not onely declare who those fathers were, to whom God spake, but she sheweth that the force and effect of the promises doth reach to all the posteritie, if they be of the true seed of Abraham. Whereof it also followeth to be vnderstood, that Mary speaketh of the solemne couenant, which was specially made with Abraham and his house. For there were other promises, which were made to Adam, to Noah, and to others, which generally did belong to all the Gentiles. But as vnbeliefe did cut off many fleshly children of Abraham, and because they were degenerate, they were altogether estranged from the house of Abraham: so wee, which were strangers, being grafted in by fayth, are to bee accounted the true seede of Abraham. Let vs therefore holde, that God in times past so spake to the fathers, that his grace which hee offered vnto them stould also appertaine to them that came after, and also he hath adopted all the Gentiles, that by fayth they might become the spirituall children of Abraham, which by nature were not.

Luke 1.

Matthew	Marke.
	56. And Mary abode with her about three monethes: after she returned to her owne house.
	57. Now Elizabeths time was fulfilled, that she should be deliuered, & she brought forth a sonne.
	58. And her neighbours & cosines heard tell, how the Lord shewed his great mercy vpon her, and they reioyced with her.
	59. And it was so, that on the eight day they came to circumsise the babe, and called his name Zacharyas, after the name of his father.
	60. But his mother answered and said, not so: but hee shall be called Iohn.
	61. And they sayd vnto her, there is none of thy kinred, that is named with this name.
	62. Then they made signes to his father, how he would haue him called.

63. So hee asked for writing Tables, and wrote, saying: his name is Iohn, and they marvelled all.

64. And his mouth was opened immediately, and his tongue loosed, and he spake, and pray'd God.

65. Then feare came on them that dwelt neere vnto them, and all these wordes were noysed abroade throughout all the hill countrey of Iudea.

66. And all they that hearded them, layde them vp in their hearts, saying, what manner childe shall this bee, and the hande of the Lorde was with him.

The summe of this historie is, that the natiuitie of Iohn became famous through diuers myracles of God, which promised some great and singular thing (in time to come) of that infant. For it was the will of God to set him forth with these rare tokens from his mothers wombe, least that afterwards, as an vnknowne person, or as one of the common sorte, hee shoulde goe forth to execute the office of a Prophet. First, Luke declareth, that Mary was almost three monethes with her cosine, euen vnto the day of her deliuerance: for it is probable, that there was no other cause of her tarrying, but that shee might enioy the sight of the heavenly grace, which the Angell tolde her of, for the confirmation of her fayth.

58. And her neighbours and cosines. It may bee doubted whether these men esteemed the great grace of God of the only blessing of bearing a child, or whether they had heard before that an Angel had appeared to Zachary, which had promised him a sonne. Certainly this was no small benefit of God, that a barren woman, whose course of age was now past, should beare a child beyond the order of nature. Therefore it may be, that for this so great a cause, they extolled the greatnes of the goodnes of God: Furthermore, on the eight day (as the custome was) for duty & humanity sake, they came together. But this occasiō doth God vse, that he might make them witneses & beholders of his power, and of his glory. And it is not to be doubted, but that there came a greater concourse of the people, because of the extraordinary birth: for they accounted it as a wonder, to see an old and barren woman sodenly to become with childe. And nowe, when the child was borne, the wonder was renewed and increased. We gather by the words of Luke, that although they circumcised their children at home: yet they did it not without a concourse & an assembly of men: and that not without a cause, for seeing that it was a publike sacramēt of the church, it ought not to bee administred secretly or priuately.

59. They called him after the name of his father. Wee knowe that in the beginning names were giuen to men, eyther of the euent of things, or else by propheticall instinctiō, to declare and note some secrete worke of God. But after in proesse of time, when there was more store of names, so that conueniently they coulde not daily inuent newe, they becing content with their old & accustomed names, called their childré by the names of their au-

cesters. So there were many Zacharyes before Iohn his father, and it may bee that he came of the sonne of Barachias. And we know, that most cōmonly that is holden for a law, which is receiued into vse & custome. Therefore these men strue, that their custome might be obserued in naming of the child. But as there is no religion to be put in names, so no wise men will deny the faithfull in this behalfe, to make a godly and fit choysē: that they may giue their children such names as may teach them & admonish thē of their duties. Furthermore, let thē borrow the names of the holy fathers (that so they may prouoke their children to follow their examples) rather then take them from prophane men.

60. His mother answered. It is vncertaine, whether that Elizabeth was also taught of an Oracle: But it is most like, that when Zacharyas saw himselfe punished for his slacknesse to beleue, that hee tolde his wife by writing that, which the Angell had giuen in commandement as concerning his name:
 for that otherwise shee woulde not haue obeyed the commandement of God,
Why also this name was giuen to the Baptist from aboue, I haue before declared. The kinsfolkes although they knew not the cause, yet they are moued with the newnesse of the thing, especially because that they suppose that this is not vnaduisedly done.

64. His mouth was opened. God renowneth the birth day of his Prophet by restoring the tongue to the father. And it is not to bee doubted, but that this benefit was differred to this day, for this ende and purpose, that he might turne mens eyes vppon Iohn. It is sayd that Zacharyas prayd God, not only that hee might declare his thankfulness, but that his kinsfolke and neighbours might know that this punishment was layde vppon him, because that he was so slacke to beleue. And hee was not ashamed with his owne reproach, to declare and set forth the glory of G O D. So it is euery where knowne to all men, that there is a childe borne not at aduenture, or after the common order, but promised by heauenly Oracle.

65. Then feare came on them all. This feare whereof Luke maketh mention in this place, sprang of the feeling of Gods power: For the workes of God are with such reuerence to be considered, that they may earnestly moue vs. For God playeth not with his myracles, but he stirreth vp the senses of men, which otherwise he perceiueth to be slow and dull. And Luke sayth that this fame was spread abroad throughout all the hill countrey of Iudea. Although that many tooke no profit by it (yet they were for a time touched with the power of God) for when that Iohn began to execute his office, few did remember how wonderful his natiuitie was. But God woulde that the fame of these things should be spread abroad, not for their sakes onely that heard the same, but that the myracle might be of more credit in al ages after, which was thē so famous in euery place: yet as in a looking glasse we may here set before our eyes the cōmon vnthaakfulness of man. For when as vaine and foolish things are fast fixed in our mindes: the remembrance of the graces of God, which ought alwayes to bee fresh in memory is presently let passe and forgotten.
 Luke speaketh not of blockish men, or of brutish contemners of God, for hee sayth that they layde vppe these things in their heart, that is, they were diligent

ligent to consider these things. And it is probable that some at the time remembred these matters, but the greater part had shortly after cast off this reuerent feare, which they had conceaued: Yet it is to be noted, that they did not digresse from the purpose, which referred these miracles which they saw to the excellencie, which should in time to come be found in the childe: for such was the counsell of God, as wee haue sayd, that Iohn shoulde not after come abroad without singular commendation. In that Luke sayth that the hand of God was with him, this is the meaning: The grace of God was euident so many wayes, which openly declared that hee was not a common man. It is a figuratiue speech, which affirmeth that the power of God was as plainly shewed, as if the hand of God had bene openly seene, that euery man might readily discern that God was present.

Luke. i.

Matthew	Marke.
		67. Then his father zacharias was filled with the holy Ghost, and prophesied, saying.
		68. Blessed be the Lord of God, <sup>of</sup> Israel, because hee hath visited and redeemed his people.
		69. And hath rayseed vp the horne of saluation to vs in the house of his seruant David:
		70. As hee spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which were since the world began, saying:
		71: That he would send vs deliuerance from our enemies, and from the hands of all that hate vs:
		72. That he would shew mercie towards our fathers, and remember his holy couenant.
		73. And the oath which he sware vnto our father Abraham: that he would grant vs.
		74 That we being deliuered out of the hands of our enemies, might serue him without feare
		75. All the dayes of our life in holinesse and righteousness before him.

67. Zacharias was filled with the holy Ghost. But a little before it is shewed what this maner of speech meaneth: that is, that the seruantes of God are indued with more abundant grace of the spirite, the which they yet were not without before. We reade that the spirite was giuen to the Prophets, not that they were at other times without the same, but because that the power of the spirit did more plentifully and fully shew it selfe in them, as oft as they (as it were by the hand of God) were brought into the light, to execute their office. Therefore this knitting together of those two clauses, which Luke vseth, is to be obserued, that he was filled with the holy Ghost, and prophesied. For it signifieth that he was then inspired from aboue more then ordinarily, so that hee spake not after the fashion of men, as a priuate man, but that he spake onely heauenly doctrine. So Paul ioyneth prophesie and the spirit together, 1. Thess. 5. 19. Quench not the spirite, despise not prophesie, that we might knowe that by the contempt of doctrine, the light of the spirite is extinguished.

But this goodnes of God is worthy to be remembred, that Zacharias had not only the vse of his speech restored to him againe, which for nine moneths hee wanted, but also his tongue was made an instrument of the holy Ghost.

68. Blessed bee the Lord. Zachary beginneth with thankes giuing, but with a propheticall spirite he setteth fourth the accomplished redemption, promisea before time in Christ, whereof the saluation and felicitie of the church did depend: why hee shoulde bee called the God of Israell, vnder whose gouernement the whole world is subiect, it doth better appeare by the texte: namely, for that the redeemer was specially promised to the seede of Abraham: Because that GOD hath made his couenaut onely with one people and nation, whereof Zachary was now about to speake. For good cause therefore doth hee expressly name the name of that people, to whome the grace of saluation properly, or at least principally was sent and appoynted. There is vnder this visting a secret opposition, because that the countenance of God, for a time, was turned from the wretched children of Abraham: for they were fallen into that calamitie, and ouerwhelmed with so great a heape of mischeifes, that no man would haue thought that God had any regard vnto them. Furthermore, this visitation of God, whereof Zachary mentioneth, is put as the cause and the beginning of the redemption: Therefore resolue it thus, God looked vpon his people, that hee might redeme them. And seeing that they were prysoners, which God redeemed, and that this kinde of redemption was spirituall: we thereof gather, that euen the holy Fathers were not free from the yoake of sinne and the tyranny of death, but thorough the grace of Christ: For Christ is sayd to be a redeemer sent, euen to the holy and elect people of GOD. But if redemption was but then at length brought of Christ, when as he appeared in the flesh: It followeth that the faithfull, which were dead before his comming, were all their life time seruants of sinne & of death, which were a great absurdity. I answer that the force and effect of this redemption, which was once giuen in Christ, was comon in al ages.

69. He hath rayssed vp a horne of saluation. That is a power to saue. For the throane of Dauid being throwne downe, and the people being disperfed, the hope of saluation in outward shew was also fallen away. And surely Zachary alludeth to the prophesies of the Prophets, in the which there is promised a sodaine restitution, when that all things with them were in greatest miserie & destruction. And this sentence is taken out of the Psalm. 132. 17. where it is sayd: There will I make the horne of Dauid to budde, for I haue ordayned a light for mine annoynted. If that God doth shew his power to saue vs in no other meanes, but in Christ, then it is a most haynous offence to bow from him any way, if that wee hope to bee saued from aboue. But obserue, that that is a horne of saluation to the faythfull, which to the wicked is terrible: so that disperfeth them, or rather ouerthroweth them, and beateth them to dust. Hee calleth Dauid the seruant of God, not simply, because he worshipped God as euery one of the elect doe: but in an other respect, namely that hee was chosen his minister, to gouerne and to preferue his people, that he and his successors should represent the person and offices of Christ. And although there was then no shewe of a kingdome left among the Iewes: yet because that Zachary reposes himselfe in the promises of GOD, he doubteth not to call Dauid the seruant of God, in whom God shewed a token of saluation that was to come. Whereof it followeth that Christe is then in deede constituted as the authour of our saluation, when that there is a throne set vp for him amongst vs, from the which he may gouerne vs.

70. As hee spake. Least for the newnesse of it, the saluation shoulde be doubted of, which hee sayth was brought by Christe, hee citeth all the Prophetes, as witnesses of the same. which being raysed vp in diuers times, doe yet teach with one consent, that wee must hope for saluation from Christe alone. And this is not the onely purpose of Zachary, to prayse the fayth and constancie of G O D, because that he performeth and fulfilleth, that which he before in times past hath promised: But his minde is rather to call the faithfull to the olde Propheties, that with the more certeintie and readines, they might imbrace the saluation offered them, whereof all the Prophetes from the beginning witnessed. For truly our faith in Christ is established vppon a sure staye, when as it commeth forth confirmed with the testimonies of all the Prophetes. Hee calleth the Prophetes holy, that thereby their wordes, might haue the greater authoritie and reuerence, as if hee shoulde haue sayd, they are not light or common, but approoued witnesses, yea they are set foorth by publike commaundement, as if that from heauen they were called for this purpose from the common sort of men. But in small and scuerall perticular poyntes, to discusse how that all the Prophetes did witness of Christe, it would bee too long. Let this suffice for this time (sith it is knowne to all men, that the people coulde not bee otherwise brought to beleue that God would be mercifull to them any otherwise, but by bringing in that couenant which was established in Christ) that he plainly speaketh of the redemption to come, as it was reuealed in Christ. Hether belong many notable places, which do very plainly prophesie of Christ, and shew him foorth, as it were with a finger. But especially that seale of the conenaunt of God is to be remembered, the which if any man neglect, he shall neuer vnderstand any thing in the Prophetes, as the Iewes miserably wandred in reading of the scripture: for that they being onely curious in wordes, they strayed farre from the purpose.

71. Deliueraunce from our enemies. Zachary doth more plainly set forth the power and office of Christ. And truly it would profit vs little or nothing to heare that Christ was giuen vs, except wee also knew what good he brought vs. For this cause therefore hee doth more fully teach to what end the horne of saluation was erected, euen that the faithfull might be preserued from their enemies. It is not to be doubted but that Zacharias knew well ynough, that the greatest warre that the Church of God hath, is not with flesh and bloude, but with Sathan and all his retinewe, wherewith he doth deceitfully deuise the destruction of vs all. And although that outwarde enemies doe also molest the Church, and that it is deliuered from them by Christ. yet seeing that the kingdom of Christ is spirituall, this sentence is spoken especially of Sathā, the prince of this worlde, and of his powers. Againe the miserable condition of men without Christ is here noted, that is: that they lye prostrate vnder the tyranny of the deuill: for otherwise Christ could not deliuer his children out of his handes that is, from his power. Yet this place doth declare, that the Church.

Church especially liueth amongst her enemies, while shee remaineth in this worlde, and is alwayes in daunger of their violence, if Christe were not present to helpe. But this is the inestimable grace of Christ, that our saluation remaineth certaine and safe, although our enemies do compasse vs on euery side. And although it is a hard speech, when hee saith that hee will send deliuerance from our enemies, yet the sense is not hard, because that no deuises of our enemies, or strengthes, no deceites, no forces can hinder God, but that hee deliuering vs from them, will perpetually preferue vs.

71. That he would shew me cy. Zachary doth teach vs againe from whence this redemption cometh, euen from the mercy of God, & from the couenant of his free grace. For he declareth the cause why it pleased God to saue his people: euen because he was mindefull of his couenant hath he shewed his mercy. And he is said to be mindfull of his couenāt, because that his so long delaying might seeme to be a certaine forgetfulness: for hee suffered the people afflicted with most grieuous mitchiefes to languish. This order is diligently to be obserued, that God was lead of his own meere mercy, to make the couenant with the fathers: Then he hauing made the couenant, he was bound by his word to performe the saluatiō of men. Thirdly, that what thing soeuer is good, he giueth it in Christ, that so hee might sanctifie all his promises, that so the faith of them should bee no otherwise established, but when the fulnesse shoulde appeare in Christ. There is promised in the couenant forgiuenes of sins, but the same is to be had in the blood of Christ: there is promised righteousnes, but the same is giuen by the satisfactiō of Christ: there is promised life, but it is not to be sought but in the death & resurrection of Christ. And this is the cause why God commanded in times past, that the booke of the law also should be sprinkled with the blood of the sacrifice. It is also worthy to be obserued, that Zachary extendeth to the fathers that are dead, the mercy which was shewed in his age, that they al in common might receiue the fruite of the same. For hereof it followeth that the grace & power of christ cannot be contained within the straites of this fraile life, but that it is eternal: And it cānot be ended by the death of the flesh, seeing that both the soules are free from death, and also that a resurrection doth follow the destruction of the flesh. As therefore neither Abraham, nor any of the Saintes coulde by their owne power or merits obtaine saluation for themselves: so there is a common saluation shewed forth in Christ to al the faithfull, as well to them that are dead, as to them that are aliuē.

73. According to the oath. The preposition is not expressed in the Greeke, but it is sufficiently knowne, that it is the common vse of that tongue, when the novne is put in the accusatiue case, without a word to gouerne it, that the a preposition is to bee vnderstood, whereof it may bee gouerned. He maketh mention of his oath, that hee might the better set foorth howe sure and holy his truth is: for God doth so much submit himselfe to our capacitie, that hee vouchsafeth to vse his name as a stay and helpe of our infirmitie: wherefore if the bare promise do not suffice vs, let vs yet remember this confirmation, and if that take not all doubt from vs, wee are too vnthankfull to God, and iniuriousto his holy name.

God

God doeth containe in all and euery of the particular pointes of the same. But he teacheth for what purpose God in his mercie dealt so louingly with his people, when he redeemed them, that is, that they being redeemed, should add& and vow themselves wholly to worship the authour of their saluation. Therefore as the free goodnes of God is the efficient cause of mans saluation: so the finall cause is, that men by liuing a godly and a holy life, might glorifie the name of God: the which is diligently to be noted, that wee being mindefull of our calling, might learne to referre the grace of God to his true vse. These sentences (I say) are to be considered, that we are not called to vncleanes, but to holines, that wee are redeemed with a great price, not that we should be seruants to the desires of the flesh, or that we should runne on in vnbridled Libertie, but that Christ might reigne in vs: that wee by adoption are placed into the household of God, that we againe, as children, should obey our father. For Tit 2. 11. In this appeareth the goodnes of God, & Philanthropia, that denying worldly lustes, we should liue soberly, righteously, and godly. Therefore Paul in the Ep. Rom. 12. 1. when that he would effectually exhort the faithful, that in newnes of life they should offer vp themselves vnto God, and that by putting off the olde man, and forsaking the former minde, they shoulde giue vnto him a reasonable seruice, he proposeth vnto them the bowels of the mercy of God. The scripture is full of such testimonies, which declare that the grace of Christ is made of no effect, if we bead not to this purpose. But it is to be noted, that he sayth, that we should serue him without feare: For it signifieth that GOD cannot be rightly serued, but with quiet settled mindes: for they which are not perswaded, but are in doubt with themselves, whether they shall finde him mercifull or offended, whether hee accepteth their obedience or refuseth the same: to be short, they which vncertainly wauer betweene hope and feare, it may be that sometimes they carefully busie themselves in seruing him, but they neuer submit themselves sincerely, and from the heart vnto him: for feare and doubtfulnes cause them to abhorre him: so that, if it were possible, they would rather wish that his Godhead were extinguished. But wee know that no sacrifice is acceptable to God, but that which commeth of a free will, and which is offered with a glad heart. Wherefore, that men may worship aright, it is necessary that their consciences be first quieted: as Dauid saith, psa. 130. 4. Mercie is with thee, that thou maiest be feared. For God hauing giuen peace to men, doth cal the louingly to him, & causeth them to come gladly, and with a free & bold affectiō to worship him. And hereof doth Paul gather that sentence. what soeuer is not of faith, is sin. Ro. 14. 23. For seeing that god hath reconciled men to himselfe in his son Christ, seeing he defendeth the by the aid of the same his Son, that they might be without all feare, & seeing he hath laid vp their saluation in his hand & keeping, Zachary hath good cause to say, that by his grace we are deliuered frō feare. Therefore the Prophets ascribe this as a proprietie to his kingdom, that men should haue a certain peace, & should enjoy most quiet ioy.

75. In holinesse and righteousnesse. As God hath comprehended in two tables the rule of liuing well: So Zachary doeth shew heere, that wee haue then serued GOD according to his law, when as our life is framed to holines and righteousnes, For it is not to be doubted, but that holinesse doth containe those those duties of godlines, which belong to the first table of the law: And of this thing Plato was not ignorant, and righteousness extendeth to all the duties of charitie. For God requireth nothing else of vs in the second table, but that we should giue to euery man, that which is his due.

There is added, before him. That the faythfull may know, that it is not sufficient for them to gouerne their life well, or that they keepe their hands, their feete, and their whole body from all sinne before the sight of men: for it be-houeth them to liue to the iudgement of God, who is not satisfied with an out-ward holinesse, but he especially beholdeth the heart. Last of all, leaſt any man thinke that he hath done this dutie, when he hath serued God for a small time, Zachary sayth that they were redeemed of this condition, that they should spend their whole life in iudicouring to serue God. And seeing that our redemption is eternall, it is our dutie neuer to forget it. And seeing God adopteth vs vnto himselfe for euer, our thankfulness ought not to be transitory, or for a small time: to be short, seeing that Christ died, and rose againe for them it is conuenient that he should be Lord both of their life and death: Therefore Paul in that place which I cited a little before, commaundeth vs to lead a holy and a righteous life, vntill the coming of the mightie God, looking for (sayth he) the blessed hope, &c.

Matthew

Marke.

76. And thou babe, shalt be called the Prophet of the most high: for thou shalt goe before the face of the Lord, to prepare his wayes:

77. And to giue knowledge of saluation, vnto his people, by the remission of their sinnes.

78. Through the tender mercie of our God: where by the day spring from on high hath visited vs.

79. To giue light to them that sit in darkenesse, and in the shadow of death, and to guide them into the way of peace.

80. And the child grew, and waxed strong in spi-rite, and was in the wildernesse till the day came, that hee should shew himselfe vnto Israell.

76. And thou childe. Zachary returneth againe to the commendation of the grace of Christ: but hee doth this, as it were vnder the perſon of his owne sonne, briefly setting forth the office of teaching, for the which he was prepared and appoynted. And although that hee coulde not yet discern any propheticall giftes in the little childe, being but eight dayes old, hee yet turning his eyes to behold the counsaile of God, doth speake as of a thing perfectly knowne, To be called a Prophet of God, is in this place taken for to be accounted, and to be openly knowne. The secret calling of God was gone and passed before, it onely rested that it should be made knowne vnto men what he was: But because that the name of a prophet is generall, therefore by the reuelation brought vnto him by the Angell, he is appoynted to be the forerunner of Christ.

Thou

Thou shalt goe before the face of the Lord (sayth hee.) That is, this office thou must vndertake, that by thy preaching thou maiest turne men to heare the Lorde. But why Iohn, when he had almost ended his course, denied that hee was the Prophet of God, it is declared in that place in Iohn. And wee shall heereafter see what maner of preparing of a way this is, whereof Zachary here speaketh.

77. To giue knowledge of saluation. Zachary now toucheth the cheife poynt of the Gospell, in that hee teacheth that the knowledge of saluation is put in the forgiuenes of sinnes. For seeing that by nature wee are borne the children of wrath, it followeth that by nature wee are condemned and lost: and this is the cause of our damnation, that wee are guiltie of vnrighteousnesse: wherefore there is no other way, whereby wee may escape death, except that God should reconcile vs to himselfe, by not imputing or laying our sinnes to our charge. And it is easily gathered out of the words of Zachary, that this is the onely righteousness that remayneth for vs before God: For whereof commeth saluation, but of righteousness? And if that it be not lawfull for the children of God to acknowledge any other saluation, then through forgiuenes of sinnes, it followeth that righteousness cannot any other where be sought: so the righteousness (which proude men haue forged and framed to their selues, of the merites of workes) is nothing else but imputation of righteousness, whilst that God freely absolueth vs from the guiltines of sinne. Moreover it is to bee noted, that Zachary speaketh not of strangers, but of the people of god: whereof it followeth, that not only the beginning of righteousness doth depend vpon forgiuenes of sinnes: but that the faithfull also are by imputation or imputatiuely (that I may so speake) righteous before God, euen vntill the end: because that otherwise they cannot stand before his tribunall seate, except that dayly they haue recourse to the free reconciliation in his grace.

78. Through the tender mercie. In this so great a benefite, Zachary as it is requisite, doth set forth the mercy of God: and hee was not content to call it simply, the saluation which was brought vs through Christ, but he sayth that it came out of the tendernes or very bowels of Gods mercie, the which is more forcible. Afterwardes hee metaphorically addeth, that through the great mercie of God it came to passe, that the day gaue light to them that late in darkenesse. Oriens. (i. the day springing) in this place is not a participle: for in greeke it is anatole, that is the coast where the sunne ariseth, to the which the fall is opposed. Therefore Zachary extolleth the mercie of God in this, that the darkenes of death being shaken off, the light of life was restored to the people of God. In this maner it becommeth vs, as oft as we speake of our saluation, to lift vp our mindes to the mercie of God. It seemeth to be an allusion to the 4. chap. 2. v. of Mal. where Christ is called the sunne of righteousness, hauing health vnder his winges, that is carying it in his beames. For the wordes light and darkenesse, there are the like in Esa. 9. 2. The people that walked in darkenes haue seene a great light, they that dwelled in the lande of the shadow of death, vpon them hath the light shined: And in many other places are those wordes vsed. But by these wordes wee are taught that there is no light of life in the world without Christ, but that all thinges are covered with the most horrible darkenes of death. Therefore in an other place

Esay doth testifie that this is proper to the Church alone. Beholde (sayth he) darkenesse shall couer the earth, and grosse darknesse the people: but the Lord shall arise vpon thee, and his glory shall bee seene vpon thee, Chap. 60. 2. Yet it is demaunded how the Israelites sate in the shadow of death, whose hartes the Lord alwayes lightened through faith. I answere, that the godly, which liued vnder the law, being on euery side compassed with the darkenes of death, did behold light a farrc off in the comming of Christ, wherewith they were refreshed, least they should haue beene ouerwhelmed with present death. It may be also that Zachary had respect to the miserable estate of his time. But generally this is true: for by the comming of Christ there arose a light to all the godly, which were before, & also which were to come, which should quicken the: because he extended his life also euen to the dead. To sit, signifieth as much as to lie downe, therefore Esay commaundeth the Church to arise when the day shone, 60. 1.

79. To guide our feete. By this clause Zachary teacheth, that the cheife perfection of all goodnes and felicitie doth consist in Christ alone. The worde peace might heere haue beene vsed in his proper sense, and should not haue bin much amisse, because that the light of Christ pacifieth the mindes of men. But because that amongst the Hebrewes peace doth signifie a good and blessed successe of all things: I doubt not but that Zachary in this place would make Christ the authour of all perfect blessednes, least that we should seeke any thing that is good else where: but that we being perswaded, that through Christ we should be made perfectly & wholly blessed, might rest in him alone. To the same purpose belong those words of Esayas. 60. 19. Thou shalt haue no more sunne to shine by day, nor moone by night: for the Lord shall be thine euerlasting light. If that Zachary by the onely beholding of his sonne, that was yet a childe, was lead to speake so notably of the grace and power of Christ, before he was borne, are not they thrise & foure times vnthankfull, which after that he is dead, risen againe, and ascended into heauen, that hee might sit at the right hand of his father, do esteeme lesse honourably and rcuerently of Christ, and they extenuate his power, whose prayse the holy Ghost set forth, while he was yet in his mothers wombe? For we must remember that which I touched before, that Zachary spake not of himselfe, but as the spirite of God gouerned his tongue.

80. And the childe grew. Luke addeth this to conclude the historie with. First he declareth that Iohn was strong in the spirit: wherby he signifieth that ther was a rare and vnwonted towardnesse in the child, which was a signe that the heauenly spirite dwelt in him: yet withall he sayth that he remained hid as one vnknowne in the wildernesse, vntill the day came that he should shew himselfe: that is, vntill the Lord appointed to bring him forth: wherby wee gather, that although Iohn knew well of his calling, yet he would not attempt any thing before the time, but taried the calling of God.

Because that both these genealogies, which are written of Matthew & Luke doe not agree in all things: it must first be seene whether that both of them do fetch the genealogie of Christ from Ioseph, or whether Matthew do so onely, and Luke doth fetch it from Mary. They that are of the latter iudgement haue a good colour for the difference, that is in diuers names. And truly at the first sight, seeing that Luke doth so much differ from Matthew, it seemeth not thing lesse, then that they shoulde declare one and the same genealogie: For from David vnto Salathiel, and againe from Zorobabell to Ioseph, they name altogether diuerse names. Furthermore, they pretende that it is absurde to bestowe so much labour in a matter not needefull, as to account the petegree of Iosephs wife, who yet was not the father of Christe. To what purpose (say they) is this repetition whereby there is nothing prooued, that doth much appertaine to the edifying of fayth? For if this thing bee onely knowne, that Ioseph was one of the posteritie and house of David, yet the line of Christe remaineth doubtfull: therefore, by their iudgements it was superfluous that both the Eua gelists should imploy themselues vpon this matter. But that Matthew repeateth the progenie of Ioseph, they excuse thus, that he did it, because that many did yet thinke him to be the father of Christ. But it were to be scorned as, that with this cockering he should nourish this most pestilent error, & the text doth openly confute the same. For Matthew as soone as he cometh to the ende of the genealogie, teacheth that Christ came not of the feede of Ioseph, but that by the secret power of the holy Ghost hee was conceiued in the wombe of the Virgin: wherefore if their iudgements should stand, Matthew might bee reprooued of foolishnesse, and for want of consideration, as one, who in vaine woulde recite the genealogie of Ioseph. But their obiection is not yet answered, that the genealogie of Ioseph doth nothing appertaine to Christ. The answer is olde and commonly known, that in the person of Ioseph the petegree of Mary is also comprehended: because that the lawe commanded that euery man should take him a wife in his owne tribe.

They take exceptions at this lawe, because that it was neglected almoste in all ages: but the argumentes which they vse are frivoulous. They cite that example, that the eleuen tribes promised with an oath, that they woulde not giue a wife to the men of Benjamin. If this were prescribed by lawe (say they) then neede there not a newe oath. But I answer that they doe yll and vnwisely, to drawe this extraordinary facte of theirs into a common rule: For it was necessary, one trybe beeing cutte off, that the body of the people shoulde haue bene maimed, if that by this remedie there had not bene some helpe provided for so great a necessitie. Therefore the common law is not in this to be considered. Again they object, that Mary the mother of Christ, was coſine to Elizabeth, whom Luke before witnessed to haue beene of the daughters of Aaron. The answer also to this is easie. It was lawfull for the maides of the tribe of Iuda or of any other tribe, to marrie into the the tribe of the priesthoode: because that, that reason which is expressed in the law, was not thereby hindered which was, least that the woman should cary her inheritance to any other, but to them of her owne tribe. So the holy historie 2. Para. 22. 11. declareth that the wife of Iorada the high priest came of the kingly stocke: Therefore it is neither maruaile nor thing vnwonted, if that the mother of Elizabeth was married to a Priest. But if any denie that these things are not so fully proued, that it is lawfull to determine Mary to be of the same tribe that Ioseph was, because that shee was his wife: verily I grant, that it cannot simply bee proued out of the bare historie, as it is here reade, except that other circumstances bee added to the same. But first it is to be noted, that the Euangelistes spake of things well knowne in their age: so that when the genealogie of Ioseph was drawne vnto Dauid, it was easie for cuery man to draw the genealogie of Mary from thence also. And it is not to be doubted, but that the Euangelistes being occupied in that which was commonly knowne in their age, were therefore the lesse curious about the same: For if any had doubted, they might easily and speedily haue made inquisition.

Furthermore, they take this as a thing graunted, that seeing Ioseph was a good man and modest, he would not take a wife, but out of his owne tribe, according to the appointment of the law. Although that generall law sufficed not to proue that Mary was of the kingly stocke: for Mary might haue come of the tribe of Iuda, though shee came not of the stocke of Dauid. Therefore the matter beeing thus, the Euangelistes had a care of the godly which would not contentiously strue, but might in the person of Ioseph knowe the genealogie of Mary, especially seeing the matter (as we sayd before,) was in that age well knowne and not doubtfull.

But it may seeme to be incredible, that these poore despised married folkes should be of the posteritie of Dauid, and should be that kingly seede, whereof the redeemer should come. Now, if any aske whether the genealogie, as it is set downe by Mathew and Luke, doth clearly and evidently shewe, that Mary is of the stocke of Dauid: I grant that it cannot certainly be gathered by it. But seeing that the kindred of Mary and Ioseph was not then vnknowne, the Euangelistes were the lesse carefull in this matter: but yet the purpose of them both was to take away the offence, which the basenes, and the contempt, and the pouertie, as well of Ioseph as of Mary might breede, least that there might not be knowne in them any thing appertayning to the kingly race.

Furthermore, that they imagine or faine that Luke setteth downe the genealogie of Mary, and letteth that passe of Ioseph, is easily confuted: For thus: word for worde hee writeth, Iesus was supposed to bee the sonne of Ioseph, which was the sonne of Eli, the sonne of Matthat. Truly he maketh mention neither of the father, nor of the grandfather of Christ, but expressly declareth the progenie of Ioseph himselfe. But I am not ignorant what answer they vse to knit vp this knot withall: For they say that sonne in that place is vsed for a sonne in lawe. And so that Ioseph was the sonne of Hely, they interpret thus: because he had his daughter to wife. But this is not agreeable with the order of nature, neither is there in any place of the Scripture any such example read.

Now, if Salomon be excluded out of the genealogie of Mary, then shall Christ cease to be Christ: for whatsoeuer is sayd of that stocke, it is grounded vpon that solemne promise, Thy succellour, which shall sit vpon thy throne shall raigne for euer, 2. Sam. 7. 12. and Psal. 132. 11. I will be his father, and hee shall be my sonne. And it is without question that Salomon was the figure of this euertasting king, which was promised to Dauid. And the promise cannot otherwise be applyed to Christ: but as the truth of it was shadowed in Salomon 1. Chron. 28. 5.

Now if the stocke of Christ bee not referred to him, howe, or by what meanes shall hee be accounted the sonne of Dauid? Therefore whosoever putteth Salomon out of the genealogie of Christ, hee doth withall blot and wipe away the promises, by which he is knowne to be the sonne of Dauid. And how Luke fetcheth the petegree from Nathan, and yet reiecteth not Salomon, it shall be seene hereafter in his place. And (least I seeme too tedious) for that which is the summe of the matter, I say that these two genealogies doe agree together: yet there are to be noted foure differences in them. The first is, that Luke with a backward order (as they say) ascendeth from the last to the first: when that Mathew be ginneth at the very originall. The second is, that Mathew stretcheth not his historie beyond the holy and elect stocke of Abraham. But Luke goeth on euen vnto Adam, The third, that Mathew entreateth of the genealogie, according to the law, and also permitteth himselfe, to leaue some out of the course of his account: in that he prouiding for the memory of the readers, doth onely recite the numbers of three fourteenes: but Luke doth more exactly follow the naturall stocke.

The fourth and last is, that they both speaking sometimes of the same men, doe yet vary in their names. Of the first difference seeing there is no great difficultie in it, it is but in vaine to make many wordes about it. The second wanteth not very good reason: for because that GOD had chosen the stocke of Abraham to himselfe, whence the redeemer of the world should be borne, and the promise of saluation was after a sort therein included vnto the comming of Christ, therefore Mathew doth not passe beyond those boundes appoynted of GOD: Wee must remembr that Paul sayth, that Christ was a minister of circumcision, for the trueth of GOD, to confirme the promised saluation made vnto the holy fathers, Rom. 15. 8. To the which that saying of Christ doth very well agree, that saluation is of the Iewes, Iohn. 4. 22. Therefore Mathew proposeth him to be seene in that holy stocke, to the which he was properly appointed. And also in the catalogue of Mathew the couenant of God is to be considered: whereby hee chose the seed of Abraham for a people vnto himselfe, that it might be seperate from all other nations, as with a wall made vp betweene the. But Luke looketh higher: for although the redeemer was peculiarly promised to the seed of Abraham, after that God had made his couenant with him: yet we know that all had need of him, presently after the fall of the first man, as he was then also promised to the whole world: But it was done by the wonderful counsell of God, that Luke should propose Christ vnto vs as the sonne of Adam, and that Matthew should include him in one stocke of Abraham: for it should haue profited vs nothing, that Christe was giuen of his father, the authour of saluation, except he had beene generally common for vs all. And also that had not beene true, which the Apostle sayeth, Hebrewes the 13. 8. that hee was yesterday, and to day, and is the same also for euer, if that his power and grace had not beene powred out vnto all ages from the creation of the worlde. Therefore let vs knowe that saluation in Christ is reuealed and giuen to all mankinde: because that hee was not without cause called the sonne of Noah, and the sonne of Adam: yet because, that hee is to be sought in the worde of GOD, the spirit dooth not without aduise call vs by an other Euangeliste to the holy stocke of Abraham, where the treasure of eternall life together with Christ was layd vp for a time.

Let vs come to the thirde difference. It is not to bee doubted, but that Matthew obserueth another order then Luke doth: for the one placeth Salomon next after Dauid, and the other placeth Nathan, whereby it evidently appeareth that they set downe diuerse lines. Good and learned interpreters doe thus reconcile this shewe of discord, that Matthew leauing the naturall genealogie (which Luke followeth) doth rehearse the legall genealogie: and I call that the legall genealogie, whereby it came to passe, that the right of the kingdome was translated to Salathiell. And in that Eusebius in the first booke of his Ecclesiasticall history, following the iudgemente of Aphricanus, doth rather call that the legall genealogie, which Luke setteth downe, hee speaketh it in the same sense: for hee meaneth not any thing else, but that the kingdome, which was established in the person of Salomō, by lawfull meanes did fall at length vnto Salathiell. But they saye better and more aptly, which saye that the legall order was set downe by Mattheue: For hee naming Salomon presently after Dauid, Doth not obserue from whom Christ came by continuall course after the fleshe: But howe hee descended from Salomon and other kings, that hee might bee theyr lawfull successour, in whose hand the perpetuities of the kingdome shoulde bee established, according to the couenant of God. Their iudgement is probable, which thinke that the stocke of Salomon ended by the death of Ochozias, as 2. Kings. 9. 27.

& II. I.

That whiche some reporte out of the commentaries of the Iewes, that Dauid was commaunded, if Salomon wanted offspring, that the kingly power shoulde come to the posteritie of Nathan, I leaue as I find it: onely I take that which is certaine, that the succession of the kingdom was not confused, but had his distinct degrees, Now when the holy history

declareth, that after the slaughter of Ochozia his mother Athalia did hold the kingdome, and the kingly stocke beeing wholly ouerthrowne, it is more then probable, that those wicked and moste cruell murderers were committed of that woman so ambitious of gouernement, least that shee beeing driuen to liue a priuat life, shoulde see the kingdome translated otherwhere. Therefore, if Ochoziashad, had a Sonne liuing after him, shee might haue raigned in the Courte, vnder the colour of protection, freely and safely without enuy and daunger. Therefore that shee had made her selfe infamous and odious by her extreame offences, was a signe of desperation, for that shee coulde not holde her kingdome at home in her owne house. But the reason why Ioas is called the Sonne of Ochozias is, because hee was next in degree vnto him. 2. Chro. 22. 9. So that he might bee rightly called the true and naturall heire of the kingdome. For besides that Athalia (if wee graunt that she was his grandmother) would gladly haue so abused the title of the infant, who is there endued with any small discretion, that can thinke it likely, that the naturall sonne of the king could be so hid of the priest Ioiada, and that his grandmother should not more diligently haue sought him out? But rather if a man consider all things wisely, it is easily gathered, that the next heire of the kingdome was of another line. And that is the meaning of the woordes of Ioiada: the kinges Sonne shall raigne according to the couenaut of the Lorde with Dauid, 2. Chron. 23. 3. as if he should haue sayde, that it hadde been an hainous offence, if that a woman beeing a stranger, should with violence take vnto her selfe the scepter, which God had appointed to remaine in the house of Dauid. Wherefore there is no absurditie, if Luke doth fetch the petegree of Christ from Nathan: because it may be that the stocke of Salomon, which appertained to the succesion of the kingdome was decayed.

Nowe if any object that Iesus cannot bee acknowledged for the Messias, which was promised, except he had come of the posteritie of Salomon, who was certainly knowne to haue beene a figure of Christ: although that naturally he came not of Salomon, yet by the legall order hee is to bee accounted as his Sonne, because he had his originall from kinges.

But such diuersitie in the names doth trouble many very much. For from Dauid euen vnto Ioseph there appeareth no consent between the two Euangelists, but in Salathiel & Zorobabell. The excuse which was wont to bee made (that the difference rose hereof, that the Iewes for the most parte had two names) is hardly admitted of many. But at this day seeing the cause that moued Matthew to draw and set downe this genealogie is vnknown to vs, it is no maruell if we know not why in these perticular names, they both agree, or disagree: but it is not to bee doubted, but after the captiuite of Babylon they rehearse certain, the same men by diuerse names. But I thinke that the names of Zorobabell & Salathiel were aduisedly retained for the chaunge of the estate of the people: because that then the kingly maiesty was extinguished. The small shadowe of gouernement which remained testified a greate change, which aduanced the faythfull to hope after a more notable Kingdome, then that visible kingdome of Salomon, which flourished but a short tunc.

Now it is worth the labour to note this also, that there is no absurdity in that that Luke doth reckon & account more in his Catalogue then Mat. doth, for it is ordinarily seene that there are more in number in the naturall generation, then in the legall. To this also appertaineth, that Matthew (when hee deuided the genealogie of Christ into three parts, & would apply to euery part, 14. generations,) thought that he might freely leaue out certaine names, which Luke might not omitte, seeing he bound not himselfe to that law. Thus farre haue I discoursed of the genealogie of Christ, as much as seemeth profitable & conuenient for the summe. If any man be tickled with a further curiositie, I remembering Paule his admonition, doe preferre sobriety & modestie before the frivulous arguings about things of no waight: the place to Tit 2. 9. is well knowne where he forbiddeth vs to disput ouer curiously of genealogies. Now lastly it remaineth to shew why Matthew comprehendeth the whole genealogie of Christ into 3. portions, & placeth 14. men in euery one. They that say that he did this that he might prouide for the memory of the readers, they neither say all, nor nothing, for this is true, the catalogue proposed in 3. equall numbers, may the easelier be remembered, yet withall it is plaine that here are expressly noted, the 3. sortes & states of people, which were after the time that Christ was promised to Abraham vntill the fulnes of time wherein he was shewed in the flesh, for although that the tribe of Iuda did excell all the rest of the tribes in honour, yet before Dauid it had no principalitie. In Dauid the kingly maiesty shone forth beyond the hope of all men, which continued to Iechonias, frō that time there remained some dignitie and gouernement in the tribe of Iuda, which staied the mindes of the godly vntill the comming of the Messias.

1. The booke of the generation. Many interpreters haue laboured in vaine about this title, that they might excuse Matthew for naming of the whole history of the one halfe part of his first chapter, for this epigraphie (or inscription) doth not extend to the whole booke. But the word booke is put here and vsed for a catalogue, as if it should haue bene sayd, the catalogue of the generation of Christ: Furthermore he calleth Christ in respect of the promises, the Sonne of Abraham, the sonne of Dauid, because that God had promised that a seede shall rise from Abraham, in whome all the nations of the world shall bee blessed. Gen. 12. 3. But vnto Dauid there was a more euident promise made, that it should come to passe that the kingdome should remaine stedfast in his house vnto the end of the worlde, Psal. 72. 5. 7. and a king out of his stocke shall sit vpon the throne, so long as the Sunne and the Moone do shine in the heauen, Psal. 89. 29. whereupon it became a common speach amongst the Iewes, that Christ was called the Sonne of Dauid.

2. Iacob begate Iudas. Seeing that Matthew couered with silence Ismaell, the first begotten sonne of Abraham, and Esau who by order of nature was superiour to his brother Iacob, hee doth not without aduise giue a place to the 12. Patriarkes in this genealogie, seeing that God bestowed grace of adoption vpon them all. Therefore he declareth that the blessing promised in Christ, did not belong to the only tribe of Iuda, but that it was common to all the children of Iacob whome God gathered into his Church, when Ismaell & Esau were made straungers.

3. Iudas begat Phares & Zara of Thamar. This was the beginning of that humbling, whereof Paule speake th, Phil. 2. 7. The sonne of God might haue kept his genealogie free and pure from all offence & note of infamie, but he coming into the world that he might humble himselfe, & taking vpon him the forme of a seruant, became a worme & not a man, the scorne of men & the outcast of the people, & at the length endured the most cursed death of the crosse. Also this infamie in his genealogie hath not he refused, that he should spring from an incestuous bed, which was made amongst his ancestors: for although that Thamar was not enforced through lust, to desire the company of her father in lawe, yet by an vnlawfull meane she attempted to reuenge her iniury. And Iudas when hee desired to lie with a whore, fell vpon his daughter in law. But the incomparable goodnesse of God strue with the sinne of them both, so that this adulterous feede should neuertheless enjoy the scepter.

6. Begat Dauid the king. Dauid onely is adorne with this title, because that God proposed in his person the figure of the Messias of the gouernour & captain that was to come. The kingdom first began at Saule, but because that this came to passe through a tumult, & by the wicked desires of the people, therefore the change at length from him to Dauid was esteemed lawfull, especially in as much as pertained to the couenant of God, wherein he had promised, that hee should be a gouernour for euer ouer his people: when as the people 1. sam. 8. 4. had unhappily shaken off the yoke of God, and with condemned voyces demanded a king for themselues, Saule was graunted them for a small time. but God presently established his kingdome, which should be a pledge of true blessednes in the hand of Dauid. Therefore let vs knowe that here is noted the second estate of the people, as it was ordained of the Lord: yet withall, the shame and dishonely of man is added by the Euangelist, how that the same can after a sort defile the glory of God his blessing in that Dauid begat Salomon of Bersebe, whome he had wickedly taken from her husband: & that he might enjoy her he most vnfaithfully betrayed the innocent man to be slain with the swords of his enemies. This deformitie falling out about the beginnings of their kingdome, ought to make the Iewes not to glory in flesh, God also would it should be declared, that in the establishing of that kingdom hee would not bee bound to the merites of men: but in that succession which Mat. described, it appeareth by the sacred history, that 3. kings were omitted. They which say that this was done through forgetfulness, are not to be heard, neither is their reason to be allowed of, which say that they are vnworthy to haue any place giuen the in the genealogie of Christ: for that should haue falne also to the lot of many other, whom yet Matthew mixeth indifferently with the godly & holy ones. Therefore it seemeth rather to be true, whē he would make a catalogue of 14. kings, he was not very curious in making his choise, because it was sufficient for him to compose a genealogie to sit before the eyes of the readers vnto the end of the kingdome, but that there are read onely 13. it is most likely to be the fault and carelesnesse of Printers or wryters of bookes. Epiphanius in his first booke contra hereses, sheweth the cause: that when the name of Iechonias was put in twise, the vnlearned presumed to scrape it out of the second place, as a woorde more then needed, but hee admonisheth that it should not haue bene done so, because that Ioacim the sonne of king Ioachim, had the name Iechonias common with his sonne. 1. Chron. 3. 17. 2. Chron. 36. 1. Ier. 27. 20. and 28. 4. And Robert Stephanus citeth a Greeke copie, where this name Ioacim is put in.

12 After they were caried into Babylon. That is after the Iewes were caried into captiuitie, for the Euangelist declareth that the posteritie of Dauid, of kings were then become slaues and banished men. Furthermore, when that captiuitie was a kinde of destruction, it was wrought by the wonderfull prouidence of God, that the Iewes were not onely gathered together into one body, but also that there remayned certaine remnants of government in the house of Dauid, for they which returned home, did of their owne free will obey the government of Zorobabel, therefore the fragments of the kingly scepter endured and lasted in this world, vntill the comming of Christ was at hande, according to the prophetic of Iacob. The scepter shall not depart from Iuda nor a lawgiuer from betweene his feete, vntill the Shiloh come. Gen. 49. 10. and in that estate, although there was a miserable and a sorowfull dissipation of the people yet they neuer were without some sparks of the grace and fauour of God shining amongst them. The Greeke word (for the which the old interpreter vsed transmigrationem, Erasmus hath put Exilium) it properly signifieth a changed dwelling place, whereby vnderstād that the Iewes were enforced to go out of their country, that in other places they might dwell as strangers that were neuer there.

16. Iesus that is called Christ. In the surname Mathew doth declare his office that the readers may vnderstand him to be no priuat man, but annoynted from aboue to fulfill the worke of redemption. But what maner of annoynting his was, and to what purpose it appertained, I will not in many words at this present declare. Of the voice it selfe this is to be vnderstoode: After the kingdom was abolished, they began to referre it to that one from whom the full restitution of their decayed estate was to be hoped for: for so long as there did any maiestie flourish in the house of Dauid, the kings were wont to be called Christi. But least the deformed wastnes which after followed, should throw the minds of the godly into desperation, it was the will of God that this name should bee applied to the onely redeemer, as it appeareth out of Daniell, and the Euangelicall historie doth declare that after the sonne of God was giuen in the flesh, that this was the common maner of speech in euery place.

18. Now the birth of Iesus Christ was thus, when as his mother Mary was betrothed to Ioseph before they came together, shee was found with child by the huly Ghost.

19. Then Ioseph her husband being a iust man, and not willing to make her a publike example, was minded to put her away secretly.

20 But whiles he thought these things, behold, the Angel of the Lord appeared vnto him in a dreame, saying, Ioseph

Marke.

Luke.

she

the Son of David, feare not to take Mary for thy wife, for that which is conceived in her, is of the holy Ghost.

21. And shee shall bring forth a sonne, and thou shalt call his name Iesus, for hee shall deliuer his people from their sinnes.

22. And all this was done, that it might bee fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying:

23. Behold a Virgine shall beare a sonne; and they shall call his name Emmanuell, which is by interpretation, God with vs.

24. Then Ioseph being raysed from sleepe, did as the Angell of the Lord had inioyned him, and took her wife.

25. But he knew her not, till shee had brought forth her first sonne, and hee called his name Iesus.

18. The birth of Iesus Christ. Mathew doth not as yet declare, where, or after what maner Christ was borne, but how the heauenly generation was reuealed vnto Ioseph. First he sayth that Mary was found with childe of the holy Ghost, not that, that secret worke of God was commonly knowne, but as it became knowne vnto men, to doth hee reueale the power of the spirite, which as yet lay hid. He sheweth the time, when shee was betrothed to Ioseph, and yet before that came together: for in respect of the assurance of the marriage, as soone as the maide was promised to a man, the Iewes esteemed her as a lawfull wite, and therefore the law condemned them of adulterie, which defiled themselues with them that were contract. The word which the Euangelist doth vse, doth eyther modestly signifie a secret accompanying together, or it is simply taken for to dwell together, as husband and wife, shoulde make one house and one familie. So the sense is, that the virgine was not yet deliuered by her parents into the hand of her husband, but as yet liued vnder the custodie of her parents.

19. Being a iust man. Some interpreters vnderstand, that Ioseph because that hee was iust, would haue spared his wife, so iustice with them shoulde signifie humanitie, or a moderation of the minde bent vnto gentlenes. But they are of better iudgement which reade these two clauses contrarily, that Ioseph was iust, but yet hee was carefull for the fame of his wife, so that the iustice which is heere commended, was in respect of the hatred and detestation of the same. Because that hee suspected her of adultery, nay because that he was perwaded that shee was an adulteresse, he would not nourish such an offence with his gentlenesse: and certainly he is his wifes bawde, whosoever he is that winketh at her vnchastitie, good and honest mindes do not onely abhorre such an offence, but also the lawes doe spot with infamie such negligent slouthfulnessesse, as that is whereof I spake. Therefore Ioseph with a zeale of iustice, condemned the fault which hee supposed to be in his wife, yet his minde bent to humanitie, stayed him from executing the extremitie of the law. This was a meane more qualified, if hee, priuily departing, shoulde goe to an other place place, whereby we gather that he was not of so soft & so effeminate a mind, that vnder the pretence of mercy he would nourish the sinne by couering it. Onely he remitted somewhat of the extremitie of the law, & would not cast her forth to the infamous reproch: & it is not to be doubted but that his minde was stay- ed by the secret instincte of the spirit: for we know how outrageous reialosie is, & how violently it carrieth a man away, wherefore although Ioseph had endu- red an ouer dangerous inuasion, yet was hee wonderfully crossed with diuers perilles which were at hand, when he first began to deliberate of the matter. I iudge the same of Maries silence, though we graunt that for shame she durst not tell her husband that she was with child by the holy Ghost, yet she was rather stayed by the prouidence of God, then by hir owne counsel or wit. for if shee had told him, as it was a matter incredible, so Ioseph should haue thought that shee had mocked him, & that all men would haue laughed at, & haue taken as a meere fable, neither should the Oracle of God haue bin so much esteemed of, if it had followed after. Therefore the Lord suffered his seruant Ioseph to be caried away into a wrong opinion, that with his owne voyce he might reduce him into the way, but it is to be knowne, that it was rather done for our sakes, then for his owne priuate cause, for the Lorde by all meanes preuented, leaſt there should be any sinister suspition in the Oracle. For seeing the Angell com- meth to Ioseph as yet ignorant of the whole matter, the wicked haue no occa- sion to cauill: for he came without partialtie to heare the voyce of God, hee was not entised by the flatteries of his wife, the opinion which he had conceiued was not drawne from him by entreaties, he was not bent to the contrary part by humane reasons but whē the false offence of his wife stacke fast in his mind, then did God shew himselfe, as lette downe from heauen to vs, that he might be the more conuenient witnesse, and haue the greater credit with vs. We see that it was Gods will to teach his seruant Ioseph by an Angell, to that ende that he himselfe might be a heauenly messenger to others, and might de- clare and tell that which hee hearde neyther of his wife, nor of any other mor- tall creature. That this mysterie was not at the first reuealed to moe, this se- meth to bee the reason, because that it was meete, that this incomparable trea- sure should be kept secrete, and onely reuealed to the children of God. Fur- thermore, there is no absurditie in it, if the Lord (as hee often vseth) would by this meanes prooue and trie the fayth and obedience of his children. Cer- tainely except a man maliciously refuse to credite GOD, and to yeeld him selfe in obedience to him, he will be sufficiently satisfied with these testimonies wherewith this principle of our faith is prooued: for the same cause also did the Lord permit Mary to marry, that the celeſtiall conception of the Virginnie might be hid vnder the vaile of marriage, vntil the appointed time of reuea- ling the same. In the meane while, the vnfaithfull (as their vnthankfulnes & malice deserued) are blinded and see none of these mercies.

20. Whiles hee thought these thinges. Heere wee see howe the Lorde vseth to bee present with his children in conuenient time, and (as they say) euen in the very point or time of neede, whereby we also gather, that while hee seemeth to dissemble at our cares and sorrowes, he yet hath a regard vnto vs. but hee so stayeth and secretly resteth, while hee examineth our pari-

ence: & then in his time appointed he helpeth vs. And although his helpe seemeth to be slow & late, yet it is profitable that it should bee so deferred. The Angel appeared in a dreame this is one of the ordinary maners of reuelations, whereof mention is made, Num. .12. 7. where God speaketh thus. To the Prophets which are among you, I wil shew my selfe either by a vision or by a dreame but I will not do so with my seruant Moyses, to whom I will shew my selfe face to face: but it is to be obserued that these sortes of dreames do much differ from the which come of natural causes, for they haue a marke of assurance engraued in them, & they are sealed from aboue, that wee should not doubt of the truth of them. The dreames which men commonly haue, are wont to rise either of the constitution of nature, or through euill disposition of the bodies, or of such like causes. But sometimes the spirit giueth witness to those dreames which are of God, to assure vs certainly that it is God which speaketh. Somme of Dauid bee not afraid This exhortation of the Angell, declareth that Ioseph was carefull in his mind, least he should be defiled with any infection, by bearing with his wifes adultery. He therefore taketh away that opiniõ of the offence which he had conceived in his mind, to that end that with a quiet conscience hee might remaine & dwell with his wife: he applieth the epithite of the Somme of Dauid to the present cause, that he might stir vp his mind to that high mystery, because that he was of that familie (and that remaining a liue but with a few other) from whence saluation was promised to the world. Ioseph therefore hearing Dauid named, out of whose stocke he came, ought to remeber that notable couenant of God, of the restitution of the kingdom, & so should know that he speakes not of any new or strang thing: for it is as much as if the Angel by setting forth the propheties of the Prophets shoulde prepare Ioseph his mind to accept this present fauour. Thou shalt call his name Iesus. Of the word it selfe I haue before spoken briefly but sufficiently. I will now onely adde one thing. Their dreame is confuted by the wordes of the Angell, which deriue this name from Iehoua the essentiall name of GOD: for the Angell sheweth why the Sonne of GOD is to bee so called, that is, because hee shall saue his people: whereof wee gather an etymologie, meere contrary to that which they imagine. But in vaine do they seeke by this caull to slip away: Christe is to bee counted the authour of saluation most properly and most aptly, because that hee is God eternall. For wee muste not heere seeke onely, what GOD hath performed and bestowed vpon vs: but this name was giuen vnto the Sonne, for an especiall cause, because of the commaundement which was enioyned him from the father, and by reason of the office which he had when he descended to vs. Now it were mere madnesse to knitte these two wordes, Iesu & Iehoua together, as if they were but one name, seeing that they agree but in two letters and differre in all the rest, and which haue no likenesse in them at all. I leaue this kind of forging to the Alchumistes, from whom the Cabalistes do not much differ, who haue inuented for vs these filthy and vaine toyes. But the Sonne of God when hee came to vs in the flesh, had also his name giuen him of his Father, that by the same it might bee openly shewed, to what ende hee came, what his power was, and what properly was to be looked for of him: for the roote of his name Iesu, is from the Hebrewe verbe in hiphil, which signifieth signifieth to saue, and in the Hebrew is after an other manner pronounced, namely Iehosua. But the Euangelistes writing in Greeke followed the accustomed maner of speach: for the Greeke interpreters as well in Moses as in other bookes of the olde Testament, haue translated it Iesoun, whereby their ignorance is againe reprov'd, which wrest and writhc, rather then de-riue this name Iesu from Iehoua: for they account it for a great absurditie, if that any mortall man should haue this name common with the sonne of God, and they cry out tragically, that Christ will neuer suffer his name thus to be prophaned: As though that it were not well knowne of the contrary, that the name of Iesu is as common to those men, as that of Iehosua. Nowe seeing that it sufficiently appeareth that the Sonne of God, vnder the name of Iesu is commended vnto vs as the authour of saluation, we will listte more necerly the Angels wordes. He shall saue (sayth he) his people from their sinnes first this is to be obserued, that they of themselue were lost, whome Christ was sent to saue: and namely hee is called the Sauiour of the Church. If they whom God hath ioyned nere vnto himselfe, are drowned in death and destruction; vntill Christ restore them life: then what shall wee say of strangers, to whom there was neuer any hope of life appearing. Wherefore it is to bee concluded, while saluation in Christ is reiected, that all mankind is subiect to destruction. But the cause of destruction is withall to bee noted: for the celestially iudge doeth not pronounce the curse against vs rashly and without a cause. Therefore the Angell witnesseth that wee perished and were holden oppressed vnder the miserable yoake of damnation, for that by our sinnes wee were estranged from life, whereby the corruption and wickednesse of our nature is reuealed vnto vs, for if any man were perfecte and able to liue a righteous life, hee might bee without Christ the deliuerer: but all, without the exception of any one, haue neede of his grace. Therefore it followeth that they are all the seruauntes of Sinne, and are destitute of the true righteousnesse. Heere againe wee gather, what manner and way it is that Christ vseth in sauing, that is, that he deliuereth vs from sinnes.

Furthermore there are two parts of this deliuerance: first, in that hee by sacrifice hauing made a full satisfaction, giueth vs free pardon and forgiuenes, whereby wee are exempted from the guiltinesse of death, and are reconciled to God. The next, that he sanctifying vs with his spirit, chalengeth vs from the tyrannie of Sathan, that wee should liue to righteousnesse: therefore Christ is not acknowledged truly as a Sauiour, vntill that by faith we learne to embrace the free forgiuenes of our sinnes, and that we knowe that we are accounted righteous before God, because that we are freed from guiltinesse: then that we being without all trust eyther of our workes or of our power, aske of him the spirit of righteousnesse and truth. The Angell without doubt nameth the Iewes the people of Christ, whose head and king he was ordayned. But because the Gentiles were shortly after to be grafted into the stocke of Abraham, this promise of saluation is generally stretcht to al, which by faith are vnited to that one bodie of the Church.

And all this was done. They very fondly and childishly trifle, which affirm

I affirme that this name of Iesu was given him because he should bee called Im- manuell. For Matthew doth not only snatch at one onely clause, but hee comprehendeth what thing so euer was heavenly and diuine in the conception of Christ: to that purpose also appertaineth that note of vniuersalitic. Now let vs see how aptly this prophesie of Esaias is cited, the place is sufficiētly knowne and much spoken of, chap 7. 14. But the Iewes according to their woonted malice depraue the same, although that they therein shew no lesse blinde and foolish then a wicked hatred of Christ and of the truth. And many of their Rabbines were growne to that impudencie, that they expounded the same of king Ezechias, who was at that time borne, and was about 15. yeare olde. I pray you what maner of libertie of lying is this, that they will rather ouerthrow the order of nature, and hide a young man againe in his mothers wombe, that he might be borne at 16 yeares of age, then they will admit the truth to come to light? But these enemies of Christ are woorthy to bee stricken of God with the spirite of giddinesse and astonishment, that they might so be besotted. Others faine vnto themselues some vknowne sonne of king Achaz, whome the Prophet foretold that should be borne. But I demaund by what right hee was called Immanuel, and how the earth was subiect to his gouernment, who as a priuate man ended his life without honour: for shortly after the same Prophet appointeth that same childe (whosoeuer hee was) Lorde of the earth, & they as foolishly doe dable, which will that this should be spoken of the Prophet his sonne: and truely, the Christian writers were in this matter very grossely de-ceiued, in drawing that prophesie which followeth in the next chapter to Christ
 The Prophet there sayth, that by a vision hee was commanded to keepe com-panie with his wife, and the Sonne which hee had begotten had this name gi-uen him by God, Make hast and spoyle: for in that place is onely nored the ve-hemencie of the warre, which was at hand with horrible destruction, whereby it may easily be gathered that these matters were altogether diuers. Therefore let vs seeke the right sense of this place, when that at the besieging of the cittie of Ierusalem, king Achaz was afraid, nay hee was almost dismayd with feare:
 a Prophet was sent vnto him, who shoulde promise that G O D would bee the keeper of the Citie: But seeing a simple promise did not comfort his confused minde, the Prophet was commaunded to giue him what signe soeuer hee shoulde aske, eyther in heauen or in earth. When as that wicked hypocrite couering his infidelitie refused a signe, the Prophet vrged him more hardly, and at the length sayd: Yet God shall giue vnto you a signe, for behold the Virgine shall conceiue and beare a sonne. &c. Wee interpret this to be spoken of Christ in this maner: All you the posteritie of Dauid, you endeouour as much as in you lyeth to blot out and abolish the fauour promised vnto you, (for the Prophet expressly nameth the house of Dauid in reproch) yet your vnfaithfulnessse shall neuer bring to passe, but that the truth of G O D shall haue the vpper hande: God promiseth that this Citie shall be safe and free from the enemies. But if his worde bee not sufficient, hee is readie to giue you a token of assurance at your pleasure: you exclude both the graces, and you driue them from you, yet God will stand fast in the assurance of his couenant, for the promised redeemer shall come, in whom God will perfectly present himselfe vnto his people. The Iewes obiekt that Esaya should haue done foolishly and absurdly, if he should haue giuen to those men in that age, such a signe as should be shewed eight hundred yeares after or ther about. And here they very proudly list vp themselues, because that this obiection was let slip and buried, eyther through the vnskilfulnes or the carelesnesse of the Christians. But the answere seemeth not hard to me, if we obserue, that the couenant of adoption was giuen vnto the Iewes, whereof all the rest of God his benefites should depend. Therefore there was a generall promise, whereby God had chosen the children of Abraham as a people for himselfe, vpon the which couenant all the speciall promises had their ground. Againe, the Messias was the foundation of this couenant: Now we perceiue that the cause of the deliuerance of this cittie was, for that it was the sanctuary of God, and that the redeemer was to come out fro thence, This respect being taken away, Ierusalem should haue perished a 100. times. Now let the godly readers consider, seeing that the king had openly reiected the signe offered him from God was it not conuenient for the Prophet to goe to the Messias? as if hee should haue sayd: Although this age is vnworthy of that deliuerance which I promised from the Lord, yet God being mindefull of his couenant, shall deliuer this city fro the enemies. That he might therefore shew them no particular signe to testifie his fauor, this one ought to be enough, & more the enough that the Messias should come of the stock of Dauid. And it is to be noted, that the prophet calleth the vnbeleuers to the general couenant, to be a maner of reproofe, because that they did admit no particular signe. Now it is sufficiently proued as I think, that when as the gate was shut against all miracles, it was high time for the Prophet to reparaire to Christ, that the vnbeleuers might knowe that there was no other cause of their deliuerance, then the couenant which was made with the fathers. And by this wonderfull maner of teaching, it was the will of God to iustifie to all ages, that he therefore continually was so merciful to the children of Abraham, because he had made a free couenant with them in Christ, and not for any of their deserts, But the Iewes with an other cauil endeuour to shift away this our iudgement, because that presently it followeth in the text of the Prophet: Afore the childe shall haue knowledge to eschew the euill, and to chuse the good, the land shal be forsaken of two kings. &c. Hereof they gather that the birth of the childe is promised, which should not bee long delayed, otherwise that should not agree which is spoken of the change of the kingdoms so hard at hand, which the Prophet declared should bee before the infant had passed the one halfe of his age, I answere, when as Esayas had brought him as a signe which should be the authour of saluation, and sayd that an infant should be borne which should be the true Immanuel, or (that I may vse Paules word) God manifested in the flesh, 1. Tim. 3. 16. He then generally speaketh of all the infants of that age, for the which matter, there is a strong reason at hand. For hauing first spoken of the generall couenauant of GOD, hee returneth to the especiall promise, for the which cause hee was sent: so the first place which appertayneth to the last and full redemption, noeth one certayne childe to whome the title of GOD should onely belong: but the latter place which is referred to that speciall benefitte which was then at hand, appoynteth the time by the infancie of them which then were new borne, or shortly after were to be borne. Hetherto (except I be deceiued) I haue with strong and sounde reasons refuted the caulls of the Iewes, wherewith they endeuor to ouerwhelm the glory of Christ, least by this prophesie it should shine forth. Now it resteth for vs to take away that caull in the word glmb. They very frowardly shake vp Mathew, who proue that Christ should be borne of a virgine, when that the Hebrew word doth simply note a young woman, and they scorne vs, as men deceiued with a word wrongfully translated, that we should belecue that hee was conceiued by the holy Ghost, when that the Prophet onely sayth that hee was the sonne of a yoing woman. But first therein they shew ouermuch pleasure in contending, while they vrge that worde to be vnderstoode of a yong woman knowne vnto a man, which the Scripture attributeth euery where to Virgins. The etymologie also agreeth with the same which signifieth a hiding, wherein is noted a maidenly shamefastnesse, they bring one place out of the Prouerbes, chap. 30. 19. which yet helpeth them nothing at all, for there Salomon speaketh of a maide, whom a young man loueth, but it doth not presently follow, that she should be defiled whom a young man loueth, nay the coniecture on the other part is more probable. Furthermore, if I should grant that which they require of the word, yet the matter it selfe conuinceth them and enforceth them to confesse that the Prophet speaketh of a wonderfull and vnwonted birth. He crieth that he bringeth them a signe from the Lorde, and that no common signe but such a one as should excell all others: if he had onely sayd that a woman should beare a childe, then how ridiculous a thing had it beene for him to make so Solenne a preface? Wee see how the Iewes through their owne frowardnesse, do not onely set forth themselues to be scorned at: but also the most reuerend mysteries of God. And it is not a vaine argument which is gathered out of the whole text: a damfell shall conceiue: why is there no mention made of the man? The Prophet commendeth and speaketh of some vnaccoustomed and vnusuall thing. Furthermore, the commandement of giuing the name to the childe, was giuen to the damfell, in the which matter the Prophet also speaketh of a thing extraordinary, for although that the scripture declareth that the mothers oft times gaue the names to the children: yet they did it by the authoritie of the fathers: therefore the Prophet directing his speech to the damsell, doeth in this childe take from the men what right soeuer the order of nature hath giuen the. Then let this remaine stedfast, that the Prophet commendeth this great miracle of God that all the godly might attentiuely & reuerently consider the same, which the Iewes doe vnworthily prophane, applying that to a common maner of conceiuing which is spoken of the secret working and power of the spirite.

23. His name Immanuel. The scripture vseth to speak thus, that God is with vs, when that he is present with vs, with his helpe & with his grace, and exerciseth the power of his hand to defend vs. But here is the meane expressed, wherby god comunicateth with men: for without Christ we are alienated from God, and by Christ we are not onely receiued into his fauour, but we are also made one with him. And that which Paul teacheth to the Ephe. 2. 17. that the Iewes vnder the law were neere vnto God, & that ther was a deadly hatred betweenehim & the Gentiles, meaneth nothing els, but that God in shadowes & figures gaue signes of his presence vnto this people which hee had adopted, for that promise was in force, God in the middest of thee. Dut. 6 15. & 7. 11. Also this is my rest, Psal. 132. 14. But seeing that familiar coniunction of the people with God, did depend of the mediatur, because that in substance he was not yet fully reuealed, by signes he was shadowed. His seate and his dwelling place was placed betweene the Cherubins, because that the Arke was the figure and the visible pledge of his glory. But in Christ no more a shadowed but a perfect presence of God was giuen and shewed vnto the people: for the which cause Paule saith to the Col. 2. 9. that all fulnesse of the Godhead doth dwell in him bodily. And truly, he could not otherwise haue beene a lawfull mediatur, except that vnseperable conioyning of both the natures in him had ioyned men to God. neither is there any cause why the Iewes shoulde iangle, that the name of God is often transferred to those monuments, wherein hee witnesseth his presence to the faythfull: for it cannot be denied but that this name containeth in it a secret contrariety, which compareth the presence of God reuealed in Christ, with the whole maner of his presence, as hee was shewed to the old people before the comming of Christ. If the cause of this name began then in deede to be manifest, whē that Christ appeared in the flesh: then it followeth that in times past God was ioyned to the fathers not fully, but only in parte: whereof againe it is concluded, that Christ is God manifested in the flesh. And hee hath exercised the office of a mediatur euen from the beginning of the world. But because all this did depend of the later reuelation, then as though he were clothed with a new person, he was worthely at the length called Immanuel, whenas he came foorth as a Priest, who with the sacrifice of his owne body shoulde wash away the finnes of men, and with the price of his owne blood shoulde reconcile them to his father, and to bee short, should fulfill all the partes of mans saluation. So first in this name that reuerence of vs which is due to the onely and the eternall God. But yet neuerthelesse that fruite is not to bee neglected, which God would thereof gather and receiue from vs: for as oft as wee behold God and man in the person of one Christ, we may certainly determine that God possesseth vs, if by fayth we be ioyned to Christ. That the number is changed in that verbe, they shall call, it differeth nothing from those things which I spake before, the Prophet speaketh to one virgin, and therefore he vscth the second person, thou shalt call. But for what cause this name was first vttered, this is the common confession of all the godly, that God gaue himselfe in Christ to be enjoyed of vs all.

24. Ioseph being raised. The readinesse of the obedience which is heere described, doth make no whit lesse to testifie the certaintie of the faith of Ioseph, then it doth for the prayse of his obedience, for except that euery doubt hadde bin taken away, & his conscience very well settled, he neuer so willingly and so sodainly had changed his counsell & taken his wife, through whose company he lately iudged himselfe to haue bin defiled, therefore there was some note of the power of God imprinted in his dreame, which suffered not his mind to wauer. Then followed the effect of fayth, that the will of God being knowne, he presently prepared himselfe to obey it.

85. He knew her not till she. Vnder the colour of this place, Heluidius in times past moued great troubles in the Church, for that he would gather thereof, that Mary was a virgin but vnto her first birth, & that after she had other children by her husband. The perpetual virginitie of Mary was very sharply & copiously defended by Hierome, let this one thing suffice vs, that it can be very fondly and ill gathered out of the wordes of the Euangelist what became of her after that Christ was borne. He is called the first borne, but not in any other respect, but that we might know that he was borne of a virgin. It is denied that Ioseph had to do with her, vntill shee had brought foorth: this also is restrained vnto the same time, but what followed after he doth not declare. It is sufficiently known that such is the vse of the scriptures: and certainly no man will at any time moue question of this matter, except he be curious: & no man will obstinately stand in the same, except he bee a contentious brabler.

Luke 2,

Matthew

Marke,

1. And it came to passe in those dayes, that there came a commaundement from Augustus Cesar, that all the world shoulde bee taxed.
2. This first taxing was made, when Cyrenius was gouernour of Syria.
3. Therefore went all to be taxed, euery man to his owne citie.
4. And Ioseph also went vp from Galile out of a cittie called Nazareth, into Iudea, vnto the citty of Dauid, which is called Bethlehem, (because he was of the house and linage of Dauid)
5. To bee taxed with Mary, that was giuen him to wife, which was with child.
6. And so it was that while they were there, the dayes were accomplished that she should be deliuered.
7. And shee brought foorth her firste begotten sonne, and wrapped him in swadling clothes, and laid him in a cratche, because there was no roome for them in the Inne.

Luke declareth how it came to passe that Christ should be borne in the cittie of Bethlehem, when that Mary his mother dwelt in an other place, and was now nere vnto her trauell. And first he excludeth all humane counsell, when hee sayth that Ioseph and Mary left their house and came thither, that they might be taxed according to their familie and stocke. If through their owne deuise & counsell, they hadde chaunged their place that Mary might bee deliuered in Bethlehem, then shoulde wee onely haue considered the persons themselues: but nowe, when that they haue no other purpose, but that they might obey the commaundement of Augustus, wee plainly see that they as blinde folkes were led by the hand of God thither, where it behooued Christ to bee borne. And this seemeth to fall out by fortune, as prophane men ascribe vnto fortune all other thinges which are not gouerned by the determined counsell of men

But it is not sufficient simply to beholde what is done, but wee must also remember what was forespoken by the Prophet many ages before. And this comparison shall evidently shewe, that this tax was not commanded by Augustus Cæsar, and Ioseph and Marie remoued not from their house, that they might at that time come to Bethlehem, without the wondrell prouidence of God: so we see that sometime the holy children of God, although they wander in mind, not knowing whether they goe, yet they hold the right way, because the Lord directeth their steps: & the wonderfull prouidence of GOD doth no lesse shew it selfe in this, that the tyrannicall government draweth Mary from her house that the prophesie might be fulfilled. God by his prophet had appointed this place (as we shall after see) where he would his sonne should be borne: but if Mary had not by force bin cōpelled, she had determined to haue beene laid at home. Augustus commanded that a tax should be ceased in Iuda and that euery man should giue his name, that thence forth they might pay a yearly tribute, which before they were wont to pay to God. So that which God vsed to require of his people, a prophane man doth violently snatch vnto himselfe: and that were as much, as if he should bind the Iewes wholly to himselfe, and should forbid that after that they should be accounted for the people of God. So when the matter was come to vtter despaire, and the Iewes seemed for euer to be cut off and alienated from the gouernment of God: God doeth not onely speedily & beyond the hope of all men, giue a remedie, but hee vseth that wicked tyranny for the redemption: for the gouernour (or whosoever he was that was Cæsar his deputie) while hee executed that which was giuen him in commandement, was the secret messenger of God, to fetch Mary to the place appoynted of God. And certainly to this purpose tendeth the whole historie of Luke; that the faithfull might know that Christ was brought forth from his birth by the hand of God. For this auaieth not a litle for the assurance of faith, that Mary was sodenly and against her owne mind drawn to Bethlehem, that the redemer might come from thence, as he was promised.

1. All the world. This Synecdoche ought not to seeme hard, seeing that it was vsed in diuerse places by the Romane writers: and I doubt not but that this tax was generall throughout all the prouinces, that it might be the more tollerable and not so odions, yet the maner of the tribute might be diuers. That this was the first taxing I interpret, because that the Iewes then as it were throughly tamed, had this new and vnaccustomed yoke layd vpon them. For that which some say that it was the first after that Cyrenius was gouernour of Syria, hath no colour in it: for there was a yearly tribute, but the description or taxing was not made euery yeere. Therefore this was the meaning, that the Iewes were then more greiuously oppressed. There is no absurditie in the diuersitie of the Gouernours name, while some call him Cyrenius, some Quirinus or Quirinius: for wee knowe that the Greekes in translating the Latine names, often change somewhat in the pronuntiation. But there ariseth a farre greater difficultie then this from other where: for Iosephus in his eighteenth booke of Antiquities the first chapter, declareth that when Archelaus was banished to Vienna, Quirinus came as Proconfull, who should vnite Iudea to the prouince of Syria.

Also it is agreed vpon amongst the writers, that Archelaus raigned 9. yeares after the death of his father Herod, whereof it is gathered, that there were a-boue thirteene yeare betweene the birth of Christ, and this taxing. For almost all subscribe to Epiphanius, who affirmeth that Christ was born the xxxiii yeare of the raigne of Herod, that is foure yeares before his death. This also is not a little doubtfull, that the same Iosephus in the thirde chapter of the 18 booke, sayth that this taxing fell in the 37. yeare after the victorie wonne at Actium. If that bee true, Augustus liued almost seuen yeares longer at the most, so eight or nine yeares shall be detracted from his age. For it appeareth out of the third after Luke, that he had then raigned but fiftene yeare. But seeing it is certayne that the age of Christ is better knowne, then that the same ought to be called into question, so it is not vnlike but that Iosephus had forgotten himselfe in this matter, as also in many others. And truely the Chronicles declare that Quirinus was Confull about nineteene yeares before that Antonius was ouercome, and that Augustus enioyed the Empire alone, so hee was a very olde man when hee was sent into the prouince. Obserue that the same Iosephus numbred foure gouernours of Iudea in the space of eight yeares, yet he granteth that the fift governed eleuen yeares: that was Valerius Gratus whome Pontius Pilate succeeded. Yet there may be giuen an other answere, that they could not goe through with the taxe: presently as it was commaunded, for Iosephus declareth that Coponius was sent thither with an host, that he might keepe the Iewes vnder, whereof it is easily gathered that through the tumult of the people, this taxe was for a time hindered. And the words of Luke do beare this interpretatiō, that there came out a commandement about the time of Christes natiuitie for taxing the people: but the description could not be made, except the estate of the kingdome had been changed, because that Iudea was brought into a part of the prouince: so this latter parte was added in steade of correction. This first description was vnder the gouernour Cyrenius: that is, it was then first brought to effect. Though the question is not yet wholly answered. For to what purpose should the people be taxed, when that Herod gouerned Iudea, who payd no tribute to the Romane Empire. I answere there is no absurditie in the matter, if Augustus (that hee might accustome the Iewes to the yoke, whose stubbornesse was sufficiently knowne) woulde also haue them taxed vnder Herode: and the peculiar kingdome of Herode was no hinderance but that the Iewes in the name of a tribute might pay somewhat for euery of their heades to the Romane Empire: for Herode onely raigned by entreatie, and almost seruilely. I know not from whence Eusebius tooke that which hee sayeth, that this taxing was decreede by the consent of the Senate.

7. There was no roome for them in the Inne. Here we see not onely how poore Ioseph was, but also how sharpe that tyrannie was, that no excuse is receiued, but that Ioseph is compelled in that troublesome time to bring his wife neare vnto her trauell with him. And it is to be supposed that they which came of the king-ly stocke were more sharply and more reprochfully handled then the rest. Ioseph was not so blockish, but that he was carefull to prouide for the trauel of his wife, and so he would willingly haue eschewed this necessitie.

But

But because hee could not, enforced, hee giueth place, and commendeth himselfe to God. Yet wee see what a beginning of life the Sonne of God hadde, and in what place and swadling clowtes hee was entertayned. And the maner of his birth was such, because that to this ende hee tooke our flesh, that for our sakes hee might humble himselfe: therefore hee was cast out into a stable, and layde in a maunger, and hadde the roomthe of a guest denyed him amongst menne, that hee might open heauen for vs, not only as guest-wife, but as an eternall kingdom & an inheritance, and that the Angels should admitte vs into their fellowshipp.

Luke 2.

Matthew

Marke.

8. And there were in the same countrey shepherdes, abiding in the fieldes, and keeping watch by night because of their flocke.

9. And loe, the Angell of the Lord came vpon them, and the glory of the Lorde shone about them, and they were sore afraide.

10. Then the Angell saide vnto them, Bee not afraide: for beholde, I bring you tydings of great ioy that shall be to all the people.

11. That is, that vnto you is borne this day, in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christe the Lorde.

12. And this shall bee a signe to you, yee shall finde the childe swaddled, and layde in a cratch.

13. And straight way there was with the Angel a multitude of heavenly souldiers praysing God, and saying.

14. Glory be to God on high and peace in earth, towards men good will.

8. And there were shepherdes. It should haue beene in vaine to haue Christ borne in Bethlehem, except it were knowne to the world. Yet the maner which Luke describeth seemeth unlikely in the iudgement of men. First, Christ is reuealed but to a fewe witnesses, and that in the darke night. Then, when God hadde at hand many both honourable and excellent witnesses, which beeing put by, hee chose onely Shepherdes, that is, men contemned and of no estimation. The reason and wisdom of fleshe must of necessitie heere become foolish, & let vs confesse, that the foolishnes of God excelleth whatsoeuer is, or seemeth to be wise in this world. 1. Cor. 1. 25. But this also was a part of the humbling of him, not that any thing of the glory of Christ was by this taken away, but onely that hee should lie hidde for a time. Furthermore, as Paule, 1. Cor. 2. 4. and monisheth, that the Gospell is contemptible according to the flesh, that our fayth might bee grounded in the power of the spirite, and not in high woordes of mans wisdom, or in any glory of the worlde: so GOD from the beginning laide vp this incomparable treasure in fraile vessels, that the obedience of our fayth might the better be prooued.

Wherefore if we desire to come to Christe let it not grieue vs, to followe them whom the Lord to the ouerthrowing of the pride of the worlde, hath taken as matters euen out of the filth of the beastes.

9 The Angell of the Lord came, Hee sayth that the glory of the Lorde shone about the shepheards, whereby they might know the Angell. For it shoulde haue little auailed to haue that tolde them of the Angell, which is reported by Luke, except God by some visible signe had witnessed that that came from him which they heard. Therefore the Angell appeared vnto them not in any common shape, or without dignitie, but adorned with a brightnesse of heauenly glory, which shoulde moue the mindes of the shepheards, that they might receiue the word which was brought them no otherwise, then as out of the mouth of God himselfe. From thence came that feare, whereof Luke presently speaketh, whereby God vseth to humble the heartes of men, that hee might get reuerence to his worde, as I haue before declared.

10. Be not afraid. This exhortation tendeth to the taking away and lightening of the feare: for although it be profitable that the mindes of men should be stricken with feare, that they might learne to giue God his honour, yet together with it they haue need of comfort, least they should bee vtterly ouerwhelmed. For it cannot be, but that the maiesty of God shoulde swallow vppe the whole world, if the terrour that it hath in it, were not mixed with some sweetnesse. Therefore the reprobate fall downe halfe dead, because he appeareth to them but as a iudge: but the Angel that he might refresh the mindes of the shepheards, testifieth that he was sent for an other end: namely that hee might declare the mercy of God. For this voyce doth not only rayse vp those men that are fallen, but restoreth those that are lost, & calleth backe from death to life, where they heare that God is mercifull to them. But the Angell sayth that he bringeth tidings of great ioy, then he addeth the cause or matter of this ioy, that there is a Saviour borne. By which wordes we are first taught, that vntill men haue peace with GOD, and that they bee reconciled by the grace of Christe, what ioy soeuer they conceiue, is but vaine and deceitfull. The wicked ones doe often triumph with a drunken and a madde mirth: but except there be a peace and a pacifier betweene God and them, of necessitie they must needs be miserably tormented with blinde stinges of their consciences. Furthermore, although that flatteringly and daintily they nourish vp themselues in delightes, yet their pleasures are so many tormentes to them. This then is the beginning of a perfect ioy, to feele the fatherly loue of God towards vs, who onely giueth peace to our mindes. and this is the ioy in the holy Ghost, wherein Paule saith that the kingdō of God doth consist, Rom. 14.17. And that Epithyte of Great is therefore added, that wee might not onely knowe that wee shoulde especially ioy in our saluation offered vs in Christ: but that the greatnesse of this good is such and so vnmessurable, that it woorthily recompenceth all the sorowes, griefes, and troubles of this present life. Wherefore let vs learne so to bee satisfied with this one Christ, that the feeling of his grace might exceede all the troubles of the fleshe, yea and at the length abolishe the same. That shall be to all the people. Although the Angell speaketh to the shepheardes onely, yet he declareth that this message of saluation which he bringeth them, reacheth reacheth further, so that not they onely shoulde heare it priuately, but others also shoulde heare the same, Furthermore, obserue that this ioy is sayde to bee common to all people, because it was generally offered to all. For God promised Christ, not to one, or to other, but to al the seed of Abraham.

And that the Iewes, for the most part, were deprived of that ioy, which belonged vnto them, was becaule of their vnbeliefe: as at this day God calleth generally all to saluation by the Gospell, but the vnthankfulnesse of the worlde bringeth to passe, that fewe enioy this grace equally profered to all. Therefore this ioy being included amongst a few, is yet called common in respect of God. But although the Angell speaketh onely of the elect people, yet nowe that the wall is broken downe, the same message belongeth to all mankind for Christe preacheth peace not only to the which are nere: but also to them which are far off, & no lesse vnto strangers, then to the that are of the household. Eph. 2.17. But because that vntill the comming of Christ this couenant was peculier with the Iewes, therefore the Angell seperateth them from all other nations.

11. Vnto you is borne this day. Heere is expressed the cause of the ioy, as euen nowe wee declared, that is, because the redeemer, which in times paste was promised, is borne: who shoulde restore the Church of God into his estate. And the Angell doth not speake, as of a thing vtterly vnknowne, but he taketh the beginning of his message out of the lawe and the Prophetes: because that it hadde bene in vaine for him to haue vsed this manner of speach to the Gentiles and prophane men. Christe the Lorde to you is borne a Sauour: that same is also the cause why he maketh mention that hee was borne in the Cittie of Dauid, which had bene in vaine, but for the reuuing of the remembrance of those promises, which were euery where knowne and famous amongst the Iewes. To bee short, the Angell applyeth his speach to his hearers, which were not altogether ignorant of the promised redemption. And hee ioyneth the Gospell with the doctrine of the lawe and the Prophetes, as that which springeth out of that fountaine. But seeing that Soter expresleth more amongst the Greekes, as Cicero witnessleth, Veirina 4. 109. then Seruator dooth amongst the Lattines: and that there is not extant a lattine word, which answereth vnto the same: I haue thought it better to speake barbarously, then to diminish any thing from the power of Christe: And I doubt not but that the common interpreter, and the olde doctours of the Church, hadde the same purpose: therefore is Christe called Saluator, as hee which bringeth full saluation. And also this pronowne to you, hath a great Emphasis: For it should but smally auayle to heare that a Sauour was borne, except that euery man might apply it, as that hee was borne to him. In this manner speaketh Isayas, chap. 9.6. A childe is borne to vs, a sonne is giuen to vs. So also sayth Zacharyas 9.9. Beholde thy king commeth vnto thee, poore.

12. And this shall bee a signe vnto you, you shall finde the childe swaddled. The Angell answereth to that, whereat the Shepherds might haue taken offence, and whereby their fayth might haue bene hindred: for what a mockery is it to see him layde in a stall, which was sent from GOD, as the king and onely Sauour. Therefore least this vile and abiect estate of Christ, should feare the Shepherdes frō fayth in Christ, the Angel foretelleth them what they shall see. And this order (which to the iudgement of man may seeme absurde, & almost ridiculous) doth the Lord daily vse towardes vs. For by the voyce of the Gospell sent downe frō heauen he doth command vs to embrace Christ crucified, and he setteth signes in earthly and transitorie elements, which might lift vs into the glory of blessed immortalitie: so he promising vs a spirituall righteousness, setteth a little water before our eyes, and hee sealethe eternall righteousness to our soule by a small taste of bread and wine. If that the stable offend not the Shepherdes, and that they neuerthelessse seeke their saluation from Christ, and that they submit themselues vnder the gouernment of him, beeing yet but an infant, there ought no signe, be it neuer so contemptible darken his glory with vs: but at the least that we might humbly worship him, sith that he is ascended into heauen, and sitteth at the right hand of the father.

13. And straight way there was a multitude. Although that in one Angell there was giuen a shew of Gods glory: yet God would that his sonne should be more royally adorned, & that as well for the confirming of vs, as of the shepherdes. The credit of two or three witnessers is sufficient amongst men to take away a doubt: but the heauenly host with one consent and with one voyce giue testimony to the son of God. Then what a peruersnes were it, not to credit the generall testimonie of the angels, whereby our saluation in Christ is witnessed? whereby we gather how detestable this incredulitie is vnto God, which disturbeth this sweete harmony both of heauen & earth? Againe we are to bee condemned of more then beastly blockishnes, if this song (which the Angels with one consent haue song that they in wordes might begin to vs) do not kindle in vs a fayth & an endeuour to prayse God. Adde this also, that the Lord woulde by this example of heauenly melodie, commend vnto vs the vnitie of faith, and exhort vs with one consent to sing his prayses vpon the earth.

14. Glory in the hyghest. The Angelles beginne with thanksgiuing, or with the prayses of God, because that the scripture euery where teacheth vs that wee are redeemed from death, to this ende, that as well in tongue as in works wee might testifie our thankfulness to God. Let vs therefore remembre that this is the final cause wherefore God reconciled vs to himselfe by his only begotten son, that the riches of his grace & great mercy being made known, his name might bee glorified. And at this day howe much euery one of vs is strengthened through the knowledge of grace to set forth the glory of God, so much hath he profited in the faith of Christ: yet as oft as mention is made of our saluation, we must know that there is as it were a signe giuen vs, to stirre vs vp to giuing of thanks and prayses vnto God. In earth peace. This is the more vsuall reading, that then the third clause may follow, towardes men good will. And although for the summe of the matter there is no great difference, which of the two thou readest: Yet the other interpretation seemeth to agree better, because it is not to be doubted, but that these two clauses agree together, Glory to God on high, & in earth peace: but except thou opposelt men vnto God, it cannot be a full Antithesis. Peraduenture this prepositiō En deceiued the interpreters: because that the sense of the wordes was very darke, to say peace to be in men. But seeing that in many places of the scripture this preposition is superfluous, there there is no cause why it should hinder vs. Yet if any had rather place 'it in the latter clause, the same sense shall still remayne, as I will presently declare. Now it is to be seene what the Angels meane by this worde peace: certainly they speake not of the outward peace, which men maintaine betweene themselves, but he sayth that the earth is appeased, when men are reconciled to God, and are quiet in their mindes, We know that we are borne the children of wrath, and by nature that wee a. e enemies to God: so that it is then necessary that we should be vexed with horrible disquietnes, so long as wee finde God offended with vs: therefore a short and euident definition of peace is to bee gathered of the contraries, that is of the wrath of God, and the terrour of death, & so there is a double relation to be had: the one to God, the other to men, because that we haue then peace with God, and he blotting out our guiltines: & not impugning our sinnes, beginneth to be mercifull vnto vs: and we resting in his fatherly loue, doe call vpon him with a sure faith, and without feare wee reioyce in that saluation promised vs. And although that in Job. 7. 1. the life of man vpon earth is called a continuall warfare, and the thing it selfe declareth that there is nothing more troublesome then our estate, while we remaine here in the world, yet the Angels expressly place peace on the earth, that wee might know that no troubles can hinder vs, but that we enjoying the grace of Christ, might haue settled and quiet minds. Therefore let vs remember that there is a seat of peace placed euen in the midst of the stormes of temptations, amongst diuers dangers, amongst violent tempests, in the midst of battels & feares, least our faith being driuen backe with any of these engines, shoulde wauer or waxe faint. Good will. I know not how it came to passe, that it was put in the genitiue case: certainly the common translation, which hath vnto men of good will, ought not onely to be forsaken as adulterous, but because it corrupteth the whole sense. Yet many are deceiued also, which reading it in the nominatiue case, good will, doe referre the same to men, as if it were an exhortation to them to embrace the grace of Christ. I grant that it is no otherwise confirmed, then as God offereth his peace vnto vs, except that we receiue the same. But seeing that Eudokia is taken in euery place in the scriptures, for that which the Hebrewes call desun the old interpreter translated it Beneplacitum. This place is very ill expounded of the accepting of grace. But that which the Angels speake of, doeth rather shew the fountaine of peace, that we might know that it is a free gifte, and to flow out of the meere mercie of God. If you please to reade it Good will in men, it shall not bee amisse in respecte of the sense: for in this manner of speech the cause of the peace shall also be noted: that is, that God freely accepteth men into his fauour, with whom he before had warlike or deadly discorde. If thou wilt read peace of good will, for willing, I will not be against this exposition: yet that is the plainest to haue Eudokian put appositiuely, that wee might know from whence peace commeth to vs.

Luke 2.

Mathew.

Marke.

15. And it came to passe, when the Angels were gone away fro them into heauen, that the Shephards said one to another, let vs go then vnto Bethlehem, and see this thing that is come to passe, which the Lord hath shewed vnto vs.

16. So they came with hast, and founde both Mary

Mary and Ioseph, and the babe layd in the cratch.

17. And when they had seene it, they published abroad the thing, which was told them of that child.

18. And all that heard it wondred at the things which were told them of the Shepheards.

19. But Mary kept all these sayings, and pondered them in her heart.

20. And the Shepheardes returned, glorifying and prayeing God, for all that they had hearde and seene, as it was spoken vnto them.

21. And when the eight dayes were accomplished, that they should circumcise the childe, his name was then called Iesus, which was so named of the Angel, before he was conceaued in the wombe.

15. After the Angels were gone away. Heere is the obedience of the Shepheardes described vnto vs: for when the Lord had appointed them as witnesses of his Sonne to all the world, hee effectually spake to them by the Angels, least that shoulde bee forgotten, which was tolde them. It was not plainely and by word commaunded them, that they shoulde come to Bethlehem: but because that they sufficiently vnderstoode that the counsell of GOD was so, they make hast to Christ, as at this day, when we know that Christ is shewed vnto vs, to this ende, that our hearts by faith might come vnto him, our loytering cannot bee excused.

And Luke doth not in vaine declare that the Shepheards tooke counsell of their iourney asloone as the Angels were departed, least wee suffer (as many vse) the word of God to vanish away with the sound, but that it may take liuely rootes in vs, and thereby that it may bring forth his fruite, when it hath ceased to sound in our eares. Furthermore, it is to bee noted, that the Shepheardes doe mutually exhort one another: for it is not sufficient for every one of them to looke to themselves, except that also there be vsed mutuall exhortations. Luke amplifieth the prayse of their obedience, when hee sayeth that they made hast, euen as a promptnes of faith is also required of vs. Which the Lord hath shewed vnto vs. Very skilfully and rightly doe they ascribe that to God, which they heard not but from the Angell, for, whom they acknowledge as the minister of God: they also thinke worthy of that autorite, as if he had put on the person of our Lord. Therefore for this cause doth the Lord call vs backe often vnto himselfe, least the maiestie of his word should become of no estimation in the sight of men. Againe wee see heere, that they account it to be an offence in them to neglect that treasure shewed them of the Lorde: for of that knowledge reuealed to them they argue that they must goe to Bethlehem, that they may see. And so it behoueth euery one of vs, according to the measure of his faith and vnderstanding to bee prepared to follow whether as God calleth.

16. They found Mary. That truly was an vnseemely sight, and by that onely they might haue bene driuen from Christ: for what is there more vnlikely, then to beleue that hee shoulde bee king of all the people, who was not accounted worthily of a meane place among the common people? and to hope for the restitution and saluation of the kingdome from him, who for his want and pouerty was throwne out into a stable? Yet Luke writeth that none of these things hindered the Shepherdes, but that with great admiration they prayed God: namely because that the glory of GOD was throughly fixed in their eyes, & the réuerence of his word printed in their minds, that whatsoeuer they mette with either infamous or contemptible in Christ, they with the height of their faith do easily passe over the sâe. Neither is there any other cause why euery of those small offences doe either hinder or turne our faith from the right course: but because that wet taking small hold vpon God, are easily drawn hether & thither. For if this one cogitatio possessed all our senses, that we haue a certaine and a faithfull witness from heauen, it were a defence strong and stable enough against all kinde of temptations, and it shoulde well enough fortifie vs against all offences.

17. They published abroad the thing which was told them. Luke cōmendeth the faith of the Shepherdes, in that they deliuered sincerely through their hands, that which they receiued from the Lord: & it is profitable that the same should be witnessed for all our sakes, that they might be, as second Angels for the confirming of our sayth. Againe, Luke teacheth that they reported that which they had heard not without profit. And it is not to be doubted, but that the Lord gaue effect to their word, least it should be mocked or despised. For the estate of the mendiscredited the matter, & the matter it selfe might seeme to be but fabulous. But the Lord suffereth not those things to be in vaine, which he enioyneth them. And although this manner of working finally pleaseth the iudgement of men, that the Lordes will is that his word should be heard of poore & meane men: yet it is approoued of God himselfe, and vsed partly to humble the pride of flesh, & partly to prooue the obedience of the sayth. but that all men maruaile, and no man moueth his foote, that he might come to Christ: hercof it may be gathered, that they hearing of the power of God were amazed, not being striken with any earnest affection of the heart: wherefore this word was not so much spread abroad for their saluation, as that the ignorance of all the people might be inexcusable.

19. Mary kept all those. The diligence of Marie in considering the woorkes of GOD is proposed to vs for two causes. First, that we might knowe that the keeping of this treasure was layde vp in her heart, that, that which shee had layde vp with her, shee might publish the same to others in time conuenient. Next, that all the godly might haue an example which they might followe. For if wee be wise, this ought to be the especiall trauell, and the chiefe studie of our life that wee might be diligent to consider the woorkes of God, which shoulde bulde vp our sayth. Furthermore, the worde conserue is referred to the memorie: and Symballein doth else signifie to conferre, as to make vp one perfect body, by gathering all things together, which agreed amongst themselues to prooue the glory of Christe. And Mary coulde not wisely consider the value of all things together, but by conferring some things with others.

20. Glorifying and praying of God. This also appertaineth to the common

use of our fayth, that the Shepheards might certainly know it to be the worke of God. And the earnest glorifying of God which is prayed in the, is a certaine secret reproofe of our sluggishnesse, or rather of vnthankfulnesse: for if the swathing cloutes of Christe so much preuailed amongst them, that they could rise out of the stable and cratch euen vnto heaue: how much more effectuall ought the death and returrection of Christ be with vs that wee might be lifted vp to God. For Christ was not onely lifted vp from the earth, that hee might draw all things after him: but hee sitteth at the right hand of the Father, that wee which are pilgrims in this world, might with our whole hearts meditate of the heauenly life. But Luke declareth the true nature of godlines, when hee sayth that the winnesse of the Angell was in steede of a rule to the Shepherdes, to the which they directed all things. For then is fayth rightly holpe by the workes of God, if it directeth all things to that purpose, that the truth of God, which is reuealed in his word may more clearely shine forth.

21. That the childe should be circumcised. That which generally is to be considered of circumcision, let the readers fetch out of Gen. 7. 10. It shall be sufficient at this time briefly to touch those things, which belong to the person of Christ. God would that his sonne should be circumcised, that he might be subiect to the law: for circumcision was a solemne signe, wherewith the Iewes were initiated into the obseruation of the law. Paule declareth the end, Gal. 4. 4. when he sayth that he was made vnder the law, that he might redeeme them which were vnder the law. Therefore Christ taking circumcision professed himselfe a seruant of the law, that he might obtaine libertie for vs. And so by this meanes not onely the seruitude of the law was abolished by him: but the shadow of the ceremony was applyed to his sound and perfect body, that it might soone take an end. For although the abrogating of it depended of the death & resurrection of Christ, yet this was a certaine beginning of the same, that the son of God suffered himselfe to be circumcised His name was the called Iesus. This place alio witnesseth, that it was a manner receiued amongst the Iewes, that on the day of circumcision, they gaue names to their children, as wee at this day vse to doe at baptisme. But the Euangelist noteth two things, that the name of Iesu was not giuen vnto the sonne of God, rashly or for the pleasure of men, but that the Angell brought it from heauen: Then that Ioseph and Mary obeyed the commaundement of God: and this is the content of our fayth wth the worde of God, that that word going before, we should speake to the same, and our fayth shoulde answer to his promises. Especially Luke commendeth vnto vs the order of publishing of the word, when he sayth that saluation was testified by the mouth of men, which was promised by the Angell from aboute through the grace of Christ.

Matth. 2.

1. When Iesus then was borne at Bethlehem in Iudea, in the dayes of Herode the king: behold there came wise men from the East to Ierusalem,

2. Saying where is the king of the Iewes that is borne? for we haue seene his starre in the East,

Marke.

Luke.

and are come to worship him.

3. When king Herod heard this, hee was troubled, and all Ierusalem with him :

4. And gathering together all the cheife Priestes and Scribes of the people, he asked of them where Christ should be borne.

5. And they sayd vnto him, at Bethlehem in Iudea for so it is written by the Prophet :

6. And thou Bethlehem in the land of Iuda art not the least among the princes of Iuda: for out of thee shall come the gouernour, that shall feede my people Israel.

1. When Iesus was then borne. Matthew concealeth the cause why Christ was borne at Bethlehem: but the spirite of God, who had appoynted the Euangelistes as his Scribes, seemeth aduisedly so to moderate their stile, that with most notable consent, they all write one and the same historie, though it be in diuers maners: that thereby the truth of God might be the more certaine and euident, when as it was openly manifest, that his witnesses did not purposely be fore consent to speak, but euery one seperate frō other, nor hauing one respect of an other, did simply and feely write that, which the spirit taught them.

Furthermore. heere is a hitory declared worthy to be remembered, that God fetched wisemen out of Chaldea or Persia, which should come into Iudea to worship Christ, where he lay without honour, and contemned. Truly a wonderfull counsell of God, that God would his Sonne shoulde come forth into the world vnder this obscure humilitie. yet he excellently adorned him, as with phrases, so with other tokens, least any thing for the triall of our faith had bin wanting from his diuine maiestie: yet heere is to be noted a notable harmonie of things seeming to be repugnant. The starre from heauen declareth him to be a king, whose throne is the beastes stall, because that he is denied a place euen amongst the common sort of men. His maiestie shine th in the East, which not onely appeared not in Iudea, but is also defiled with many reproches. To what purpose is this: namely, the heavenly fathers will was to appoynt that the star and the wise men should lead vs the right way to his sonne: but yet hee stripped him naked of all earthly honour, that we might know his kingdome to be spiritual. Wherefore this storie is not only profitable, because that god brought these wise men to his sonne, as the first fruites of the Gentiles: but also because hee would set forth the kingdome of his sonne, as with the prayse of them, so of the starre for the helpe of our faith, least the wicked and malicious despite of his owne nation, should cause him to be despised of vs.

It is sufficiently knowne, that the Astrologers and Philosophers with the Perseans and the Chaldeans were called Magi (i. wisemen.) Therefore it is easily to be coniectured that these came out of Persia. Furthermore, howe many they were in number, it is better not to knowe, because the Euangelist doth not expresse it, then rashly to affirme for certaine, that which is doubtful.

A childish error lead the Papistes, that they imagined them to be three, because Mathew sayth that they offered gold, frankincense and mirrh: as if hee should distinctly assigne a proper office to euery of them, and that rather hee should not declare that these three things were generally offered by them. Who soeuer that old writer was, whose vnperfect commentarie vpon Mathew beareth the name of Chrysostome, & is accounted amongst Chrysostomes workes sayth that they were foure teene: which hath no more colour, except that peraduenture it came by tradition of the fathers, yet that same also hath no assurance. But the Papistes are more then ridiculous, which imagined to themselues that they were kings, because they did read that before sayd Psal. 72.10. That the kinges of Tharsis, of the Isles and of Saba should come, which should offer gifts to the Lord: Verily they are wise workemen, who that they might giue a newe shape to men, they haue begun at the turning of the worlde: for of the South and West they haue made the East.

And it is not to be doubted, but that by the iust reuenge of God, they were so amazed, that their grosse ignorance might be laid open to the reproofe of all men, who made no religion to corrupt the truth of God, and to turne the same into a lie. But here is first demaunded, whether this starre was one of the number of them, which the Lord in the beginning created, for the garnishing of heauen: then whether the knowledge of Astrologie brought these wise men hither, that thereby in minde they conceiued the birth of Christ. Although we may not contentiously strue of these matters, yet it is to be gathered out of the wordes of Mathew, that it was not a naturall starre, but extraordinary: for it was not by the course of nature, that at certaine times it vanished away, and after sodainely shone againe: then that it went a straight course towards Bethlehem, and at the length that it stode fixed ouer the house wherein Christ was none of which things agreeth to natural stars. It is more probable that it was like to a Comet, and that it was seene in the ayre, rather then in heauen. And it is no absurditie, that Mathew speaking according to the maner of the people improperly called it a starre: hereof is almost gathered an answer of the second question. For seeing it is certaine, that Astrologie is contained within the boundes of nature, the wise men could not by the onely direction of the same haue come to Christ: therefore it behoued them to be holpen by a secreete reuelation of the spirite: yet I deny not but that they had some beginning or seede out of the arte: but I say it was necessary that the same shoulde be holpe with some new and extraordinary reuelation, least it should be in vaine or vanish away.

2. Where is hee that is borne king? That some interpreters thinke a king borne, to be secretly opposed against a king made or created, seemeth to mee to be too subtil: therefore I take it more simply that the wise men meane that this king was lately borne, and remayneth yet an infant, that they might make a difference betweene him and a king growne in age, and holding the government of the people: for presently they say, that they were moued neyther with the fame of his actes, or with his present greatnesse openly knowne, but by a diuination from heauen, of a thing that was to come. But seeing that the sight of the starre was so effectuall effectuall with the wisemen, woe bee to our sluggishnes, which so coldely seeke Christ the king reuealed vnto vs.

We come to worship him. The starre was shewed to this end, that it might draw the wisemen into Iudea, that they might be witnesses and proclaimers of the new king. But for that which appertaineth to them, they came not to giue any godly worship to Christ, as is due to the Sonne of God, but after the Persian maner, they would salute him as a most excellent king. For it is not probable that they thought more of him, then that he should be endued with singular power and dignitie, that he might worthily turne all men into admiration and reuerence of him. For it may be, that they would before hand get his fauour, that they might haue him freindly and fauourable to them: If peraduenture it came to passe, that he obtained the government of the East.

3. Herod the king was troubled. Herod was not ignorant of the prophesies, wherein the Iewes had a king promised them, who should restore their afflicted and ouerthrowne conditions into a happy estate. For he had from a childe liued in that kingdome, and had perfectly learned all their matters. Adde also that this rumour was so spread, that it could not bee vnknowne to the people which dwelt neere about them: yet he is troubled as it were with a newe matter, vnheard of before: that is, because hee distrusting God and his promises, thought it but vaine to hope for a redeemer, especially seeing he imagined (as proud men vse to doe) with a foolish confidence, that hee had established the kingdome to him and to his. But seeing he being drunken in his owne felicitie had before in his securitie contemned the prophesies, now he is sodainely feared with the remembrance of them. For he should not so much haue been moued with the simple speach of the wisemen, if the oracles or prophesies had not come into his minde, which before seemed to be as toyes, and of no importace so the Lord after he hath suffered the vnbeleeuers to sleepe, sodenly he shaketh them out of their rest. That which Mathew saith, that Ierusalem also was troubled, may be expounded two waies: eyther that with the sodaine noueltie of the matter, the citicens were tumultuously rayfed vp, as if that they very desirously receiued the ioyfull message of the king that was borne then: or that they being accustomed to mischeifes, and through long patience being couered with vnsefniblenesse, feared a change, least that greater calamitie shoulde rise thereof. For they were so worne and almost consumed with continuall wars, that a miserable and cruell seruitude ioyned with peace, was not onely tollerable, but was also to be wished for of them: wherby it is to be perceiued how ill they had profited vnder the whippes of God. For they were so benumbed with amafednes, that the promised redemption & saluation after a sort stanck before them. And I doubt not but that Mathew would haue their vnthankfulness noted: for that they being tired with a wearines of euils, had throwne away the hope and desire of grace promised them.

4. Gathering together the cheife Priestes. Although there was no speach at all of Christ in Herodes Court, yet as soone as the wise men haddemad mention of a King, the prophesies came into their minde, which before were forgotten: so Herod presently coniectureth, this king, for whom the wise men seeke, to bee that Messias in times past promised from the Lord.

And here againe it appeareth, that Herod was wonderfully afraid, While that hee so carefully enquireth: and no maruaile for seeing that all tyrants are fearefull, and that their owne crueltie strikes more feare into themselves, then it doth vnto others: It behoueth Herod to be afraid about all other, as one that perceiued himselfe to raigne against the Lord. Furthermore, this newe inquisition declareth how grosse the contempt of Christ was before the comming of the wise men. That the Scribes and high Priestes doe sincerely answere out of the scripture (who yet after furiously endeouored to corrupt the whole scripture, least they should giue any testimonie or credite to Christ) is therefore done because that as yet Christ had not troubled them with his Gospell: so all the wicked ones do easily subscribe to God in all generall principles: but when the truth of God doth vrge them neerer, then they vomit forth the poyson of their contumacie: of the which thing at this day we haue a notable example in the Papistes: for without controuersie they confesse that Christ is the onely begotten sonne of God, clothed with our flesh, and they acknowledge in the two natures one person of God and man. But when we come to the power & office of Christ, there presently riseth a conflict: because they will not suffer themselves to be brought into order, much lesse to be brought to nothing. In summe as farre as the wicked thinke that nothing is taken from themselves, so much reuerence they will grant to God and to the scripture. But when that Christ hand to hand striueth with ambition, couetousnes, pride, vaine hope, hypocrisie, and deceites, then forgetfull of all modestie, they are caried into madness. Therefore let vs know that wicked affections are the cheife cause of blinding the enemies of the truth, which turne light into darkenesse.

6. And thou Bethlehem. It is not to bee doubted, but that the Scribes did faithfully cite the wordes of the text in their owne tongue, as it is in the Prophet: but it was enough for Mathew to note the place: and because that hee writ in Greeke, he followed the allowed translation. For by this place and such others it is easily gathered, that the Gospell was not written by him in the Hebrew tongue. Furthermore, this is alwayes to bee obserued, as oft as the Apostles doe cite any testimonie of Scripture, although they render it not worde for worde: nay, sometime they are farre from the same: yet they are very aptly and fitly applyed of them to the matter. Wherefore let the readers alwayes marke to what purpose the Euangelistes bring the places of Scripture, let them not stand scrupulously vpon euery word, but let them be content with this one thing, that the Scripture is neuer wrested by them into a diuerse sense: but that it is properly applyed to the peculiar and proper vse. And certainly seeing it was their purpose to giue milke to drinke to infants and nouices in the fayth, which were not yet able to take sounde meate: no religion staide them that lesse diligently & exactly they should enquire what the scripture teacheth of the Sonne of God, and so that taste which the Apostles giue them, should leade them to the fountaine. Now let vs returne to the prophesie of Micheah. These are the wordes that are read in the Prophet, and thou Bethlehem Ephrathah art little to bee among the thousands of Iudah: yet out of thee shall hee come forth vnto me, that shall be the ruler in Isracc. Mathew for Ephrathah putteth Iuda, but in the same sense: for the minde of Mich-

Micheah was onely by this note, to put a difference betweene this Bethlehem, whereof he speaketh, & that other in the tribe of Zabulon. There is more difficultie in the rest of the text: for the Prophet sayth that Bethlehem is litle, that it should be accounted amongst the gouernours in Iuda. Mat. on the other side extoileth the dignitie, as that it should be one of the chiefe. This cause moued many interpreters that they reade this place of the Prophet interrogatiuely: yet some of a better iudgement thought that Matthew woulde in this change set forth the prayse of the grace of God: because that this poore & obscure towne was made a place of the birth of this great king. But although that Bethlehem excelled in this honor, yet it profited nothing the dwellers ther, so that it rather fell into a grieuouser destruction, because that the redeemer was worse thē vaworthily receiued thither. Mat. also for a rular putteth this word shepheard: yet he expresieth both two, for that he declareth that Christ should be the captaine of the people, and that the office of feeding was committed vnto him.

Matthew. 2.

7. Then Herode priuily called the wise men, and diligently enquired of them, the time of the star that appeared.

8. And sent the to Bethlehem: saying, go & search diligently for the babe, & whenge haue found him bring me word againe, that I may come and worship him.

9. So when they had heard the king, they departed, and loe, the star which they had seene in the East, went before them, till it came, and stood over the place where the babe was.

10. And when they sawe the starre, they reioyced with an exceeding great ioy.

11. And went into the house, and founde the babe with Mary his mother, and fell downe and worshipped him, and opened their treasures, and presented vnto him gifts, euen gold, and incense, and mirrh.

12. And after they were warned of God in a dream, that they should not goe againe to Herod, they returned into their countrey another way.

Marke.

Luke.

7. Herod priuily called the wise men. The tyrant durst not shew his feare & carefulness, least he should so arme the people with audacitie, with whom hee knew himselfe hated: therefore openly he dissembled the cause as though it pertained not to him. But priuily hee inquireth, that he may preuent the present perill. But although an euill conscience made him fearefull, yet it is not to be doubted but that strok his mind with an vnusual feare, that being disstitute of counsel, & distraught in mind, hee was for the time amazed. For there is no easter a matter, thē vnder the clok of humaitie to suborne a cōpanion from amongst the courtiers, which espying out his whole matter, might presētly return. certainly Herod was wōderful subtil, & ther was in him a rare magnanimity, so that it is the more to be wōdred at, his now in so extreame daunger, whē as he had a remedy at hād, that he should lie a stonished & half dead: wherfore we may know that it was wonderfull, that the sonne of God did then escape the iawes of the Lyon. And the Lord at this day doth no lesse bewitch his enemies, least they shoulde deuise a thousand sleights to hurt & to destroy his Church: nay, that they often take not the occasions which are in a readinesse. And the Lorde by another meanes, as we shal see, laughed to scorne and mocked the subtiltie, wherewith he had deceiued the wise men, feigning that he himselfe would come to worshippe him. But as Herod fearing the tumult of the people, was bereft of his minde, so againe he was so madde, that hee did neither doubt nor feare, to stirre vp God against himselfe: for he knew that if a king was borne, that he was ordained of God, that he might raise vp the decayed throne of Dauid. Therefore he sets not vpon men, but foolishly he presumes to warre with God: Both therefore is to be noted, that he was taken with a spirit of giddines, that he might strike God: yet hee delt very childishly, because his counsell was brought to nought, so that he was euen as a blinde man, which gropeth in the darke.

9. When they had heard the king, they departed. Truly this was a vile sluggishnesse of the Iewes, that none of them kept company with these strangers, that they might goe see the king promised to their nation. The Scribes shewe them the way, and assigne the place where hee is borne, yet they suffer them to goe alone, and no man stirreth foote. Peradventure they feared the crueltie of Herod: but this was also a wicked vnthankfulnesse, that they woulde incurre no daunger, for the obtayning of the saluation offered them, and that they set lesse by the grace of God, then by offending the tyrant. But I shewed a litle before, that the whole people were too much degenerate, which had rather be oppressed with a yooke of tyranny, then that by the chaung they would feele any discommoditie. And if God had not confirmed with his spirit the mindes of these wise men, they might haue fallen at this offence: yet the zeale of their endeouour is not diminished, but forward they go without a companion. But they want not matter to confirme their faith, while they nowe heare him renowned as king by diuine oracles, who was shewed vnto them by the starre. That the starre directeth them as they went on their way, euen vnto the place, it may be easily gathered, that it vanished away before: for no other cause, but that they might enquire at Ierusalem for the newe king: and that to take away excuse from the Iewes, which after they were taught of the redeemer sent vnto them, yet vtterly and willingly despised him.

11. They found the babe. So vncomly a sight might haue bred a new offence to the wisemen, when as they saw nothing in Christ that appertained to a king, so that he was viler vsed & more contemned, then any cōmon infant. But because they are perswaded that he is appointed of God to be a king, this only thought fixed in their mindes, causeth the to reuerece Christ: for in the counsell of God they do behold his dignitie, as yet hid and kept secret. And because they certainly appoint that he shall proue other wise then he yet appeared, they are no whit ashamed to giue him kingly honour. Also by their gifts they declared whence they cāe: for it is not to be doubted, but that they brought these as tokens and fruits of their cōtreay. & vnderstād that euery one of the did nor offer his gift: but these 3. things were in cōmon offred by the all, that which almost all the interpreters disput of the kingdō, priesthod & burial of christ, & make gold a tokē of his king-kingdom, incense of his priesthood, and mirrh, of his buriall, in my iudgement hath no liklihoode in it. We know that it was a solemne custome amongst the Persians to haue some gift in their hand so oft as they saluted their kinges. And these wise men chose these three things, the fruits & comodities whereof doe make the East part renoumed & famous. Euen as Iacob sent into Egypt the best & chosen frutes of the land, Gen. 43. 12 But seeing they after the maner of the Persians, worshipping him, whom they as yet thought, to be an earthly King, offered frutes of the earth: It is our part spiritually to worship him. For this is that lawfull and reasonable worshipping, which he desireth: first, that we should offer vp our selues vnto him, and then all that we haue.

Luke. 2.

Matthew Marke.

22. And when the dayes of their purification after the law of Moses were accomplished, they brought him to Ierusalem, to present him to the Lord.

23. (As it is written in the law of the Lord, every man childe that first openeth the wombe, shall bee holy vnto the Lord.)

24. And to give an oblation, as it is commanded in the law of the Lord, a paire of Turtle doves, or two young Pigeons.

25. And beholde there was a man in Ierusalem, whose name was Simeon: this man was iust, and feared God, and waited for the consolation of Israell, and the holy Ghost was vpon him.

26. And a reuelation was giuen him of the holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seene the Lord Christ.

27. And he came by the motion of the spirite into the temple. and when the parents brought in the childe Iesus, to doe for him after the custome of the law:

28. Then he tooke him in his armes, and praised God, and sayd.

29. Lord, now lettest thou thy seruant depart in peace, according to thy word:

30. For mine eyes haue seene thy saluation.

31. Which thou hast prepared before the face of all people.

32. A light to be reuealed to the Gentiles, and the glory of the people Israell.

22. And when the dayes were accomplished. The fourtie day after her deliuerance, the rite of purification ought to be solemnised: yet Mary and Ioseph came also to Ierusalem for an other cause, that they might present Christ to the Lord, because he was the first borne. Now, first we must speak of purification. Luke maketh the same comon to Mary & to Christ: for the pronoune Their can by no meanes be applied vnto Ioseph. And it is not absurd, that Christ, who for vs became accursed vpon the crosse, for our sake tooke our vncleanesse vpon him, though he was free from fault and sinne, as concerning the guiltines: that is, if the fountaine of puritie would be accounted vn-cleane, that he might wash away our vn-cleanes. They are deceiued, which thinke that this lawe was but for pollicie: as if the woman should be vn-cleane before her husband, and not before the Lorde: when rather there was set before the eyes of the Iewes, as well the corruptiō of their nature, as the remedie of God his grace. And this one lawe abundantly sufficeth to proue originall sinne, as it containeth a noble testimonie of the grace of God. And the curle of mankind cannot be more plainly shewed, then when the Lord testifieth, that the infant cometh vn-pure & polluted out of his mothers wombe, in somuch as the mother her selfe is defiled by the birth. Certainly except man were borne a sinner, & were by nature the child of wrath, & that there rested in him some spot of sinne, he should not neede a purgation: wherefore it followeth that all were corrupt in Adam, seeing that they are by the mouth of the Lord condemned of vn-cleanes. And that is not against it. Ro. 11. 10. That the Iewes are called holy branches of a holy roote, because this good came vnto them not of themselves, but as by other meanes. For although that by priuiledge of adoption they were leuered for a chosen people, yet corruption from Adam was their first inheritance by order. Therefore it is conuenient to distinguish betwene the first nature and the peculiar benefite of the cōuenant, wherein God freeeth his from the curle. And to this purpose belonged the purification in the lawe, that the Iewes might know: that by the grace of GOD they are cleansed from those filths, which by their birth they brought with them into the world. Hereby is also to be learned how horrible the infection of sinne is, which in some parte defileth the lawfull order of nature. Verily I grant, that neyther matrimonie in it selfe, nor bearing of children are vn-cleane: nay, I grant that the fault of lust is covered with the holines of matrimonie: but yet the ouerflowing of sinne is so deepe and plentifull, that alwaies some sins flow out from thence, which sprinkle with blots, whatsoeuer is otherwise pure.

23. As it is written in the law. This was an other parte of godlines which Ioseph and Mary performed: The Lord commanded, Num. 3. 13. that all the males should be offered to him in remembrance of their deliuerance, because when the Angell slew all the first borne of Egypt, he had spared the first borne of Israell: after it was lawfull for euery man to redeeme his first borne for a certaine price. That was an old ceremonie.

Now sith the Lord is a common redeemer of all, by right he challengeth vs to him from the least to the greatest. Surely it is not in vaine that Luke doeth oft repeat, that Ioseph and Mary did that which was prescribed in the law of the Lord. For by these words we are taught, that nothing is to be attempted after our own wit in the worship of God, but that must be obediently followed, which he hath by his word commanded.

24. And to giue an oblation. This sacrifice belonged to the rite of purifying, least any shoulde thinke that it was offered for the redeeming of the first borne. When the Euangelist nameth a paire of turtle doues, or two pigeons, hee taketh it for granted, that the poertie of Ioseph and Mary was such, that their abilitie reached not to the offering of a Lambe. For this exception is playnely set downe, Leuit. 12. 6. If any object that there was golde offered a little before by the wisemen , wherewith they might haue bought it : I answer, wee cannot imagine that there was such plentie of golde, as could sodainly make a poore man rich. For we reade not that they had Camels laden with golde : but it is more credible, that it was some small portion, which they brought onely for honours sake. Neyther did the lawe precisely commaund that the poore should consume their substance vpon a sacrifice : but making a difference betweene them and the rich, it eased them of charge. Wherefore it shall bee nothing hurtfull, if wee say that Ioseph and Mary gaue as much as their abilitie did beare, although that they had layde vp some money, to beare the charges of the iourney and of their life.

25. Behold, there was a man in Ierusalem. This history is set downe, that wee might know, that when almost all the people had prophaned themselues with a wicked contempt of God, yet there remained a few worshippers of God, and Christ was known of them from his first infancie. These were those remnantes which (as Paul to the Ro. 11. 5. teacheth) were reserved, according to the free election of God. And in this small handfull was the Church of God included, although the priestes & Scribes did no lesse proudly then falsely boast of the title of the church. The Euangelist only maketh mentiō of two, which knew Christ at Ierusalem, whē he was brought into the temple, Simeon & Anna. And first I must speake of Simeon. We read not of what citate he was, & it may be, that he was some meane man, and vnknowne : But Luke commendeth him for godlinesse and righteousnesse, to the which hee addeth the gift of Prophecie, Godlinesse and righteousnesse are referred to the two Tables of the lawe, and so in these two poyntes consisteth the integritie of life. It was a testimony of godlinesse that he looked for the comfort of Israell : for without the hope of saluation God is not rightly worshipped, which dependeth partly in beleeuing his promises, then especially by the restauration promised by Christ. But now seeing this wayting or looking for is prayed in Simeon, as a rare vertue, hereof gather, that there were then but few, which truly nourished the hope of redemption in their heartes. All men had in their mouthes the Mesiās, and the blessed state vnder the kingdome of Dauid : but in the meane while almost no man did patiently beare the present miseries, staying vpō this comfort, that the redemption of the Church was at hand. And as the godlines of Simeon in this did shew it selfe, that he list vp his mind in wayting for the promised saluation, so at this day, as many as will proue theselucs the sons of God, will sigh with continuall desires for the promise d redemptiō. For sufferance is very needfull euen to the last cōming of Christ. The holy Ghost was vpō him. He speaketh not of the spirit of adoption, which is cōmon to all the children of God, though not in equall maner: but he speaketh of a more peculiar gift of prophecie, which doth more plainly appeare in the next verse, & by that which followeth, where it is sayd, that he receiued answer by the holy Ghost, & that the s̄ae spirit guiding him, he came into the temple. Therefore although that Simeon exceeded not in any publike honor, yet he was adorned with many notable gifts: as godlines, innocencie of life, sayth & prophecie. And it is not to be doubted, but that he alone did priuately receiue this oracle, that it might passe from him as a common confirmation to all the godly. Iesus is called the Christe of GOD: because that he was annoynted of the Father, and together with the holy Ghoste he tooke the honour of the kingdome & of the priesthood. Simeon is saide to haue come into the temple by the spirit: that is, by secret instinct and certaine reuelation that he should meeete Christe.

29. Now lettest thou thy seruant departe. By this songe it appeareth that Simeon beheld the sonne of God with other eyes, then with the eyes of the flesh: for the outward beholding of Christ coulede bring nothing but a contempt, at the least it could not so haue satisfied the minde of the holy man, that so glad as enioying the sume of all his desires, he should make halte to die. Therefore the spirit of God lightned his eyes with fayth, that he might discern the glory of the sonne of God in that vile & contemned habite. Whē he saith that he would depart in peace, he vnderstandeth that he would die with a quiet minde, as hee that was filled, & had obtained his desires. But it is demanded if he should haue died before, should Simeon haue bin drawne to it with trouble and tumult, as they vse that are vnwilling? I answer, the circumstance which is added, is to be noted, according to thy word. For seeing God hath promised him the sight of his Son, it was fit he should stay in suspence: nay, it behooued him to liue carefully, vntill that he was made partaker of his hope. This is therefore to be obserued, because that many falsly & naughtely doe pretend the example of Simeon, boasting that they would willingly die, if it were granted them to enioy this or that matter, when as yet they take liberty to themselves to conceaue vowes according to their owne lusts or to forge vaine hopes without the word of God. If Simeon had said precisely now with a staied & a quiet minde I will die, because I haue seene the sonne of God, in this speach he had bewrayed the weakness of his fayth: but because he had the word for it, it was lawfull for him, according to the rule of fayth, to flee death vntill the coming of Christ.

30. Because mine eyes haue scene. Although this maner of speaking is often scene in the scriptures, yet the corporal beholding of Christ seemeth expressly to be noted in these wordes: as if Simeon shoulde say, that hee nowe had the sonne of God present in the flesh, vpon whome hee had bent the eyes of his mind before. I take saluation for the matter of saluation, because that all the parts of saluation and of a blessed life are laid vp in Christ. Now if the onely sight of Christ, being as yet but an infant, did so much preuaile with Simeon, that ioyfully & quietly he would go to death: how much more aboundat matter of saluation is there giuen to vs this day, who may see all the pointes of our saluation fulfilled in Christ. Christ is not conuersant vpon the earth, neither doe we beare him in our armes, but his diuine maiesty doth clearly & openly shine in the Gospel, & therein he sheweth himselfe to be scene of vs, as it were face to face, as Paule saith, 2. Cor. 3. 18. neither sheweth he himselfe any more in weakness of flesh, but in the wonderfull power of the spirit, the which he declareth in myracles, in the sacrifice of his death, and in the resurrection. In summe, he is so absent from vs in body, that yet wee may beholde him sitting at the right hand of his father. If such a beholding of him bring vs not peace, that we may go ioyfully to death, wee are more then vnthankfull to God, and wee carelessly account of the glory, which he hath bestowed on vs.

31. Which thou hast prepared. By these wordes Simeon signifieth that Christe was ordained of God, that all people might enioy his grace, and that shortly after hee should be placed vp on high, that hee might turne the eyes of all men vnto him. And in this worde he comprehendeth what Prophecies foeuer there bee of the encreate of the kingdom of Christe. But if Simeon embracing the tender infant in his armes could yet extend his mind to the vtter borders of the world, that hee acknowledged his present power euery where:

 how much more doth it become vs at this day to thinke more royally of him, sith that he is list as a banner to the Gentiles, and hath made himselfe knowne to the whole worlde.

32. A light to lighten. Now Simeon sheweth to what end Christ was brought forth from the father before all people, that is, that he might lighten the Gentiles, which before were in darknesse, and that he might be the glory of the people Israell, for betweene this and them hee maketh a difference, and that not without a cause, because that the children of Abraham by right of adoption were neare vnto God, but the Gentiles with whom God hadde made no couenant, were accounted as strangers frō the church. By the which reason, Israel, Ier. 31.9. is not onely called the childe of God, but also the first borne, & Paule teacheth to the Ro. 15.8. that Christ came that he might be a minister of circumcision, according to the promises giuen vnto the fathers. But Israell is fo-preferred to the Gentiles, that all they in common might obtaine saluation in Christ. A light to lighten, signifieth as much as if it had bene sayde, to giue light to the Gentiles, whereby we gather that men are naturally without light, vntill that Christ the sunne of righteousnesse shine vnto them. As concerning Israell, although they were endued with great honour from God, yet Simeon sheweth that all this glory dependeth of this one head, that the redeemer was promised them.

Luke 2.

Matthew. Marke.

33. And Ioseph and his mother mannailed at those things, which were spoken touching him.

34. And Simeon blessed them, & said vnto Mary his mother: behold, this childe is appointed for the fall and rising againe of many in Israell, & for a signe which shall bee spoken against.

35. Yea, and a sword shall pierce through thy soule, that the thoughtes of many hearts may be opened.

36. And there was a Prophetesse, one Anna the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Aser, which was of a greate age, and had liued with an husband 7. yeares from her virginitie.

37. And shee was widowe foure score and foure yeares, and went not out of the temple, but serued God with fastings and prayers, night and day.

38. She then comming at the same instante vppon them, confessed likewise the Lord, and spake of him to all that looked for redemption in Ierusalem.

39. And when they had performed all thinges according to the law of the Lord, they returned into Galilee, to their owne citty Nazareth.

33. And Ioseph & his mother. Luke doth not say that they were amazed as at a new or a strange matter, but that they reuerently considered, & with due estimation embraced this prophesie of the holy Ghost, out of the mouth of Simeon, that they might more & more profit in the knowledge of Christ. And we are taught by this example, after we are once instructed in a right faith, to gather what small helps focuer may seeme to auaille for the conformation of the same: for he hath then rightly profitted in the word of God, who ceaseth not to esteeme whatsoeuer he daily readeth or heareth, for the continuall furtherance of fayth.

34. And Simeon blessed them. If thou referrest this to Ioseph & Mary, there is no difficultie in the matter, but because Luke seemeth to comprehend with the Christ, it may be demanded by what right Simeon tooke vpon him this office of blessing, for the lesse is blessed of the greater, as the Apostle teacheth. Heb. 7. 7. Furthermore, it seemeth to be absurde, that any mortall man should conceiue prayers for the sonn of God, I answer that the Apostle doth not speake of euery blessing, but of the priestes only, for men otherwise do blesse one another. And it is more probable that Simeon as a priuate man, and as one of the common sort of the people blessed them, rather then as a publike person: for as it is saide before, he was neuer called a priest. But there is no absurditie if we say that he prayed for the happie successe of the kingdome of Christe, because the spirit in the Psalme, commaundeth this maner of blessing to all the godly. Behold this childe is appointed. Simeon properly directeth this speech to Mary, yet it generally belongeth to all the godly. The holy Virgine had neede of this admonition, least that she triumphing at these pleasant beginniges, as it commonly commeth to passe, shoulde bee the lesse able to beare the sorrowes that were to come. And also, least shee shoulde hope that Christe shoulde bee receiued with the generall fauour of all the people, but rather that shee might bee armed with inuincible strength of the minde against all contrary blastes. But yet the spirit of God woulde deliuer a generall doctrine to all the godly that they beholding the worlde with wicked contumacie resisting Christe, shoulde not bee shaken nor broken with such harde dealing. Wee knowe howe grieuous and sore a hinderance the vnbeliefe of the worlde is vnto vs, but it behooueth vs to ouercome it, if wee will belecue in Christe Iesu: for the estate of menne was neuer brought to so good passe, that the greater parte shoulde follow Christe. Wherefore it is necessary that whoeouer shoulde giue their names to Christe shoulde bee instructed in these principles, and armed with these defences, that they may continue in his fayth. But this was a most grieuous temptation, that Christe was not knowne of his owne. Nay he was contumeliously reiected from that people, which boasted themselues to be the Church of God. And especially for that the Priestes and the Scribes which hadde the gouernement of the Church, were his most deadly enemies. for who woulde thinke that hee was their king, that should see him to vnworthily & reprochfully reiected from them? Therefore Simeon doth not without cause foretell that Christ was appointed for the fall of many, and those of the people of Israell. And the meaning is, that hee was ordayned of God, that hee shoulde ouerthrow and cast many downe headlonge. But it is to bee noted that the fall rose hereof, that the vnbelieuers leeuers stumbled at him, the which is shortly after declared, where Simeon calleth him a signe to be spoken against. Therefore because the vnbeleeuers are rebels vnto Christ, they strike themselues against him, whereoffolloweth their fall. And it is a Metaphore fetched from a marke or butte, at the which archers doe shoote, as if that Simeon should haue sayd: Heereby is the malice of men perceued, nay the wickednesse of all mans witte, that all men had made a conspiracie, and should stirre and crie out against the sonne of God. For there could not bee such a consent of the worlde to speake against the Gospel, except it were as a naturall discord betweene the Sonne of GOD and those men. And though the enemies of the Gospell disagree amongst themselues, so as their ambition and furie carrieth them into diuers factions: and factiously are deuided into diuerse fantasies, as the varietie of their superstitious which seperateth the Idolaters is manifolde, Yet in this they all agree, that they may withstand the Sonne of God. Wherefore it is truly sayde, that it is too euident a token of the wickednes of man, for that euer it withstandeth Christ. And though it be an incredible wonder, that the worlde so riseth against his creator: yet because the Scripture foretolde that it should so be, and reason openly sheweth, that when men were once estranged from God through sinne, they alwaies flee from him, there is no cause why such examples should disturbe vs, but rather that our faith being furnished with such armes, should buckle it selfe forwards to fight with the resisting of the worlde. Furthermore, because that God had then gathered Israell to himselfe out of the whole world, & now that there is no more difference betweene the Iew and the Grecian: It was conuenient that that should now come to passe, which wee read should then bee done.

Efayas had sayd in his time, chap. 8. 14. Behold, the Lord shall bee as a stumbling stone, and as a rocke to fall vpon, to the two houses of Israell: from that time the Iewes neuer almost ceased to strike against God, but their most violent conflict was against Christ. Now, they which call themselues Christians, do imitate the same furie. Nay, they which proudly arrogate to themselues the supremacie of the Church, doe often bend that power they haue, to oppresse Christ. But let vs remember that they shall nothing preuaile, but that at the length they shall be broken and torne in peeces. For vnder the word of Falling downe, the spirite doth so pronounce a punishment vpon the vnbeleeuers, that wee might learne to goe farre from them, least companie shoulde wrappe vs in the same destruction. And Christ is not therefore any lesse to be beloued, for that hee riseth, many fall downe: for the fauour of the Gospell ceaseth not to bee pleasant and acceptable to God, although it be deadly to the wicked worlde.

If any man demaund how Christ can bee an occasion of falling to the vnbeleeuers which now are destroyed without him: The answere is easie: they perish twice that willfully deprive themselues of that saluation offered them from God.

Therefore the fall signifieth a double punishment which remayneth for all beleeuers, after that wittingly and willingly they haue striuen with God.

And rising againe. To the former clause this comfort is opposed, that it might mitigate the matter odious to our sense: for this is sorrowfull to be heard if nothing else were added, but that Christ should bee a stone of offence, which through his hardnesse should breake and rend in peice: a great number of men. Therefore the Scripture calleth vs backe to his other office, that the saluation of men hath the foundation in him, as Esayas 8. 13. also speaketh: Sanctifie the Lord of hostes, let him be your feare, and he shall bee vnto you as a Sanctuary, or a defended tower. And Peter speaketh more plainly: to whom yee come as vnto a liuing stone disallowed of men, but chosen of God and precious: and yee as liuely stones are built, 1. Pet. 2. 4. for so it is contayned in the Scripture: Behold I put in Sion a cheife corner stone, proued, elect, & precious, and hee that beleueth therein shall not be ashamed, vnto you therefore which beleue it is precious, but to them which beleue not, the stone which the builders disallowed. &c. Therefore least this title wherein Christ is called the stone of offence, should make vs afraid of Christ, he presently on the contrary side affirmeth, that hee is also called the corner stone, whereby the faith of a'l the godly is sustained: nay, hee would put vs in mind: that that is but accidentall, and that this is naturall and proper. Furthermore, it is worthy to be noted, that Christ is not called the stay or proppe of the godly, but the rising, for the estate of men is not such, as it were expedient for the to remaine in the same: therefore it behoueth them first to rise from death, before they can begin to liue.

35. Through thy soule. This admonition auayled to the confirming of the minde of the holy virgin, least shee should bee throwne downe with sorrow, when the time for those bitter conflictes were come which shee shoulde passe through. But although her faith was shaken and troubled with diuers temptations, yet the most bitter strife she had, was with the crosse, whereby Christ seemed as one vtterly extinguished. And although she was neuer swallowed vp of sorrow, yet her breast was not so stonie, but that it was greiuously wounded, for the constancie of the Saints doeth much differ from vnseñsiblenes. That the thoughts of many hearts may be opened. Some ioyne this sentence with that clause which goeth somewhat before, that Christ was appoynted for the fall. &c. and they include in a parenthesis, that which we last expounded of the sword, but in my iudgemēt it were better to refer it to the whole sentence. And that word That, is not here properly a causall, but only noteth a clause following: for whē the light of the Gospell shineth, & then persecutions arise, withall are the afflictions of the heart opened which before were hid: for such are the cloakes of mans dissimulatiō, that without Christ they are easily hid. But Christ through his light wipeth away all their fained excuses, and layeth their hypocrisie naked. Therefore this office of right is attributed vnto him, that he laieth open the secrets of the heart: but where the crosse followeth the doctrine, he searcheth the hearts more to the quicke. For they which in outward professiō do embrace Christ, they abhorre from suffering the crosse, & because they see the Church subiect to diuerse troubles, they easily forsake their standing.

36. There was a Prophetesse one Anna. Luke onely maketh mention of two, by whome Christ was receiued, and that for this purpose, that we might learne learne to preferre that which is of God, before all the world, though it bee but small. The Scribes and the priestes had then great renowne. But seeing that the spirit of God remained vpon Simeon & Anna, wherof the priestes were vterly disstitute, these two onely deserue more reuerence, then the whole company of them, which are onely lift vp in pridewith vaine titles : for this caute is the age of Anna expressed, and she adoined with the title of a Prophetesse. Thirdly, there is noted a notable testimony of her godly holines of life. For these are the things which by right get authority and estimation. And truly the disguised renowne and vaine pompe deceiureth none other, but them which for the vanitie of their witte, are addicted to fantastickall deceites. It is said that shee liued 7. yeeres with her husband from her virginitie, that wee might know that she was a widow euen in the flower of her age: for being a yong maide she was married, and shortly after she lost her husband. And by this circumstance, that shee abstained from a second marriage, hauing as yet a lusty body, encrease th the praise of her chastitie : yet that which followeth may be expounded two wayes, that she was a widow almost offoure score and foure years : that is, that there was so much time passed in her widowhood, or that she had liued so long. If thou accountest fourescore & foure from her widowhood, it must follow that she was aboute a hundred yeare olde, but I leaue this indifferent. And that the spirit of prophesie did as yet shine in some fewe, the doctrine of law and the Iewish religion was as it were by these signes approoued, vntill Christ should come : for that it was necessary in such a vaste wastnesse of religion, that the elect of God, should be stayed with these helpes, lest they shoulde fall away.

37. Shee went not out of the Temple It is an hyperbolickall kinde of speech, yet the sense of it is plaine, that Anna was almoste continually in the Temple. Luke addeth that shee worshipped GOD with fastinges and continuall prayers, wherof wee gather that shee frequented not the temple, as if with this bare going thither shee woulde discharge her dutie, but also that shee vsed other exercises of godlinesse. But it is worthy to bee noted, that one and the same rule is not here prescribed to all: neither ought these thinges bee drawne into a generall example, which are heere praysed in this widowe woman, for it behooueth vs wisely to discern what appertayneth to euery mannes calling : for foolish emulation hath filled the worlde with Apes, while superstitious men doe more greedily then witley snatch vnto themselues, whatsoener they heare praysed in the Saintes, as though that as there are distincte degrees of orders, so there were not also a choyce to bee hadde of woorkes, that euery one might answer to his feuerall calling. That which is heere spoken of Anna, Paule doth especially restraine to widowes, therefore maryed folkes shall do very preposterously, if they should frame their life after an vnlike example: yet there remaineth adoubt, that Luke seemeth to establish part of the worship of God in fastinges. But it is to bee noted, that of those woorkes which belong to the worshipp of God, some are required simply, and (as they saye) are necessary of themselues, and there are others which are to bee referred to this ende, that they might serue those former. Prayers doe properly appertaine to the worshipp of God: and fasting is an inferiour ayde, which is no otherwise approoued of God, but as it helpeth peth the endeuour and zeale of praying : for the rule is to be holden, that the offices of men are to be esteemed by the right and lawfull end. The distinction also is to be holden, that God is directly worshipped with prayers and not with fastings, but in consideration of that which followeth. And it is not to be doubted but this holy woman vied her fastings, to lament for the calamitie of the Church that then was.

39. Confessed likewise. Luke comended the holy melodie, which resounded in the tongues of Simeon & Anna, that the faithfull might mutually exhort themselves with one mouth to sing the prayes of God, & that some should likewise answer others. When hee saith that Anna spake vnto all that looked for the redemption, he againe noteth the small number of the godly: for the chiefe head or foundation of fayth was put in this expectatiō, & it appeareth that there were but fewe which nourished the same in their mindes.

39. They returned into Galile. I doe easily graunt that the iourney into Egypt was betweene these. And that which Luke sayth that they dwelt in their owne city Nazareth, was in order of time after the flight into Egypt, which Matthew reporteth. Furthermore, if it be not absurde to haue that omitted by one Euangelist, which is declared by an other, there is also no let, but that wee may say that Luke cutting off that time, whereof he had appointed to make no mention, passed ouer to the history following: but yet I assent not to their comment which saigne that Ioseph & Mary after they had performed the sacrifice of purgation, returned to Bethlechem, that they might dwell there. For they foolishly imagine that Ioseph had a dwelling place there, where hee was so vnknown, that he could not finde a place to remaine in as a guest. Neyther doeth Luke vnaduisedly call Nazareth as wel his city as Maryes, wherby we gather that hee neuer dwelt in Bethlechem, although hee sprang or rise from thence. But of the order of times I will presently speake more fully.

Matthew 2.

13. After their departure, beholde the Angell of the Lorde appeared to Ioseph in a dreame, saying: Arise, and take the babe and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and bee there till I bring thee worde, for Herode will seeke the babe to destroy him.

14. So hee arose and tooke the babe and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt.

15. And was there vnto the death of Herode, that it might bee fulfilled, which was spoken of the Lorde by the Prophet, saying: out of Egypt haue I called my sonne.

16. Then Herode seeing that hee was mocked of the wise men, was exceeding wroth and sent forth and slew all the male children that were in Bethlechem, and in all the coastes thereof, from two yeares olde and vnder, according to the time which he had diligently searched out of the wise men.

17. Then was that fulfilled which was spoken
by

Marke.

Luke.

by the Prophet Ieremias, saying.

18. In Rama was a voyce heard, mourning and weeping, and great lamentation, Rachell weeping for her children and would not be comforted, because they were not.

13. After their departure. How many dayes there were betweene the departure of the wife men, and vntill the time that Ioseph was commaunded to flee into Egypt it is vnknown, neyther is it any great matter: but that it is probable that the Lord spared Marie vntill shee were strong out of her childebed, that shee might be able to take her iourney. And this was the wonderful counsell of God, that hee would preferue his Sonne by flight: and it is not to be doubted but that the minde of Ioseph was shaken with dangerous temptations when as there was no hope shewed him but onely by flight: for in flight there was no token of the help of God, then it was very vnlikely that he which should be the sauiour of all men could not be preferued but by the ayd of a mortal mā. But the Lord held this moderation in preferuing his sonne, that he might shew some signes of his heauenly power, and yet he shewed not the same so euidently, but that it should lie hid vnder a forme of infirmitie: for as yet the time was not come that Christ should be openly glorified. It is an euident shewe of the Deitie, in that the Angell foretelleth a matter hid and vnknowne to men: and it appertaineth to the infirmitie of the flesh, whereunto Christ was become subiect, in that he commaundeth to defend the life of the childe by flight and banishment, but heereby we are taught that God doth not alwayes preferue his children by one meane, but now he sheweth his power gloriously, and now againe he sheweth some little sparkes of the same from vnder obscure covering or shadowes. Now this wonderfull maner of preferuing the Sonne of GOD vnder the crosse, doth teach that wee doe wickedly, which doe describe a certaine way to God. Therefore let vs suffer our saluation to be furthered of him by diuers meanes, neyther let vs refuse to be humbled, that thereby hee may the better shew forth his glory. But especially wee must not flee the crosse, wherewith he exercised his sonne euen from his first infancie. Furthermore this flight is a part of the foolishnesse of the crosse, but which excelleth all the wisdome of the worlde. That the sauiour of Iudea might come foorth in his time, he is enforced to flee out of the same, and Egypt nourisheth him, from whence neuer any thing came before, but that which was deadly to the church of God.

Who is not amazed at this so sodaine a worke of God? Againe hereof gather the certaintie of the dreame, in that Ioseph presently obeierth the commaundement of the Angell, for his readinesse to obey, doth plainly shew that he doubted not, but that he had God for the authour of his flight which hee was about to take. Yet this may seeme to rise vpon distrust, because that hee hasteth so speedily, for this fleeing also in the night cannot be without feare: but the excuse is easie. He saw that the meanes which God had ordained for their preservation, was very meane and base, therefore hee gathereth that it is lawfull for him fearefully to flee in the night, as vs is in extreame daungers, so it behooueth vs alwayes to moderate our feare at the warninges of God, to the which if the Lord consent, it shall not be against our faith Bee there till I bring thee worde. By these wordes the Angell declareth that God hath care of the life of the child, yea euen for the time that is to come, and Ioseph had need of this confirmation, that he might be certainly perswaded that GOD would not onely be a guide to him in this journey, but also that he would bee a continuall keeper of him in banishment. And by this meanes the Lord would stay many cares which might trouble the minde of the godly man, that hee might remaine quiet in Egypt: for otherwise no moment of time should haue passed without diuers torments, when as he should discern and see himselfe deprived not onely of the inheritance promised of God to all the Saints, but of the temple, the sacrifice, the publike profession of the faith, & should remaine amongst the most wicked enemies of God, and in a deepe whirlpoole of superstitions. He carried with him in the person of the infant, what good things soeuer the fathers hoped for, or that the Lord had promised them: but because he had not as yet profited so much in the faith and knowledge of Christ, he had neede to be ypholden wth this commaundement: Bee there vntill I bring thee worde, least that it should be troublesome to him to languish amongst the Egyptians, banished out of his country.

15. Out of Egypt haue I called my sonne. Because that Mathew sayth that the prophesie was fulfilled, many haue thought that the Prophet meant nothing but that which is expressed, and they imagined this sense to themselues, that the Jewes doe foolishly, while they resist and endeuour to oppresse the Sonne of God, because the father will call him out of Egypt. And in this maner do they wickedly wrest the wordes of the Prophet, whose purpose is to make the Jewes guiltie of vnthankfulness, which from their first infancie and beginning haue founde God a louing and a bountifull father, yet they forthwith prouoke him with newe sinnes. Therefore let this be out of controuersie, that this place ought not to bee restrayned to Christ: neyther yet is it wrested by Mathewe, but aptly applied to the present purpose. Thus ought the words of the Prophet be vnderstoode, when Israell was but a childe I brought him out of that miserable captiuitie wherein hee was drowned. First hee was like to one dead, and Egypt was to him in stead of a graue, and I brought him from thence, as one brought out of the graue, & did bring him into the light of life. And the Lord sayth so for good cause, for that deliuerance was a certayne birth of the people, for then were the tables of adoption made openly, when as by the lawe proclaimed, hee was receiued into the charge of GOD, a priestly kingdome, and a holy nation, when as hee was seperate from all other people: to be short when as the Lorde erected a tabernacle to himselfe, that he might dwell in the midst of him. So that then the wordes of the Prophet are of this force, as if he should haue sayd, the people were pulled out of Egypt no otherwise, then as out of the deepe swallow of death. Nowe the redemption brought by Christ, what was it else then a resurrection from death, and the beginning of a newe life: for then was the light of saluation almost extinguished, when as God in the person of Christ, begate againe the Church vnto himselfe. Then in her head came the Church out of Egypte, euen as the

the whole body was brought from thence before. And this Analogie causeth that it seemeth not absurd, that Christ should passe some time of his childhoode in Egypt. But rather so much more glorious was the grace and power of God, and his wonderfull countell did so much more shine forth, because that light came out of darkenesse, and life from out of the hilles: for otherwise the reason of flesh might be amazed, namely that the redeemer should come out of Egypt. Mathew therefore declareth that it is no newe or strange thing, that God should call his sonne from thence. And this rather auayleth for the confirmation of our faith, that as in times past, so now againe the Church of GOD should come out of Egypt. In this was the diuersitie, that in times past the whole people were shut vp in the pryson of Egypt: but in the second redemption, only the head of the Church lay hid there, but caried included in him the saluation and life of all men.

16. Then Herod seeing. Mathew speaketh of the iudgement and opinion of Herod, who thought himselfe deceiued by the wisemen, because they would not be the ministers of his crueltie. He rather, was taken in his owne subtiltie, who vnfaithfully had sained, that he also was minded to worship the newe king. Butther is no mention made of this historie in Iosephus. Only Macrobius in his second booke Saturnaliorum, reporting the iestes and mery sporting sayings of Augustus, sayth when he heard that at the commandement of Herod, the children in Syria vnder two yeare old were slaine, and in that sturre his owne Son was also slaine: I had rather (sayd he) be Herods hogge then his Son. But let the authoritie of one Mathew aboundantly satisfie vs. This offence so famous ought not to haue bene omitted of Iosephus. Yet it is no maruell that he saith nothing of the infants, who very lightly and obscurely toucheth as detestable an example of crueltie, that almost at the same time he slew all the iudges, which they called Sanhedrim, least there might remaine any remnant at all of the stock of Dauid. And I doubt not, but that by the same feare he was driuen to both thesemurthers. Yet there is a questiō moued of the time: for when Mathew saith that they were slain which were two yere old & yonger, according to the time hee had searched out of the wise men: whereof it may be gathered that Christ was about that age, or at the least that he was not farre from the poynt of two yeare olde. Some drawe this further then so, affirming that Christ was almost at that age at that time that the wisemen came: but I denie that the one of these may be gathered by the other. How fearefull Herod then was, when the rumour was spread among the common people of the newe borne king wee haue seene a little before, and seeing that feare then stayed him that hee durst not sende some priuie traitour to search out the cause, there is no cause why we should maruell that hee was for a time restrained from so odious and so cruell a slaughter: especially sith the late report of the comming of the wisemen was as yet fresh & new. And certainly the coniecture is probable, that he deferred the execution of that villanous offence which he had in his minde, vntill he saw occasion, & it may be that the iudges were first slaine of him, that the people being without their captaines, he might without controlment compell them to beare any thing. Whereby it may be gathered that they vse a frivulous argument, which say that Christ was two yeare olde when hee was worshipped shipped of the wise men, because that according to the time wherein the starre appeared, Herod slew the children of two yeare olde and somewhat vnder, & foolishly they take it as granted, that the starre appeared not vntill the Virgin was deliuered. But it is much more likely to bee true, that they were warned before, and that they tooke their iourney about the natiuitie of Christ, that they might finde and see the infant new borne in his swathing bands, or in his mothers lappe. And that about the rest is a childish deuce, that they came out of some vnknowne country, and as it were out of an other worlde, so that they had almost spent 2. yeares in their iourne. Furthermore, those thinges which Olander bringeth, are rather to bee laughed at, then neede any confutation. But in this text of the historic which I propose, there is no inconuenience, that the wise men came before the time of her childebed was passed ouer, and they sought a king which was borne, and not one which was nowe two yeare olde, and that Ioseph ( they being returned into their country ) fled away by night, but yet in passage of his iourney he executed at Ierusalem that duty of religion which by the law of the Lord was prescribed. ( And could he in so populous a city, wherunto there was a continual concourse of people out of al places, be safe from danger ) ? that when he was gone into Egypt, Herod carefully considered of his danger, and at the length the boyle of his crueltie brake, which hee had nourished within him aboute 2 yeare and a halfe : for that aduerbe Then, doeth not alwayes signifie a continuance of time in the scripture, but is often vsed where there is a long distance of things.

18. In Rama was a voyce. It is certaine that the Prophet describeth the destruction of the tribe of Benjamin, which came to passe in his time, for hee had foretold the cutting off of the tribe of Iuda, whereunto the halfe tribe of Benjamin was annexed. He ascribeth the mourning to Rachel which was dead, by the figure profopopeia, which auaieth much to the mouing of affections. But Ieremias bringeth not in these Rethoricall colours, only for the setting forth of his oration, but because the hardnes and sluggishnes of the liuing could not otherwise be corrected, then by calling the dead after a sort out of their graues to lament for the vengeance of God, which they that liue, vse for the most part to haue in derision. And sith that prophesie of the prophet was fulfilled at that time : Mathew doth not vnderstand it, as if it were there foretolde what Herod should do: But that at the comming of Christ that lamentation should be renewed, which the Beniamites had vsed many yeres before, and so he would meete with an offence, which might trouble and shake the mindes of the godly: namely. that no saluation was to be hoped for from him, for whose sake these infants were slaine as soone as he was borne. Nay, this seemed to be an vntowarde and unhappie prophesie, that the birth of Christ shoulde kindle a greater flame of crueltie, then was wont to burne in most seuerer warres with enemies. And as the prophet promiseth a restoring, were a nation was cut vp euen from the very infantes : so Matthew declareth, that that destruction shall not hinder, but that Christ shall shortly after appeare as a redeemer of all the people : for wee knowe that all that chapter is filled with most sweete consolations. And after that funerall complaint, there presently followeth, refrayne thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from teares, for thy worke shall be rewarded, and there is hope in thine ende. Therefore this similitude is there of that former destruction executed vpon the tribe of Benjamin with this second, that both of them was a signe of saluation that shoulde be restored.

Matthew. 2.

19. And when Herode was dead: beholde, an Angell of the Lorde appeareth in a dreame to Ioseph in Egypt.

20. Saying, arise, and take the babe and his mother, and goe into the lande of Israell: for they are dead which sought the babes life.

21. Then hee arose vp, and tooke the babe and his mother, and came into the land of Israel.

22. But when he heard that Archelaus did raigne in Iudea, in stead of his father Herode, hee was afraid to go thither: yet after hee was warned of God in a dreame, he turned aside into the parts of Galile.

23. And went and dwelt in a citty called Nazareth, that it might be fulfilled which was spokē by the Prophets, which was, that hee should be called a Nazarite.

Marke,

Luke.

19. When Herod was dead. In these words is the cōstancy of the faith of Ioseph shewed, in that he remained in Egypt, vntil he was againe by the cōmandement of God called backe into his coūtre: whereby we see that the Lord neuer forsaketh his, but that he helpeth thē in time cōuenient. But it is probable that Ioseph presently after the death of Herod returned out of Egypt, before that Aug. Cæsar by his decree had apointed Archelaus ruler of Iudea: for by his fathers wil he was apointed to succeed in the kingdō, yet he abstained frō the name of a king, being admonished that this depended vpon the wil & apointment of Cæsar yet he gouerned al things, thē he went to Rome & got the same cōfirmed: only the name of a king was denyed him, vntil by deeds he should deseruethe same. But Philip was gouernour of Galile, a man of a soft wit & almost like a private man. Therefore Ioseph by the aduise of the angel, went into his country, because that there was lesse danger vnder a prince not giuē to blood, which louingly nourished his subiects. Also the purpose of God is alwayes to be had in memory, in that he kept his son alwayes frō the beginning vnder the exercises of the crosse, because that this was the way wherby he should redeem the church: & for that cause tooke he vpon him our infirmities, & was subiect to dangers, and endangered with feares, that by his diuine power he deliuering the Church from thē, he might giue it euerlasting peace: Wherefore his danger was our safctie, & his feare our assurance, not that he then could bee afraid by reason of his age, but because that through the feare of Ioseph and Mary hee was carried hither and thither, it might be worthily sayde, that our feares were layed vpon him, that he might obtaine a peaceable assurance for vs.

23. That hee shoulde bee called a Nazarite. Matthewe doeth not deriue a Nazarite of Nazareth, as if that this were the proper and certaine Etimologic, but it is onely an allusion. Bus nazir signifieth one holy and consecrate to God, of Nazar, which is to separate, & the Hebrewes call Nazar a flower: But it is not to be doubted but that Matthew considered the former sense: For we neuer read that the Nazarites were called flourishing: but such as were consecrat to the Lord, according to the prescription of the law, which is in the booke of Numbers, chap. 6.4. Therefore this is the meaning. Although that Ioseph was driuen by feare into a corner of Galile: yet God had a further purpose in his counsell, and thereby was the citty of Nazareth ordayned for him to dwell in, that he might worthily beare the name of a Nazarite. But it is demanded by which of the Prophets this name was giuen to Christe, sith in no place there remaineth any such testimony. To some it seemeth sufficient, that the scripture doth oft call him holy, but this is too cold an answer. For Matthew, as wee see, doth stand vpon the word, and hath respect vnto the old Nazaites, who had a peculyer kinde of holiness: as if he shoulde say, that it was meete that that should be fulfilled in the person of Christe, that was then shadowed in the Nazarites, who were as the firste frutes chosen vnto GOD, Yet it remaineth to searche where the Prophetes say, that this name was giuen to Christe. Chrysostome because hee cannot vndo the knotte, cutteth it thus: saying, that many of the bookes of the Prophetes are lost. But that answer hath no colour in it: for although the Lorde, that hee might punish the sluggishnesse of the olde people tooke from them some parte of the scripture, or cut away some part that was not so necessary: yet since the comming of Christ nothing was lost. And very vnlearnedly is that place of Iosephus brought for this purpose, where he saith, that there were two bookes left by Ezechiell. For that which Ezechiell prophecieth of a new Temple and of a kingdome, is evidently distinguished from the former prophesies, and maketh as it were, a new volume. If that at this day wee haue all those bookes of Scripture remayning and safe, which were extant in Matthews time, it is necessary that this testimony of the Prophet, which he citeth shoulde be found in some place.

But amongst them all, in my iudgement, Bicers opinion is most right, who thinketh that the place out of the booke of Iudges, chap. 13. 5. is here noted. And there is mention made of Sampson, but because that Sampson is not called a redeemer of the people, but as hee was a figure of Christ, and the deliuerance brought by his hand and ministerie, was a certaine token shadowing that full saluation, which at the length shoulde be brought vnto the world by the Son of God. Whatsoeuer the scripture speaketh of Sampson in good parte, is rightly referred to Christ. If any desire to haue it plainer, Christe was the principall example, but Sampson was an inferiour shadowe or figure of him: therefore when hee was clothed with the person of the redeemer, wee must know that none of those prayses wherewith that excellent and diuine office was adorned, doth so properly belong to him as to Christe: for the Fathers tasted that grace of redemption, which through Christe is giuen vs to comprehend at the full. That Mattheue placeth this worde Prophets in the plurall number, the answer is easie, because that booke of the Iudges was composed by diuers Prophetes. Yet I thinke, that that which is here sette downe of the Prophetes doth reache farther. For Ioseph ( who was a temporall preseruer of the Church, and many wayes bare a figure of Christ, or was rather a liuely image of him) was called the Nazarite of his brethren, Gen. 49. 26. and Deut. 33. 16. Therefore God woulde that the excellent dignitie, whereof he had made a shewe in Ioseph, shoulde shine in Sampson, and he gaue him the name of a Nazarite, that the faithfull being instructed with these small beginnings, might more diligently looke for their redeemer which was to come, who was to be seperate from all, that hee might be the first borne amongst many brethren.

Luke. 2.

Matthew

Marke.

40 And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit and was filled with wisdom, and the grace of GOD was with him.

41. Now his parents went to Ierusalem euery yeare at the feast of the passeouer.

42. And when hee was 12. yeare olde, & they were come vp to Ierusalem after the custome of the feast, 43 And had finished the dayes thereof, as they returned, the childe Iesus remained in Ierusalem, and Ioseph knew not, nor his mother.

44. But they supposing, that hee had beene in the companie, went a dayes iourney, and sought him among their kinsfolke and acquaintance.

45 And when they found him not, they turned back to Ierusalem, and sought him.

46. And it came to passe three daies after, that they found him in the Temple, sitting in the midst of the Doctours, both hearing them, & asking them questions.

47. And all that heard him, were astonied at his vnderstanding and answers.

40. And the childe grewe. Mathew goeth presently from the infancie of Christ to his manifestation. Luke heree reporteth one thing at the least worthy to be remembered: that is, that Christ in the midst of his youth gaue a shew of his office to come, or at the least by this one exercise in his childehoode, hee would shew what he should be hereafter. And first he sayth that he grew and waxed strong in the spirit: by which wordes he declareth that the giftes of his minde did increase also together with his age. Whereby we gather that these profitings or increasings are referred to his humane nature, for nothing can be added more to his Godhead. Yet it is demaunded whether hee did not excell in all fulnesse of spirituall giftes, presently after that he was conceived in the wombe of his mother, for it seemeth to be absurde that any thing should be wanting to perfection in the sonne of God. Yet the answer is easie, if it derogateth nothing from his glory, that he was altogether humbled and layd lowe: then there can be no inconuenience to him in this, that as his will was to grow in body, so also to profite in minde for our sake. And certainly, when the Apostle teacheth the Heb. 4. 15: that hee was like vnto vs in all things excepting sin, without doubt he also comprehendeth this, that his soule was subiect to ignorance. This is the onely difference betweene vs & him, that those infirmitie which of necessitie are tied to vs, he tooke vpon him freely & of his owne will. Therefore Christ for the reason and estate of his age according to his humane nature, encreased in the free giftes of the spirit, that out of his fullnesse he might impart to vs, because we receiue grace out of his grace. Some which are too fearefull, restraime that which is sayd haere to an outward shew and expound it, that Christ seemed to profite as though in deede hee increased, not in any new vnderstanding. But the words sound otherwise, and this error is yet more plainly confuted, when as shortly after Luke addeth. The childe professed in age and wisdom with God and men. For it is not lawfull to imagine that there lay hid in Christ any vnderstanding, which in successe of time appeared vnto God. And it is not to be doubted but that the counsell of God was plainly to expresse how truly and perfectly Christ embraced all partes of a brotherly vniuing with men, when he tooke vpon him our fleshe. Neither doe wee by this means imagine him to be two: for although there was one person of God and man, yet it followeth not that whatsoeuer was proper to the Deitie, should bee attributed to the humane nature. But for as much as it was necessary for our saluation, the so me of God kept his diuine power hid. And that which Ireneus sayth, his Deitie resting, he suffered his passion, I do not onely interpret it of his corporall death: but also of that incredible sorrow & vexation of the soule, who vttered this complaint vnto him: my God why hast thou forsaken mee? In summe, except a man should denie Christ to be made very man, let him not be ashamed also to confesse that hee willingly tooke vpon him all those thinges which cannot be seperate from our humane nature. And it is foolishly objected that ignorance could not light vppon Christ, because it was the punishment of sinne, for the same may be said also of death: bur rather the scripture affirmeth that he fulfilled the office of a mediator, because that what punishmentes soeuer we had deserued, he tooke from vs and laid vpon himselfe. Furthermore they do very grosely and ignorantly, in that they make ignorance a punishment of sin: for it cannot be thought, that Adam when he was yet found, knew all thinges. Neither do the Angels beare the punishment of sin, when they are ignorant of any thing: Some conclude more subtilly, that there was no ignorance in Christ, because that ignorance is a fault. But these also doe take very euill a false and a vaine principle: for otherwise it were necessary for the Angels to be like to god that they might be without fault. Blindnesse or ignorance of a mans minde is a fault, and is worthily accounted as a part of originall sinne: but here is no other ignorance attributed to Christ, then such as may be in a man pure from all spot of sinne. But when Luke sayth that he waxed strong in spirit, & was filled with wisdom, he meaneth whatsoeuer wisdom is in men, and dayly growerh in them, that it floweth out of this onely fountaine, that is from the spirit of God. That speech which followeth (the grace of God was with him) is more generall, for it comprehendeth what excellencie soeuer was in him.

41. Now his parents went every yeare. Heere is the godlinesse of Mary and Ioseph prayed, because that they diligently exercised themselues in the outwarde worshoppe of God. And they tooke not this yeerely iourney.

ney vpon them rashly, but by the commandement of God: for in that the law only cōmandeth the males, that they should present themselues in the sight of God, it doth not wholly exclude women, but by permission sparcth them. And by this note is pure religion discerned from vaine & wicked superstitions, for that she keepeth her selfe in obedience to God, and the commandement of his law: but the other wander after their own fanisie beside the word of God, with out any certaine rule. And although the worship of the Temple was infected with many corruptions, & the priesthood saleable, and the doctrine filled with many errors: yet because that the ceremonies of the lawe did as yet flourish there, & they keepe the outward rite of sacrificing, as was appointed in the law, it behooued the faithfull to testifie their fayth by such exercises. But the name of father is after the cōmon opinion of men, improperly giue vnto Ioseph.

44. That hee had bene in the company. It appeareth by diuers places of the Scripture, that they which came on the feast dayes to the Temple to worship, did vse to make their journey in great companyes. Wherefore it is no maruaile if that Ioseph and Mary were not so carefull for the childe the first day. But after they shewe that they were not carelesse, neyther through sloth nor negligence.

46. Sitting in the midst of the Doctours. There must needs shine some beames of Gods glory openly in the childe, that he was allowed to sitte by those proud men. And although it bee probable that hee sate in some lower seate, rather then in the place of the Doctours: yet these proude disdainfull men would neuer haue giuen him the hearing in the publike assembly, excepte that some diuine power had compelled them, therefore this was but a signe of his calling, whose full time was not yet come. And therefore hee gaue them this onely taste, which presently men hadde forgotten, but that Mary kept it layde vppe in her heart, that afterwardes she might bring the same from thence with other treasures for the common vse of the godly. And these two thinges are to be noted, that all men maruailed, because that they accounted it as a wonder, that a childe should frame his questions so aptly and fitly. Againe in hearing & demanding, Christe himselfe rather played the parte of a scholler then of a maister. Because that as yet he was not called of his Father, that hee might proteste himselfe a publike Doctour of the Church, he doth onely moue questions modestly to the Doctours. Yet it is not to be doubted, but that by this exercise hee nowe beganne to reprove their corrupt maner of teaching: for that which Luke addeth after of answers, I interpret to bee vsed after the Hebrew maner, for any word or speech:

Luke 2,

Matthew. Marke.

48. So when they saw him, they were amazed, and his mother sayd vnto him. Some why haste thou thus dealt with vs? Beholde, thy father and I haue sought thee with heauy hearts.

49. Then sayde hee vnto them: Howe is it that ye sought me? knew ye not that I must go about my fathers businesse.

50. 505

50. But they vnderstoode not the woorde that hee spake vnto them.

51. Then he went downe with them, and came to Nazareth, and was subiect to them, and his mother kept all these sayings in her heart.

52. And Iesus increased in wisdom and stature and in fauour with God and men.

48. His mother sayd. In my iudgement they are deceived which thinke that the holy virgine sayd so as boasting of her authoritie. But it may bee that shee hauing him aside, and no witness being by, she began at the length to expostulate with her sonne, after that he was come from the assembly. Howsoeuer the matter was, shee was not caried away with ambition, but because of her three dayes sorrowe, she vttered this complaint vnto him: yet that she expostulateth as if she was vniuently injured, doth plainly declare howe ready wee are by nature, hauing no regard of God, to defend our owne right. This holy virgine had rather haue died a hundred times then off set purpose of minde shee woulde prefer her seife before God: but while shee cockereth her motherly sorrowe, through inconsideration shee slideth into that fault. And truly by this example we are admonished to susseinde all the affections of the flesh, and howe needfull it is for vs to take heed, least that we hold our right further then is conuenient, & being addict to our selues, we should defraud God of his honour.

49. Knew ye not. Christ reprehendeth his mother worthily, yet he doth the same sparingly & gently. The summe is, that the durie which he oweth to God his father, is farre to be preferred before all obedience to men. Therefore those earthly parentes doe ill, which sorrowe that they are neglected in respecte of God. And hereof is a generall doctrine to be gathered. What soeuer is due vnto men, ought to be subiect to the first table of the law, that the power of God may remaine vntouched. So obedience is to be giuen to kings, to Parents and to maisters: but no otherwise then vnder the power of God: that is, that nothing be taken or pulled from God for mans cause: neyther is our obedience then broken towards menne, when as there is an especiall regarde hadde of God. About my Fathers businesse. By this woorde hee declareth that hee hath somewhat greater then manne. Hee also declareth the principall ende why hee was sent into the worlde: namely, that hee might fulfill the office enioyned him of his heauenly father. But it is maruell that Ioseph and Mary vnderstoode not this answer who hadde beene taught by many testimonies that Iesus was the sonne of God, I answer: Though they were not altogether ignorant of the heauenly stocke of Christe, yet they vnderstoode not in euery poynte that hee was occupied in fulfilling the commaundementes of the Father, because that as yet his calling was not euidently made knowne vnto them. But in that Mary keepeth in her heart those thinges, which as yet shee conceiueth not in the vnderstanding of her minde, lette vs learne reverently to take, and (as seede conceued in the earth is nourished) to lay vppon our mindes those mysteries of God, which as yet excell the capacite of our minde.

53. He was subiect to them. This humblenes in that the Lord & head of Angels Angelles willingly made himselfe subiect to mortall creatures, did Christ take vpon him for our saluatiō. For so had the counsell of God determined, that for a time he should be hidde vnder the name of Ioseph, as vnder a shadow. And though no necessitie enforced Christ to this subiectiō, but that he might haue exempted him selfe from the same: yet because that vpon this condition hee had taken the nature of man vpon him, that he might be subiect to his parentes, & withal, hee tooke vpon him the person of a man and of a seruant, as concerning the office of a redeemer, this was his lawfull condition, so that it becometh euery one of vs more willingly to beare that yoake, that shall belayd vpon vs of the Lord.

Matthew. 3.

1. And in those dayes, Iohn the Baptist came and preached in the wilderness of Iudea.

2. And said, repent, for the kingdom of heauen is at hand.

3. For this is he of whom it is spoken by the Prophet Esaias, saying, the voyce of him that cryeth in the wilderness, is, prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his pathes streight.

4. And this Iohn had his garment of camels haire, and a girdle of a skin about his loynes: his meat was also locustes and wild honney.

5. Then went out to him Ierusalem and all Iudea, & all the region round about Iordan.

6. And they were baptised of him in Iordan, confessing their sinnes.

2. When Annas & Caiphas were the high priestes, the worde of God came vnto Iohn, the son of Zacharias in the wilderness.

3. And hee came vnto all the costs of Iordan, preaching the baptisme of repentance, for the remission of sinnes.

4. As it is written in the book of the sayings of Esaias the prophet, which sayeth, the voyce of him that cryeth in the wilderness is, prepare yee the way of the Lorde, make his pathes streight.

5. Every vally shall be filled, & every mountaine and hill shall be brought lowe, and crooked things shall be made streight, and the rough waies shall be made smooth.

6. And all flesh shall see the saluation of God.

Although that is parte of the Gospell which wee haue set downe before out of Matthewe and Luke, yet it is not without a cause that Marke accounteth the beginning of the Gospell at the preaching of Iohn Baptist. For as it is recorded in the first of Iohn, that then the law and the prophetes were ended. The law and the Prophets to Iohn, and since the kingdome of G O D, Luke. 16. 16. And to this very aptly agreeth the testimony of Malachy, which hee alleageth. The Lorde that he might the more incense the mindes of men to the desire of the promised saluation, had ordayned for a time, that the people should bee without new Prophecies, and we know that Malachy was the last of the lawfull and certaine Prophets. Also least the hungry Iewes shoulde in the meane while faynt, hee exhorteth them that they should keepe themselves vnder the law of Moses, vntill the promised redemption should appeare. And hee maketh mention of the law onely, because that the doctrine of the Prophets doth differ nothing from the same: but it was only an Appendix & more full exposition, that the whole manner of governing the Church might depend vpon the law. And it is no new or vnaccustomed matter in the scripture, to comprehend the Prophecies vnder the name of the law: because that ail of the were referred to them, as to their fountaine and principall poynt. And the Gospell was not an inferiour addition to the lawe, but a newe manner of teaching, which abrogateth that first. Malachy also discerning a double estate of the Church, appoynteth the one vnder the law, and beginneth the other vnder the Gospell. For it is not to be doubted but that he meaneth Iohn Baptist, when he sayth: Behold, I will send my messenger. because (as it is nowe sayd) here is an expresse distinction made betweene the law, and the newe order & estate of the Church, which was to bee in the same roome. In the same sence he hadde sayde a little before (that which is cited by Marke: for the places are very like) Behold I send Elyas the Prophet to you, before that great day of the Lorde shall come. Also, behold I send my messenger, who shall make cleane the way before me, then shall the Governour, whom ye seeke, come to his temple. Because that he promiseth in both these places a better estat of the church, the was vnder the Gospell, without doubt the beginning of the Gospel is thereby noted. And before the Lorde should come foorth to restore the Church, it is sayde that a forwarner and cryer shoulde come before him, who shoulde declare that hee was at hande: whereby wee gather the abrogation of the lawe and the beginning of the Gospell, properly to be set in the preaching of Iohn. But sith Iohn declareth that Christe was cloathed with flesh, both his natiuitie, and the whole history of his appearance is contayned vnder the Gospell.

But here Marke declareth when the Gospel began to to bee published, wherefore he doth not without cause begin at Iohn, who was the first minister of the same. And for this cause was it the will of the heavenly father to bury, as it were in silence, the life of his sonne, vntill the time of his full reuelation should come. Neyther was it done without the determinate prouidence of God, that the Euangelists should passe by that whole time, that Christ lyued priuatly at home: and should by and by passe from his first infancy to the thyrty yeere of his age, wherein hee endued with the estate of a publike person, is openly shewed as redemer to the worlde: but that Luke briefly toucheth aboute the twelue yeare one signe and token what his calling should be. And this especially appertaineth for this cause : first , to knowe that Christ was very man, and then the sonne of Abraham and of Dauid, which the Lord woulde testifie vnto vs.

The rest which we haue set downe of the shepherdes, the wisemen, and Simeon, doe appertaine to the prouing of his Deitie . And that which Luke declareth of Iohn and his father Zacharias, was as a preface to the Gospell. Ther is no absurditie in changing the person in the words of Malachy. Thus GOD speaketh by the prophet : I send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me . But by Marke the father is brought in speaking to the sonne . But we see that Marke had no other purpose, then that he might more fully declare the minde of the Prophet.

Marke giueth Christ the title of the sonne of God, whom the other Euangelists witnessed to be borne of the seede of Abraham and of Dauid , that hee might also be the sonne of man. But Marke thereby declareth that no redemption can be hoped for, but from the sonne of God.

Mat 3. 1. In those dayes. Luke. 3. 1. In the fiftenth yeere. It cannot be gathered out of Mathew and Marke what age Iohn was of, when hee began to come abroad. But L V K E declareth euidently that he was then thirtie yere olde or there about. The olde writers of the Church declare almost with one consent, that he was borne fiftene yeare before the death of Augustus. His successor Tyberius had now inioyed the Empire fiftene yeares when the same Iohn began to preach : therefore that time of thirtie yeares which I spake is gathered: whereby it also followeth, that he did not long execute the office of a teacher, but that in short time he gaue place vnto Christ : for Christ as a little after wee shall see was also baptized when he was thirtie yeare olde, and then he was entered to the performãce of his office. But when Christ the sunne of righteousness, presently followed Iohn his morning starre, or rather the morning, it is no maruaile if that Iohn vanished away, that Christes onely glory might be the more manifest. LV. Pontius Pilate. It is probable that this was the second yeare of Pilate. For after that Tiberius had obtained the Empire, Iosephus declareth in the eighteenth booke of Antiquities, that he created Valerius Gratus gouernour of Iudea, placing him in the roome of Annius Rufus . And this putting one in an others roome, might fall out in the second yeare of his gouernment. The same Iosephus declareth that Valerius was gouernour of Iudea for the space of eleuen yeares, therefore Pilate hadde holden that prouince about two yeare, when Iohn began to preach the Gospell. This Herod whom Luke maketh Tetrarche of Galile, was the second heire of Herod the great, who succeeded his father by will: for the gouernment of Iudea was giuen to Archelaus but when he was banished by Augustus into Vienna, that portion fell into the hands of the Romans for a pray.

So Luke heere reherceth two of Herodes sonnes : namely, Herode Antipas, who was made Tetrarch of Galile, and had in possession, Samaria and Peræa, and Philip who was Tetrarch of Trachonitis and Iturea, raigned from the sea of Tiberias or Genesara, to the foote of Libanus, frõ whence the floud Jordan ariseth.

They vntruly imagine that Lyfanius was the sonne of Ptolomeus Mennæus, who was king of Chalcis, who had beene slaine before by Cleopatra, about thirtie yeeres before the birth of Christ, as Iosephus declarcth in his fifteenth booke of antiquities. Also hee could scarcely haue beene his nephew, whom the same Iosephus in the first booke of the warre of the Iewes reporteth to haue beene the kindler of the Parthian warre: for then hee should haue beene about threescore yeere old. Furthermore, seeing that he stirred the Parthians to warre vnder Antigonus, he was of necessitie then growen to the state of a man. But Ptolomeus Mennæus died not long after the slaughter of Iulius Cæsar, being entred into the office of the Triumuir betweene Lepidus, Antonius, and Octavius: as Iosephus witnesseth in the 14. booke. chap. 23. But this nephew of Ptolomeus, was called Lyfanius, as his father was, and hee might also leaue a sonne of his own name Yet their errour is without question to be reiected, which imagine that Lyfanius, who was slaine by Cleopatra should liue threescore yeere after his death.

The name of Tetrarch is heere vsed improperly, as though the whole region should be deuided into foure partes. But seeing that in the beginning the countries were deuided into foure partes, and then that other changes followed: yet for honors sake the name was still continued: in the which sense Pliny numbred seuentene Tetrarches of one region.

2. Were the high priestes. It is certaine that two high Priestes together at one time neuer occupied the priesthoode. Iosephus witnesseth that Caiphias was made high priest by Valerius Gratus, a little before hee went out of the prouince. Wee reade nothing in Iosephus, that should be altered by Pilate, in that time that he gouerned Iudea: but when he was restrained of his authoritie, and was commaunded to goe to Rome to answer his cause, then at that time Vitellius, the gouernour of Syria dryuing Caiphias out, transposed the priesthood to Ionathas, the sonne of Anani, Antiq. 18. But that Luke nameth two high priests must not so be taken, as if the title were giuen to them both but because that the one halfe of the honour of the priesthood was in Annas, the high priestes father in law. Wherefore Luke declareth that matters were then so troubled and confounded, that there was then no one true and certaine high priest, but that through ambition and tyrannicall power, that sacred office was torne in sunder.

The word of God came. Before that Luke reporteth, as others doe, that Iohn entred the office of teaching, he sayth, that he was called thereunto of GOD, that his ministrerie might beare authoritie with it. I see not why the interpreters had rather to translate it vpon Iohn, rather then To Iohn: yet because the sense is not doubtfull, namely, that this ambassage was layd vp with him, and that the commandement of preaching was giuen vnto him, I follow the receiued translation. Hereby gather that there are no true teachers, but to whom that office is enioyned of God. Neyther doth it suffice to haue the word of GOD, except there be also an especiall calling.

That Matthewe and Marke make not mention but of a desert, reconcile it with the wordes of Luke thus, Iohn beganne his office of teaching amongst his neighbours with whome hee dwelt, then hee spread his Gospell

Gospell farther, that it might bee knowne in moe places: whereby it came to passe, that in shORTE time his fame spread vnto Ierusalem. Yet that coast of Iordan might bee called desertum, a desert: for it doth not signifie a place not inhabited, but a sharpe and hilly ccountrey, which is occupied with a lesse resort of men.

2. Math: Repent. Matthew differeth from the other two Euangelistes in this, that in the person of Iohn he setteth downe the summe of his doctrine, and they set it downe in his owne words. Yet Marke hath more by one word then Luke: for he sayth, he came, baptising and preaching the baptisme of repentance, but in the matter it selfe the consent is very good: because that all ioyne repentance with forgiueneffe of sinnes: For the kingdome of God amongst men is nothing els then a restoring to a happy life, and to a true and eternall felicity. There fore when Iohn sayth, that the kingdome of God is at hand, hee meaneth that men, which were estranged from the righteousnesse of God, and banished the kingdome of heauen, are againe gathered vnto God, that they might liue vnder his hand. And this doth free adoption & forgiuenes of sinnes worke, where by he reconcileth the vnworthy to himselfe. In summe, the kingdome of heauen is nothing else then newnesse of life, wherein God restoreth vs into the hope of eternall immortalitie. For we being taken out of the bondage of sinne and death, he chalengeth vs vnto himselfe, that wee wandring here vpon earth, might nowe by fayth possesse that heauenly life to the Ephesians. 1: 4. For although we be like to dead men, yet we know that our life is in safety, while that it is hidde in Christ. Coloff. 3. From hence, as out of a fountaine is the exhortation to repentance gathered. And Iohn sayeth not repent, and then by this meanes the kingdome of heauen shall appeare: but in the first place he proposeth the grace of God, and then hee exhorteth menne that they should repent. Whereby it is euident, that the mercy of God, whereby he restoreth those that are lost to be the foundation of repentance. Neither doe Matthew and Luke in any other sense report that he preached repentance for the remission of sinnes: for repentance, (as some vnwisely imagine) is not placed first, as if it should be the cause of forgiueneffe of sins, or that it might preuent God, that he might beginne to be mercifull vnto vs: but men are commaunded to repent, that they might receiue the reconcilyation offered them. But as the free loue of God, where by hee imbraceth miserable men, not imputing their sinnes vnto them, orderly goeth before, so it is to be noted, that we haue forgiuenes of sins in Christ: not that God woulde nourish them through his loue: but that hee might heale vs from them. Neyther can any man taste the grace of God, except he hate sinne, and be displeas'd with offences: but by the definition of repentance and sayth it may be fullyer knowne, how vnseperably they are ioyned together: therefore in entreating of this doctrine I am the sparer.

But for the better vnderstanding of this present place, it is meete to obserue that the whole Gospell consisteth of two partes: forgiueneffe of sinnes, and repentance. And in that Matthew noteth the first parte by the kingdome of heauen, it may thereby be gathered, that there was hostile dissention betweene menne and God, and that they were wholly banished out of the kingdome of heauen, vntill that God should againe receiue.

receiue them into his fauour. And though Iohn proposing the grace of God, exhorteth men to repentaunce, yet it is to be noted, that this also is the gift of God, aswell as the inheritaunce of the kingdome of heauen. For as hee freely forgiueth vs our sinnes, and by his mercy deliuereth vs from the guiltinesse of eternall death, so also hee repayreth vs after his owne image, that we might liue to righteousnesse. As hee freely adopteth vs to bee his sonnes, so he regenerateth vs by his spirite, that our life might testifie, that wee do not falsly call him father. And Christ doth no lesse quicken vs vnto righteousnesse, by crucifying our olde man, and by extinguishing the faults of our fleshe, then he doth wash away our sinnes by his bloud, and appease his heauenly Father towards vs, with the sacrifice of his owne death. Yet this is the summe of the Gospell, that God embraceth vs in his Sonne, our sinnes being washed away: that we denying our selues, and our owne nature, might liue holily & godlily, and so shoulde meditate a heauenly life vpon the earth.

3. L V. Preaching the baptisme of repentaunce. This maner of speaking dooth first generally shewe, what is the right vse of the sacramentes: Then for what purpose Baptisme was instituted, and what it doth containe.

A Sacrament therefore is not a dumbe ceremonie, which sheweth I worde not what pompe, without doctrine, but hath the worde of GOD annexed to 'it, which giueth life to the outwarde ceremonie. I meane not that woorde, which some Exorcist muttereth with magycall whisperings: but that which pronounced with cleare and open voyce doth auayle to the edifying of fayth. For it is not simply sayde that Iohn baptised to repentaunce, as if the grace of GOD hadde beene included in the visible signe: but that hee preached what the profite of Baptisme was, that the signe might be made effectually by the worde preached. And this is peculyar to baptisme, that it is called the seale of repentaunce for forgiuenesse of sinne.

Nowe seeing that his baptisme hadde the same signification, power and manner, which ours haue: If a figure bee esteemed by the truth thereof, it is false, that the baptisme of Iohn and Christe are diuerse.

MATH. 3. The voyce of a cryer in the wildernesse. Although that place of Isaias 40. 1. ought not to be restrayned onely to Iohn: yet he is one of them, of whom that is there spoken: for after the Prophet hath spoken of the ouerthrow of the Cittie, and the extreame calamitie of the people, hee promiseth a new restitution of the people. The words were, the Lord shall say againe, comfort ye, comfort ye my people. For after the temple was ouerthrowne, and the Sacrifices abolished, the people were ledde into captiuity, and their estate was almoste desperate: and because their eares were deaffe at the continuall calling of the Prophetes, the Lorde did as it were holde his peace for a time. Leaste the godly mindes should fall downe in that sorrowfull silence the Prophet declareth that there shoulde agayne arise newe Preachers of grace, which shoulde comforte the people in the hope of saluation. Such were Za-charyah, Haggai, Malachy, Esdras, and such like . But because that there is promised a restitution , which should be perpetuall, and not for a short time: and Esayas especially respecteth the redemption which was hoped for : by the comming of Christ, Iohn was rightly accounted the cheife amongst the ministers of comfort. Then it followeth in the text of the Prophet: The voyce of a cryer, and that voyce is opposed to the silence for a time, whereof I spake euen now: for the Iewes were for a time deprived of that doctrine, which they had vngodly contemned.

The name of a desert is metaphorically put for a desolatiō or a deformed ruine of the people, as was in the time of the banishment. For there was so horrible a dissipation, that it might be compared to a deserte: so the prophet amplifieth the grace of God, as if hee should haue sayd, although the people was throwne farre from their countrie, and was banished out of the companie of men, yet the voyce of God shall also resound in the deserte, which shall ioyfully comfort the that are halfe dead. In this sense Ierusalem was the desert, when Iohn began first to preach: for in euery place all things were brought into a wast and horrible confusion. But it behoued those grosse and foolish men the more to bee stirred vppe by beholding this visible deserte, that thereby they might the more greedily haue receiued the promise of saluation offered vnto them in death.

Nowe wee see how truely this prophesie agreeth vnto Iohn, and how properly it is applyed vnto him. Prepare ye the way of the Lord. It is not to be doubted, but that the Prophet speaketh to Cyrus, and the Persians whose aide God vsed: and the meaning is, that the Lorde woulde by a wonderfull power bring to passe, that a way shoulde bee opened to his people by wayes vntrauailed, by steepe rockes, and by the drie deserte, because that hee had at hand ministers of his grace, which shoulde take all lettes and hinderances out of the way. But that was a beginning, shadowing the redemption.

And when the spirituall truth commeth into the light, Iohn is sent, that he might remoue those lets. And dayly the same voyce soundeth in our eares, that wee shoulde prepare a way to the Lorde: that is: that vices being taken away, which shut vp the kingdome of Christ, wee shoulde giue accesse to his grace. To the same purpose also belongeth that which followeth in the Prophet: The crooked shall bee made straight: for hee meaneth that there are onely rough and troublesome courses in the worlde: But that through so hard passages the Lorde will make himselfe a way, that by a Woonderfull meanes hee might pearse through to the accomplishing of our saluation.

6 All flesh shall see. The meaning is, that this saluation shall not bee kept secret, or tasted onely by a few men: but that it shall bee knowne and common to all. Whereof it followeth, that this prophesie was not fulfilled in the returne of the people. For although GOD then shewed a token of his fauour worthy to be re remembered, yet he did not then reueale his saluation to all the world.

Nay it is the purpose of the Prophet to oppose the woonderfull excellencie of saluation, which was to bee reuealed, against the former benefites of God, that the faithfull might know that hee neuer dealt so notably with the Church, and that the power of God was neuer so excellently shewed in the deliuerance of his. Flesh in this place doeth signifie men, without the note of sinne.

4. Math. Iohn had his garment. The Euangelist doeth not account this amongst his especiall vertues, that hee was addict to a rude and austere manner of liuing, he also fled a meane and an accustomed cleannesse: But because hee had sayde before that hee was a man dwelling among the mountaines,

Now he addeth that his meate and his apparell was according to his dwelling place: And this hee rehearseth not onely, that wee might know that he tooke no delicates, being content with countrie meate and apparell: But that in his filthy and contemptible habite he was much esteemed amongst men very delicate and renowned. Furthermore, as superstition appoynted almost a perfect righteousnesse in these outward shewes, they commonly thought that such dencencie was a heape of holinesse: There was an other fault neare vnto this, that they would imagine that this man in this solitarie life, abhorred the comon manner of liuing, as Eremites and Monkes excell in this one thing, if they coule differ from the rest. At the length there grew ouer grosse ignorance, that they made of his garment of hayres, a whole skinne. And it is not to be doubted but that the Euangelist describeth heere a mountaine man, farre from all vrbantie finenesse, and daintinesse, not onely content with meate that might be gotten, but onely eating naturall meates: as wild honie, whereof there was good plentie enough in that place, and Locustes, whereof the country was also very fruitfull. Or, because it was profitable, that a man contemned, and not faouered for any excellencie, should come forth into the worlde, that the onely maiestie of God might shine in him, which yet should draw all men to wonder at him. For that is to be noted, which is added, that great concourse of people came vnto him from euery place: whereby wee gather howe renowned his fame was. Or because it was the purpose of God to propose in him a rare example of frugalitie, that by this meanes he might allure the Iewes to reuerence his doctrine, or at the least, that hee might conuince the Iewes of vnthankfulnesse, according to that saying of Christ, Iohn came neyther eating nor drinking, &c. Luke 7. 33.

6. Mat. 5. Mar. They were baptised, confessing their sinnes. This confession was a testimonie of their repentance. For as the Lord in his sacramentes doeth binde himselfe vnto vs, as it were by giuing vs his hande writing: so it is also meete that we should answer him againe. In baptisme he witnesseth that our sinnes are forgiven vs, and he calleth vs to repentance. Therefore that men may rightly offer themselues vnto baptisme, they are required to confesse their sins: otherwise the whole action should be nothing els but a vaine sporte. It is also to be noted, that he heere speaketh of them that are growne to some age: who we know are not to be admitted without consideration into the Church, nor by baptisme to be receiued into the body of Christ, except there bee first an examination mination had. Whereby it is manifest, how ridiculous the Papists were, which wrest this to auricular confession. For the sacrificers were not present, into whose eares priuily all of them should whisper their owne sins: neither is there mention made of all their sinnes, neyther is it sayd that Iohn commaunded, or gaue his Disciples an ordinary maner of confessing: And that wee may graunt the Papistes that, which they require: Confession shall belong to them onely, that shall be catechited, and after Baptisme it shall haue no place. Truly they against the example of Iohn doe prescribe a law of Confession after Baptisme.

Math. 3.

Marke.

Luke. 3.

7. Now, when hee saw many of the Pharises and of the Saduces come to his baptisme, hee sayd vnto them, O generation of vipers, who hath fore warned you to flee from the anger to come?

8. Bring forth therefore fruites worthy amendment of life.

9. And thinke not to say with your selues, wee haue Abraham to our father: for I say vnto you, that God is able of these stones to rayse vp children vnto Abraham.

10. And now also is the axe put to the roote of the trees: therefore euerie tree, which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewne downe, & cast into the fire.

7. Then sayd hee to the people that were come out to bee baptised of him: O generation of vipers, who hath fore warned you to flee fro the wrath to come.

8. Bring forth therefore fruites worthie amendement of life, & begin not to say with your selues, wee haue Abraham to our fasher: for I say vnto you, GOD is able of these stones to raise vp children to Abraham.

9. Now also is the axe laid vnto the roote of the trees: therefore euerie tree, which bringeth not foorth good fruit, shall be hewen downe, and cast into the fire.

10. Then the people asked him, saying, what shall wee doe then?

11. And he answered, and said vnto them: he that hath two coates, lette him part with him that hath none: and he that hath meate, les him doe likewise.

12. Then came there Publicans also to be baptised: and sayd vnto him, maister, what shall we doe?

13. And he sayde vnto them, require no more then that, which is appointed vnto you.

14. The soldiers likewise deman ded of him, saying: And what shall we doe? And he sayd vnto them, do violence to no man, neyther accuse any falsly, and be content with your wages.

MAT. 3. When hee saw many of the Pharises. Here Math. and Luke do declare declare that Iohn did not onely generally preach repentance, but also that hee applied his speech to the persons, And truly it will bee a cold manner of teaching, except the teachers doe wisely consider what the time requireth, & what is fitte for the persons: and there is not in this behalfe any thing more vnequal then a perpetuall equalitie. And for this cause it is sayde that Iohn did more seuerely handle the Pharises and the Saduces: because that though the hypocrisie and pride, wherein they swelled, it seemed meete that they should be more sharply punished then the com non sort of men. But that we may well vnderstand his purpose, it is to be knowne that there is no people more without sense and feeling then the hypocrites, which with an outward shewe of holines deceiue the themselues and others. For as God thundereth euery where against the whole world: so they in a false imagination frame vnto themselves a sanctuary: because they are perswaded that they haue nothing to do with the iudgemēt of God. If any thinke that Iohn dealt preposterously, that at the first salutation he entertayned them so hardly: I answere that they were not vnknown vnto him and the knowledge which he had was not by custome or experience, but rather by the secret reuelation of the spirit: wherefore they were no whit the lesse to be spared, least with the greater pride they should returne home. If any againe shal object, that they were not to be feared with so sharp a rebuking, which by baptisme professed that they would become other men: an answer is also readie, they which are accustomed to lie to God, and to please themselves, and shew deceit & dissimulation for the truth, are more hardly to be vrged to true repentance. For there is, as I sayd, a wonderfull obstinacie in hypocrites, therefore vntill they be skoured with violence, they hold very fast their shew.

Now that Iohn reproveth and rebuketh them openly before all men, is for an example, in which sense Luke reporteth that he spake this to the people. For though Iohn pinched but few men, yet he had regard of all, that he might strike a feare into them: as Paul, 1. Tim. 5. 20. commandeth, that in open reprovings this profit should be looked for. Therefore he peculiarly speaking to the Pharises and Saduces, doth in their person admonish all the rest, that they shoulde not shew forth a fained shew of repentance, for a true affection.

Furthermore it was greatly for the profit of all the people to knowe what maner of men the Saduces and the Pharises were, by whom the worshippe of GOD was miserably corrupted, the Church waisted, and the whole religion ouerthrowne, and to beethort, who had with their corruptions extinguished the lighte of GOD, and with their sinnes had infected all things. Therefore it is probable that Iohn did openly sette vpon the Pharises, that hee might prouide for the whole Church of GOD: that they should no more with a vaine shewe holde the eyes of the simple, nor oppresse the people with their wicked tyrannie. And therein was also shewed his wonderfull constancie, that though they excelled all other: yet hee spared not their dignitie, but sharply, as they were worthy, he brought them into course. So it becometh all godly teachers to be bolde: that they should not feare any power of men, but that without feare they shoulde strue to throwe downe euery high thing, which lifteth vp it selfe against Christ. If that they which willingly came to Baptisme, that they might giue their name to the Gospell, were so sharply saluted by the instrument of the holy Ghost : how must wee then doe at this day with the professed enemies of Christ, which not only stubbornly refuse all taste of sound doctrine, but more violently go on with sword and fire to blot out the name of Christ ? Certainly if thou shouldst compare the Pope and his filthy cleargie, they shall bee very gently dealt with, if they bee cast into one bundle together. Wherefore let them quarrell not with vs, but with the spirite of God, whose cares re so delicate, that they can abide nothing to bee spoken sharply against the Pope. Yet let godly teachers take heede to themselves, while they are carryed with a godly zeale against the tyrantes of the Church, least they myxe the affections of the fleshe. And because that no vehemency canne bee approoued of GOD, but that which is moderated by the wisdome of the spirite, let them not onely restraîne theyr affections, but let them deliuer and commit themselves to the holy Ghost to bee governed, least any thing passe from them with out consideration.

He calleth them generation of Vipers, rather then Vipers, that hee might lay that venymous poyson to all the sort of them: for he would not condemne only these fewe, which were there present, but the whole body : as if he should say, that both the sortes did but engender serpents. There were great dissentions betweene them, but the contempt of God, a wicked desire of rule, a hatred of sonnd doctrine, and a heape of many sinnes. Who hath forwarned you ? Because he suspected their repentance, he doubting it, enquireth with admiration, whether it be possible that they should repent from the heart. By this meanes hee stirreth them to a more neare examinatio<sup>n</sup> of their conscience, that they should sitte themselves more deeply, & that al flatteries being remoued far from them, they might exercise a more seuerer censure in calling their sinnes into question.

Wrath is here taken for the iudgement of God, as in diuers other places it is vsed : as when Paule sayth, Rom. 4. 15. & 12. 19. the lawe worketh wrath, and giue ye place to wrath. And he calleth it to come, which hangeth ouer their heades, least according to their wont, they nourish vp themselves in securitie. Yet he therefore maketh mention of the time to come : because the hypocritis as long as GOD spareth them, do carelesly despise his threatens : for they are not wakned, except they be stricken hard. For though the wrath of God flowe soorth, and that his roddes doe strike the whole earth, yet the hypocrites doe alwayes hope that they are free.

To flee the wrath of God, is heare taken in good parte: for it is as much as to seeke to the meanes to appease God, that he might cease to bee angry with vs. For a great number of men, that they might escape the wrath of God do withdraw themselves from his hand and iudgement, but so the sinner profitech nothing by fleeing from GOD, but doth rather more and more encrease his wrath vpon him.

MAT. LV. 8. Bring forth therefore frutes. He confirmeth that which I sayde before, that the repentaunce which is testified in woordes is of no value, except they prooue the same in deedes : for it is a thing more precious, then that there shoulde bee a light and vaine opinion of the same. Therefore Iohn denyeth, that the open testimony which they gaue was sufficient:

but he saith that in proesse of time it shalbe reuealed by their workes, whether they do earnestly repent. It is to bee noted that good workes are called the fruits of repentance: for repentance is inward, which is placed in the heart and the minde: but then in the chaung of the life it bringeth forth the fruites of the same. And because that in Popery all this point of doctrine was filthily corrupted, this difference is to be holden, that repentance is an inward renewing of a man, which springeth forth in outward life, as the tree bringeth forth fruit out of it.

M A T. 9. Thinke not to say with your selues. L V. 8. Begin not to say. Sith it is certaine that there is but one meaning of both these speeches, we do easily gather what Iohn would. The hypocrits doe either sleepe in their sins, or licentiouly & proudly vaunt theselues vntill they be oppressed: but when they are cited to the tribunaall seat of God, then they carefully seeke meanes to escape, & lurking corners, or pretend some colour: Therefore Iohn thus speaketh vnto the Pharises and Saduces. Now that you are sharply reprobued of me, doe not as such as you are, vse to do: that is, seeke not a remedie by a vaine & false pretence. And he wresteth frō them that wicked hope, wherewith they were bewitched: the couenant which God made with Abrahā was vnto them in steade of a shilde to couer an euil conscience, not that they setled their hope in the person of one man: but because that God had adopted the whole stocke of Abraham. In the meane while they thought not, that none are to bee accounted of the seed of Abrahā, but they which follow his fayth, & the couenant of God is not ratified, that it may profit to saluation but by fayth. And that clause in your selues is not superfluous: for although in speach they did not boast themselues to be the sons of Abraham, yet inwardly they pleased themselues with this title: so that the hypocrites are nothing more ashamed to mocke God then men.

God is able. The Iewes flatter theselues almost with the same pretence, which the Papists at this day do insolently challeng to themselues. It is necessary that there should be a Church in the world: for God will bee knowne, and haue his name called vpon in the world, and the Church cannot be other where but with vs, with whom the Lord hath made his couenant. The priests and other, which had the gouernmēt and authoritie, were especially puffed vp with this arrogancie: for they accounted the common people prophane and accursed, as wee reade in Iohn, 7. 49. And they thought theselues to be the holy first fruits: as at this day the horned bishops, Abbots, Canons, Monks, Sorbonists, & all the sacrificers, being lift vp with the proud title of the Cleargie, doe in comparison of theselues despise the laitie. This error doth Iohn reprobue & resell, in that they doe to straightly restrain the promise of God, shewing that though God had none of them, that yet hee would not be without a Church. Therefore the meaning of the words is, God made a couenant with Abrahā & his seed. One thing deceiueth you, that whē you are more then degenerat, you think your selues to be the only sons of Abrahā: but god will frō another place rayse vp a new seed to Abraham, which doth not now appeare: & he speaketh in the datiuē case: He wil raise vp childrē vnto Abraham, that they might know the promise of God was not to no effecte, and that Abraham, who obeyed him, shoulde not bee deuenied, although there wanted seeds in them, so from the beginning ning of the world, the Lord was true to his seruantes, neither did he euer sayle in performing his promise of shewing fauour to their children, although he reiected the hypocrites. That many thinke that Iohn speaketh this of the calling of the gentiles, seemeth not to mee to be of force: but because that it seemed incredible to these proud men, that the Church might bee transferred to any other place, he admonisheth them that God hath meanes to preferue his church, which they did not thinke of: as if he should make him children of stones.

M A T. 10. L V. 9. Now also is the axe, After that Iohn had taken that couer of vaine hope from the hypocrites, he pronounceth that the iudgement of God is nigh. He had sayd before, that they being cast off, that God should not want a people: now he addeth that God himselfe is now in the same, that hee might driue the vnworthy out of the Church, as barren trees vse to be cut vpp. The summe is, that the hand of God is now stretched forth to purge the church for the grace of God doth neuer shew it selfe for the saluation of the godly: but withal his iudgement commeth forth for the destruction of the world, and that for two causes: because that then the Lord separateth his from the reprobate, and the vnthankfulness of the world prouoketh his wrath a new. Wherefore it is no maruaile, if the preaching of the Gospell, and the comming of Christ doe put the axe to cut away the corrupt trees, and shoulde dayly halten the vengeance of God against the wicked.

L V. 11. The people asked him. A true affection of repentance engendreth this carefulnesse, that the sinner desirously inquireth what God willed and commanded, and the answer of Iohn doth breifly define the fruites woorthy of repentance. For the world alwayes desireth to bee discharged of the ceremonies towards God, and doth nothing more readily then set faigned and deuised worshippings before God, so oft as he calleth to repentance. But what fruites doth the Baptist commend in this place? The duties of charitie, and of the seconde table, not that God neglecteth the outward profesion of godlines, and of his worship: but because this note of difference is more certaine, and doth oft lesse deceiue. For the hypocrites doe plainly endeouour, that they might shew themselues worshippers of God in ceremonies, and yet let passe the care of true righteousnes, when they are eyther vnkinde to their neighbours, or giuen to deceites and spoyles. Wherefore necessarily they are to be called to a straighter examination, whether they liue honestly amongst men, whether they helpe the poore, whether they spare them in miserie, whether they louingly communicate those things, which the Lord hath giuen them. For this cause Christ in Mathew 23.23. calleth iustice, mercie, and trueth, the cheife poyntes of the lawe, and the scripture in diuerse places commendeth iustice and iudgement.

This is to be noted, that the duties of charitie are first named, not that they excell the worshippe of GOD: but as the witnesse of the godlinesse of menne, that their dissimulation may bee layde open, which bragge that with their mouth, which is farre from their hearte. But it is demanded whether Iohn layd this lawe precisely vpon all them, which Christ had prepared to bee his Disciples, that they shoulde not haue two coates. First it is to be noted, that this is a figuratiue speache, from the parte to the whole:

because that vnder one kind there is comprehended a generall doctrine. Hereof it followeth that such a meaning is to be gathered, as agreeth to the rule of charitie, which is prescribed of God: namely, that euery man of his aboundance should helpe the neede of the poore. For the Lord doeth not wrest a tribute from them, that they should giue sorrowfully and vnwillingly, which by compulsion should be constrained to do that they would not: but he loueth cheerefull and willing giuers, as Paul sayth 2. Cor. 9. 7. This I speake for this purpose: because it auayleth much that men should be perswaded, that that which they offer of their goods is an acceptable sacrifice of a sweet fauor vnto god, and they doe not onely cast a feare vpon the consciences, but they drowne them in dispaire, whotoeuer make a law that no man should possesse any thing of his own. But there neede no long confutation to bee vsed against these fanaticall men, which so bitingly snatch at the letter. If it be not lawfull to haue two coates, the same is to be sayd of dishes, of salt sellers, of shirts, and of all household stuffe. But by the text it appeareth, that Iohn meant nothing lesse, then to ouerthrow the politike estate: whereby wee gather that hee commaunded nothing els, then that the rich men, according to their abilities, should bestow vpon the poore, that which their necessitie required: as if hee should haue sayd, looke what things your neighbours do want, for the sustentation of their life, and you haue aboundance of, that your aboundance may helpe their neede. Furthermore, how much more God nourisheth vs: so much more must euery man be ware, that wee cocker not our selues. Let rather the necessitie of brethren vrge vs, and what benefites of GOD soeuer wee haue by vs, let them enforce vs to charitable well doing.

12. And the Publicans came. He doth not onely generally exhort the Publicans, that they should repent, but he requirerh those things, which belong to their calling. For we know that besides the generall rule of the law, euery one must looke what the estate of life, whereunto he is called requireth. Loue is generally commanded to all christians: but there followe particuler duties, when in the doctour to the Church, the magistrate or prince to the people: and againe the people to the magistrate, the husband to the wife, and againe, the wife to him: and last, the children and the parents are bound the one to the other. Furthermore, because that they vexed (as it is a couetous, rauenous, & cruell kind of men) the comon people with vniust exactiōs: the baptist reprobeth those faults wherewith that people was most infected, forbidding that they should not exceede measure in exacting tributes. yet hereby we gather, that it is no lesse lawfull for a Christian to gather tribute, then it is granted to the magistrate, to lay it vpon them. The same is to be thought of warfare, Iohn commaundeth not theould ours to throwe away their weapons, and to forsake their calling, but he foriddeth vnder the pretence of warfare to spoyle the poore people, to oppresse the innocent with iniuries to go abroad after the maner of theeues, as many were wont: so in these words there is a priuate approbation of a politicke estate. It is a triuolous cauill, that heere are onely deliuered instructions for the rude, which are faire vnderneath a Christian perfection. It was the office of Iohn to make the people perfect to the Lord and it is not to be doubted but that wholly he applied himselfe faithfully in this matter. And truly they diffame the Gospell with a sacrilegious accusation, which make it contrary to the gouernement of men, as if Christ should destroy that, which his heauenly father had ordayned. For without the sword the lawes are dead, & there is no power nor authoritie in iudgements. Neither hath the magistrate only neede of an executioner, but also of other officers, of which number are soldiours, where peace cannot otherwise bee preserued, but by their ayd & hand: onely the ende is to bee confirmed, that Princes make not a iesting sporte at mans blood, that soldiours placed to bestow their helpes to kill, be not caried with the desire of gaine to cruelty, but that they both bee drawne with the necessitie and respect of publike profit.

Matth. 3.

11. Indeede I baptise you with water, to amendment of life: but hee that commeth after me, is mightier then I, whose shoes I am not worthy to beare, he will baptise you with the holy Ghost, and with fire.

12. Which hath his fanne in his hande, and will make cleane his floore, and gather his wheate into his garner, but wil burn vp the chaf with vnquēchable fire

Marke. 1.

7. And preached saying, A stronger then I cometh after me, whose shoes I am not worthy to stoope downe, and vnlose.

8. True it is, I haue baptised you with water: but hee wil baptise you with the holy Ghost.

Luke. 3.

15. As the people waited, and all menne mused in their heartes, of Iohn, if he were not the Christ.

16. Iohn answered, and sayde to them all: In deede I baptise you with water: bus one stronger then I cometh, whose shoes I am not worthy to vnlose: he wil baptise you with the holy Ghoste and with fire.

17. Whose fanne is in his hand, & hee will make cleane his floore, and will gather the wheat into his garner: but the chaf will be burne vp with fire that neuer shalbe quenched.

18. Thus then exhorting with many other thinges, hee preached vnto the people.

The euangelistes reported the same wordes of the Baptist. In this one thing Luke is more plentifull, in that the first declareth vpon what occasion this Sermon was made: namely, because it was in daunger least the people through a false opinion should giue the honour due to Christ, to him. Therefore that hee might speedily take away the occasion of the errour, he openly iustifieth that he is not Christ, & so putteth a difference betweene himselfe and Christ, that hee might giue him his right. And this hee doth willingly, that he might deliuer his disciples to Christ from hand (as they say) to hand: but hee preuenteth it the speedilyer, least by holding his peace the longer, hee might confirme the errour of the people.

When hee sayth that a stronger then hee shall come, he meaneth one endued with a farre other power and dignitie, in respect of whom hee himselfe is to be brought into order. And he useth common phraikes, wherwith hee so extolleth the glory of Christe, that in comparision of him, hee declarcth that hee himselve is nothing. This yet is the chiefe, that he accounteth Christe the authour of the spirituall baptisme, and that he is the minister onely of the outward. And it seemeth to bee an answer to a secret obiection, if peradventure any shoulde obiect to what ende belonged that baptisme, which he tooke to him selfe for it were not a matter of light weight, to bring any thing into the Church of God, but especially to professe a newe kinde of instruction which should bee more perfect then the law of God: therefore hee answereth that he taketh nothing in hand rashly, that yet hee was the minister of the outward seale, which diminished nothing frō the power and glory of Christ, whereby wee gather that his purpose was not to distinguish his baptisme from that, which Christ commaunded to his disciples, and whose perpetuall vse he willed to flourish in his Church. Neyther doth he appose the visible signe, to the other signe, but comparing the persons of the Lorde and of the seruaunt together, he teacheth what is proper to the Lord, and what is to be attributed to the seruant. Neither let that opinion hinder vs, which nowe long ago was spread euery where, that the baptisme of Iohn doth differ from ours: but wee must learne to iudge by the matter it selfe rather then by the errour of men. And truly the comparision which they imagine should be too absurd: for thereby it followeth that the holy Ghost shoulde bee giuen at this day by the ministers: againe it shoulde follow that the baptisme of Iohn was a dead signe, and voyde of all power. Thirdly, it shoulde follow, that wee had not a baptisme common to Christe and to vs, seeing it sufficiently appeareth, that by this seale he sanctifieth that fellowship, which he vouchsafeth to haue with vs, while that in his owne body he consecrated baptisme. Therefore here is to be holden that, which I sayde before, that Iohn here simply discerneth the person of Christe, from himselve and all other ministers of baptisme, that the Lorde might bee aboute the seruauntes. And here is gathered a generall doctrine, what are the duties of men in baptisme, and what is proper to the sonne of God: for the onely administration of the outwade and visible signe is committed to men: but the truth it selfe resteth in the power of Christ alone. The scripture doth sometime improperly asigne that to men, which Iohn here challengeth to Christe alone, and affirmeth that belongeth not to men: but then the scripture waigeth not what specially man hath of himselve, but simply teacheth the power and the profit of the signes, and how God worketh with his spirit through the same. But here is a distinction made betwene Christ & his ministers, least that which is worthily due to the one, the world shoulde wickedly giue to the other: as it is not more bent to any thing, thē to adorne the creatures with those things that belong to God. And this obseruation shal helpe vs out of many difficultes we know how great iars there are in our age about the vse and efficacy of the signes al which may be answered, that the whole institutiō of the Lord comprehendeth the authour himselve, & the power of the spirit, together with the figure, and the minister: but whereas the minister is compared with the Lord, that the Lord may haue all, & the ministers brought to nothing.

11. with the holy Ghoste, and with fire. It is demaunded why Iohn also sayd not, that it is onely Christ, which washeth our soules with his blood. Namely Namely, because that the washing also it selfe is wrought by the power of the spirite, it was sufficient by the onely name of the spirite to expresse the whole effect of baptisme. And the meaning is plaine, that Christe alone doth giue what grace so euer the outward Baptisme doth figure, because that he sprinkleth the consciences with his blood, and he himselfe mortifieth the oldeman, and giueth the spirit of regeneration. The word Fire is added in stead of an Epithyte, and is applyed to the spirit, because that it so purgeth our filthinesse, as golde is tryed in the fire: As Iohn 3. 5. metaphorically calleth it water.

MA T. 12. Which hath his fanne. In the former sentence Iohn preached of the grace of Christe, that the Iewes mighte giue themselves to him to bee renewed: nowe also he speaketh of iudgement, that hee might strike a feare into the contemners. For sith many hypocrites doe proudly refuse the grace of Christ offered them, it is also necessary to pronounce vnto them that vengeance which remaineth for them: for this cause Iohn doth here describe Christe as a seuerer iudge against the vnbeleeuers. And this order of teaching must be obserued of vs, that the hypocrites may know, that they shall not goe vnpunished which reiect Christ, that they being raised out of their sluggishnes may begin to feare him as a reuenger, whom they haue despised as the authour of saluation. Also it is not to bedoubted but that Iohn would teach what Christ would worke through his Gospel. Therefore the preaching of the Gospell is a fanne: because that before the Lord sith vs, the whole worlde is full of confusion, euery man seeketh to please himselfe, and the good are mixed with the euill, and last of all it pleaseth them to wallow in chaffe. But where Christ cometh fourth with his Gospel, while hee reprooueth the consciences, & citeth to the tribunall seate of God, the chaffe is fanned away, which before couered the most part of the floore. And though the Gospell purgeth every man from chaffe, yet Iohn here compareth the reprobate to chaffe, and the faithfull to wheate. Furthermore, the floore is not taken for the worlde (as some imagine) but for the Church: for it is to be noted to whom Iohn speaketh. When the Iewes were list vp with the bare tite, Iohn warneth them that they doe foolishly to be proud, because that they possesse a place for a time in the Church of God, out of the which they were shortly to bee throwne as chaffe out of the floore. In this maner he reprehendeth the corrupt state of the Church: because that it was full of huskes, weedes, and other filthy thinges, but was presently to bee purged with the liuely voyce of the Gospell. But howe is Christ sayd to purge the chaffe from the wheate, who can find nothing in men but meere chaffe? The answer is easie, the Elect are made into wheate, that they being taken from the chaffe, may bee gathered into the barne. But Christ began this cleansing, and daily goeth forward with the same, yet he shall not fully performe the same before the latter day: therefore Iohn calleth vs thither. But we must remeber that the faithfull now at this day through hope do enter into the garner of the Lord, that there at the length in deede they may haue an eternall seate. And the reprobate nowe through their guiltinesse do conceiue a heat of that fire, the perfect burning whereof, they at the last day shall feele. I know that many haue subtilly disputed of the eternall fire, wherein the wicked shall bee tormented after the iudgement: but it may be gathered out of many places of the scripture, that it is a metaphoricall kind of speaking. For if there be appointed a reall or meteriall fire (as they call it) then must there also bee added brimstone, and a fanne to kindle it. because that there is mention made of them both in Isaia, chap. 30. 33. Certainly there is no other maner of fire, then worme: for if by the consent of all, it is receiued that there is a metaphore in the name of worme, then is the same to be thought of fire. Wherefoe letting passe the speculations wherein vaine men weary theselues without profit, let it suffice vs to vnderstand, that with these maner of speeches, for the rudenesse of our capacitie, is that horrible torment noted, which at this day canne neither be conceiued in mans vnderstanding, nor expressed in wordes.

Matthew. 3.

13. Then came Iesus from Galile to Iordan, vnto Iohn to be baptised of him.

14. But Iohn put him backe saying: I haue need to be baptised of thee, & comest thou to me

15. Then Iesus answering, said to him: let be now: for thus it becometh to fulfil all righteousnesse, so he suffered him.

16. And Iesus when he was baptised, came streight out of the water, & lo the heauens were opened vnto him, and Iohn saw the spirit of God descending like a doue, & lighting vpon him.

17. And lo a voyce came fro heauen, saying: This is my beloued son, in who I am wel pleased.

18. To be baptised of him.

Marke. 1.

9. And it came to passe in those dayes, that Iesus came from Nazareth a cittie of Galile, and was baptised of Iohn in Iordan.

10. And as soone as hee was come out of the water, Iohn sawe the heauens clouen in twaine, and the holy Ghoste descending vpon him like a Doue

11. Then there was a voyce from heauen, saying: thou art my beloued sonne in whom I am well pleased.

Luke. 3.

21. Now is came to passe as all the people were baptised, & that Iesus was baptised, and did praye, that the heauens opened.

22. And the holy Ghost came downe in a bodily shape like a Doue vpon him, and there was a voyce fro heauen, saying: Thou art my beloued sonne in thee I am wel pleased.

33. And Iesus himself began to be about thirty yeare of age.

To what end the sonne of God would be baptised, we doe partly gather by his antwerc. First there is a special reason brought why he was baptised as we are, that the faithfull might more certainly be perswaded that they are grafted into his body, and buried with him through baptism. But the end which he proposeth here, is larger: for so it becometh to fulfill all righteousnesse. The word righteousnesse doth often signifie as much in the scripture as the oldeuening of the law. And so this place may be expounded, that he became Christ, in that he willingly submitted himselfe to the law to performe the same in every point. Yet I had rather take the same more simply in this maner, as if Christ should haue sayde, omit now to speake of my dignitie: for the question is not, which of vs two excelleth other, but we must rather looke what our calling requireth, and what is enioyned vs of God the father: for this was the generall cause why Christ was baptised, that he might performe obedience to his father, and the speciall cause was, that he in his owne body might consecrate baptism, that it might be common to vs with him.

14. I haue neede to be baptised of thee. It is certaine that Iohn knewe Christ to be not only a notable prophet as many do foolishly dream, but for the son of God as he was. Otherwise he should haue bin iniurious to God submitting his holy calling to a mortall man. But howe hee knew this, let the readers learne out of the 1. cha 15. of Iohn. And this was a probable cause of refusall, that Christ had no need of baptisme: but in this doth Iohn faile, that he considereth not that he demãdeth baptisme for others sakes. Therefore Christ cõmandeth him to consider what belongeth to him that occupieth the place of a seruant. because that voluntary subiection doth derogate nothing from his glory. And although in that so great a man some part of his office was hid for a time: yet that periculer error should not hinder the Baptist, but that rightly & lawfully he should haue executed his office. By which example we are taught, that they which haue an office inioyned thẽ of the Lord, may not do any thing rashly for any reuelation, though at the first they do not vnderstand euery thing annexed to their office, or depending vpon the same. His modestie is also to be noted, that he ceasing frõ his own opinion, doth presently obey Christ. 16. Lo the heauens were opened. The opening of the heauens is somtime taken for the manifestation of the heauenly glory, and here also it signifieth a diuision of the visible heauen, so that Iohn might see somewhat aboue the planets & the stars. for the meaning of Markes words cannot be other, who saith that he saw the heauens clouen in twain, But more narrowly to inquire what maner of diuision this was it doth neither appertaine much to the mater, neither doth it profit: for it is sufficient to know, that this was a token of the presence of God. Further, when the Euangelists say that Iohn sawe the holy Ghost, it is probable that the heauens were especially opened for his cause, though I repugn it not, but that Christ also as he was man, was made more certaine of his calling. And to this purpose the words of Luke seeme to tend, when he saith: that while Christ praied, the heauens opened: for although he poured out his praers alwaies for the profit of others: yet he had need as he was man, seeing he was to fight so hard a battell, to be armed with a singular power of the spirit. But here arise 2. questions. The first is, why the spirit then descended vpon Christ, which was in him beefore. This question is answered by the place of Isai 61. 1. which is entreated of in another place. The spirit of the Lord vpon me, therefore hath the Lord annointed me, to preach glad tidings to the poore he hath sent me. Although Christ wonderfully excelled with a singular grace of the spirite, yet he kept himselfe at home as a priuate man, vntill he was brought forth by his father. Therefore now when the appointed time is come wherein he should prepare himselfe to fulfill the office of a redeemer, he is indued with a new power of the spirite, and that not so much for his sake as for others. For this was done of purpose, that the faithfull mighte honour and reuerently imbrace his diuine power, and that the infirmitie of the flesh should not be contemned in him. That same also was the cause why he deferred his baptisme to the 30. yeare of his age. Baptisme was a beginning of the Gospell, and therefore together with the preaching of the Gospell it began. And Christ preparing himselfe to preach the Gospell, was by Baptisme as well entred into his office, as instructed by the holy spirit. The holy spirit therefore appeared vnto Iohn descending vpon Christ, to admonish that nothing carnall or earthly, should be sought for in Christ, but that he came from heauen as a diuine man in whom the power of the holy spirite raigneth.

Wee certainly know him to be God manifested in the flesh, but in the person of a seruant, and in his humane nature there is also a celestially power to be considered. The seconde question is, why the spirite appeared in the likenesse of a Doue, rather then of fire : whose answer dependeth of an analogie or similitude of a thing signified with the figure. We know what the Prophet Esay attributeth to Christ, chap. 42. 3. A brused reede shall he not breake, smoking flaxe shall he not quench, hee shall not crie, nor his voyce shall be heard. For this gentlenes of Christ, wherein he louingly and gently calleth, and daily biddeth sinners to the hope of saluation, the holy spirite descended vpon him in likenesse of a Doue. And in this signe there is a notable pledge of most sweete comfort giuen vnto vs, that we should not feare to come vnto Christ, who cometh forth vnto vs not with a fearefull power of the spirite, but endued with a louing and pleasant grace. Hee sawe the holy spirite: Namely Iohn: for it presently followeth that the spirite descended vpon Christ. Now here ariseth the third question, how Iohn could see the spirite: I answer, seeing the spirite of God is spread in euery place, and filleth the heauen and the earth, a descending is vnproperly attributed to it. The same is to be accounted of the light, for although in it selfe it is inuisible, yet it is sayd to be scene, where as there is shewed some signe of his presence. Iohn seeth not the essence of the spirite, which falleth not vnder the sense of the eye, neyther did hee see the power it selfe, which is not comprehended by humane sense, but onely by the vnderstanding of faith: but he seeth the likenesse of a Doue, vnder the which God shewed the presence of his spirite. Therefore it is a Metonymicall kinde of speech, wherein the name of a spirituall thing is giuen to a visible signe. For as they do foolishly & preposterously vrge the letter, that they might include the signified thing in the signe, so it is to be noted that in these kindes of speaking is noted a coniunction of the thing with the signe. According to this meaning the bread of the holy supper is called the body of Christe: because it testifieth that it is truly giuen to vs for foode. Yet that withall is to be remembred which I now touched, there must not be imagined a descention of the thing signified, that it should be sought in the signe, as though it were there locally included: but this one thing ought enough, and more then enough to suffice vs: that the Lord by his secret power will performe whatsoeuer he hath promised vs by figures. Many also rather curiously, then profitably, doe demaund whether this Doue were a perfect body or but a ghoist. Though that the wordes of LVKE seeme to affirme that it was not the substance of a body, but onely a likenesse, yet least any man should thereby take occasion of quarelling, I leaue it as I find it.

17. A voice from heauen. That voice did sound out of that diuision of the heauens, whereof mention is made beefore: that thereby his maiestic might the more certainly be manifested vnto him. Also when Christ came openly to execute the office of a mediator, he was set frō the father with this testimony to vs that we hauing this pledg of our adoption, might without fear call god himselfe our father. The title of a sonne doeth truly & naturally belong to Christ alone: but yet the sonne of God was shewed in our flesh, that that one which the father hath by his owne right, might also obtaine the same for vs. Wherefore

God bringing forth Christ a mediator for vs, with this title of sonne, he declarereth that he will be a father to vs all. To the same purpose appertaineth the Epithyte of beloued, for that we of our selues being hated of God, it is necessary that his fatherly loue should flow vnto vs by Christ. And the best interpreter of this place, is Paule to the Ephesians, chap. 1. 6. when he sayth that we haue obtained fauour in his beloued son, that we might be beloued of God. The which is also more fully expressed in this clause. In whom I am well pleased. For he doth declare that the loue of God doth so rest in Christ, that he wil poure forth himselfe from him vnto vs all, & not to vs onely, but also to the angels themselves: not that they needed a reconciliation, which neuer were at discord with God: but because that they do not perfectly adioyne vnto God, but by the benefite of the head. For the which cause he is also called the first borne of euery creature, Col. 1. 15. & againe Paul in an other place teacheth that he came, that he might gather what things soeuer, are in heauen and in earth, Col. 1. 20.

Matthew. 4.

Marke 1.

Luke 4.

1. Then was Iesus led aside of the spirite into the wildernes, to be tempted of the deuill.

2. And when hee had fasted forty dayes and forty nightes, hee was afterward hungry.

3. Then came to him the tempter, and sayd: if thou be the sonne of God, commaund that these stoues bee made bread.

4. But he answering, sayd: It is written, men shall not liue by breade onely, but by euery worde that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

12. And immediatly the spirite drineth him into the wildernes.

13. And he was there in the wildernes forty dayes and was tempted of Satan: hee was also with the wilde beasts, and the angels ministred vnto him.

1. And Iesus full of the holy Ghost returned from Iordan, and was led by the spirit into the wildernes.

2. And was there fortye dayes tempted of the deuill, and in those dayes hee did eate nothing: but when they were ended, he was hungry.

3. Then the deuill sayd vnto him: if thou be the Sonne of God commaund this stone that is bee made bread.

4. But Iesus answered him, saying: It is written, That man shall not liue by bread onely, but by euery word of God.

1. Then Iesus was led aside. Christ went a side into the desert for two causes: First that after the fast of forty dayes as a new man, or rather a heauenly, hee might come forth to execute his office: Then that he should not enter into so hard and notable an office, except he were tryed with temptations, as if hee should so lay the foundation of his first exercise. Therefore let vs know that Christ by the direction of the spirite was led from the company of men, that the great doctour of the Church, and embassadour of God should come abroade as one rather sent from heauen, then taken out of some little towne and common sort of men. So God vsed Moses, when by his hand hee would deliuer his lawe, hee tooke him into the mount Sinai, and being led aside from the sight of the people, he kept him as it were in a holy sanctuary. Exod. 24. 12. It becometh Christe to be adorned with no fewer or lesse tokens of diuine grace and signes of power then Moses, least the maiesty of the Gospell should be bee lesse then of the lawe: for if the Lorde thought that doctrine which was the minister of death worthy of rare honour, howe much more honour doeth the doctrine of life deserue? And if the shadowed figure of GOD hadde so greate light, then with howe perfecte brightnesse is it meeete to haue his countenance beautified, which appeareth in the Gospell? This same was the ende of his fast: for Christe abstayned not from meate and drinke, that hee might giue an instruction of temperance: but that hee might thereby haue the more authoritie, while hee being exempt from the common sorte of men, doeth come forth as an Angell from heauen, and not as a man from the earth, For I beseech you what maner of vertue was there in that abstinencie, not to eate meate, whome no hunger moued to desire the same? For it is certaine, and the Euangelistes doe plainly pronounce, that hee no otherwise bare the hunger, then if he had not bene cloathed with flesh. Wherefore it were a meere folly to establish a Lenten fast, as they call it, as an imitation of Christ. For there is no greater reason why wee at this day should follow the example of Christ, then had in times past the holy Prophets, and other fathers vnder the law to imitate the fast of Moses. And wee know that this neuer came in their minde. God almost for the same cause continued Eliah fasting in the mount, because he was the minister that should restore the law. They saine themselues to be followers of Christe, which through the Lent do daily fast: that is, they so stuffe their belly at dinner, that vnto supper time they easily passe the time without meat. What likenesse haue they with the sonne of God? Greater was the sparing of the elders: but they also had no affinitie with the fast of Christe, no more the abstinence of men commeth neere to the hunger of Angels. Adde also that neither Christ nor Moses did yearly keepe a solemne fast, but both of them did it onely once in their whole life. And I would to God that they had onely played like apes with these follies. But it was a wicked & a detestable scorning of Christ, in that they attempted in their fained fasting to frame themselues after his doing. It is most vile superstition that they perswade theselues that it is a worke meritorious, and to be some part of godlinesse and diuine worshippe. But this contumely is not to bee borne: first against God, that they obscure his notable myracle. Then against Christ because they taking his glory from him, decke themselues with his spoyle. Thirdly against the Gospell, from the which no small credite is taken, if this fast of Christ bee not acknowledged to bee a seale of the same. God shewed a singular myracle when he kept his sonne from the necessitie of eating, and doe they not in a madde boldnesse spit at GOD, when they affect to doe the same by their owne power? Christ was noted with diuine glory by his fasting. And shall hee bee spoyled of his glory and brought in order, when as all mortall men shall make theselues his fellowes? this was the end which God appointed to Christes fast, that it should be a teale to the Gospell: They that apply to any other vie: doe they not take so much from the dignity of the Gospell? Therefore let this counterfetting cease, which peruerteth the counsell of God, and the whole order of his workes. But of feastes in their kinde I speake not, (which I wish were more common among vs, so that the same were pure) for it was meeete to shewe for what purpose Christ fasted.

Also Sathan tooke occasion of his hunger to tempt Christ, as a little after shall be shewed more at large, now it must be generally seene why God would haue him tempted. For the wordes of Mathew and Marke doe found that hee was brought into this combate by the determinate counsell of God, which say that hee was led by the spirite for this cause into the desert. I doubt not but that God in the person of his Sonne, would shewe as in a most cleare glasse how deadly and importune an enemie of mans saluation Sathan is. For whereof cometh it to passe that hee shoulde assaile Christ so sharply, and shoulde poure out all his forces and violence against him at this time which the Euangelistes note, but because hee sawe him at the commaundement of his Father, prepared for the redemption of mankinde? therefore hee then resisted in the person of Christe, our saluation, as hee deadly persecuteth dayly the ministers of the same redemption, whereof Christ was the author.

But it is to bee noted withall, that the sonne of God did willingly endure those temptations, whereof it is now entreated, and that hee striue with the Deuill as it were hand to hand, that by his victorie he might get vs the triumph. Therefore as oft as Sathan assaileth vs, let vs remember that his violence can no other way be sustained and driuen backe, then by opposing this shield against him, as for that cause the sonne of God suffered himselfe to bee tempted, that he might stand betwene vs so oft as Sathan stirreth any exercise of temptations against vs. Therefore when hee led a priuate life at home, wee doe not reade that hee was tempted: but when hee vndertooke the office of a Redeemer, then hee in the common name of his Church came into the combate.

Then if Christ was tempted as in the publike person of all the faithfull, let vs know that these temptations which befall vnto vs, are not by fortune, or stirred at the pleasure of Sathan without the permission of God: But that the spirite of God, gouerneth these conflicts, whereby our faith is exercised, whereby is gathered a certaine hope, that God who is the cheife and great captaine & gouernour, is not vnmindefull of vs, but that hee will helpe vs in our streights wherein hee seeth vs ouermatched.

The wordes of Luke seeme somewhat otherwise, That Iesus full of the holy Ghost, returned from Iordan, in which wordes hee signifieth, that hee was then armed with a more plentifull grace and power of the spirit, that he might be the more strong to endure such brunts, for the spirit did not in vaine descēd vpon him in a visible shape.

And it is sayde before, that the grace of GOD did the more shine outte, because that the cause of our saluation so required. The same Euangeliste and Marke, doe teach that the beginning of his temptations was sooner for Sathan assaulted him fortie dayes also beefore his hunger: but the especiall and most notable conflictes are heere declared: that wee may knowe that Sathan beeing ouercome in many conflictes, did more sharply inuade, and layde on more strongly with his whole force, if it might be, that at length he might oppresse him that yet was inuincible For as euery man is more excrucied in spirituall battailes, so much more vehemently doth God suffer him to be stricken. Wherefore let vs learne neuer to be wearied, vntill wee haue performed the whole course of our warfare, and come to the marke. But at the first sight it seemeth to bee absurde that Christ should be subiect to temptations: for that menne may bee tempted, there must bee sinne and infirmitie: I answere, first that Christ had taken our infirmities, but without sinne. Then it did no more derogate from his glory that he was tempted, then that he tooke vpon him our flesh. For on this condition was hee made man, that he might take vpon him our affections together with the flesh. But all the difficultie doth consist in the former clause, how Christ could be compassed about with our infirmitie, that he might be tempted of Sathan, and yet be pure and free from all sinne. But the answere shall not be hard, if we remember the whole nature of Adam, when as yet the pure image of God shined there, & yet was subiect to temptations. How many corporall affections there are in man, so many occasions of tempting them doth Sathan take. And this is worthily accounted the infirmitie of humane fleshe, to haue the senses moued with the things obiect: but such as was not faultie of it selfe, except that corruption had beene added, whereby it commeth to passe, that Sathan doeth neuer assault vs, but that he giueth some wound, or at least doth hurt vs with some prick. In this point the integritie of nature hath seperate Christ from vs, yet there is no meane condition to be imagined to be in him, as was in Adam, to whom it was onely giuen a possibilitie not to sinne. And we know that Christ was armed with that power of the spirit, that he could not bee pearced with the weapons of Sathan. Then came the tempter. The spirit of purpose doth giue this name to Sathan, that the faithfull might thereby the more diligently take heede of him. Whereby we also gather that temptations which prouoke vs to euill, come not but from him. For that in Gen. 22. 3. Deut. 13. 3. God is sayd to tempt, it belongeth to another ende, that is, that he might trie their faith, or might take vengeance of the ynbeleeuers, or that hee might laye their hypocrisie open, which obey not the truth from the heart

M A T. 3. That these stones. Heere also the olde writers played with weake deuices: for they say the first temptation was of gluttonie, the second of ambition, the third of couetousnesse. But it is ridiculous, if any man that is hungry desireth meate, that he might satisfie nature, to referre that to the intemperancie of the throat. Further, what dainties doe they imagine to be in bread, that he should bee accounted too delicate, that is content (as they say) with drie bread? But that wee lose no wordes in vaine, the onely answere of Christ doth sufficiently declare that Sathans purpose was otherwise: Truely the Son of GOD was not a rude and vnskilfull champion, that hee knewe not howe to auoyde the blowes of his enemy, that being stricken on the right side, hee should rashly hold his shield to the left. Therefore if Sathan had endeuoured to driue him to the delightes of gluttonie, he had the testimonies of scripture readie, wherewith he might driue him away. But he vttered none such, but takeih this sentence, men liue not by breade, but by the secrete blessing of GOD, whereby wee gather that Sathan straightway assaulted the faith of Christ, Christ, that the same being extinguished, hee might driue Christ to vnlawfull and wicked wayes to seeke his bread. And then doth Sathan wound to death, when he attempteth to bring this to passe, that we distrusting God, should otherwise prouide for our selues, then by his word is lawfull. Therefore the meaning of the wordes is: sith thou seest thy selfe forsaken of God, necessarie compelleth thee that thou shouldest prouide for thy selfe. Therefore get thee meate, which God prouideth not for thee. And although he pretend the diuine power of Christ, whereby those stones shoulde bee turned into bread: yet this one thing he seeketh, that Christ departing from the word of God, infidelitie should follow whatsoeuer he should say. Therefore Christe answereth aptly, man shall not liue by bread onely, as if he should say: thou commandest mee to seeke some remedy, whereby I might helpe my selfe otherwise then God doth permit: But this were a point of distrust, without all reason, so long as God promiseth that hee will nourish me. Thou Sathan tiest his grace to bread. But hee contrarily witnesseth, if all meates were wanting, his onely blessing sufficeth to feede vs. Now we vnderstand what kinde of temptation this was: namely that wherewith Sathan doth assault vs dayly. For the sonne of God woulde not subiect himsele to an vnaccustomed assault, but hee hadde fightes common with vs, that we being defended with the same armours, should not doubt but that the victorie is in our hand.

4 It is written, man shall not liue by bread onely. This is first woorthy to be noted, that Christ vseth the scripture for his shielde. For this is the right maner of fighting, if wee desire to obtaine the victorie. For Paule doeth not in vaine call the word of God the spirituall sword, & armeth vs with the shield of faith. Ephe. 6. 16. 17. whereby we also gather, that the Papistes, as if they had made a covenant with Sathan, gaue ouer soules to be destroyed at his pleasure, when they maliciously suppressing the scripture, spoyled the people of God of their weapons, by the which they coule onely defend their sauiation. They that willingly cast from them this armour, and doe not dayly exercise themselves in the schoole of God, are worthy euery moment to be slaine of Sathan, to whom they betray themselves vnarmed. And truly there is no other cause why Sathan is so weakly withstood, and that euery where hee taketh away so many, but because that God reuengeth their slouthfulnesse and contempt of his word. Now the testimonie of Moses is to be sifted, which Christ citeth. Some wrongfully wrest the same to a spirituall life, as if hee had sayde, that the soules are not nourished with visible bread, but with the worde of GOD. And that is true in it selfe: but Moses had a further respecte. Deut. 8. 3. For when they wanted breade, hee declareth that the people had Manna, an extraordinarie maner of meate: that by this instruction it might bee witnessed for euer, that the life of men is not included in bread, but to depend vpon the pleasure and good will of God. Therefore word is not heere taken for doctrine, but for a decree which God hath published for the preservation of the order of nature, & nourishing his creatures: for he casteth not men from him, when he hath made them, but on that condition he giueth them life, that hee might dayly sustayne that which hee hath once giuen.

Heb. 1. 3.

Sofayth the Apottle, all things are sustained by his mightie word: that is, the whole world is preserued, and euery part of the same doth remain in his estare by his will and decre, whose power is spread in euery place both aboue and below. Therefore though wee eate bread, yet the maintenance of life is not to be attributed to the power of bread, but to the secret grace which God giueth to bread to feede vs. Whereof also followeth an other lesson, that God which now vseth bread for our nourishment, can by other meanes as oft as hee shall thinke good, prouide that we may liue. Also in this sentence of Moses their beastlines is condemned, which account of fulnes and abundance as their life. Furthermore, distrust and vngodly carefulnesse is reprobued, which driueth vs to seeke vnlawfull meanes. And to this purpose is the answere of Christ properly directed: for foode and other maintenances of this present life, we must to trust God, that none of vs passe the bounds prescribed by him. If that Christ accounted it vnlawfull, to make bread of stones besides the commandement of god: it is much lesse lawfull to get thy liuing by deceits, thefts, violence & murders

Mat. 4.

Marke 1.

Luke 4.

5. Then the deuill took him vp into the holy citie, & set him on a pinnacle of the temple.

6. And sayd vnto him: if thou be the Sonne of God, cast thy selfe downe: for it is written that he shall giue his Angels charge ouer thee, and with their handes they shall lift thee vp, least at any time thou shouldest dash thy foote against a stone.

7. Iesus said vnto him: It is written againe. thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

8. Againe the deuill tooke him vp into an exceeding high mountaine, & shewed him all the kingdoms of the world, & the glory of them.

9. And said vnto him: all these will I giue thee, if thou wilt fall downe & worship me

10. Then sayd Iesus vnto him. Auoide Sathan: for it is written. Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, & him onely shalt thou serue.

11. Then the deuill lefte him, and behold the Angels came and worshipped him.

5. Then the Deuill tooke him vp into an high mountaine, and shewed him all the kingdoms of the world in the twinkling of an eye.

6. And the deuill sayd vnto him: all this power will I giue thee, and the glory of those kingdoms: for that is deliuered to me: & to whom soeuer I will I giue it.

7. If thou therefore wilt worship mee, they shall be all thine.

8. But Iesus answered him, and sayd. Hence from me Sathan: for it is written. Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him alone thou shalt serue.

9. Then hee brought him to Ierusalem, and set him on a pinnacle of the Temple, & sayd to him. If thou be the sonne of GOD, cast thy selfe downe from hence.

10. For it is written, that he will giue his Angels charge ouer thee to keepe thee.

11. And with their handes they shall lift thee vppe, least at any time thou shouldest dash thy foote against a stone.

12. And Iesus answered and said vnto him: It is sayd thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

13. And when the Deuill had ended all his temptation, hee departed from him for a season.

13. And the Angels ministered vnto him

§ Then

5. Then the deuill tooke him. It is no great matter that Luke doth rehearse that temptation in the second place, which Matthew placeth in the last place. For it was not the purpose of the Euangelistes, so to set downe the order of the history, as they would alwayes exactly obserue the poynte of time: but to gather the sum of the thinges, so as they might propose in a glasse or a table, those thinges which are most profitable to be knowne of Christ. Therefore let it suffice vs to know, that Christe was tempted 3. manner of wayes. But which was either the second or the third conflict, there is no cause why we should curiously seeke. In the exposition I will follow the text set downe by Matthew. It is sayd that Christ was set vpon a pinacle of the temple. But it is demanded whether he was caried vp on high in deed, or whether it was done by a vision. Many do boldly affirme that it was a true and a reall cariage of his body (as they say) for they thinke it a thing vnworthy that Christ should yeeld himselfe in danger to Sathans sleights. But this obiection is easily wiped away, that there is no absurditie in the permission of God, and voluntary subiection of Christe, so that we thinke not that he suffered any thing within, that is, in minde & soule. And that which followeth after, that all the kingdomes of the worlde were sette in the sight of Christe, and that also which Luke wryteth, that hee was caried far in the twinkling of an eye, doth rather belong to a vision, yet in a doubtful matter, & which without daunger a man may be ignorant of, I had rather suspend my iudgement, then giue the contentious occasion of quarelling. Also it may bee that the 2. temptation did not presently without distance of time followe the first, nor the third the seconde, but is more probable, that there was some distance, though by the woordes of Luke it is gathered that there was no long space betweene: for hee sayth that Christ hadde rest giuen him for a season. But this appertaineth much to the matter, to knowe what Sathan went about in this kinde of temptation, which is to bee learned by the answere of Christ, as I sayd a little before. Christ, that he might meete with the subtiltie of the enemy, and beate backe his force, holdeth out for a buckler, God is not to bee tempted. Whereby it appeareth that the deceites of the enemies tended to this purpose, that he lifting himselfe vp aboue measure, shoulde rashly rise vpe against God. First Sathan tryed to drawe Christ to desperation, because hee wanted meate and ordinary meanes: nowe hee procurerh him to a vaine and proude confidence, that neglecting the meanes which were at hande, hee should throw himselfe without necessitie into manifest daunger, and as though hee shoulde leape beyond his boundes. But as it becommeth vs not to despaire, when we are pressed with the want of all things, but that we should depend vpon the assurance of God: so it is not lawfull for vs to set vp the combs, that wee should lift vp our selues higher then God permitteth. Now we vnderstand that the purpose of sathan was: namely, that Christe making a triall of his diuinitie, should with a foolish and a wicked rashnes rise vp against God.

6. Hee will giue his Angelles charge ouer thee. This malice of Sathan is to bee noted, that hee abuseth the testimony of the Scripture, that might make the life of Christ deadly, and tourne his bread to poyson. For hee ceaseth not to vse the same craft daily. And the sonne of God (who is a common exāple of al the godly) would in his own person suffer this conflict, that they all might learne diligently to take heede to themselves, least vnder a false pretence of the scripture, they fall into the snares of Sathan. And it is not to be doubted, but that the Lorde graunteth so much liberty to our enemy, that we should not rest in securitie, but be rather bent to keepe our watches. But let vs not be like to ouerthwart men which reiect the scripture, as if it might be turned euery way, because that the deuill abuteth the same: so for the same cause we must abstaine from meates, least wee be poysoned. Sathan prophaneth the worde of God, and indeuoureth to wrest the same to our destruction, but seeing it was ordayned of God for our saluation, shall the counsell of God bee to no effect, except that through our slouthfulness, the healthful vse of the same should perish vnto vs? But this matter needeth no long disputation: only let vs see what Christ doth teach vs by his example, which wee must follow as a certaine rule. Doth he giue place to sathan, wickedly wresting the scripture? Dooth he suffer the scripture wherewith he armed himselfe before, to be shaken away or to be taken from him? Nay by objecting the scripture againe, he mightly ouerthroweth the wicked caull of sathan. Therefore so oft as sathan by his subtilties pretendeth the scripture, & that vngodly men vnder this same pretence shal set vpon vs, that they might circumuent our fayth, let vs borrow weapons for the defence of our fayth, fro no other place then out of the scripture. But though this promise, (He wil giue his Angels charge ouer thee, &c.) doth appertaine to all the faythful, yet it especially belongeth to christ, who as he is the head of the whole Church, so in his owne right he gouerneth the angels & giueth them charge of vs. Wherefore in that, sathan doth not yet deceiue, that by this testimonie hee proueth that the angels were giuen as ministers vnto Christ, that should keepe him and beare him in their handes: but the deceit is this, that he draweth the keeping of angels to a vaine and a rash course, which is then promised to the childre of God, while they keepe themselves within their bounds, & walke in his wayes. If this claue haue any force in it (in all thy wayes) then doth sathan maliciously corrupt and maim the saying of the Prophet, generally & confusedly wresteth the same to wandring and erroneous courses. God commandeth vs to walke in our wayes, & he sayth that his angels shall be our keepers. Sathan pretending the custodie of angels, doth exhort Christ that hee should rashly procure him danger. As if hee should haue sayde: In spite of God thou wilt cast thy selfe to death, the Angels shall defend thy life.

7. It is written thou shalt not tempt the Lorde. Christ answereth most aptly, it is not otherwise to be hoped that God doeth there promise his helpe, then if the faythfull doe modestly cominit themselves to him to be gouerned: for wee cannot otherwise trust his promises, except we obey his commandements. Further, when God is tempted many wayes, yet in this place he is sayd to be tempted, when as we neglecte his meanes which he putteth into our hand. For they which neglect the meanes which God appoynteth, do as if they tryed his power and his strength: As if any should cut away the armes and handes from a man, and after bid him worke. In summe, whoe soeuer desireth to take a tryall of the diuine power, when as it is not necessary, he tempteth God, by bringing his promises to vniust examination.

8. The deuill tooke him into an his mountaine. That is to be had in memory, which which I sayd before, that it came not to passe through the imbecillitie of the nature of Christ, that Sathan held his eyes: but by his free appoyntment and permission. Further, his senses were touched & enticed with the glory of the kingdoms which were set before him, that no inward couetousnesse moued his mind: when as the pleasures of the flesh are caried and do carie vs as wilde beasts to those things that please vs: for Christ had the like sence that we haue, but no disordered appetites. But it was a kinde of temptation, that Christ should aske the inheritance which God promifeth to his children, of any other then of God himselfe. And heere the sacrilegious boldnesse of the Deuill doth bewraye it selfe, in that he taking the gouernment of the earth from God doth vsurpe it to himselfe. All these things (sayth he) are mine, neither can they bee obtayned otherwise then at my hand. And we must dayly striue with this assault, which both all the faithfull doe feele in themselues, and is more euidently seene in the whole life of the vngodly. For though we set al our defences richesse and commodities in the blessing of God: yet our senses prouoke vs therefro, and driue vs to seeke the assistances of Sathan, as if one God were not sufficient. And a great part of the world challenging the right and gouernment of the earth from God, doth imagine to themselues that Sathan is the giuer of al good things. For whereof commeth it, that almost all doe addict themselues to cuill Artes, and thestes, and deceits, but that they ascribe that to Sathan which was the proper tie of God, to enrich with his blessing whome hee pleaseth? They pray with mouth that God would giue them dayly bread, but with the mouth onely. For they make Sathan the cheife, in distributing the richesse of all the world.

10. Auoyde Sathan. Luke hath for it. Goe after mee Sathan. Wherefore some doe stand in vaine vpon that Aduerbe, when it was sayd to Peter: Goe behind, Mathew 16. 23. as if Sathan himselfe heard not the same. But Christ commaundeth him simply to depart. And now he goeth forwardes in the same kinde of defence, holding forth the scripture not as a sheild of bull rushes, but as of right brasse. And hee citeth a testimonie out of the lawe, that one GOD is to be worshipped and serued. Also it is easily gathered by the applying and the circumstance of the place, to what ende the purpose of God belongeth, and what it profiteth. When as the Papiſts doe denieth that onely God is to be worshipped, they shift off this place and such like with a sophisticall Comment. That worship which they call Latria, they grant as due onely to God: but dulia they giue to the dead, and to their bones and their images. But this friuolous distinction of wordes being reiected, Christ doeth challenge a falling downe to worship to God alone. Whereby wee are warned to haue consideration rather of the matter, then of the word, so oft as wee haue to doe with the woorship of God. The Scripture commaundeth to woorship one God. It is to be seene to what ende. If man shall take away any thing from his glory, and giue the same to creatures, it is a sacrilegious violating of the woorshippe of GOD. And it is most euident that wee doe so, when as wee giue to creatures those good things which wee haue receiued, whereof GOD himselfe would bee acknowledged to be the onely authour. But now as religion is properly spirituall, and the outwarde confession of the same appertayneth to the body: So not onely the inward worship is due to God alone, but also the outward testimonie of the same.

11. Then the deuill left him, and behold. Luke expresseth more, namely, when he had ended all the temptation. As if hee should haue sayd that Christ had no rest nor truce giuen him, vntill he w<sup>as</sup> exactly tried with all kind of temptation. He also addeth that he was onely left for a season, that wee might knowe that the rest of his life was not altogether free from temptations, but that the violence of Sathan was restrained by God, that hee should not importunately molest Christ, euen as God vseth to doe with all his. For if sometime hee permitteth them to be more sharply vexed, after he releaseth them somewhat of that great conflict, that they should breath a while, and gather vp their mindes, yet he spareth them not, that they should nourish slothfulnesse, but onely that they should prepare themselues to newe conflicts. That it followeth after that the Angels ministred vnto him: I account it as a comfort, that Christ should feele that God the father had a care of him, and by his mightie ayde should be defended against Sathan. For the desert it selfe might haue increased his greife, when as he being deprived of all cōforts of men, he liued amongst wild beasts which Marke also exprelly noteth. Yet it is not to be thought that Christ was at any time forsaken of the Angels: but that place might be giuen to temptation. So netime the grace of God, though it be present, yet it is hid to the sence and vnderstanding of the flesh.

Mathew. 4.
12. And when Iesus had heard that Iohn was deliuered vp, he returned into Galile.

17. Fro that time Iesus beganne to preach & say: Amend your liues, for the kingdome of heaue is at hand

Marke. 1.

14: Now after that Iohn was committed to prison, Iesus came into Galile, preaching the Gospell of the kingdome of God.

15. And saying: The time is fulfilled, and the kingdome of God is at hand: repent & beleue the Gospell.

Luke. 3.

19. But when Herod the Tetrach was rebuked of Iohn, for Herodias his brother Philips wife, & for al the euils which herod had done
20. Hee added yet this aboue all, that he shut vp Iohn in prison.

Luke. 4.

14. And Iesus returned by the power of the spirite into Galile: and there went a fame of him throughout all the region round about.
15. For he taught in their Synagogues, & was honoured of all men.

L V L E. 19. But Herod the Tetrarch. Onely Luke in this place doth shew the cause why Herod did cast Iohn into prison. Yet Matthew and Marke doe make mention of it in another place. Iosephus in the 18. booke of Antiquities sayth, because Herod feared a tumult of the people and new stirres, hee shut vp Iohn in the tower of Macharontis, because he feared the credit of the man. He sayth that Herodias was not giuen to Phillip (whome hee affirmeth married Salome) but that she was giuen in mariage to another Herod. But because that in this matter he is taken forgetting himselfe, and also he doth not set downe the death of Phillip in his right place, therefore a more certaine troath of the historie isto be sought out of the Euangelistes, and wee must stande to their testimonie,

This is sufficiently knowne, when Herode had the daughter of Areta King of the Arabians in mariage, hee was enamored with the beautie of Herodias.

Herodias his Neece, and by fraud tooke her away. And this iniury hee did to his brother Phillip without punishment: for the same Iosephus witnesseth that he was a man of a gentle and quiet disposition. Also in this history we evidently see what reward remaineth in the world for faythful & bold ministers of the truth, especially where they reprove sinnes. For scarce the hundred man doth admit correction, therefore if they be seuerely touched, they runne forth into madnes. If this pride be found in the most of the common people: no maruell if tyrants doe more sharply rage against them that reprove them, to whom nothing is more bitter then to be brought into order. Againe, in Iohn there shineth a notable example of constancie, wherewith it becometh all godly teachers to be endued: that they shoulde not doubt to prouoke against them great and mighty men, as oft as necessitie shall so require. For he serueth not God sincerely, that maketh acception of persons. Further, when Luke sayth that this euill was added about all the rest: Hee meaneth that his malice was then past hope, and that the sinner is then come to the highest step, when as he is angry with the remedies: and doth not onely refuse correction, but also taketh vengeance vpon him that admonisheth him, as vpon his enemy.

M A T. 12. When Iesus had heard. The history of Iohn seemeth not to agree with these, who witnesseth that Iohn and Christ began the office of teaching both at one time. But it is to be noted that our three Euangelistes do therefore in silence passe ouer that short time, because the course of Iohn was not yet finished, that is the preparation to receiue the Gospell of Christe. And certainly, though Christ within that time executed the office of a teacher, yet he properly began not the preaching of the Gospell, vntill he succeeded Iohn. Wherefore it is no absurditie that the three Euangelistes doe graunt and assigne that time to the ministerie of Iohn, wherein Christ gathered his disciples, as if they should say: the morning passing, the sunne arose. But that speech is to be noted which Luke hath, that Iesus in the power, or by the power of the spirit, came into Galile, for it is to great purpose that we do not imagine any earthly or humane thing in Christ, but that the celestiall and diuine power in him may come into our minde, and occupie our senses.

M A R K E. 14. Preaching the Gospell of the kingdome of God. Matthew seemeth to haue somewhat differing from the other two. For hee sayth that after Christ went into Capernaum, & had left his country Nazareth, then at length hee beganne his preaching: But Luke and Marke doe say that he taught openly in the country. But the answer is easie: For the Aduerbe of time in Matthew ought not onely to be referred to the next clause, but to the whole course of the history. Therefore at his comming into Galile, Christe entred his course. Also the summe of the doctrin as it is deliuered by Matthew, differeth nothing from that which a little before we read, that Iohn vsed. For it consisteth of two partes, repentance and the preaching of grace and saluation. Hee exhorteth the Iewes to conuersion, because the kingdom of God is at hand, that is, because God will take his people into his hand to gouerne them, which is the full and perfect felicitie.

Marke speaketh a little otherwise. The kingdome of God is at hande: Repent and beleue the Gospell: yet in the same sense: for hauing spoken before

of restoring the kingdome of God amongst the Iewes, hee exhorteth to repentance and fayth. Yet it may be demaunded, sith repentance doth depend on the Gospell, why Marke seperateth the same from the doctrine of the Gospell. It may bee answered two wayes. For God sometime so called vs to repentance; so that hee onely commaundeth that the life be changed to better. Afterwardes he sheweth that conuersion and newnesse of life, is the gifte of his spirit, that we may know that we are not onely commaunded that which is our dutie, but that there is together offered the grace and power of obedience. If after this manner we take this which Iohn preached of repentance, the meaning shall bee: the Lorde commaundeth you to turne to him: but because yee cannot doe it by your owne industry, he promifeth the spirit of regeneration. Wherefore it becometh you to embrace this grace by fayth: though the fayth which he requirereth to bee had in the Gospell, ought not to bee restrained to the gift of renouation, But it belongeth especially to the forgienesse of sinnes. For Iohn ioynereth repentance with fayth: because God doth therefore reconcile himselfe to vs, that as a father he may be worshipped of vs in holinesse and righteousnesse. Furthermore, there is no absurditie if wee say that to belecue the Gospell, doth signifie as much as to embrace free righteousnesse. For this special relation betweene fayth and remission of sinnes, is often found in the Scripture: as when he teacheth that we are iustified by fayth. This place may be expounded both wayes, yet let that principle remayne vnshaken, that free saluation is offered vs of God, that being conuerted to him, we should liue to righteousnesse. Therefore hee promising vs mercy, doth call vs to the deniall of the flesh. The Epytheton is to bee noted wherewith Marke adorneth the Gospell: For hereby we learne, that by the preaching of the same, the kingdome of God is erected and established vpon the earth, neyther doth God raigne by any other meanes amongst men. Whereby it also appeareth how miserable the condition of men is without the Gospell.

L V K E. 15. He was honoured of all men. This is namely set downe by Luke, that we might knowe that the diuine power did presently from the beginning shine in Christe, which driue men not as yet infected with a malicious desire of gainfaying, into admiration of him.

Luke. 4.

Matthew

Marke.

16. And hee came to Nazareth where hee had bene brought vpp, (and as his custome was) went into the Synagogue on the Sabbooth day, and stood vpp to reade.

17. And there was deliuered vnto him the booke of the Prophet Esaias, and when hee had opened the booke, he found the place where it was written,

18. The spirite of the Lorde is vpon me, because he hath anoynted me, that I shoulde preach the Gospell to the poore: hee hath sent mee, that I shoulde heale the broken hearted, that I shoulde preach deliuerance to the captiues, & recovering of sight to the blind, that I shoulde set at liberty them that are brused

19. And

19. And that I should preach the acceptable yeere of the Lord.

20. And hee closed vpp the booke, and gaue it againe to the minister, and sate downe: and the eyes of all that were in the Synagogue were fastened on him.

21. Then hee began to say vnto them, This day is the scripture fulfilled in your eares.

22. And all bare witnesse, and wondred at the gracious wordes, which proceeded out of his mouth: & sayd, is not this Iosephes sonne?

16. He came to Nazareth. The Euangelistes doe stand vpon this one thing, that they might shew by what meanes Christ was made known, for which purpose Luke here report. th a thing worthy to be remembred: that is, that he expounding the place of Isaiah, and applying it to the present vse, hee turned the eyes of all men vpon himselfe. When he saith that he came into the Synagogue, according to the custome: wee hereby gather that hee did not onely speake to the people in the streetes and high wayes, but as much as hee might, he obserued the vsuall order of the Church. Also we see vnhall, though the Iewes were degenerate, yet in such confusion of thinges, and in the estate of the Church miserably corrupted, this good thing remayned, that they read the scripture before the people, that thereby they might take occasion of teaching and exhorting. Whereby it also appeareth what was the right and lawfull manner of keeping the Sabboth For God did not therefore command his people to keepe holy dayes, as though that he was simply pleased with their rest: but rather that he might exercise them in meditating his workes. Also because the mindes of men are dim in considering the workes of God, it is necessary that they should be directed by the rule of the scripture: but though Paul numbred the Saboth amongst the shadowes of the law, Coloss. 2. 17. Yet in this poynt we haue like cause to obserue it, as the Iewes hadde, that the people may come together, to heare the word, to publike prayers, & to other exercises of godlinesse: for the which cause the Lords day came in place of the Iewish Saboth. Now, if the times be cōpared, it shal easily appeare out of this present place, that the corruptions of the popish hierarchy are at this day more filthy & more deformed, then they were amongst the Iewes vnder Annas & Cayphas. For the reading of the scripture, which thē was vsed, was not only vnder the pope grown out of vse, but with sword & fire was driuen out of the churches. But that which they song in an vnknown tongue, as it seemed in mockery. Christ rose vp to read, not only that his voyce might bee the better heard, but in signe of reuerence. For this doth the maiesty of the scripture deserue, that the interpreters of it shoulde professe themselves to come modestly and reuerently to handle the same.

17. Hee founde the place. It is not to bee doubted but that Christe of purpose chose this place. Some thinke that it was euen offered to him by GOD: but sith hee had graunted him a free election, I do rather referre it to his iudgement, that hee chose this place before others. Also Isaiah prom miseth in that place, that after the captiuitie of Babylon there shoulde yett bee some witnesses of the fauour of God, which should gather the people from destruction, and out of the darkenesse of death, and should with a spirituall power restore the Church afflicted with so many calamities. But because that redemption was to be proclaymed in the name & authoritie of Christ alone: therefore he speaketh in the singular number, and after a sort taketh vpon him the person of Christe, that he might the more effectually stirre vp the mindes of the godly to an assured trust. It is certaine that the words which are here set downe cannot properly be applyed to any, but to Christe alone, and that for two causes. First, because that hee alone was endued with the fulnes of the spirite, that hee might be a witness and a messenger of our reconciliation with God (by which reason Paul assigneth that peculiarly to him, which is common to all the ministers of the Gospell, Ephe. 2.17. that is, that they should preach peace to as many as are nigh and a farre off:) then because he onely worketh and performeth by the power of his spirit, whatsoeuer good things are promised.

18. The spirit of the Lorde vpon mee. This is therefore sayde that wee might know that Christ aswell in himselfe, as in his ministers doth not the worke of man, or any priuate busines, but that he was sent of God to restore the saluation of the Church. For he testifieth that he doth nothing by the motion & counsell of man, but all things by the gouernement of the spirite, that the fayth of the godly might bee grounded vpon the authoritie and power of God. That clause that next followeth, Because he hath annoynted me, is added to expound the former. For many doe falsly boast that they haue the spirit of God, when they are without the gift of the spirite. But Christ by the annoynting, as by the effect proueth that hee is endued with the spirite of God. Then he sheweth to what end he was endued with the grace of the spirite: namely, that hee might preach to the poore: whereby we gather, that whosoever are sent of GOD to preach the Gospell, ought first to bee endued with necessary giftes, that they may be able to discharge so great an office. Wherefore they are indeed to bee laughed at, which vnder the pretence of the calling of God, doe vsurpe the place of Pastors, when they are most vnapt to execute the office: as the horned bishops in popery, when they are more ignorant then any Asses, yet they proudly cry out, that they are the Vicars of Christ, and that they onely are the lawfull gouernours of the Church. It is also expressly sayd, that the Lord doth annoynt his seruantes: because that the true & effectuall preaching of the Gospell doth not consist in windy eloquence, but in the celestiaall power of the spirite: as Paul sayth. 1. Cor. 2.1. & 4.

To the poore. The Prophet declareth what the estate of the Church was before the beginning of the Gospell, and what all our condition is without Christe. Therefore hee calleth them poore, broken, captiues, and blind, and brused, to whome God promiseth restitution. But though the body of the people was oppressed with so many miseries, that these titles might agree to euery member of the same: yet because that many in their pouertie, blindness, bondage, and to bee shorte, in death, doe flatter themselves, or are senselesse: therefore fewe are fit for the receiuing of this grace. And first we are taught here, to what ende the preaching of the Gospell belonbelongeth, and what it bringeth vs : that is, when we were wholly ouerwhelmed with all kind of euils, there God shineth vnto vs with his light of life, that hee leading vs out of the great depth of death, might restore vs into a full felicitie. Truly this is no vsuall commendation of the Gospell, that wee gather such incomparable fruit of it. Secondly wee see whome Christ calleth to him, and whom hee maketh partakers of the grace committed to him : that is, they that are wretches in all pointes, and are without all hope of saluation. But againe we are admonished, that we cannot any otherwise inioy the se benefites of Christ, except we be humbled with a deepe feeling of our miseries: and as people hungarstarued, doe desire and seeke for him to be our deliuerer: for who focuer swell in pride, and sigh not vnder their captiuitie, and are not displeas'd with their owne blindnesse, they doe with deafe eares despise this prophetic.

19. That I should preach the acceptable yeare. It seemeth to many to be an allusion to the yeare of subile, whose iudgement I doe not refuse. Yet it is worth the labour to note, how the Prophet taketh paines to answere a doubt, which might trouble and shake the weake mindes, seeing that the Lord had so long differred the promised saluation, & had holden them in suspence. Therefore he appointeth the time of redemption in the counsell or good will of god, as he saith, chap. 49. 8. In an acceptable time I haue heard thee, in a day of saluation haue I helped thee. Paul to the Gal. 4. 4, calleth it the fulnesse of time: that the faithfull may learn not curiously to enquire further then is expediēt but to rest in the will of God: and this one thing was sufficient for them, that the saluation in Christ was giuen, when God saw it good.

20. And the eyes of all that were in the Synagogue. I doubt not but that God had touched their hearts, that the strangenes of the matter might make them more attentiuē, and so should giue eare to Christ speaking: for it was necessary that they should bee stayde, least they presently should haue made a noyse, or at the least that they should not breake off the course of the word, seeing that otherwise they were more bent and readie to contemne Christ, as we shall see.

21. This day is fulfilled. Christ doth not onely vse these three words: but pro-ueth in deed that the time is now come, wherein God would restore the decayed Church, that the exposition of the prophesie might be euident and plaine to the hearers, as the interpreters doe rightly and in order handle the scripture, when they apply the same to the present vse: and hee sayth, that it was fulfilled rather in their eares then in their eyes: because the bare sight doth little profit, except that doctrine had the cheife place.

22. They bare witnesse. Heere Luke first commendeth vnto vs the diuine grace which was in the mouth of CHRIST: then hee liuely payneth out the vnthankfulnesse of men. Hee calleth them the wordes of grace, or gracious wordes in the Hebrew phrase, wherein the power and grace of the holy Ghost was seene. Therefore the Nazarites are compelled to acknowledge with admiration, GOD speaking in Christ: yet they willingly hinder themselues from giuing the right and due honour to the heauenly doctrine. For when they object that hee is the sonne of Ioseph, they doe not amplify with this circumstance the glory of GOD, as it became them: bus:

but maliciously they take this as an offence, that they might with the fairer colour refuse whatsoeuer shalbe said by the sonne of Ioseph. So at this day we see very many, who though they are enforced to grant that to be the word of god, which they heare: yet they get them friuolous excuses, wherewith they may exempt themselues from the necessitie of obedience.

And truly the cause why we are not so touched with the power of the Gospell, as it were meete, commeth not by any other meanes, but that we are alet vnto our selues, and with our malice wee choake the light, by beholding whercof, we are moued whether we will or no.

Luke. 2.

23. Then he sayd vnto them, you will surely say to mee this prouerbe, Physition heale thy selfe: whatsoeuer we haue heard done in Capernaum, doe it here likewise in thine owne country

24. And he sayd, verily I say vnto you, no prophet is accepted in his country.

25. But I tell you of a troath, many widowes were in Israel in the dayes of Elias, when heauen was shut 3. yeares and sixe moneths, when great famine was through out all the land:

26. But vnto none of them was Elias sent, save vnto Sarepta, a citie of Sydon, vnto a certaine widow.

27. Also there were many lepers in Israel, in the time of Eliseus the Prophet: yet none of them were made cleane, sauing Naaman the Syrian.

28. Then all that were in the Synagogue, when they heard it, were filled with wrath.

29. And rose vp, and thrust him out of the citty, and lead him vnto the edge of the hill, whereon their citty, was built, to cast him downe headlong.

30. But he passed through the midst of them, and went his way.

23. Physition heale thy selfe. By the wordes of Christ it is easily gathered, that he was contemptuously receiued by the Nazarites: for hee vttereth that, which he knew they thought in their minds. Then he laicth the fault vpon the, why he stayeth from working miracles amongst them: and he reprobeth their malice. because they gaue no reuerence to the Prophet of God. The obiection which he preuenteth is this: It is no maruell, if his countri-men haue him in no estimation, seeing that he doth not ennoble his owne country, with miracles, as he doth strang places: therefore this is a iust reuenge, if hee be reiected of his, which hee lesse esteemeth then any other. To this purpose belongeth the common prouerbe, that a Physition should begin first with himselfe and his owne people, before hee shewe his skill of curing to strangers, The summe of the obiection is, Christ did preposterously, for that with his myracle he renowned other Citties of Galile, and had no respect to his owne country. And this seemed to the Nazarites to be an honest excuse, why they againe might refuse him.

24. Verily, I say vnto you. He layeth to their charge that it is through their owne fault, that hee sheweth not his power in myracles amongst them, as in other places. For the incredulitie of men, stayeth God that hee worke not for their saluation, as were to be wished. Matth. 13. 58. and Mar. 6. 5. Therefore could not Christ do myracles amongst them, because they beleued not in him: not that it is in the will of men to tie the handes of God. but because he depriveth them of the fruite of his workes, which through infidelity make theselues vnworthy. Therefore the answer is as much, as if Christ shoulde haue sayde: If you will be partakers of myracles, why doe not you giue place to God? Nay, why doe you proudly reiect the minister of his power? Therefore you haue a iust reward of your contempt, that you beeing passed by, I shoulde rather shew my myracles in other places, that I am the Messias of God, to whome the restoring of the Church is committed. And truly that vnthankfulness might not be borne, that when God would haue his sonne brought vp in their city, that they should despise such a nouise. Wherefore of right hee withdrew his hand from thence, that it should not be scorned by so wicked contemners. But here wee learne how much the Lorde esteemeth his worde for that hee may punish the contempt of the same, he taketh from amongst them the graces, which are testimonies of his presence. For the vnderstanding of this sentence, That a Prophet is not esteemed in his owne country. Let the readers looke what wee haue sayde in the fourth Chapter of Iohn about the end.

25. There were many widowes. After that Christ had layd the fault vpon them, that they were without myracles, he now proueth by two exâples, that it should not seeme absurde, if God should preferre straungers before his own household people: and they ought not to lay the fault vpon him, if that he obeyed the calling of God, as Elyas and Elisæus did in times past. And sharply he restrayneth their vaine confidence, that they would haue him bound to them, because he was brought vppe amongst them. At what time (sayth he) the famine continued for two yeares and a halfe, there were many widowes in the land of Israel: whose neede the Prophet was not commaunded to helpe, but hee was sent to a stranger of the City of Sydon. Likewise Elisæus cured none of the Lepers of his owne country, but Naaman, that man of Syria. And though he peculiarly nypeth the Nazarites: yet hee also reprooueth the vnthankfulness of all the nation, for that almost all were wont so much the more vnworthily to despise the Lord, by how much he came nere to them. For how came it to passe, that God preferred the strange woman before all the Israelites: but because that the Prophet being thrown forth of the, was enforced to seeke entertainment in a prophane land? And wherefore would God that Naaman the Syria should be healed by Elisæus, but for the reproofe of the people of Israe? Therefore the meaning is, that it now falleth out, as it did in times past, that God will send his power a farre offe vnto strangers, because he is driuen backe by them, that dwell at home with him. Yet Christe declareth that nothing of his glory glory is diminished, in that hee is nought set by of his country men : because that God, to their ignominie and shame, can other where honour and exalt his sonne, as in times past hee honoured his Prophets in the middest of the Gentiles. In this manner the foolish glorying of flesh is beaten downe, when wee see the Lord raigne not only where and when he wil: but euen in the vitermost corners, not regarding the land which hee had chosen for a dwelling place for himselfe. Also heere is a generall doctrine to bee gathered, that it becōmeth not vs to prescribe God a lawe for the bestowing of his benefits, but that at his pleasure hee may rayse the lowe and the most contemned menne, to honour, the chiefe being reiected. Neither is it lawfull for vs to stirre, if he altogether ouerthrow that order that pleaseth our iudgemēt. And the Antithesis between Israel and the prophane nations must be noted. But it behooueth vs alwayes to consider this, that hee chooseth none before other for their owne worthinesse: but that rather commeth by the wonderfull counsell of God. Yet though the reason be hidden, it is necessary to honour and worship the depty.

28. They were filled with wrath. They vnderstoode to what purpose those two examples tended, which Christe alleadged: that is, that the grace of God should bee transferred to a place. Therefore they tooke it for their reproach. But whereas their consciences ought to be touched to the quick, that their faults being corrected, they might seeke remedie, they are onely driuen into a madnesse. So the wicked do not onely stubbornly resist the iudgements of GOD, but they cruelly rise against his seruants. Hereby it appeareth what force these reproofes haue, which come frō the spirit of God: for they enflame their mindes with madnesse, that willingly do scorne the same.

Further, when wee see the mindes of men to bee so full of poyson, that they waxe madde against God, so soone as they are sharply handled, we must aske the spirite of meekenesse, that the same fury carry not vs into this deadly battayle. When Luke sayth that Christe went thorow the middest of them, and so escaped their hands, he declareth that he was deliuered by God not without a great myracle from the present death. By which example wee are taught, although our aduerfaries preuaile, that our life seeme to bee at their pleasure: yet the power of God shall alwayes be the conquerer, to preserue vs so long as hee will keepe vs in this world, either he will bind their hands, or strike their eyes with blindness, or amaze their heartes and mindes.

12 And leaving Nazareth. I haue thought good therefore to adde this place of Mathew to the historie of Luke, becaufe it may be gathered, that Christ to this time was accustomed to frequent the citie of Nazareth: hee bidding that citie farewell, that he might auoyd danger, hee went to Capernaum, and the cities thereabouts. This history hath no difficultie, but that Mathew seemeth to abuse the testimony of the prophet into an other sense. But if wee weigh the naturall sense of the Prophet, the applying of it to this present cause, shall be apt and easie. For Esayas, after he had spoken of the most greiuous calamitie of the people, that he might comfort them in sorrow, promiseth, when the people shall be brought to the lowest ebbe, presently deliuerance shall follow, which, darknes being shaken off, shall restore the light of life. The wordes are, the darknesse shall not be according to the affliction,, that it had, when at the first he touched lightly the land of Zabulon, & the land of Nephthali, nor afterward when he was more greiuous by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan in Galile of the Gentiles. The people that walked in darknes, haue seene a great light. The Israclites were now oppressed with a double calamitie: for, first foure tribes or thereabouts were lead into captiuitie by Theglath Peleser. Then when Salmanasar stroke all the kingdome of Israell, there remained a third plague: which the Prophet about the end of the eight chapter saith, shall be the sharpest of all. But now in the words, which we haue rehearsed, there followeth a mitigation: because God reacheth his hand to his people, death shall be easier to be borne then sicknesses were before. Although (saith he) the whole people shall be blotted out, yet the shining light of grace shall bring to passe, that there shall be lesse darknes in this latter destruction, then was in the double destruction of the ten tribes. Also I doubt not but that the promise ought to be extended to the whole body of the people, which in shewe seemed to bee in like miserable and lamentable estate. For the Iewes doe preposterously apply the same to the deliuerance of the citie of Ierusalem: as if the light of life had beene restored, whē by the flight of king Sennacherib the siege was raysed. Certaynely, it doeth plainly appeare by the text, that the Prophet had a further regard. Therefore, when he shall promise a generall restitution of all the Church, it followeth that the land of Zabulon, and all the land of Nephtholim, and Galile of the Gentiles where comprehended in the number of them, whose darknes of death were changed into the light of life. Thereturne of the people from Babylon was the beginning of this light, and as the morning. At the length the sunne of righteousness Christ, came forth in his full brightnes, and by his comming hee vtterly abolished the darknes of death. Therefore Paul to the Eph. 5. 14. admoniseth that in him was fulfilled, that which euery wher is found in the prophets. Awake thou that sleepest, and stand vp from the dead. Now when wee know that the kingdome of Christ is spirituall, it is necessary that the light of saluation, which he bringeth, and what helpe soeuer we receiue frō him, should be agreeable to the nature of the same. Whereof it followeth that our soules are drowned in the darknes of eternall death, vntill he lighten them with his grace.

The Prophet speaketh of the ouerthrowing of a countrie : but the condition of mankind is described as in a glasse, vntill it be set at libertie by the grace of Christ. That they that sate in darkenesse are sayd to see a great light : so to den and so notable a change doth amplify the greatnes of the diuine saluation. The lower Galile was called Galile of the Gentiles, not onely because it was so neare to Tyre and Sydon, but becafe the Gentiles werethere mingled amogst the Iewes : especially for that Dauid had granted certaine cities to king Hiram.

Mar. 4.

18. And Iesus walking by the sea of Galile, saw two brethren, Simon, which was called Peter, & Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea: for they were fishers

19. And hee sayd vnto them, follow me, and I will make you fishers of men.

20. And they straight way leauing the net, followed him.

21. And when hee was gone forth from thence, hee sawe other two brethren, Iames the sonne of Zebedeus, and Iohn his brother in a shippe with Zebedeus their father, mending their nets, and he called them.

22. And they without tarying, leauing the ship & their father, followed him.

23 So Iesus went about all Galile, teaching in their Synagogue, and preaching the Gospell of the Kingdome, and healing euery sicknes & euery disease among the people.

24. And his fame spread abroad through all Syria, & they brought vnto him all sicke people, that were taken with diuers diseases & grippings, & the that were possessed

Marke 1.

16. And as hee walked by the sea of Galile, he saw Simon, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea : for they were fishers.

17. Then Iesus said vnto them, follow mee, and I will make you fishers of men.

18. And straightway they forsooke their nets: and follo wed him

19. And when hee had gone a little further thence, hee sawe Iames the sonne of Zebedeus, & Iohn his brother, as they were in the shippe, mending their nets.

20. And anon hee called them : and they left their father Zebedeus in the shippe with his hyred seruants, & went their way after him.

Luke 5.

1. Then it came to passe, as the people preassed vpon him, to heare the word of God, that he stood by the lake of Genazareth.

2. And saw two ships standing by the lake side, but the fishermen were gone out of them, and were washing ther nets.

3. And hee entred into one of the ships, which was Simons, and required of him, that hee would thrust off a little from the land, and hee sate downe, and taught the people out of the ship.

4. Now, when hee had left speaking, hee sayde vnto Simon, launch out into the deepe, & let downe your nettes, to make a draught.

5. Then Simon answered & sayd vnto him : maister, we haue trauelled all night, and haue taken nothing : neuerthelesse at thy word I will let downe the net.

6. And when they had so done, they enclosed a great multitude of fishes, so that their net brake.

7. And they beckned to their partners, which were in the other ship, that they should come, and helpe them: who came then, and filled both the ships, that they did sinke.

8. Now when Simon Peter saw it, hee fell downe at Iesus knees, saying, Lord, goe from me : for I am a sinfull man.

sed with devils, and these which were Lunatike, and those that had the palse: and hee healed them.

25. And there followed him great multitudes out of Galile, and Decapolis, and Ierusalem, & Iudea, and from beyonde Iordan.

9 For hee was utterly astonied, and all that were with him: for the draught of fishes which they tooke

10. And so was also Iames & Iohn, the sonnes of Zebedeus, which were companions with Simon. Then Iesus sayd vnto Simon: Feare not, from hence forth thou shalt catch men.

11. And when they had brought the ships to land, they forsooke all, and followed him.

MAT. 18. And he walking. Because this historie is set downe by Luke after two miracles, which wee shall see afterward, it was commonly thought that the miracle which is reported was wrought by him somewhat after they were called by Christ. But the reason which they follow hath but small force: for it was not the purpose of the Euangelists to write Chronicles from yeare to yeare in a certaine and distinct order of times: whereby it came to passe, that the order of dayes being not regarded, they accounted it sufficient to gather summarily the cheifest of the deedes of Christ: yet they kept an account of the yeares, that it might be euident to the readers how Christ bestowed the course of three yeares from the beginning of his preaching, vnto his death. But those miracles, which were wrought at that time, they set down at libertie, as hereafter by many examples shall more plainly appeare.

But now it appeareth by many arguments, that this historie is reported by the three: of the which yet this one may suffice the reader that is not contentious, that the three with one consent doe teach, that Peter & Andrew, Iames and Iohn, were created Apostles. If they had bene called before, it should follow that they had bene Apostats, that forsaking their maister, and despising their calling, had returned to their olde maner of life. This is the onely difference betwene Luke and the other two that hee onely rehearseth the miracle, which the other doe omit. But this is not vnusuall amongst the Euangelists, to touch one part of a historie, omitting many circumstances. Wherefore there is no absurditie, if wee say that one miracle is left out by two, which is reported by one. And that is to be remembered that Iohn sayth, 20. 31. that of innumerable miracles of Christ, there were some chosen, which might suffice for the proouing of his diuine power, and for the confirming of our faith in him. Therefore it is no maruaile, if Matthew and Marke doe briefly touch the calling of the foure Apostles, whose circumstance Luke doeth more at large set forth.

LVKE. 1. Hee stode by the lake. Matthew and Marke call it the sea of Galile, after the olde maner of their tongue. The lake in times past among the Hebrewes was properly called cindush. Then the language being corrupted, corrupted, the word was turned into Genezareth. The prophane writers doe call it Genesar: on that part that bordered vpon Galile, they called it the sea of Galile. The banke that was neere to Tiberias, was named after that citie. In an other place there will be a more fitte occasion to speake of the largenesse and situation of the same. Now we will come to the matter it selfe. Luke saith that Christ going vp into Peters ship, launched out a litle from the land, that he might the more commodiously teach the people from thence, which were come out of diuers places, for the desire they had to heare him: and when hee had ended his teaching, by a miracle hee shewed a token of his dinine power: for though it is vsuall to fishers to make many draughtes in vaine, and then with one good draught to recompence the labour that they had spent in vaine: yet the miracle was set foorth by this circumstance, that when they had taken nothing all the night (which yet is most fit for catching) suddenly a great multitude of fishes was heaped into their nets, which filled their ships. Therefore Peter and his fellowes doe easily acknowledge, that such a pray, as exceeded measure, came not to them by chaunce, but was giuen them of God.

L V. 5. Maister, we haue trawailed all night. It is not to be doubted but that Peter knowing that Christ executed the office of a teacher, and touched with a reuerence of him, did so call him: yet he had not so profited, as hee deserued to be accounted amongst his disciples. For it is not enough to thinke reuerently of Christ, except we embracing his doctrine with obedience of faith, doe hold that which he requireth of vs: And though hee had no taste, or very small taste of the Gospell: yet he sheweth how much he attributeth to Christ, whereas being wearied with labour, without profit, that which he in vaine had tried, he againe attempted. Therefore it cannot be denied, but that Christ was great, and that his authoritie much preuayled with him. But this particular faith had in one onely commandement of Christ, and that in a priuate earthly busines, had not made Peter a Christian, nor giuen him place amongst the children of God: but that from this beginning of obedience, he should at length be lead to a full obedience. But sith that Peter was so ready to obey the commandement of Christ, whom as yet he did not know eyther to be a Prophet, or the Sonne of God, No excuse can serue our slouth, that being taught that he is our Lord, and king, and iudge, and being tennet times commanded by him to doe our dutie, doe not yet stirre a finger.

L V. 6. They enclosed a great multitude of fishes. The end of the miracle was, that the deitie of Christ being knowne, Peter and others should yeeld themselves to be his disciples. Yet generally by this example wee are taught not to feare that the blessing of God and happie successe shall not follow our labor, as oft as at the commaundement and direction of Christ wee lay our handes to worke: But there was such a plentie of fishes as sanke the shippes, and astonished the mindes of them that beheld it. For it was meete that the deuine glory of Christ should be reuealed by this miracle, that the credite might be wholly his.

L V. 8. Lorde goe from mee. Though menne in their daily prayers doe desire the presence of God: yet it is necessary that as soone as G O D appeareth, that they shoulde bee affrayde, and halfe dead with feare and amasednesse, vntill hee giue them comfort . There is good cause why they should so earnestly pray for the presence of God: for hee being absent , they are enforced to feele themselues to be miserable wretches: and his presence is therefore fearefull, because they then beginne to feele that they are nothing: nay, with what a heape of euils they are filled. After this manner Peter so reuerenceth Christ in this myracle, that he being amazed with his maiestie, woulde flee as much as he could. And this did not onely befall to Peter, but as by the texte we do gather, they were all affrayd . Wherefore wee see that this feeling is planted in all men, that they should be affrayd at the presence of God. And it is profitable for vs, that what foolish boldnesse or pride soeuer is in vs might be humbled, so there shall presently be giuen comfort, which may holde vs vp. Therefore Christ with a sweete and friendly answer doth recreate the mind of Peter, and forbiddeth him to feare. So the Lord buryeth his in a graue, that then he may giue them life.

L V. 10. From henceforth thou shalt catch men. Matthev sayth, I will make you fishers of men. But Marke hath, I will make you to be fishers. By which woordes wee are taught, that Peter and the other three were not only chosen of Christ to be disciples, but created Apostles, or at the least chosen in hope of Apostleshippe . Therefore here is not onely described a generall calling to the fayth, but a speciall calling to a certaine office.

I graunt that the office of teaching was not yet committed vnto them: but yet Christ calleth and chuseth them into his company, that hee might frame them to teaching. And this is wisely to be considered: for all are not commaunded to leaue their parentes and their old trade of liuing, that they may follow Christe on foote: but the Lorde is content to haue some in his flocke and Church, and to others he appoynteth a proper standing. Therefore let them that haue the office of a publike person layd vpon them, know, that there is more to be required of them then of any priuate persons. So Christ chaunging nothing in the common life of others, dooth bring these foure from their worke, whereby they liued before, that he might vse their helpe in a more notable office.

Also Christ chose vnto him grosse Idiotes no lesse rude in witte, then voyde of learning, that he might frame them, nay, that he might renew them with the grace of his spirit, that they might excell all the wisen en of the world. For so it was his will to pull down the pride of flesh, & to giue a notable token of spiritual grace in them, that wee might learne to aske the light of fayth from heauen, knowing that it cannot be obtayned by our owne industrie..

Furthermore, that he chose not the vnlearned and rude, that hee woulde leaue them alwayes such: that which he did, may not be drawne into example: as if at this day also such Pastors were to be ordayned, as are after to be instructed to execute their office. For wee know what rule hee prescribeth vs by the mouth of Paul: that is, that none may be called, except they be apt. Tim. 3. 3.
 to teach.

And hee did not chuse such, as if he preferred ignoraunce before know'edge: as some frantike men doe triumph to themselues in their owne ignoraunce, and how much more they abhorre learning, so much the neerer they thinke themselues to the Apostles. And his will was at the first to chuse these base men, that he might ouerthrow the vanitie of them, that thinke that the vnlearned shall not enter into heauen. But after they ioyned Paule as a companion to these fishers: who from his youth was diligently trayned vppe in learning, Act. 22. 3. But yet it pertayneth nothing to the matter, to dispute more subtilly of the maner of the metaphor: for that it was taken of the presēt matter, yet when Christ spake of the preaching of the Gospell, he aptly alluded to fishing: because that men wandering, and scattred abroade in the worlde, as in a vait and confused sea, are gathered together by the preaching of the Gospell. But the history which is recorded in the first Chapter of Iohn differeth from this. For when Andrew was one of Iohns disciples, hee was by him deliuered to Christ, and after he brought his brother with him, and then they tooke him as their mayster: but after they were receiued into a higher office

M A T. 22. And they without tarying. Heere first appeareth the force of Christes voyce, not that the onely voyce of Christ doth so effectually pierce into the heartes of men: but because the Lord by his spirite doth inwardly driue all them, that he will draw and pull to himselfe, that they may obey his voyce. Secondly, the aptnes to be taught, and the readinesse to obey, is praysed in the disciples, which preferre the calling of Christ before al the busines of the world. Especially it becommeth the ministers of the word to marke this example, that all other cares being set by, they may addict and giue themselues wholly to the Church, whereto they are appointed.

M A T. 23. Iesus went about all Galile. Matthew reportes the same things againe in an other place. But there is no inconuenience; seeing Christ for a time ceased not daily to worke almost innumerable myracles, that generally the course of the same is wise or thrife mentioned. Nowe in the wordes of Matthew first it is to bee noted, that Christ neuer rested, that he might spread the seede of the Gospell euery where. Also Matthew calleth it the Gospell of the kingdome: whereby the kingdome of God is established amongst men, for their saluation. Therefore hee maketh difference betweene the perfect & eternall beatitude, and the prosperous and pleasant things of this present life. That Matthew sayth that Christe healed all diseases, the meaning is, of what kind soeuer they were. For it is certaine, that all were not healed of their diseases, but there were no kind of diseases that were offered him, that hee healed not. And he reckoneth the chiefe kinds of diseases, wherein Christe shewed his power. The scripture calleth not all generally, that were vexed of the deuil, men possessed with diuelles: but those that with a secret vengeance of God are deliuered bound to Sathan, that he might possesse their mindes and senses. They are called Lunatikes, in whome the force of the disease increaseth or deereaseth, after the inclination of the moone, as they that are sicke of the falling sicknes, and such like: when we know that such diseases are not curable by naturall remedies, it followeth that the deitie of Christ is here witnessed, sith that he cured them wonderfully.

Luke 4.

21. So they entred into Capernaum, and straightway on the Sabbath day hee entred into the Synagogue, and taught.

22. And they were astonied at his doctrine; for he taught them, as one that had authority, and not as the Scribes.

23. And there was in their synagogue a man which had an vn cleane spirit, and hee cryed,

24. Saying, ah, what haue we to do with thee, O Iesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy vs? I know thee what thou art eue that holy one of God.

25. And Iesus rebuked him, saying hold thy peace, and come out of him

26. And the vn cleane spirit tare him, and cried with a loude voyce, and came out of him.

27. And they were all amazed, so that they demaunded one of another, saying, what thing is this? what new doctrine is this? for hee commandeth the fowle spirits with authoritie, and they obey him.

31. And he came downe into Capernaum, a city of Galilee & ther taught them on the Sabbath dayes.

32. And they were astonied at his doctrine: for his word was with authoritie.

33. And in the Synagogue there was a man, which had a spirit of an vn cleane deuill, which cryed with a loude voyce,

34. Saying, oh, what haue we to doe with thee, thou Iesus of Nazareth? Art thou come to destroy vs I know who thou art, euen the holy one of God.

35. And Iesus rebuked him, saying, hold thy peace, and come out of him. Then the deuill throwing him in the midst of them, came out of him, and hurt him not.

36. So feare came on them all, and they spake among themselues, saying, what thing is this? for with authoritie and power he commaundeth the fowle spirites, and they come out.

It is to bee thought that this man possessed with a deuill was one of that company, which Matthew made mention of somewhat before. But the narration of Marke and Luke is not in vaine: because they shew certaine circumstances, which doe not onely make the miracle more manifest, but also do containe profitable doctrine. For the deuill doth craftily grant, that Christ is the holy one of G O D, that hee might make men suspect that hee hath some familiarity with Christe: by which subiltie hee also endeouored to bring the Gospell into suspicion, and at this day hee ceaseth not to attempt the same. This is the cause why Christ causeth him to hold his peace. And it may bee that this confession was violently wrested out of him: but these two doe not differ betweene themselues, that hee being enforced to giue place to the power of Christ, that hee might proclaime him to bee the holy one of God, and yet subtilly hee endeouoreth to couer the glory of Christ, with his darknes. It is also to bee noted, that hee doeth so flatter Christ, that hee might craftely conuicy himselfe from his hand. And after this maner he fighteth with himselfe: for to what purpose is Christ sanctified of the Father, but that deliuering men from the tyrannie of the Deuill, hee might ouerthrow his kingdome, but because Sathan cannot abide that power, which hee perceyueth to bee prepared for his destruction, hee desires to make Christ quiet, and to be content with a vaine title.

MAR. 22. They were astonied at his doctrine. The Euangelists doe meane that the power of the spirit did appeare in the wordes of Christ, which caused euenthe prophane and colde hearers to woonder at them. L V K E sayeth, that his word was with authoritie: that is, full of dignitie. Marke setteth it out more fully, and addeth an Antithesis, that it was vnlike to the wordes of the Scribes. But when they were adulterous interpreters of the Scripture, their doctrine was literall and dead, which shewed no force of the spirite, and there was no maiestie in it, but such colde stuffe, as may at this day bee seene in the speculatiue dignitie of poperie. Those maisters doe imperiously thunder out whatsoeuer they thinke good. But when they in prophane maner do brabble of diuinitie, so that no religion appeareth in their disputations, whatsoeuer they bring is filthy and toyish: for Paule hath not sayde in vaine, the kingdome of God standeth not in word, but in power.

In summe, the Euangelistes doe shewe, that when the maner of teaching was degenerate and very corrupt, which touched the minds of men with no reuerence of God, then the diuine power of the spirit was evidently scene in the wordes of Christ, which gave him credit. This is the power or rather dignitie and authoritie, whereat the people were astonied.

L V. 33. A man which had an vnleane spirit. This speach auayleth as much as if Luke should haue sayd, that hee was stirred vp by the motion of the deuill. For by the permission of God, Sathan possessed the powers of the soule: so that he would enforce them as well to speake, as to other motions at his pleasure. Therefore when men possessed with diuels do speake, the diuels do speake in them, and by them, whom they haue authoritie to rule. It is probable that the title of the holy one of God was taken out of the common and accustomed maner of speaking: and therefore they so called the Messias: because hee was separte from all other, as one endued with a singular grace, and the head of all the Church.

MAR. 26. The vnleane spirit tare him. Luke vseth a more gentle worde, yet in sense they agree very well: because they both would teach, that the departure of the deuill, was violent and forcible. Therefore he so threw downe the wretched man, as if hee would haue torne him in sunder: yet Luke sayeth, that his purpose was in vaine, not that, that force was altogether without hurt, or at least without some paine: but that hee was after deliuered a whole and a sounde man from the deuill.

L V K E 36. So feare came on them all. The fruite of the miracle is, that they are enforced to thinke that there is in CHRIST somewhat more then appertayneth to men. And they wisely referre the glory and power of the miracle to the doctrine. What doctrine is this (say they) whereto the Deuils themselues are enforced to obey? They call it a newe doctrine, not in reproch, but because they acknowledge some vnusuall and extraordinary thing in it. Therefore they doe not accuse it of newnes, that they might discredit it: but this is rather a poynt of admiration, in that they denie it either to be common, or in the power of man. In this they onely offend, that they continue still in their doubting, when it becommeth the children of God to go on in further profiting.

Matth. 8.

Mar. 1.

Luke. 4.

14. And when Iesus came to peters house hee sawe his wiues mother layd down, and sick of a feuer.

15. And hee touched her hand, and the feuer left her, so shee arose and ministred vnto them.

16. When the euen was come, they brought vnto him many that were possessed with diuels: and hee caste out the spirits with his word and healed those that were sicke.

17. That it might be fulfilled, which was spoked by Isaias the prophet, saying, he took our infirmitie, & bare our sickneses.

18. And when Iesus saw great multitudes of people about him, hee commanded them to go over the water.

29. And as soone as they were come oute of the Synagogue, they entred into the house of Simon and Andrew, with Iames and Iohn.

30. And Simons wiues mother, in law lay sicke of a feuer, & anon they told him of her.

31. And hee came and tooke her by the hande, and list her vpp, and the feuer forsooke her by & by, and she ministred vnto them.

32. And when euen was come & the sunne was down, they brought to him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with diuels.

33. And the whole Citry was gathered together at the dore.

34. And hee healed many that were sicke of diuers diseases: and he cast out many deuilles, and suffered not the deuils to say, that they knew him.

35. And in the morning very early before day, Iesus arose, and wente out into a solytary place, and there prayed.

36. And Simon and they that were with him, followed after him.

37. And when they had found him, they sayde vnto him, all men seeke for thee.

38. Then he sayde vnto them, let vs goe into the next townes, that I may preach there also: for I came out for that purpose.

39. And hee preached in theyr Synagogues throughout all Galilee, and cast the deuils out.

38. And he rose vpp, and came out of the Synagogue, and entred into Simons house. And Simons wiues mother was taken with a great feuer & they required him for her.

39. Then hee stoode ouer her, and rebuked the feuer, and it left her: and immediately she rose, and ministred vnto them.

40. Nowe when the sunne was downe, all they that had sicke folke of diuers diseases, brought thē vnto him, and hee layd his handes vppon euery one of them, and healed them.

41. And deuilles also came out of many, crying, & saying, Thou art the Christ the son of God: but hee rebuked them, and suffered them not to say, that they knew him so bee Christ.

42. And when it was daye, hee departed, and went forth into a deserte place, and the people sought him, and came to him, and kept him, that he should not depart from them.

43. But he sayd vnto them, surely I must also preache the Gospell of the kingdome of God to other citties: for therefore am I sent.

29. MAR. They entred into the house. It may bee easily gathered, that Matthew doth not rehearse this history in his order, by this, that Marke sayeth, that Christ namely had but foure disciples onely following him. Also when he came out of the Sinagogue, and went straight into Peters house, it is easily seene that the time was not exactly obserued by Matthew. Also the Euangelistes seeme to haue reported this myracle for some speciall cause, not that it was more notable then the rest, or more worthy to be remembered: but because that in it he gaue to his disciples a priuate and secrete token of his grace: then that the healing of this one woman gaue an occasion, or was the procuring of many myracles, so that they came to him from all places to aske his helpe. Yet the power, which Christ shewed here, Luke doth amplifie in one worde, saying that Peters mother in law was taken with a great feuer: for it was the more certaine and notable declaration of diuine power, in a moment of time, and onely by touching, to take away so vehemet & so grieuous a disease. And though he could haue done it onely with a becke, yet he touched her hand, cyther to shew his affection, or for that he knew that this signe was then profitable. for we know that he freely vsed outward signes, as the time required.

39. L V. Hee rebuked the feuer. Though this speech may seeme hard to the reader not sufficiently exercised in the Scripture, yet it wanteth not a reason. For the feuer and other diseases, famine, pestilence, and all kind of misery are the officers of God, by whom he executeth his iudgements. Therefore as at his commaundement and appointment, it is sayd that hee sendeth forth such messengers: so also doth he rebuke & call backe, when he thinketh good. Matthew & Marke conceale how he healed others. Luke sayth it was by laying on of handes. And it was a signe of reconciliation vnder the law, wherefore neither without cause, nor out of time, doth Christ also lay his hands vpon them, who he absolueth from the curse of God. It was also a solemne maner of consecration, as shall more at large be sayd in an other place. But I simply interpret that Christ layd his hands vpon the sicke, that commending them to his father, he might obtaine grace and deliuerance from diseases.

17. M A T. Which was spoken by Isaias. This seemeth to be cited little to the purpose: nay, this Prophecie seemeth to be wrested into a contrary sense. For Esaias doth not speake there of myracles, but of the death of Christ: nor of temporall benefites, but of the spirituall and eternall grace. And that which is certainly spoken of the vices of the soule, Matthew applyeth to corporall diseases. The answer is not hard, so that the readers consider not only what Christ outwardly bestowed vpon these sicke people, but to what end he healed their diseases. They felt the grace of Christ in their bodies: but we must looke vpon the ende. For it were very preposterous to stay vpon the outward benefite, as if the sonne of God were a Phisition of the bodyes. What then? namely, he gaue sight to the blinde, that hee might shew himselfe to be the light of the worlde: he restored life to the dead, that he might prooue himselfe to be the life and the resurrection. The same is to be thought of the lame, & of the sicke of the palse: wherefore let vs follow this analogie, that what benefites soeuer Christ bestowed vpon men in the flesh, wee may referre the same to the scope which Matthew propoeth: that is, that he was sent of his father, that he might deliuer vs from all euils and miseries.

MARK E. 34. Hee suffered not the devils to saye that they knewe him . There might bee two causes why hee suffered them not: one generall, that as yet the appoynted time of his full reuelation was not come: the other speciall which we touched a little before, that hee refused them as preachers and witnesses of the Godhead, which through their praying, coule doe nothing else but flander and discredit him. And this last is without doubt, for the deadly discord ought to bee shewed which the authour of eternall saluation and life should haue with the prince of death and his ministers.

M A T. 18. When Iesus saw great multitudes. I doubt not but that Matthew doth briefly touch that which others doe more fully & plentifully set fourth That which is concealed by Mat. the other two do expreſſie before it was day Christ went secretly into a desert place, to seeke rest. Marke sayth after, that Peter told him that all men sought him And Luke sayth that the people came thither. Now that Matth sayth that he went ouer to the further shoare, both they say that hee did it, that he might goe through all Galile, that hee might preach in all places. But the further shoare in my iudgement, is called not that which is sight ouer against it on the further side, but in respect of that place which was belowe Capernaum. Therefore he so went ouer part of the lake, that hee would not leaue Gaile. It is to be noted that he sayth, that hee went or was sent for that ende: for in these wordes hee witnesseth, how readily hee was bent to fulfill his office. But if any man shall aske whether it were better for the ministers of the Gospell, to runne hither and thither, that they might in all places sparingly & slenderly tast the doctrine of God, or remaine teaching their hearers perfectly whome they haue once wonne. I answer, the purpose of Christ wherof mention is here made, was grounded vpon a most notable cause, because it was agreeable to the commaundement and calling of the father. For Christe was in short time to goe throughout Iudea, that hee might euery where waken the mindes of men, as with the sound of a trumpet, to heare the Gospell, which matter shall more largely be entreated of other where.

MARK E. 13. He went vp into a mountaine. By this election he doth not as yet ordaine the Apostles, that they shoulde presently execute their office: but only in hope of Apostleship, he adopteth them as disciples to keepe him company, wherein the interpreters haue bin deceiued, which vnadvisedly doe confound these places with the tenth chapter of Mat. And the wordes do evidently declare that they were onely appointed that they should after be of that ambassage, which is enioyned them in Matthew. And Marke & Luke do afterwardes in the right place set downe their sending forth, which Matthew doth there make mention of. And it is no maruel if that the heauenly master would a little frame and accustome them to so hard a charge, whose rudnesse coulde not be restrayned by long vse of discipline. Both the Euangelistes say that Christ went vp into a mountaine. Luke declareth the cause, that he might the more freely pray out from company, which he was wont to do very often, as may be seene in other places. But this example ought to be a perfecte rule to vs, that we doe begin with prayer, so oft as pastors are to bee chosen for Churches: otherwise whatsoeuer we attempt, shall not prosper. For the Lord did not pray so much for his own sake, as that he might prescribe a law for vs: for we want wisedome & counsell, and though we were most prouident, yet we cannot in any thing be easier deceiued then in this. Now how can we be out of daunger of offending, except the Lorde shoulde moderate our affectiōs, considering how great the force, or rather the violence of fauour and loue, or of hatred, or of ambition is to drawvs away? Furthermore, though there bee great diligence vsed in the election, yet all thinges shall prosper ill, except the Lorde take vpon him to gouerne those that are chosen, and endew them with necessary giftes. What then? will some men say: Did not Christ earnestly require of his father that hee would rule his election? I graunt this, and withall I adde, that by this testimonie he declared how carefull he was for his Church: therefore he prayed not his father, after a daily manner, but spent all the night in prayer. But if hee that was full of the holy Ghost did so earnestly and so carefully pray his father to be gouernour of his election, how much is our necessitie greater.

MARK E. 13. And called vnto him whome hee would. I doubt not but that Marke would hereby signifie that they were taken to this so honorable an office by the meere grace of Christe, not for theyr owne woorthynesse. For if thou vnderstande that they were chosen that were more notable then others, this cannot agree in Iudas. Therefore the meaning is that the Apostleship was not bestowed according to the merits of men, who were nothing worthy to be lift vp into that estate, but by the free mercy of God. And so that was fulfilled that Christ sayd elsewhere, you haue not chosen me, but I haue chosen you. Iohn 15. 16. In the same sence also Paul often commendeth the purpose of God in his Apostleship. But heere doe arise moe questions, Eph. 3.7

Col 1. 25. First, why he chose Iudas of a determinate purpose, whom hee knew to be unworthy of that honour, and should become a traitour. Then, why God being so earnestly betought of his sonne, suffered so faithlesse and wicked a man to creepe into the cheife order of his Church, as if he had despised Christ. Thirdly why hee would that the first fruites of his Church should bee polluted with so vile a reproach. Fourthly, why Christ wittingly and willingly preferred Iudas before honest and faithfull ministers. The first obiection is thus answered: It was the will of the Lord purposely to meete with such offences that should fall out, least wee should be troubled beyond measure, so oft as we see false teachers occupie a place in the Church. Or that of professours of the Gospel there become Apostates. And also in the person of one man, hee gaue an example of a horrible defection, least they that are placed in higher estate of dignitie, should flatter themselues too much. Yet let vs not say that Christ suffered the repulse. When the father in wonderfull counsell adioyned one deuill to eleven Angels, yet hee so gouerned the falling out of the matter, that his falling awy should confirme the faith of the Church, rather then shake the same. This same answer may be giuen to the third question. In the first beginnings it was speedely shewed what the estate of the Church should be, least the weake should waxe faint at the fall of any of the reprobate: for it is vnmeete that the stability of the Gospel should depend vpon men. As concerning the last Obiection, Christ did not preferre Iudas before the holy and the godly Disciples. but he lifted him vp on high, from whence hee was to fall, because he would he should bee a spectacle to all men, and an instruction to all ages, that no man should abuse the honour giuen to him of GOD: then the pillars falling, that they that seeme to be of the common sorte of the faithfull might remaine steadfast.

L V K E. 13. Which also he called Apostles. This may be expounded two wayes. Eyther that hee after consecrating them into their office, gaue this name vnto them: Eyther that he gaue them this title in hope of the dignitie to come that they might knowe to what purpose they were seperate from the common sort, and for what vse they were ordained. Which latter exposition doth agree with the wordes of Marke: for hee saith, that Christ did this, that they should be with him, and that he might send them to preach. Therefore his will was, that they should be his companions, vpon whom he would lay a greater charge, for when he sayth that they should be with him, and that hee would send them forth to preach, he doth not appoynt that they should be both in one moment of time, as I haue sayd before.

M A R. 16. And hee named Symon, Peter. Although it behoueth all Christians to be liuing stones of the spirituall temple, yet Christ for the measure of grace which he would bestow vpon Simon, gaue him a peculiar name, neyther doth his his shamefull infirmitie in denying the Lord hinder this : for with this title his inuincible power and constancie, which continued euen to death, is set forth. Yet the Papistes are to be laughed at, which thereof gather that the church was grounded vpon him, as shalbe shewed more at large in the 16. chapter of Matthew. Christ called the sonnes of Zebedeus, the sons of thunder, for that hee would giue them a sounding voyce wherwith they should thunder throughout all the world. And the thunder out of the mouth of Iohn is heard to this day, and it is not to be doubted but that his brother shoke the earth while hee liued. But the word is corrupt, for the perfect pronounciation shoulde bee BENAE Reges or Ragas. But it is not vnknowne howe easilly wordes are changed when they are translated into an other tongue.

M A T. 1. He went vp into a mountaine. They that say this is an other sermon of Christes, and not that which is set downe in the 6. chap of Luke, are drawn with too light and friuolous an argument: for that Matthew sayeth that Christ sate in the mountaine to his Disciples, and that Luke seemeth to note, that hee spake vnto them in a plaine place. For they doe very preposterously read the wordes of Luke, adioyning them together, that Christ came downe into a plaine place, and there he lifting vp his eyes vpo his disciples, spake thus. For it was the purpose of both the Euangelistes, to gather together into one place, the principall poyntes of the doctrine of Christ which did belong to the rule of godly and holy life. Therefore though Luke had first made mention of a plaine place, yet hee doth not in a continuall course prosecute the same history, but first by miracles he passeth to doctrine, neither assigning time nor place. As in Matthew there is no noting of the time, but onely of the place. And it is very likely that Christ did not so preach, but after hee hadde chosen the twelue. But I woulde not bee too curious in keeping the order of time, which I did see not regarded by the spirit of God. For this ought to suffice the godly and modest readers, that they haue heere sette before their eyes a breife summe of the doctrine of Christ, gathered out of many and diuers of his sermons, whereof this was the first, where hee entreateth with his disciples of true felicitie.

2. Hee opened his mouth. Heere in the Hebrew phrase is the figure Pleonasmus vsed, for that which were corrupt in other tongues, is vsuall amongst the Hebrewes, to say hee opened his mouth, for he beganne to speake. And though many thinke it to be an Emphaticall kind of speach, vsed when either some waighty or notable matter is vttered either in good part or in euil. Yet because many places of Scripture doe gainsay the same, the first exposition doth please me best. Also let their subtilie speculation goe, which doeth teach that Christ allegorically led his disciples into the mountaine, that hee might carry their mindes on high, faire from earthly cares and studies, for by going vp the mount, hee rather sought a secreete place out of the way, that being farre from company, hee might refresh him selfe a little with his disciples from wearines. And first it is to be considered for what cause Christe spake to his disciples of true felicitie. Wee know that not onely the common people, but also the wise men were herein deceiued, thinking him to be happy that led a merry & a quiet life, free from all grieffe, and had what he desired. And certainly by the iudgement almost of all men, felicitie is esteemed by the present state. Therefore Christ, that hee might accustom his to the bearing of the crosse, reprooueth this wicked opinion, that they are happy which now liue well and prosperously according to the flesh. For it cannot bee that they shoulde patiently submit their necke to beare sorrowes and iniuries, which account patience to be an enemy to a blessed life. Therefore it is one comferte whereby the bitterness of the crosse and of all mischiefes is mitigated & also made sweet, while we are perswaded, that in the midst of miseries wee are happy: because that our patience is blessed of the Lorde, and shortly there shall folowe a more ioyfull ende. I grant that this doctrine doth much disagree from comon sense: but so it behoued the disciples of Christ to be taught wisdom, that they might account their felicitie to be out of this worlde, and beyond the vnderstanding of flesh. And though carnall reason will neuer allowe that which Christ here teacheth, yet hee proposeth no fantasticall deuce, as in times past the Stoickes did sporte with their Paradoxes: but in deede he declareth, why they are truly happy, whose estate is accounted miserable. Therefore let vs remember that this is the chiefe poynte of the doctrine: that Christe denyeth that they are miserable miserable & wretched that are oppressed with the iniuries of the wicked, & are subiect to diuers dangers. And Christ doth not only proue that they are of a peruerse iudgement, which measure the felicity of man by the present state, because that the miseries of the godly shal shortly be changed into better: but also hee exhorteth the to patience, by proposing a hope of reward before them.

3. Blessed are the poore in spirit. In Luke there is a bare Metaphor But Matthew doth more plainly expresse the mind of Christ, because that the pouerty of many is accursed & vnhappy. Therefore when there be many oppressed with euils, which yet cease not inwardly to swell with pride & cruelty, Christe pronounceth them happy, which being tamed & subdued with troubles, do submit themselves wholly vnto God, & being inwardly humbled, they comit themselves into his custody. others do interpret the poore in spirit, which do arrogate nothing to themselves, but throwing downe all trust in flesh, they acknowledge their own need. But because it is necessary to be one, & the same sense in the words of Luke & Matthe. It is not to be doubted but they are called poore which are oppressed & afflicted with aduersities. This only is the difference that Mat. by adding the Epithyte, doth restraints the felicity to them only, which vnder the discipline of the crosse haue learned to be humble. For theirs is. We see that Christ doth not puffed vp the mindes of his disciples with a vaine perswasion, or harden them with a hard harted obstinancy, as the Stoicks do: but he calling the to the hope of eternal life, he encourageth the to patience: because by this meanes they should enter into the heauenly kingdome. But it is worth the labor to note, that no man is poore in spirit, but he that is brought to nothing in himselfe, and reposes himselfe in the mercy of God. For they that are broken or ouerwhelmed with desperation, when they fret against God, are of a lofty and proude spirit.

4. Blessed are they that mourne. This sentence is not onely next to that which goeth before, but it is an Appendix or confirmation of it. For it was wont to be iudged, that troubles make a man vnhappy, because they alwayes do drawe sorrow and griefe with them, and that nothing is more contrary to felicity then sorrow. But Christ doth not onely deny that they that mourne are miserable, but hee teacheth that they are holpe, euen by that sorrowe to happy life. For that they are by this meenes framed to receiue eternall ioy, and pricked forward as with spurres, least they should seeke any comforte any other where. So Paul sayth to the Romaines, chapter. 5. 3. wee reioyce in tribulations, knowing that tribulation bringeth forth patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed.

5. Blessed are the meeke. He meaneth those meeke & quiet, which are not easily prouoked with iniuries, & are not giuen to frowardnes for euery offence, but are ready rather to suffer any thing, then to do as the wicked do. But it seemeth very absurd that christ promiseth the inheritance of the earth to such. For they rather vsurp the gouernment of the earth, which couragiously; repel all iniuries, & if at any time they be hurt, they are ready with the hand to reuenge the same. And certainly experience teacheth, that the wicked do so much the more boldly and stoutly goe on forward, for that they are the more gently borne with. And hereof rose that deuilish prouerbe. They must howle with the woules: because cause that whofoeuer maketh himselfe a sheepe, is presently to bee deuoured of the wolues. But Christ opposing his owne aide and the helpe of his Father, against the fury and violence of those euils, doth not without cause declare that the meeke shalbe Lords and inheritors of the earth. The children of this world doe not thinke themselues otherwise in safegard, except they sharply reuenge what euill foeuer is done them, and so with force and armes defende their life. But sith it is certaine that Christ is the onely keeper of our life, there remaineth nothing else, but that wee should hide our selues vnder the shadow of his wings. Also it behooueth vs to be sheepe, if we couet to be accounted of his flocke. If any Obiect, that this heere spoken is against experience: First I woulde hee should weigh how vnquiet those cruell men be, so that they euen trouble themselues, So that in so troublesome a life, though they were the Lordes of the earth a hundred times, yet in possessing all things they possesse nothing. But for the children of God I answer, though they can in no place set their foote vpon their owne ground, yet they quietly inioy a dwelling vpon the earth. And this is not an imagined possession, for they dwell vpon the earth, which they know is granted them from God. Also they are armed with the hande of God against the tempest and rages of all mischeifes, and though they be set forth against all the dartes of Fortune, and subiect to all inconuenience of euils, & compassed about with all dangers: yet they dwell safely vnder the defence of God, so that at least they may taste now the fauour of God. And this is sufficient for them, vntill at the last day they enter into the inheritance of the world.

6. Blessed are they that hunger. To hunger and to thirst, is by the figure Synecdoche, taken for want, to be without things necessarie, and also to be defrauded of their owne right. That which Mathew sayth, to hunger after righteousness, is a placing of a part for the whole. Yet hee amplifieth the vnworthines, when he sayth that by carefull sighthing they get nothing but that which is righteous: as if hee should say: they are blessed, which though they moderat their desires, so that they desire nothing to be giuen them, but that which is right: do yet neuertheless languish as hungry soules. For though their carefulnes where with they bee troubled, is scorned at, yet it is to them a preparation to felicitie, because they shall at length be satisfied: for GOD will at length heare their sighes, and will heare their iust desires, whose office it is to fill the hungry with good things as it is in the Virgins song.

7. Blessed are the mercifull. This sentence also is harde and contrary to the iudgement of man. For the worlde accounteth them happy, which are carelesse of the miseries of other menne, and prouide for their owne ease: but Christe heere calleth them blessed, which are not onely readie to beare their owne harmes, but doe also take other mens vpon themselues, that they may helpe them that are in miserie, and willingly ioyne themselues to them that are troubled, and put on the same affections, that thereby they may the more willingly employ themselues to helpe them. Hee addeth, for they shall obayne mercie, that is, not onely with God, but also amongst men themselues, whose mindes God will bow to humanitie. But though sometimes the worlde is vnthankfull, & bestoweth the worst rewarde vpon them that deserue best, it ought so suffice vs, that there is fauour layde vp with GOD for the mercifull and kinde kinde, so that they shall haue him kinde and mercifull againe to them.

8. Blessed are the pure in heart. Christ seemeth here to say nothing but that which is agreeable to the iudgement of all men. All confesse that cleauesse of heart is the mother of all vertues, but yet it is scarce the hundred man that doth not account subtiltie as a most notable vertue. Hereof it cometh to passe that they are commonly thought blessed, which are most subtille in craftie conueiances, which they will meanes doe craftely circumuent them with whom they haue to doe. Therefore Christ agreeth not with the iudgement of the fleshe, which calleth them blessed, which are not delighted with craftinesse, but walke sincerely amongst men, and in wordes and countenance pretend no other thing, then they thinke in heart. And because the simple are laughed at as men nothing wane, and because they doe not with deceite enough prouide for themselves, Christ calleth them higher: that if they bee not wise enough to deceiue vpon earth, they shall inioy the sight of God in heauen.

9. Blessed are the peace-makers. He doth not onely meane them which loue peace, and flee from quarrels as much as in them lieth, but doe also diligently ende dissentions raysed vp amongst others, are the authours of peace vnto all, and doe take away the occasion of hatreds, & displeasures. Neither is this rashly spoken, for, sith it is a painefull & a troublesome matter to pacifie them that disagree amongst themselves, the quiet men which studie to maintaine peace, are enforced to beare this crueltie, that they heare the reproches, the cōplaints and the quarrelles on both partes. And thereof it riseth that euery man would wish to haue them all patrons to be on his side. Therefore, leatt we should hang vpon the fauour of men, Christ commandeth vs to regarde the iudgement of his father, who being the God of peace, accounteth vs for his children, while we nourish peace, although our labour please not men, For to be called, signifieth as much, as to be accounted.

10. Blessed are they which suffer persecution. The disciples of Christ haue great neede of this doctrine, and how much more the lother and more hardly flesh doth admit the same, so much more diligently it must be meditated. Neyther can we vnder any other condition war vnder Christ then that the greater parte of the world will rise vp in hatred against vs, & shall persecute vs euen to death. So stands the matter, Sathan the prince of the world will neuer cease to arme his children with madnes, that they may strike the members of Christ. This is very monstrous and against nature, that they which loue righteousness should be vexed as enemies, which they haue not deserued. Therefore Peter sayth, if you auoyde from euill deedes, who is he that will harme you? But in so vnbridled wickednes of the world, it falleth out too often, that the good mé through the zeale of righteousness do enflame the displeasures of the wicked against the

But this is the lotte, especially of Christians, to bee hated of the greatest number of men: for flesh cannot beare the doctrine of the Gospel: none canne beare to haue their faultes reprooued. They are foyde to suffer for righteousness, which thereby kinde the displeasures of the wicked, and prouoke their furie against them: because that with a care of right and equitie they oppose themselves against euill causes, and defende the good as muche as in them lieth. And in this behalfe the truth of God hath worthily worthely the cheife place. Wherefore by this note Christ discerneth his Martyrs from wicked men and euill doers. Now I returne to that which I sayd euen now: Syth all that will liue godly in Christ must suffer persecution, as Paul witnesseth, this admonition doth generally belong to all the godly. If that at any time the Lord spareth our weaknesse, and permitteth not the wicked to vex vs at their pleasure: yet it is meete vnder a shadow and at leisure to meditate this doctrine, that wee may bee prepared as oft as neede require to come forth into the field, nor come to the battell except we be well furnished. But sith the condition of the godly is most miserable through the whole course of this life: Christ for a good cause raiseth vs vp in hope of a heauenly life. And herein the sentence of Christ differeth much frō the inuentions of the Stoicks, which commaunde euery man to be satisfied with his owne opinion, that hee might be his owne chuser of felicitie. And Christ doth not vncertainly plant felicitie vpon a vaine imagination, but groundeth the same vpon hope of a rewarde to come. 2. Tim. 3. 11

11. When men reuile you. Luke sayth, when they hate you, and seperate you, and reuile you, and put out your name as euill. By which words Christ would cōfort his faithfull ones, that they should not faint in their minds, though they see themselues detested before the world. For this was no small temptation, to be throwne out of the Church as wicked and prophane. For sith hee knewe that nothing was more deadly to the hypocrites, then that hee might foresee with how furious a violence the enemies of the Gospell were enflamed against his little and despised flocke: his will was perfectly to arme them that they should not be ouerthrowne, though a greate heape of reproches shoulde hang ouer them to ouerwhelme them. And heere appeareth howe popish excommunication is to be feared as nothing, while that those tyrants seperate vs from their Synagogues, because we will not be diuorced from Christ.

12 Reioyce and be glad, for. That we should not be ouerthrowne with vniust reproches, he declareth that there is a remedie at hand: for as soone as wee liue vp our mindes to heauen, then presently a great occasion of ioy doeth offer it selfe, that it may swallow vp the heauines. The sport which the Papistes make with the name of rewarde, is heere easily wiped away. Neither is there, as they dreame, a mutuall relation, betweene rewarde and merite: but it is a free promise of a rewarde. Further, if wee consider how maimed & corrupt those good deedes are which come euen from the best men, GOD shall neuer finde any worke worthy a rewarde. Againe these clauses are to be noted, for my sake, or for the sonne of man, also they shall say al maner of euill against you falsely: least they which suffer persecution for their owne faultes, shoulde presently boast themselues to be Martyrs of Christ. As the Donatistes in times past pleased themselves with this onely title, that they had the magistrates against them. And at this day the Anabaptistes, though they disturbe the Church with their doting dreames, and slander the Gospell, yet they glory that they beare the ensignes of Christ, when as they are condemned righteously. But Christ pronounceth none blessed, but they which suffer in a iust defence of his quarell.

For so persecuted they the Prophets. This was purposely added, least the Apostles hoping to triumph without sweate or trauell, shoulde faint in persecutions secutions. For because that euery where in the scripture the restitution of all things is promised in the kingdom of Christ, it is dangerous least they should in a vaine hope lift vp themselves, and neuer thinke of the warfare. And it may be gathered out of other places, that they imagined that the kingdome of Christ, was full of riches and pleasures. Wherefore Christ doth not without a cause admonish them that the same troubles are prepared for them, which the Prophets sometime had experience of, for as much as they succede in their place. Neither doth hee say that the Prophets were before them onely in respect of time: but because they were of the same order, therefore it behooued them to frame themselves after their example. That common fancie of nine beatitudes is so friuolous, that it neede no long confutation.

L V K E 24. We be to you rich men. As Luke rehearseth only foure principall blessings: so now he opposeth foure curses, that the sentences might answer one to the other. But this Antithesis doth not onely tend to striking a feare in the wicked, but to the stirring vp of the faithfull, least they should sleep in the vain & captious snares of the world. For we know how quickly and readily a man may bee made drunke with prosperitie, or entangled with the faire speeches of men: whereby also it doth often come to passe that the children of God doe enuie at the reprobate, to whom they see all things flow prosperously and happily. Further, he curseth the rich, not all of the, but they that take their comfort in the world, that is, they so rest in their fortune, that they forget the life that is to come. Therefore he meaneth that riches are so farre from making a man blessed, that they often become an occasion of destruction. Otherwise God doth not remouer rich men out of his kingdome, so that they make not snares for themselves, or by fixing their hope in the earth, doe shut the gate of heauen against themselves. It was aptly sayd of Augustine, who that he might shew that riches of themselves are no hinderance to the children of God, doth say that poore Lazarus was receiued into the bosome of rich Abraham. In the same sence doth he curse them that are full and haue abundance, because they being puffed vp with a confidence in present ioyes, that they refuse all heavenly ioyes. The same is to be thought of laughter: for now by laughter he vnderstandeth them that are giuen to the pleasure of Epicures, and are drowned in the pleasures of the flesh, and doe flee from all troubles that are to be endured, for the defence of Gods glory. The last woe teadeth to the correction of ambition: for there is nothing more common then to see the prayes of men, or at the least to bee entangled with them. Christ therefore sheweth that the fauour of men is venomous and deadly, that hee might feare his Disciples from it. But this admonition especially belongeth to teachers: who haue more neede to feare ambition then any pestilence, for it cannot be but that they should defile the pure doctrine of God, when as they seeke after the fauour of men. That Christ sayth All men, ought to be referred to the children of this worlde which speake well of none but of deceiuers and false Prophets. For the faithfull and good ministers of sound doctrine haue their prayse and fauour with good men. Therefore the wicked loue of the flesh is heere condemned: for he cannot be the seruant of Christ that seekes to please men, as

Matthew 5.

13. Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost his savoure, wherewith shall it bee salted? It is thence forth good for nothing, but to bee cast out, and to be troden vnder foote of men.

15. Neither do menne light a candle, and put it vnder a bushell, but on a candlestick, and it giueth light vnto al that are in the house.

MAT. 23. Yee are the salte of the earth. That which is proper to the doctrine, hee doeth attribute to the persons, to whome the ministerie of the same was committed. For Christ by calling his Apctles the salt of the earth, doeth meane that it is their office to season the earth: because that men haue nothing but that which is vn-sauory, vntill they be seasoned with heauenly doctrine. And after hee admonisheth them to what they are called, and pronounceth a grieuous and horrible iudgement against them, except they performe their office. And he sheweth that the doctrine which was layde vpe with them, is so adioyued to a good conscience and to a godly & vp-right life: so that the corruption which were to bee boine with in others, is detestable in them, and to be accounted as monstrous: as if he should say, if other menne are vn-sauory before God, there is salte giuen to you, wherewith they may be made sauory: but if you be vn-sauory, from whence shall you haue remedy, that ought to helpe others? But the Lord doth excellently persecute his Metaphore, when he sayth that other things doe degenerate from their owne nature, are yet after their corruption profitable some way: but that salt is hurtfull, so that it also maketh the very dunghilles barren. This therefore is the summe. The sicknes is very incurable, when that the ministers and teachers of the worde doe corrupt and make themselves vn-sauory: because they ought with their salt to season the rest of the worlde.

Furthermore, this admonition is not only profitable for the ministers: but also for the whole flocke of Christe: for sith it was the will of God that the earth should bee seasoned with his word, it followeth that whatsoeuer wanteth this salte, is vsfauory before him, although it saouour neuer so well vnto men. Wherefore there is nothing better, the to admit that seasoning, by which meanes only our vsfauorines is amended. But yet let the seasons take heed that they nourish not the world in his corruption, and especially that they infect it not with a vile & corrupt saouour. Therefore the wickednes of the Papistes is not to be borne with. As though it were the purpose of Christ, to giue vnto his Apostles an vnbriделе liberty, and to make them tyrauntes ouer soules, and not rather to admonish them of their dutie, that they turne not out of the right way. Christe declareth what manner of teachers hee would haue for his Church. They that by no law doe challenge themselues to be Apostles, do vnder this couer maintaine what abomination soeuer they please to bring in, because Christ called Peter and such like, salte of the earth. And yet they do not consider how grieuous and seuer a threatning is added, that they are worst of all if they become vsfauory. This sentence is placed by Luke abruptly, but to the same end that it is read here, so that it need not any peculiar exposition.

MARK E. 49. Every manne shall bee seasoned with fire. I haue ioyned these woordes of Marke to the former woordes of Matthew: not that they altogether agree in sense, or that they were vsed at the same place or time, but rather that the readers may the better by this comparison perceiue the diuers vse of the same sentence. When as Christe hadde spoken of the euerlasting fire, (as Marke reporteth) he on the other side exhorteth his, that they should now rather offer themselues to the Lord, to be seasoned with fire and salte, that they may be made holy sacrifices, least that by their sinnes they purchase to themselues that fire which is neuer quenched. To be seasoned with fire, is an vnproper speech, but because that the nature of salte and fire is like in putting and trying out of humours, therefore Christ applyed the same woorde to both. Now wee vnderstand the occasion of this sentence: namely, that the faythfull shoulde not refuse to bee salted with fire and salte, since without this they cannot be made holy to God. And he alludeth to the commandement of the law, where the Lord expressely forbiddeth that no oblation be made without salte. And now in the Gospell hee teacheth the faythfull to bee seasoned, that they may be sanctified. When after he addeth, salte is good: he generally extendeth it to all, whom God once vouchsafeth to season with his word, and hee exhorteth them that they alwayes keepe their saouour. The metaphore is somewhat the harder, because that hee calleth whatsoeuer is seasoned by the name of salte: yet the sense is not made any thing the doubtfuller by it, for whē they haue through their carelesnesse lost their saouour which they hadde by the grace of God, there is no more remedy. And so are they vterly lost, that corrupt their fayth, (whereby they were consecrate) and themselues, seeing that a good saouour cannot be obtained by any other seasoning. Furthermore, they are become corrupt by forsaking the grace of God, and are worse then the infidels, euen as salte corrupteth the earth and the dunghill.

MAR.

Leuit. 2. 13.

M A R. 50. Haue salt in your selues. This worde may be taken heere diuers wayes as it may signifie either a seasoning of good sauour which is obtained by faith, or the wisdom of the spirite: as when Paul commandeth that our communication should be seasoned with salt, hee meaneth that it ought to be purged and pure from all prophane follies and corruptions, and to be filled with spirituall grace, which may edifie, and with his sauour may perfume all that shall heare it. If this exposition stand, then the last clause must be vnderstood of mutuall peace, which is nourished with that salt. Yet because it is more probable that this latter sentence doeth depende of the former speech, Christ seemeth to me to exhort his disciples to preferue the force & strength of their faith which may also helpe others. As if he should haue sayd, you must doe your diligence, that you be not onely seasoned within, but also that you may season others: yet because salt doth bite with his sharpenesse, he therefore doeth presently admonish, that the seasoning should so be tempered, that peace may yet remaine safe. Col. 4. 6

M A T. 14. You are the light of the world. Though wee be all children of the light, after that we be lightened with faith, and are commanded to beare burning lights in our hands, least we wander in darkenes, and also to shew the way of life to others: yet because the preaching of the Gospell was committed to the Apostles about all others, and at this day commaunded to the pastours of the Church, therefore Christ giueth this title peculiarly to them: as if he should haue sayd, that they were on this condition placed in such a degree, that they might giue light as from an high to all others: After he addeth two similitudes. A towne set vpon a hill cannot be hid, neither is it vse to hide a candle when it is lighted: By which words he would signifie that they should so liue, as if they were set out to be looked vpon of all men. And certainly, the higher a mā is placed, the greater hurt hee doth by his euill example, if hee behaue himselfe peruerfly. Therefore Christ willed his Apostles to bend themselues the more to godly and holy life, then any meanē men of the common sort: because that all mens eyes were set vpon them as vpon lanternes, neyther are they by any meanes to be borne with, except that godlines and integritie of life do answere to the doctrine whereof they are ministers. The applying of this similitude by Marke and Luke seemeth to be vnlike, for there Christe generally admonisheth them, diligently to take heed least any man being in darkenesse should nourish vp himselfe in a libertie of sinning: for that which is hid for a season, shall at length be reuealed. And this is the meaning, except that Christ rehearsed both these sentences abruptly not depending of the text.

M A T H. 16. Let your light so shine before men. After that hee hadde taught his Disciples, that they are so placed that their vices as well as their vertues are seene farre off, eyther for good or for euill example: now he commaundeth them so to frame their life, that they may moue all men to glorifie GOD. Let men (sayth hee) see your good workes. For as Paul witnesseth, the faithfull doe prouide for good things, not onely before GOD, but also before men. For that hee doeth after commaunde them in secrete and privacy to doe their good woorkes, is onely spoken to repooue their ambition. But nowe hee commendeth to them a farre other end, that is, the glory 2. Cor. 8. 21 of God alone. Furthermore, if the glory of good workes cannot be rightly attributed to God, except they be acknowledged as receiued from him, and he accounted as the onely author of them: Heereby it appeareth that without open and grosse contempt of God, freewill cannot bee exalted, as if that good workes either in part or in whole sprang out of the power of man. Againe it is to be noted how louingly God dealeth with vs, in calling good workes ours, whereof by right he should ascribe the whole prayse vnto himselfe.

Mathevv. 5

17. Thinke not that I am come to destroy the law or the Prophets, I am not come to destroy them, but to fulfill them.

18. For truly I say vnto you: Till heauen and earth perish, one iose, or one tittle of the lawe shall not scape, till all things be fulfilled.

19. Whosoever herefore shall breake one of these least commaundements and teach men so, hee shall bee called the least in the kingdome of heauen: but whosoever shall obserue and teach them, the same shall bee called great in the kingdome of heauen.

Marke

Luke 16.

17 Now it is more easie that heauen and earth should passe away, then that one tittle of the law should fall.

17. Thinke not. Though Christ was of that perfection of life, that he might rightly say that he came to fulfill the law, yet he doth not here entreate of life, but of doctrine. Because that he did proclaime that the kingdome of God was come, and did stirre vp the mindes of men with an vnwoonted hope, and did also receiue his disciples by baptisme: It is probable that the mindes of many doubted, and diligently sought to what purpose that newnesse tended. Now CHRIST declarcth that his doctrine is so farre from any dissenting with the law, so that it agreeth very well with the law and the Prophets, and not so onely, but it bringeth a full perfection to the same. And it seemeth that hee was especially led by two causes to testifie this consent of the lawe and the Gospell. As soone as there springs out any new kinde of teaching, the comon people take it as if there should be an alteration of all things. And the preaching of the gospell was in that order (as I said euen now) that made them hope that the church should be altered into an other estate then it was before: they did therefore thinke that the olde and vsuall kinde of gouernement was abolished. Which opinion had bin very hurtfull many wayes: for the godly worshippers of God, would neuer haue embraced the Gospell, if it had bene a defection from the lawe, and the light and troublesome spirites would assay by taking such an occasion greedily to ouerthrow the state of religion: for wee knowe howe ouerthwarly rashnesse lifts vpe it selfe in newethings. Furthermore, Christ saw very many of the Iewes, which though they professed that they beleued the lawe, yet they were altogether prophane and degenerate, for the estate of things amongst that people were so decayed, and all things were filled with such corruptions, so that through eyther slouth or malice, the Priest had quenched the pure light of doctrine, so that there remayned no

greate reuerence of the lawe. If that there hadde beene brought a new kinde of doctrine, that should haue discredited the lawe and the Prophetes, then religion hadde beene miserably shaken. This seemeth to bee the first cause why Christe denied that he came to destroy the lawe, as it may be easily gathered out of the texte. For to confirme the same, he presently addeth that it cannot bee that one iote or tittle of the lawe should passe vnfulfilled, and he accurseth those teachers that doe not labour saythfully in mayntaining the authoritie of the same. And the second cause was, that he might take away the vile reproch which the rude and ignorant would charge him with. For it appeareth that the Scribes charged his doctrine with this faulte, in so much that he inueigheth against them.

Wee must consider this purpose of Christ, that he so calleth and exhorteth the Iewes to receiue the Gospell, that yet hee keepeth them vnder obedience of the lawe: then hee mightily refelleth those vnworthy reproches and euils, wherewith the enemies sought to bring his preaching into slander and suspicion. For if any minde to restore things confused into a better estate, hee must alwayes vse this wisdom and moderation, that the people may knowe that the eternall word of God is touched thereby, & that there is no new thing thrust in, which derogateth any thing from the scripture: least any suspicion of repugnancie should weaken the sayth of the godly, and least that rash vnadvised men should become insolent vnder pretence of holinesse: Lastly, that the prophane contempt of the word of God may bee slayed, and that religion bee not brought into no reputation amongst the vnlearned. And this defence of Christ wherewith he excuseth his doctrine, ought to comfort vs, if wee at this day suffer like reproaches. The same faulte was also obiected against Paule, that hee was an Apostate from the lawe of God, wherfore it is no maruell if the papistes out of the same mould do coyne the like against vs. And by the exaple of Christ it is meete to auoyde slanderous reportes, yet so, that the truth may bee freely professed, though it bee subiect to many vniust reproches. I came not to destroy, God hadde promised a newe couenant at the comming of Christ, but he sheweth also that it shall not bee diuers from the firste, but that this rather was the ende that the league which hee had made with his people from the beginning, might bee sanctified for euer. I will write (sayth he) my lawes in their hearts, and I will forget their sinnes: By these woordes hee is so farre from departing from the former couenant, that he rather affirmeth that it shall then bee established and confirmed when as the new shall come in place. And that was the meaning of the wordes of Christ, when he sayd that he came to fulfill the lawe. For hee fulfilled it truly, quickening the dead letter with his spirite: then hee indeede performed that which before was shewed onely vnder figures. So that the curse being abrogate, the subiection is taken away, and a liberty purchased for the saythfull, and nothing is derogated from the doctrine of the law, but onely expoundeth the minde of the lawe giuer, as appeareth Galathians the third and the fourth Chapters.

Therefore as concerning the doctrine, wee may not imagine a nye abrogation of the Lawe by the comming of Christ. For sith it is an euermlasting rule of a godly and a holy life, it must bee vnchangeable, as the iustice of God is one, and the same which is therein comprehended.

As concerning the Ceremonies, though they may be accounted as a certaine addition to the same, yet the onely vse of them was abrogate: but the signification was the more approoued. So that the coming of Christ did not derogate any thing from the ceremonies, but rather the truth of the shadowes being shewen toorth, doth obtaine the more assured credit vnto them: while we beholding the perfecte effecte, doe acknowledg that they are not vaine nor vnprofitable. Therefore let vs learne or keepe this sacred knote of the lawe & the Gospell inuioable, which many do wickedly dissolue: And it doth much auaille to the establishing of the truth of the Gospell, while wee heare that it is nothing else but the fulfilling of the law, so that in a mutuall consent they shew that God is the author of them both.

18. Till heauen and earth perishe. Luke vseth other woordes, but the same sense. It is more easie for heauen and earth to passe away, then that any title of the law should fall. For it was the will of Christ to teach in both places, that there is nothing so sure in the whole frame of the world, as is the certaine truth of the law, and that in euery poynt of the same. Some do very subtilie play with the word until, as if that the passing of heauen & earth which shall bee in the last day of iudgemēt, should put an end to the law & the prophets. And truly, as the tongs shall then cease, and propheties be abolished, so I thinke that the wrytten lawe with the expositiō shall cease. But because I thinke that Christ spake more simply, I will not feede the readers eares with such deuises. Therefore let it suffice vs to vnderstand this, that heauen should fall, and the whole frame of the world should come together, rather then the certainty of the lawe should wauer. But what is the meaning of this, all thinges of the lawe shall be performed euen to the least title? For we see how farre menne are from the perfect fulfilling of the lawe, euen they that are regenerate with Gods spirite: I answere, this fulfilling is not referred to the life of menne, but to the perfect truth of the doctrine, as if hee shoulde say, there is nothing inconstant in the lawe, and nothing put rashly in the same: Therefore it cannot bee that one letter of the same shoulde vanish away.

19. Whoso euer therefore shall breake. Heere Christe speaketh namely of the preceptes of life, or of the ten woordes, according to which prescript order, it be cometh all the children of God to frame their liues. Therefore he pronounceth them to be false & peruerse teachers, which keepe not their disciples vnder obedience of the lawe: and that they are vnwoorthy to haue a place in the Church, which diminish the authoritie of the law in the least parte of the same: and that they are good and faythfull ministers of G O D, which teach the obseruation of the lawe, as well in example of life as in woordes. Also he callerh them the leaste commaundementes of the lawe, according to the sense and iudgement of men: for though there is not like waight in all commaundementes, but while they bee compared betweene themselues, some are lesse then other: yet may we nothing sooner esteeme and account that, as little, whereof the heauenly lawgiuer hath vouchsafed to giue a commaundement.

For what sacrifice were it contemptuously to receive that, which commeth out of his mouth? For by this means his maiesty should haue bene abased: wherefore whereas Christ calleth them the least precepts, is a kind of yeelding to our vnderstanding. When he sayth he shall be called least, is an abusion to that was sayd before of the commaundementes, but the meaning is euident, they that bring the doctrine of the law into contempt, yea though it bee but in one fillable, shall be reiected as the worst sort of men. The kingdome of heauen is taken for the renouatiō of the Church, or the second state of the Church as it then began to rise by the preaching of the Gospel. So in Luke 7.28 Christ accounteth him that is least in the kingdome of God, greater then John: the reason of the speech is, because God restoring the worlde by the hande of his sonne, framed his kingdome perfectly. Therefore Christe will not that any teachers bee admitted into his Church after the same bee renewed, but such as are faythfull interpreters of the law, and will endeouour to keepe the doctrine of the same sound, But it is demanded whether the ceremonies were accounted amongst the commaundements of God, which are not required now to be obserued. I answer, the purpose and the end of the lawgiuer is to be considered. For God commaunded the ceremonies, that the outward vse of them might be temporall, and the signification eternall: he breaketh not the ceremonies, that holdeth the effect of them, and omitteth the shadow. Now sith Christe banisheth them out of his kingdome, which accustome menne to the contempt of his law: their beastlinesse is monstrous, that are not ashamed with sacrilegious indulgence, to remit that which God doth so seuerely require, & vnder pretence of a veniall sinne to beat downe the righteousnesse of the law. Againe that title is to be noted which he giueth to good and holy teachers, that is, to such as exhort men not only in words, but especially in example of life to keepe the law.

Matth 5.

20. For I saye vnto you, except your righteousnesses exceede the righteousnesse of the Scribes & Pharisees, yee shall not enter into the kingdome of heauen.

21. Yee haue heard that it was sayd to them of the old time. Thou shalt not kill: for who soeuer killeth shall be culpable of iudgement.

22. But I saye vnto you, who soeuer is angrye with his brother vnadvisedly, shall bee culpable of iudgement. And who soeuer saith to his brother, Racha, shall be worthy to be punished by the counsell: & who soeuer shall say, Foole, shall be worthy to be punished with hell fire.

Marke.

Luke.

20. Except your righteousnesse exceede. He reprehendeth the Scribes, which endeououred to charge the doctrine of the Gospel, as though it were the ouerthrowe of the lawe. Hee disputeth not this matter, but onely dooth shewe briefly that they haue nothing lesse in their mindes, then the zeale of the lawe : as if hee shoulde haue sayde, they pretend that they hate mee, because they would not breake the lawe, but it appeareth by their life how coldly they esteeme the law, nay how securely they scorne at God, while that with a painted and faigned righteousnesse they beare vppon themselues amongst men. This is the iudgement of most of the interpreters. But see if hee doe not rather reprocue the corrupt kind of teaching, which the Scribes and Pharises vsed in teaching the people. For when as they restrayned the law of GOD onely to outward duties, they framed their disciples as Apes to hypocrisie. And I speake not against it, that they liued as wickedly, nay worse then they taught. Therefore I doe willingly ioyne their glory of false righteousnesse with their wicked doctrine : yet it doth easily appeare by those wordes that follow (what it is that Christ doth especially inueigh against in this sentence) where as hee purging the lawe from their wicked commentes, doeth restore the same to his former puritie. In summe, that which was wickedly objected, (as wee haue sayde) against him, he forcibly returneth backe vppon themselues. Behold, sayd hee, how perfect and apt interpreters of the lawe they are : for they doe frame a righteousnesse which shall shutte the gate of heauen against the followers of it. It must be remembered, that wee sayde other where, that for the amplifying of the matter, the Pharises are ioyned to the Scribes : because that secte had got the repute of holinesse to themselues before all others. Though they are deceiued that thinke they are so called of a separation, as menne separate from the common sorte of menne, they challenge a degree proper to themselues. For they were called Phariseism, that is interpreters : because that they not contente with the simple letter, professed that they had the keye, to gather the secrete vnderstanding : whereof their great heape of mixed inuentions sprange, when as they drawing the maister shippe to themselues with a wicked pleasure and like boldnes they durst intrude their owne inuentions instead of the scripture.

21. You haue heard what was sayde. This sentence and others following doth agree with that, that goeth before. For Christ dooth more at large shewe in their kindes how ourthwartly they doe wrest the lawe, so that their righteousnesse is nothing els but drosse. But they are deceiued that thought, that this was the reformation of the law, & that Christ extolled his disciples into higher degree of perfection, then Moses euer could bring his grosse and carnall people vnto, which was hardly fitte to learne the first elementes. So went the opinion, the beginning of righteousnes was in times past deliuered in the lawe, but that the perfection is taught in the Gospell.

But Christ ment nothing lesse, then to chaunge or alter any thing in the commandements. For God hath therein once established a perfect rule of life, where of he will neuer repent. But because that the law was corrupted with adulterous commentes, and was wrested into a prophane sence, Christ deliuereth the same from such corruptions, and sheweth the right vnderstanding of it, fro the which the Iewes were fallen away. And the doctrine of the lawe doth not onely beginne, but also performeth an vpright life : as may be gathered out of this one Chapter, in that it requireth a perfecte loue of GOD and our neighbour : so that hee which is endued with such a loue, wanteth nothing of the cheife perfection. Therefore the lawe, by the commaundements of good life, leadeth men to the marke of righteousnesse. Therefore Paule accounteth it weake, not in respect of it selfe, but in respect of our flesh. For if the law did onely giue an entrance to true and perfect righteousnesse, then was Moses protestation in vaine: I take heauen and earth to record this day against you, that I haue set before thee the way of life and death. Againe, and nowe O Israell, what doth the Lord thy G O D require of thee, but that thou shouldest wholly cleaue vnto him. This promise were also in vaine, and to no purpose, hee that doth these things shall liue in them. And it evidently appeareth out of other places of scripture, that Christ meant not to alter any thing in the commaundements. For he commandeth them, that woulde through their good workes enter into life, to obserue nothing but the commaundements of the lawe: and neyther hee nor his Apostles doe giue any other precepts of godly & holy life. And truly they do great iniurie to God the authour of the law, which imagine that hee did onely frame the eyes, hands, and feete to a feigned thewe of good workes, and that onely the Gospell teacheth vs to loue God from the hearte. Therefore let that error passe, that the wants of the law are here amended by Christ: for we may not imagine Christ to be a new law giuer, to adde any thing to the eternall righteousnesse of his father: but as a faithfull interpreter he is to be heard, that we might know, what maner of law it is, to what purpose it tendeth and how farre it reacheth.

Deu. 30. 19
Deu. 10. 12

Leuit. 18. 5.

Now it remaineth for vs to see what Christ condemneth in the Pharises, and what his interpretation differeth from their commentes. The summe is, that they had translated the doctrine of the law to a politike order, as if it sufficed to doethe outward duties. So it came to passe, that hee thought himselfe free from manslaughter, that had not with his hande killed a man. And hee that had not defiled his body with adulterie, thought himselfe chaste & pure before God. But this profanation of the lawe might not be borne, when as it is certaine, that Moses did euery where require a spirituall worship of God: and God, who deliuered the same by the hand of Moses, according to his owne nature spake as well to the hearts, as to the hands and eyes. Christ alleadgeth the wordes of the law, but he applyeth himselfe to the common capacitie of the simple, as if hee should say: the Scribes haue as yet deliuered vnto you, but a literall exposition of the law: as if it were sufficient if a man keepe his handes from manslaughter and violence. But I admonish you to looke deeper into the matter: and because that charitie is the perfection of the lawe, I say that thy neighbour is iniured, as oft as any thing is vncharitably done against him. The last clause that he rehearseth, that he shall bee culpable of a iudgement that killeth a man, doth confirme that which I sayd euen now, that Christ reprooueth that fault: that the law of God, which was giuen to gouerne the minds of men, was turned into a politike gouernement.

22. But I say vnto you. He doth not oppose his answer against the commandment of Moses, but against the common fantasie of the Scribes. Also because that the Pharises did boast of antiquitie (as commonly a long prescription of time is pretended for defence of errors) Christ calleth the people backe to his authoritie, whereto all antiquitie ought of right to giue place: wherby we gather that the truth is much more to be esteemed than either antiquitie or custome.

Whosoever shall say vnto his brother. Christ setteth downe three degrees of condemnation, besides the violence of the hands: whereby he declareth that that commandement of the law, doth not onely reſtraine the handes, but all affections contrary to brotherly charitie: as if hee ſhould haue ſayde, they that are onely angry with their brethren, or doe proudly liſt vp themſelues, or doe hurt them with any opprobrious words, are murderers.

Nowe ſith it is euident, that this worde Ratha is placed in the middeſt betwene anger and maniſeſt reproofe, I take it to be an interiection of contempt or deſpite. And though Chriſt adiudgeth them onely to hell fire, which breake out into open reproofes, yet hee acquiteth not anger from this puniſhment: but alluding to the iudgements of the worlde, hee declareth that God will become iudge of that priuate and ſecret wrath, that hee may puniſh the ſame. And becauſe that hee proceedeth further, that ſheweth his indignation with bitter ſpeech, he ſayth, that he ſhall be found guiltie before a heauenly counſell, that hee may haue a greater puniſhment. And he adiudgeth them to hell fire, which breake out into reproches, ſignifying that hatred or whatſoever els is againſt charitie, ſufficeth to purchaſe the reward of eternall death, though no violence be offered. It is not to be doubted, but that this word Gehenna is borrowed for with the Hebrewes it ſignifieth a valley. Alſo the valley of Hennon was an infamous place: becauſe of their deteſtable ſuperſtition, for that they there offered their children to Idolles. Hercof it came to paſſe, that holy men vſed that word for hell, that that vile vngodlines might be had in the greater deteſtation, that the people might abhorre that ſo deteſtable and horrible a name. And it appeareth that this maner of ſpeech was vſed in Chriſt his time, and hell was called almoſt by no other name then Gehenna, the word ſomewhat altered from the naturall ſound.

Mathew. 5.

23 If then thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberſt that thy brother hath ought againſt thee.

24. Leaue there thine offering before the altar, and goe thy way: firſt, be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift

25. Agree with thine aduerſary quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him, leaſt thine aduerſary deliuer thee to the iudge, & the iudge deliuer thee to the ſergeants, and thou be caſt into priſon.

26. Verily I ſay vnto thee, thou ſhalt not come out thence, till thou haſt payde the vttermoſt farthing.

Marke.

58. Whileſt thou goeſt with thine aduerſarie to the ruler, as thou art in the way, giue diligence in the way, that thou mayſt be deliuered from him, leaſt hee bring thee to the iudge, and the iudge deliuer thee to the ſayler, and the ſayler caſt thee into pryſon.

59: I tell thee, thou ſhalt not depart thence, till thou haſt payd the vtmoſt mite.

27. If thou bring thy gift. With this claufe hee confirmeth and alſo expoundeth the former doctrine. The ſumme is, that wee doe then ſa-tiſſie that commaundement of the lawe, wherein wee are forbidden to kill, kill, if wee nourish agreement & brotherly loue with our neighbours. And that he might the better perswade vs to it, Christ pronounceth that euen the duties of religiō are not accepted of God, but refused of him, if we dissent amongst our selues. For in that he commandeth thē, that haue hurt any one of their brethren, to be first in fauour with him, before that they offer their gift: he declareth that there is no entrance for vs vnto God, so long as through our fault wee are at enmitie with our neighbours. If that men pollute and corrupt with their hatreds their whole worshipp which they offer, we hereof gather how much he esteemeth mutuall concord amongst vs. Yet here may a question be moued, whether it be not absurde that the duties of charitie are more accounted of, thē the worship of God. For we must say, that eyther the order of the law is preposterous, or els the first table should be preferred before the second.

This is easily answered: for the wordes of Christe doe tend to no other purpose, but to shewe that they doe in vayne and falsly professe themselves worshippers of G O D, which doe contemptuously despise their brethren, which they haue vniustly iniured. For vnder this one kinde hee noteth all the exercises of religion by the figure Synecdoche: by which outwarde exercises men doe oft counterfeit holinesse, rather then truely reitifie the same. And it is to be noted that Christe, after the manner of that time, spake of the sacrifices. At this day our estate is vnlike: yet the same doctrine remaineth: that is, whatsoeuer we offer vnto God is corrupt, except we be at one with our brethren as much as it lieth in vs.

The scripture calleth almes, Phillip. 4.18. sacrifices of a sweete saour: yee wee heare out of Paule his mouth, 1. Cor. 13. 2, 3. that hee that bestoweth all his goodes vppon the poore, is yet nothing, except he haue charitiy. Also God dooth not take nor acknowledge them for children, except they againe doe shew themselves to menne as brethren. And though Christe doe commaund them onely that haue iniured their brethren, to apply thēselues to appease them: yet vnder this one kinde he sheweth how precious brotherly concord is before God. And this setteth out much more, that he commaundeth to leaue the gift before the altar, as if he should haue sayd: in vaine do menne come to the temple, or offer sacrifices to God, so long as they are at discord with their neighbours.

25. Agree with thine aduersary. Though Christe seemeth to goe further not onely to exhorte them to reconciliation, which haue done iniurie to their brethren, but them also which haue bene iniured: yet I thinke that hee had a further regard: namely that he might cutte off all occasion of hatreds and discordes, and shew the meanes to maintaine good will: for from whence spring all iniuries, but that all menne are too carefull to holde their owne right: that is, they are giuen too much to maintaine their owne commoditie, with the losse of other men: For almost all menne are blinded with a peeuish loue of themselves, so that they flatter themselves, euen in the worst causes. Therefore Christe, that he might preuent discordes, hattreds, stifes, and all iniuries, forbiddeh that selfe loue, and commaundeth his disciples to bend themselves to moderation and equitie, that parting from the extremitie of their right, they might with such equity redeeme peace and friendship.

It were to bee wished, that there should neuer fall any strife or controuersie amongst vs: and surely men shoulde neuer fall into contention or strif, if there were such loue amongst them as ought to be. But because that it can hardly be brought to passe, but that some strife will arise, Christ sheweth a remedy how the same may presently bee ended, namely, if we bridle our lustes, & bee ready rather to passe it ouer with our losse, then to profecute our right with an vnapeaseable rygor. But christ vsith this exhortotion diuers times, as it appeareth out of the 2. of Luke, whereas the Sermon which he made in the mount is not set downe, but an epitome gathered of diuers sentences of Christ. Whereby it also appeareth what it is to be in the way: that is, before thou comest to the Iudge. Least thine aduersary deliuer thee to the iudge. Some expound this clause metaphorically, that the heavenly iudge will deale with extremity of lawe, so that he will forgieue nothing at all, except that we endeouour to pacifie those contentions, which we haue with our neighbours. But I take it simply, that Christ admonisheth vs, that this is profitable for vs euen amongst men. For the couetous desire is often daungerous to the contentious. Yet I do not deny but that the similitude may be aptly applyed to God: that is, that hee shall feele iudgement without mercy, that is rigorous to his brethren, or bendeth himselfe wholly to contention. But the Papistes are more then ridiculous, which by expounding this place allegorically, doe build their purgatory: but there is nothing more euident, then that Christ doth speake of maintaineing good will amongst men. They make no religion without shame, to peruerte his woordes, and to draw them to a straunge sense, so that they might deceiue the vnlearned. But because they are vnworthy of any long confutation, I will shewe in one onely word, how shamefull their ignorance is. They imagine the aduersary to be the deuill, and that Christe commaundeth his faythfull ones to belong vnto him: therefore that the Papistes may finde out a purgatory, it behooueth them first to bee brethren and friendes to the diuell.

It is well knowne that a quarterne is the fourth parte of a pound, but in this place it is taken for a farthing, or any other small peece of money, as it also appeareth out of Luke. Now, if I would vse cauilles, I would here also refell the folly of the Papistes. For if hee that is once in purgatorie shall neuer goe out from thence, vntill he haue payd the vttermost farthing: it followeth that those rites, which they call the suffrages of the lyuing for the dead, are in vaine. For Christ doth not admit others to make satisfaction for the releafe of the debter, but expressly requireth of euery man the payment of his own debt. If then their Masses and other sacrifices be vnprofitable, how hotely soeuer their fire of purgatory doe burne, yet their Priestes and Monkes kitchens shall waxe cold: for which cause they haue so painefully struien for the same.

Math. 5.

27. Yee haue heard that it was sayde to them of olde tyme, Thou shalt not commit adultery.

28. But I saye vnto you, that whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adulterie with her alreadie in his heart.

29. Wherefore if thy right eye cause thee to offend, plucke it out, and cast it from thee: for it is better for thee, that one of thy members perish, then that thy whole bodie should be cast into hell.

30. Also if thy right hand make thee to offend, cut it off, and cast it from thee: for better it is for thee, that one of thy members perish, then that thy whole body should be cast into hell.

27. Thou shalt not commit adulterie. Christ proceedeth in his disputation, proving that the law of God is not only a governour of life, to frame the outward behaviour after a politike manner: but it also requireth the perfect and whole affections of the heart. But that must be remembred, which I gaue warning of before. Although Christ reporteth the words of the law, yet it is the grosse and adulterous sense, which false interpreters had gathered, that he reproveth: for he had sayd before, that he came not to bee a newe lawgiuer, but a faithfull interpreter of the law alreadie giuen. And for that it might be objected, that that interpretation had continued long, Christ expressly granteth it: but after this maner he answereth it, that the long continuance of errour ought to be no preiudice to the truth.

28 Hee that looketh vpon a woman. The purpose of Christe is generally to condemne the lust of the flesh. Therefore he sayth that they are adulterers before God, not only that defile other mens wiuies, but they also that pollute their eyes with an vnchast looke. But it is a figuratiue kinde of speech, because that not onely the eyes doe make men guiltie of adulterie, but also the blind burning lustes of the heart. Therefore Paul placeth chastitie in the body and the spirite, 1. Cor. 7. 34, But Christ thought it sufficient to confute that grosse opinion, which had taken place: because that they did thinke that they shoulde auoyd nothing but outward adulterie. Notwithstanding, because the eyes, for the most part, procure the mindes to such filthy deuises, and lust entreth as it were by these doores. Christ vseth this maner of speech, when as he would condemne concupiscence, and that may easily be gathered by that word lust: wher by we are also taught, that not they only are to be accounted adulterers, which conceiue whoredome in their mindes with full consent: but they also that admit any prickles or motions of the same. Wherefore the hypocrisie of the Papistes is too grosse and carelesse, which denie concupiscence to be sinne, vntill the whole heart doe yeeld consent. But it is not to be maruailed at, that they lessen sinne as they doe, when as it behooueth them to be dull and slow in accounting of their sinnes, which ascribe righteousnes to the deserts of their workes.

29. If thine eye. Because in the weakenesse and imbecillitie of the flesh, CHRIST might seeme to vrge men too seuerely, hee preuenteth and answereth all those complaints. In summe hee declareth, though that bee harde, difficult, troublesome, or sharpe, which God commmandeth: yet we can make no excuse thereby: because that the righteousness of God ought to be more esteemed of vs, then all other things which are most deare and precious to vs. As if he should haue sayd, there is no cause why thou shouldest obiekt to me, that thou canst scarcely turne thine eye hether and thither: but that they are caught in snares before thou art aware. For thou must rather forsake and leaue thine eyes then to depart from the commaundementes of GOD. Yet it is not Christes meaning that the body should be lamed, that we might obey GOD. But because that all men doe gladly desire that their senses may not be so maymed, that they may haue the free vse of them, Christ doth hyperbolically teach vs to cut away any thing that hindreth vs from that obedience vnto God, which hee requireth of vs in his law. And this he doth of purpose, because that men do in this behalfe too licentiously nourish vpthemselues. If the mind were pure, the eyes and hands would also bee obedient, which haue no proper motion of their owne. But we doe herein offend greiuously, that wee are not so carefull as wee ought to be in auoyding deceitfull baires, so that rather with an vnbridled libertie wee doe willingly prouoke our selues to euill.

Matth. 5

31. It hath bene sayd also, whofoeuer shall put away his wife, let him giue her a testimoniall of diuorcement.

Marke.

Luke 16.

31. Whofoeuer shall put away. Because there will be a more conuenient place to entreate of this doctrine more at large in the 19. after Mathew: I will nowe breifly touch that which Christ sayth heere. As the Iewes did falsly thinke that they had done their dutie towards God, if after a politike sort, they had obserued the law: so againe they fondly imagined that it was lawfull for them to do whatfoeuer the politike law did not forbid.

The diuorcements which they were wont to make their wiues Moses had not forbidden, in respect of an outwarde order: but onely for restraint of lust hee had commaunded to giue a bil of diuorcement to those wiues that were put away. And it was a certaine testimonie of manumission, that the woman might after be free from the yoake and power of her husband. And the husband did also confesse that hee did not put away his wife for any faulte, but because hee did not like her. From hence sprang that errour, that they thought no faulte to bee in such a diuorcement: so that they satisfied the lawe: but they tooke a very wrong rule of a godly and holy life, out of the ciuill law. For the politike lawes are sometime bent to mens manners: but GOD in giuing a spirituall law did not regarde what men coulde doe, but what they ought to doe. Therefore a perfect and vpright righteousnesse is therein contayned, though wee haue no power to fulfill the same. So Christ doth admonishe vs that that is not presently lawfull before GOD, which the politike lawe of Moses

Moses doth tollerate. He saith, that vnder the pretence of the law, he absoluetly himselfe, that putting away his wife, giueth her a bill of diuorcement. But the bande of Matrimonie is holier, then that it may bee broken and vnknit at the will, or rather pleasure of men. For though man and wife do ioyne themselves together with a mutuall consent: yet God doth ioyne them and knit them together in such a knot, that cannot be dissolued, that after it is not lawfull for them to depart. Yet he putteth an exception, except it bee for fornication. For that woman is worthily put away, which hath traitercously broken matrimonie: for the band being broken through her fault, the man is set at libertie.

32. Causeth her to commit adultery. Because the bill of diuorcement did permit, that the woman so seperated, might enter into new mariages, hee is worthily condemned as a baud or a betraier, that against all law and right, casteth of his wife to others, which was giuen to him of God.

Luke.

33. Againe; yee haue heard that it was sayde to them of old time, Thou shalt not forswear thy selfe, but shalt performe thine oathes to the Lord

34. But I say vnto you, sweare not at all, neyther by heauen: for it is the throane of God:

35. Nor yet by the earth: for it is his foote stoole: neither by Ierusalem: for it is the citie of the great king,

36. Neyther shalt thou sweare by thine head: because thou canst not make one hayre white or blacke.

37. But let your communication bee yea, yea: nay, nay: for whatsoever is more then these, commeth of euill.

33. Thou shalt not forswear thy selfe. This also is not a reproofe of the lawe, but rather a true interpretation of the same: for GOD hath not onely condemned in the law all periuries but vaine and light swearing, which derogateth from the maiestie of his name. For not onely he doth take the name of God in vaine, that sweareth falsly, but he that vseth the name of God in frivolous matters, or rashly and contemptuously in common speach. Further, when as the law of God condemneth euery prophaning of the name of GOD the Iewes did imagine the fault to be onely periuries. Christe reprooueth this grosse error, that they thought it lawfull for them to abuse the name of GOD without reproofe: so that they were not forsworne. It is commaunded that we should religiously performe our oathes to God. For he that doth defraude and deceiue his neighbours after that he hath vsed the name of God for it, doth iniury, not to men onely, but to God. But the fault is in restraining that to one point, which extendeth more largely. Some apply this word performe to vowes promised to God for religions sake. But the word doth best agree to all couenants and promises confirmed by adding the name of God thereto: for then is God made a witness between both parties, to whom they pledge their faith.

34. Swear not at all. This clause, not at all, hath deceiued many: so that they thought that Christ had generally condēned all oathes. And many good men were driuen to this vneasurable rigor, through the vnbrideled libertie of swearing, which they saw abound throughout the world. And the Anabaptistes vnder this pretence haue kept a great stirre, as though Christ would suffer vs to sweare for no cause, for that hee forbiddeth to sweare at all. But we must not fetch an exposition out of any other place, then out of the wordes of the text: presently there followeth, neyther by heauen, nor by the earth. Who seeth not that these kindes of oathes are set downe for interpretation sake, which by this numbring of these particuler oathes, might interpret the former sentence? The Ieues had certaine extraordinary or indirect (as men say) maner of oathes: and when they swore by heauen, earth, or the altar, they counted this al most for nothing. And as one sinne ariseth of an other, so vnder this colour they fained, that they did not so openly prophane the name of God. Christ, that he might meete with this sinne, sayth, that they may not at all sweare, eyther after this maner, or after that, neyther by heauen, nor by the earth, &c. Whereby wee gather that this phrase (not at all) is not referred to the substance, but to the maner of swearing: as if he should haue sayd, neither directly nor indirectly: otherwise it were in vaine to rehearse these kindes. Wherefore the Anabaptistes doe shew their grosse ignorance, and their delight in contention, while that frowardly they enforce one word, and with closed eyes do passe by the whole meaning of the sentence. If any obiekt that Christ permitteth no oath: I answer that the interpreters words must be vnderstoode according to the meaning of the law. Therefore this is the summe that the name of God is taken in vaine other waies then by periurie. Therefore we must refrain from all superfluous oathes: but whereas there is cause, the lawe doeth not onely permit, but also commandeth to sweare. So Christes meaning was nothing else, then that all those oathes are vnlawfull, which by any abuse prophane the sacred name of God, the reuerence whereof they ought to preserue.

Neyther by heauen. They are deceiued that say, that Christe reprooued these formes of swearing, as corrupt, because that GOD alone should be sworne by: for the reasons which hee bringeth doe rather bend to the contrary parte: because that then also the name of God is sworne by, when as heauen and earth are named because there is no part of the worlde, wherein GOD hath not imprinted some note of his glory. Yet this opinion seemeth not to agree with the commandement of the lawe, where as God expressly commandeth to sweare by his name, nor yet with diuerse places of the Scripture, whereas hee complayneth, that hee is iniured so ofte, as his creatures are sworne by. I answer it is an offence like to idolatrie, when as eyther the power of iudgement, or the authoritie of trying witnesses is giuen to them. For wee must consider the ende of swearing: namely, that men doe appeale vnto God, as the reuenger of periurie, and the defence of truth. And this honor cannot be giuen to an other, but that his maiestie shall be prophaned. And for this cause the Apostle sayth, that one cannot sweare, but by the greater: & this was peculiar to God alone, that hee sweareth by himselfe. So who soeuer swore in times past by Moloch or by any other Idoll, did so much diminishe from the glory of God, in that another was placed in his routh, as vnderstander of the thoughtes, & iudge against their soules. And they that at this day doe swear by angels or dead Saints, do spoyle God of his honor, & doe ascribe a vain godhead to those creatures. But there is an other thing to be considered, when as heauen & earth are sworne by, in respect of the maker. For the religion of an oath is not setled vpon the creatures: but God alone is called to witnes, they being brought forth as seales of his glory. The scripture also calleth heauen, the seat of God, not that he is included therein, but that men might learne to lift their mindes on high, so oft as they thinke on him, and that they should not imagine any earthly or base thing of him. Yea, the earth also is therefore called his foot-stoole, that we might know that he being euery where, could not be contained in any certaine place. The holinesse of Hierusalem did depend of the promise: therefore it was holy, because the Lord had chosen it for the seate and pallace of his Empyre. When men swear by their head, they lay their life as pledge of their good meaning, which is their singular gift of God.

37. But let your communication be. Secondly, Christe prescribeth a remedy: namely, that menne shoulde deale truly and faithfully amongst themselves: for then playne speech shall be of more value, then an oath is amongst them, that knowe no other but corrupt and false dealing. And truly this is the best way to reprove & correct vices by, to note the fountaines from whence they spring. From whence cometh this rash readinesse of swearing, but that in so much vanitie, in so many deceites, vnconstancy and ficklenesse, nothing almost is beleued? Therefore Christe requireth truth and constancie in our wordes, that we should not neede to swear any more. For, the repetition aswell of the affirmation, as of the denyall, is for this purpose, that wee shoulde keepe our promises, that all vpriht dealing may appeare. And because that this is the true and lawfull kind of bargayning, where men speake no otherwise with their tongue, then they thinke in their heart, Christ sayth that whatloeuere is more, proceedeth of euill.

And I allow not their iudgement, that attribute the fault of swearing to him, that doth not beleue the speaker. But in my iudgement Christe teacheth, that it proceedeth of the vices of men, that they are enforced to swear: for if there were vpriht dealing amongst them, if they were not diuerse nor inconstant of their worde, but maintained that simplicitie, which nature teacheth: yet it followeth not but that it is lawfull to swear, so oft as need requireth: for many thinges may be well vsed, which rise of an ill beginning.

39. But I say vnto you, resist not euill: but whosoever shall smite

29. And to him that smyteth thee on the one cheeke, offer also the other: and him that taketh away thy cloake, forbid not to take

40. And if any one will sue thee at the lawe, and take away thy coate, let him haue thy cloake also.

41. And whofoeuer will compell thee to goe a mile, goe with him twaine.

take thy coate also.

30. Giue to euery manne that asketh of thee: and of him that taketh away thy goodes ask them not againe.

38. An eye for an eye. Here is another fault reproofed, that whereas God had by his lawe commaunded the iudges and magistrates to reuenge iniuries with like punishment, euery man vnder that pretence woulde reuenge themselves. Therefore they thought they did not offend, so that they did not first prouoke any: but being iniured, did recompence like for like.

But Christe teacheth vs otherwise, though the Iudges are commaunded to defend all menne, and are ordayned reuengers to bridle the wicked, and to restrayne their violence: yet euery one ought patiently to suffer the iniuries done vnto them.

39. Resist not euill. There is two wayes of resisting: the one, when as without daunger we driue away iniuries: the other, when wee recompence like for like: But though Christe permitteth not his, to repell violence with violence: yet he forbiddeth not them to withstand vniust violence. And Paule can interpret vs this place best, when hee commaundeth vs to ouercome euill with good, rather then to strue with euill doing, Ro. 12:17. For the Antithesis is to be noted betwene an offence and the correction of a fault. Here he speaketh of reuengement: & Christe, that he might take that liberty from his disciples forbiddeth them to resist euill with euill. And also he stretcheth the lawe of patience further, that we should not receiue iniuries without grudging, but rather prepare our selues to beare new iniuries. In sum, this is the purpose of this admonition, that the faithful should learne to forget what mischiefes soeuer are don vnto the, least that when they are hurt, they breake into hatred or enuy, or desire to hurt againe: but that they should frame themselves to a greater patience, if that mischiefes & iniuries should increase and stirre vp more and more.

Whofoeuer shall strike thee. Iulianus and such like did wickedly cauille at the doctrine of Christe, as if it did vtterly ouerthrow all lawes and iudgements. For as Augustine sayd very aptly and wisely in his first Epistle, The counsell of our Sauiour was for no other purpose, then to frame the mindes of the faythfull to a moderation and equitie, that for one or two iniuries they should not faynte nor waxe weary. And it is true that Augustine sayth, the law is not giuen for outward workes, if thou vnderstand them rightly.

I graunt that Christe restrayneth our handes as well as our mindes: but where as a manne cannot defend himselfe and his, from iniuries, without reuenge, the woordes of Christe let not, but that lawfully, and without offence he may avoide the daunger comming. Certainly Christe would not teach his disciples to whet the mallice of the wicked, which burnt too hotte before with a delight to injury them.

And

And to turne the other cheeke, what were it else, but a prouocation to further mischeife? Therefore it is not meete nor conuenient for an interpreter to stand vpon the syllables, but to mark the purpose of him that speaketh. And there is nothing more vncomely for Christs disciples then to play and cauill with the wordes, whereas the meaning of their maister is plaine. And it is not hard to vnderstand what Christs purpose is: namely that the end of one trouble is the beginning of an other: and so the faithfull must through the whole course of their life, with continuall steppes passe through many iniuries. Therefore when they are once hurt, he would by that instruction frame them to bearing, that by suffering they might learne to be patient.

40. And if any will sue thee. Christe toucheth the other faulte, which is when the wicked disturbe vs with suites. And in this behalfe he also commandeth vs to haue our mindes so armed to patience, that our coate being taken away, wee should be readie to giue our cloake also. It shall be but folly for any man to stande vpon wordes. First, to giue vnto the enemies whatsoever they desire, rather then to goe to lawe with them: For such a facilitie were as a fan, to kindle the mindes of the wicked to theftes and robberies, from the which wee knowe Christ his minde was farre. Then what meaneth this, that thou shouldest giue cloake to him that vnder colour of the lawe, would take away thy coate? That is, if any man oppressed with wrongfull iudgement looseth that which is his, and yet is ready to leaue the rest, if neede be, deserueth no lesse prayse of patience, then he that suffereth himselfe to be twise spoyled, before he will goe to law.

Therefore the meaning is, that Christians, when any attempt to spoyle them of parte of their goods should be readie to be wholly spoyled. Hereby we gather, that they are not altogether secluded from iudgements, if they at any time haue place giuen them of iust defence: for though they lay not forth their goods to the spoyle: yet they goe not from this doctrine of Christ, which perswadeth them to beare oppression with patience. Truly it is a rare example, that any man should come to sue in the court with quiet and patient affection. But because it may be that one may defend a good cause not in respect of his owne priuate commoditie, but for the common wealth, it is not lawfull simply to condemn the thing it selfe, vntil the corrupt affection doth appeare. The diuerse phrases in Mattheue and Luke, doe not alter the sense. A cloake is commonly of greater value then a coate: therefore when Mathew sayth that thou must giue thy cloake to him that taketh away thy coate, he meaneth, that when we haue a small losse, we should be willing and ready to beare a greater losse. But the wordes of Luke doe agree with the olde prouerbe, my coate is nearer then my cloake.

L V K E. 30. To every one that asketh, giue. Mattheue hath the same wordes, as wee shall see shortly after. For it may easily bee gathered by the text, that Luke doeth not speake heere of them, that by entreatie and prayers doe seeke for helpe: but of the contentions and violence, which the wicked vse in taking away other mennes goodes. Aske not againe, sayeth hee, of him, that taketh away thy goodes. Yet, if any man hadde rather reade these two sentences asunder, there is no difference in this matter, and so it is an exhortation to bee ready and willing to giue . As concerning the seconde clause, where Christ forbiddeth to demaund againe those things, which were vniustly taken away, is vndoubtedly an exposition of the former doctrine: that is, that we should not take greiuously the losse of our goods. But that must not be forgotten, which I spake of euen now, that the wordes are not to be vrged sophistically, as though it were not lawfull for a godly man, to recouer againe that, which is his, if at any time God shall giue him a iust remedie: but onely prescribeth to vs a law of patience, but that wee should patiently waite, vntill the Lord himselfe shall take an account of those spoyling theeues.

Mathew. 5.

Marke.

: Luke. 6.

42. Give vnto him that asketh, and from him that would borrow of thee, turne not away.

34. And if yee lend to them, of whom yee hope to receiue, what thanke shall yee haue? for euen the sinners lend to sinners, to receiue the like.

35. Lend, looking for nothing againe and your reward shall bee great.

42. To him that asketh. Though the wordes of Christ, reported by Mathew, do sound, as if he commaunded to giue to all, without respect or choyse: yet wee may gather an other meaning out of Luke, who setteth out the whole matter more fully. First, it is certaine that the purpose of Christ was to frame his disciples to be liberall rather then prodigall. But it were fond prodigalitie rashly to consume those things, which the Lord hath giuen. Further, wee see what a rule of charitie the holy Ghost hath deliuered other where. Therefore let vs hold this, that Christ doth exhort his disciples heere: first, that they bee liberall and charitable. Further this is the maner that he prescribeth them, that they shoulde not thinke that they had done their dutie, when they had holpen some few, but that they should endeouour to helpe all with their liberalitie, and that they should neuer be wearie, while that the Lord doth giue them abilitye. Further, that no man caull at the wordes of Mathew, let vs conferre them with Lukes wordes. Christ sayth that we doe no dutie to God, while that in lending or doing other duties wee looke for any reward againe: and so hee maketh a distinction betweene charitie and carnall friendship. For prothane men do loue together not frackly, but with an affection of reward and gaine: and so it cometh to passe, that euery man, in that he loueth others, doth seeke to be beloued himselfe, euen as Plato also doth wisely weigh the same. But Christ requirereth of his Disciples charitie, without hope of gaine, that they should endeouour to helpe the poore, from whom there is no hope to haue ought againe. Now wee see what it is to beare an open hand for them that aske: namely, to bee liberally minded towards all that neede our helpe, & which cannot recompence the benefit they receiue.

L. V. K. E. 35. Lend. This sentence was corruptly restrained, as if that in this place Christ did not onely forbidde his to commit vsury: But this hath hath a further meaning, as it appeareth out of the former sentence. For after that Christ had declared what the wicked are woont to doe: that is, that they doe loue their friends, and helpe them, of whome they hope for some recompence, and they lend to them that are like themselues, that they may receive the like againe. He addeth, what he requireth of his disciples more then this: namely, that they should loue their enemies, that they should freely do good & freely lend. Nowe wee see that this clause, looking for nothing, is corruptly vnderstood of vsury to be so perticularly applyed: when as Christe onely exhorteth his to mutuall offices of charitie, and sayth, that the hyrelings shall haue no fauour before God: not that hee simply condemneth those benefites, which are done with hope of recompence: but he teacheth that it maketh nothing to testifie their charitie: because that he only is accounted liberal towards his neighbours, which helpeth them without any respect of his owne commodity, but hath onely regard of the neede of them that he helpeth, But whether it be lawfull for Christians sometime to take some gayne of that which is lente, I will not dispute heere at large, least of a corrupte sense, I should moue a question out of time (which I nowe confuted:) for I shewed euen now, that Christe ment nothing else, then that the saythfull should exceede the prophane men in lending: that is, that they should maintaine free liberality.

Matth. 5.

43. Yee haue heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt loue thy neighbour and hate thine enemy.

44. But I saye vnto you, loue your enemies: blesse them that curse you: doe good to them, that hate you, and praye for them, that hurte you, and persecute you.

44. That yee may bee the children of your father, which is in heauen: for he maketh his sunne to arise on the euil and the good, and sendeth raine to the iust and vniust.

45. For if yee loue them, which loue you, what reward shall ye haue? Doe not the Publycans euen the same?

47. And if yee bee friendly to youre brethren onely, what singular thing doe you? do not euen the Publycans likewise.

48. Yee shall therefore bee perfect, as your father which is in heauen is perfect.

Marke.

27. But I saye to you which heare. Loue your enemies, do well to them, which hate you.

28. Blesse them, which curse you, and praye for them, which hurte you.

And a little after.

32. For if yee loue them, which loue you, what thank shall you haue? for euen the sinners loue those, that loue them.

33. And if yee doe good for them, which doe good for you, what thanke shall yee haue: for euen the sinners doe the same.

And a little after.

35. Wherefore loue you your enemies, and ye shall be the children of the most high: for he is kind vnto the vnkind, and to the euill.

36. Bee yee therefore mercifull, as your father is mercifull.

43. Thou shalt loue thy neighbour. It is wonderfull that the Scribes were fallen to that absurditie, that they restrayned the name of neighbour to their welwillers, when as nothing is more manifest nor more certaine, thē that God meaneth all mankind, when he speaketh of our neighbours. For becaute that euery man is addicted to himselfe, so oft as some priuate commodities doe seperate some men from others, that mutuall communication is left, which nature it selfe doth teach. Therefore God, that he might keepe vs within the band of brotherly loue, he testifieth, that all they that are men, are our neighbours, for that common nature doth tie them to vs. For so oft as I looke vpo man, it is necessary that I should behold my selfe as in a glas: because that he is my bone and my flesh. And though the greater part most commonly doth seperate it selfe from that holy society: yet the order of nature is not violated through their wickednes: because that God is to be considered the authour of the fellowship. Whereby wee gather that the commaundement of the lawe is generall, which commaundeth vs to loue our neighbour. But the Scribes esteeming neighbourhood according to euery mans minde, will haue none to be accounted neighbours, but they that through their desertes were worthy to be beloued, or at the least, they that would deale friendly with them againe. And this did common sense teach them: and therefore the children of the world were neuer ashamed to professie their hatredes, wherefore they could yeelde any account. But charity, which God commendeth in his law, regardeth not what euery manne deserueth, but stretcheth out it selfe to the vnworthy, to the peruerse and to the vnthankfull. But Christ restoreth this to the naturall sense, & deliuereth it from corruption: whereby that also appeareth that I sayd before, that Christ did not make new lawes: but only reprove the corrupt comments of the Scribes, where with the puritie of the law of God had beene corrupted.

44. Loue your enemies. This one point containeth in it all the former doctrine, For whosoeuer can frame his mind to loue his enemies, will easily temper himselfe from all reuenge, & wil be patient in affliction: but much more ready to help those that be in misery. Further christ in a few words sheweth the way & maner of fulfilling this comandement. Loue thy neighbour as thy self. For he shall neuer satisfie this comandement that banisheth not the loue of himselfe, or rather deny himselfe, & so make much of those men, which God hath ioyned to him, that he goeth on to loue euen those, of whom he is hated. And by these wordes we learne, how far the faithfull ought to be from reuenge, wherein they are not onely forbidden to aske of God, but so to remitte and wholly to put out of their minds, so that they shall wish well to their enemies, yet in the meane while they cease not to commit their cause to God, vntill he take vengeance of the reprobate. For they desire as much as lyeth in them, that the wicked should returne to a perfect mind, & so they seeke for their saluation, that they should not perish. Yet with this comfort, they ease all their troubles, that they doubt not, but that God will be a reuenger of that obstinate malice, that he might declare that hee hadde a care of the innocent. This is a very hard thing, & altogether against the nature of flethe, to recompence good for euill: but wee must not seeke any excuse out of our faultes or infirmities, but wee must rather simply seeke what the lawe of charitie requireth, that wee vsing the power of the heavenly spirit, and that by struing we might ouercome what affections in vs were contrary to the same. This was the cause why the Monkes and such like rables imagined that these were counselles and not preceptes, because that they measured what was due to GOD and to his lawe, by the ballance of mannes strength. And yet the monkes were not ashamed to challenge to themselues a perfecti- on, because they did voluntarily bind themselues to obserue his counselles, and howe faythfully they performe the same which they doe onely vsurpe in woordes, I doe now omit to saye. And howe preposterous and sond a de- uice it is of counselles, doeth hereof appeare. First, because it cannot be sayd without injury to Christ, that hee counselled his disciples, and did not accord- ing to his authority commaund that which was right. Then it is more then folly to set the duties of charity at such liberty, which depend vppon the lawe. Thirdly, that woord, I say to you, signifieth in this place as much as to denounce or to commaunde, which they haue corruptly expounded to counsell. Lastly, that he expressly establisheth it as a thing necessarily to be done, is easily proued by Christes woordes, while he presently addeth,

45. That you may be the children of your father. When he expressly sayth that no manne can bee otherwise the child of God, except hee loue them that hate him, who now dareth say that we are not bouñd to obserue this doctrine? For it is as much as if he should haue sayd: who soeuer will bee accounted a Christian, let him loue his enemies: surely it is a horrible monster that the world in three or foure ages should be so ouerwhelmed with thicke darkenesse, that it could not see that to bee expressly commaunded, which who soeuer neglecteth, hee is wiped out from among the number of the children of God. Further it is to be noted that he proposeth not the exáple of God to be followed, as though that what soeuer he did, became vs. For he punisheth the vnthankfull, and of- ten driueth the wicked out of the world, in which respect he proposeth not him selfe for vs to follow: for the iudgement of the world belongeth not to vs, but is proper to him: but he woulde that wee should bee followers of his fatherly goodnesse and liberality. And not onely the prophane philosophers did see that, but some of the most wicked contemners of godlinesse could make this confession, we are in nothing more like to God then in being liberall. In summe, Christe witnesseth that this is a note of our adoption, if we doe good to the euill and to them that are vnworthy. Yet thou must not vnderstande that we by this liberality are made the children of God, but because the same spirit (which is the witness, earnest, and scale of our free adoption) doeth reforme the wicked affections of the flesh, which strue against charitie. Christ prooueth of the effecte that none else are the children of God, but they which shew it in gentlenesse and clemency. And for that phrase Luke sayth, Ye shall bee the children of the most high: Not that any manne getteth this honour to himselfe, or that he then beginneth to be the sonne of God, when that he lo- ueth his enemies: but because it is the accustomed manner of speaking in the scripture, to propose the benefites of the free grace of God in stead of reward, while that he would encourage vs to do well. And this is the reason, because he had regard to what end wee are called: namely, that the image of God be- ing repayred in vs, we should liue holily and godly.

He maketh his sunne to rise. Hee rehearseth two testimonies of the goodnes of God towards vs, which are not only most known vnto men, but cōmon to all, when that rather societie it selfe should prouoke vs to performe the same one to another, though by the figure Sinecdoche it comprehendeth many other like.

46. And do not the Publicans? Luke vseth in the same sense this word sinners: that is, mighty and wicked men: not that the office of it selfe was to be condemned: (for the Publicanes were gatherers of tolle, and as it is lawfull for Princes to set the taske, so is it lawfull to demaund & gather the same:) but because this maner of men was wont to be couetous and snatching, yea faythlesse and cruell: then because they were accounted amongst the Iewes as ministers of vniust tyrannie. Therefore if any man shall gather out of the words of Christ, that the Publicans were the worst of all men, he shall argue amisse, for he speaketh after the cōmon maner of speech: as if he should say, they that are almost without all humanity haue yet some kind of mutuall loue, while they seeke their owne commoditie.

48. Be yee therefore perfect. This perfection requireth not an equalitie, but is only referred to a likenesse. Therefore though we be far from God, we are accounted to be perfect as he is, while we bende to that marke, which he proposeth to vs in himselfe. If any interpret it otherwise, let there be made no comparison here between God and vs, but the perfection of God is called, first the free & mere liberality, which is done without accōt of gaine, then, the singular goodnes which striueth with the malice & vnthankfulnes of men: The which appeareth by the wordes of Luke, Be you mercifull as your heauenly father. For mercie is opposed to bought loue, which is tied to a priuate comodity.

Matthew.

1. Take heede yee giue not your almes before men, to bee seene of them, or else yee shall haue no rewarde of your father which is in heauen.

2. Therefore when thou giuest thine almes, thou shalt not make a trumpet to be blowne before thee, as the hypocrites do in the Synagogues & in the streetes, to be prayesed of men. Verily I say vnto you they haue their rewarde.

3. But when thou doest thine almes, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth.

4. That thine almes may be in secrete, & thy father thst seeth in secrete, he will rewarde thee openly.

Luke.

1. Take heede. Chuste doeth in this place exhorte his disciples to a sincere studie of good woorkes: that is, that they shoulde studie simply to doe well before G O D, and that they shoulde not boast themselues before menne. It is a most necessary admonition: because that in vertues ambition is alwayes to be feared, and there is no worke so laudable, that is not thereby often corrupted and defiled. But by the figure Sinecdoche vnder this one kinde is there a generall doctrine deliuered: For he speaketh of almes no more then then hee speaketh a little after of prayers. Yet in many copies the word Righteousnes is vsed for almes, as the olde interpreter also translated it. But that is of no waight, for both wayes it sufficiently appeareth, that hee correcteth this disease of ambition, whilest that in doing well, it seeketh glory of men.

2. When thou giuest thine almes. Here hee reprooueth by name, the faulte which was commonly vsed and in custome, wherein the desire of vaine glory may not onely bee seene, but almost felt with the handes. For they emptied their baskets amongst the poore in the corners of the streetes, and in publike places where they vsed their publike meetings. In that they sought the publike places that they might haue many witnesses, shewed and appeared manifest, and vaine-glorious boasting: and not satisfied with that, they also vsed the sound of trumpets. They fained that they called the poore vnto them (as they neuer want pretences): yet nothing was more euident, then that they sought commendation and prayse. Further, when wee serue the eyes of men, wee then make not God the iudge and examiner of our life. Therefore Christ sayth not without cause, that they that boast themselues after this sort, haue their reward now alreadie: for they cannot haue regard to God, that haue their eyes possessed with such vanitie. By the same reason all hypocrites are called couetous of vaine glory. For when hypocrites were called by prophane gesters which played counterfeyte persons vpon the stage and in playes the scripture giueth this name to men of a double and dissembling heart. Although there are diuers kindes of hypocrites. For some though they be most guiltie to themselues, yet most impudently they chaleng to be accounted for good men before the world and they endeouour to couer those faults whereof they are conuict in their own conscience. Others doe securely nourish vppemselues, that they dare also challenge vnto themselues a perfect righteouines before God. Others do well, not for a desire of righteounesse, nor for the glory of God, but onely that they may get themselues a fame and opinion of holinesse. Christ now noteth this latter kinde, and rightly calleth them hypocrites, which while in their good workes they propose themselues no good ende, they put the persons of others vpon them, that they might seeme holy and good worshippers of God.

3. Let not thy left hand know. The meaning of this speach is, that wee ought to be content that God alone is witnessse of our doings, and so to bend our selues in obedience to him, that wee bee not caried about with vanitie. For it falleth often out that men doe not sacrifice so much to G. O. D. as to themselues. Therefore Christes meaning is that we should not be caried away with contrary thoughts, but wholly bende our selues to this, that wee may worhippe with a pure conscience.

4. That thine almes may be in secret. This sentence seemeth contrary to many places of scripture, where wee are commanded to edifie our brethren with good examples. But if wee consider the purpose of our Saviour, wee may not stretch the wordes any further. He commandeth his disciples, freely, and with out all ambition to apply themselues to good workes. That this may be done, he willet them not to looke for the beholding of men that they may thinke it sufficient that God alone approue their deedes. But this simplicitie taketh not away the care and diligence of profiting others by our example.

And

And a little afore he doth not precisely forbid to do good deedes before men, but condemneth the vaine ostentation: Thy father which seeth in secret. Hee covertly condemneth the folly which raigneth euery wher amongst men, that they thinke their labour to be lost, if they haue not many witnesses of their good deedes. Therefore he sayth that God needeth not a great light to see & know their good deedes by: for hee knoweth euen those that seeme to bee buried in darkenesse. Therefore there is no cause why wee shoulde thinke those thinges lost which men see not, nor can beare witness of, because that God hath his seate euen in the darkeſt denes. And he: ministreth the aptest remedie for curing this disease of ambition, while hee calleth vs to the beholding of G O D, who maketh to vanish, and vtterly blotteth, all vaine glory out of our mindes. In the second clause which followeth next, Christ warneth vs in seeking for a reward of our good works, patiently to waite to the last day of the resurrection. Thy father, sayth he, shall rewarde thee openly: When? euen then when the morning of the last day shall arise, those thinges which are now hidden in darknesse, shall be layd open.

Luke

5. And when thou prayest, be not as the hypocrites: for they loue to stand, and pray in the Synagogues, & in the corners of the streetes, because they would be seene of men: verily I say vnto you, they haue their rewarde.

6. But when thou prayest, enter into thy chamber: and when thou hast shut thy doore, pray vnto thy Father which is in secreete, and thy father which seeth in secreete, shall rewarde thee openly.

7. Also when ye pray, vse no vaine repetitions as the heathē: for they think to be heard for their much babling.

8. Bee yee not like them therefore: for your father knoweth whereof ye haue neede, before ye aske of him.

5. When thou prayest. Hee teacheth nowe the same of prayers, which hee taught before of almes. And this is too grosse and shamefull prophaning of the name of G O D, that hypocrites pray or rather faine themselues to pray openly, that they may haue glory of men. But sith that hypocrisie is alwaies ambitious, it is no wonder that it is so blinde: therefore he commaundeth his Disciples, if they will pray rightly, to enter into their chamber. And though some, because it seemeth at the first to be absurde, doe expound it alledgorically of the inward part of the heart, yet there is no neede of this subtiltie. Wee are commaunded in very many places of the scripture, to pray to G O D or praise him in the publike assembly or companie of men, and before all the people, to testify our faith or thankfulness, that also wee might stirre others by our example to doe the like. And Christ doeth not forbidde vs this, but onely admonisheth vs to haue G O D before our eyes so oft as wee prepare our selues to prayer. Therefore these wordes are to be vrged, Enter into thy chamber. As though he commanded vs to flee from the company of men, and should affirme that wee could not pray rightly if any were by, For hee speaketh by comparison parison, signifying that wee shoulde rather seeke a secrete place, then desire the company of men which should see vs praying. And it is conuenient for the faythfull, to draw themselues from the company of menne, that they may the more freely poure out their desires and sighes before God. A secrete place is also profitable for an other cause, that their mindes may be the rather sequestred and free from all allurementes: therefore Christe himselfe did very often hide himselfe in some secret place that he might pray: but this is not the matter that is intreated of in this place, for he onely reprobeth the desire of vaine glory. But this is the sum, whether a man pray alone, or whether he pray before others, yet he must haue his affection, as if he were secret in his chamber, & had no other witnessse but onely God. When Christ sayth that we shall haue a reward for our prayers, hee declareth sufficiently that what reward soeuer the scripture in diuers places doth promise vs, is not paid as of debt, but is a free gift.

7. Use not much babling. He reprehendeth an other fault in prayer: namely much babling. And hee vseth two woordes, but in the same sense. For Batologia signifieth a superfluous and vsauory repetition: but Polologia is a vaine babling. Christ reprooueth also their foolishnesse, which, that they might perswade and entreate God, do poure out many woordes. And that diligence in praying which is so often commended in the scripture, is not contrary to this doctrine. For where the prayer is conceiued with earnest affection, the tongue doth not runne before the minde. Also the fauour of God is not obtained with a vaine heape of words: but the godly heart doth rather send out his affections, which as arrowes shall peirce the heauens: yet their superstition is here condemned, which thinke they pleasure God and do him seruice with their long murmured prayers, with which error we see Popery so infected, that the greatest force of their prayer is supposed to consist in many wordes. For the more wordes any man hath muttered, the more effectually hee is accounted to haue prayed. Also they doe daily resounde out in their Churches long and tedious songs, as though they would allure Gods cares.

8. For your father knoweth. This one reason is sufficient to purge and take away this superstition which is here condemned. For from whence commeth this foolishnesse, that menne should thinke that they haue profited much, where as they weary GOD with their much babling, but because they imagine him to bee like a mortall man, which hath neede to be taught and admonished. But who soeuer is perswaded that God hath not only a care of vs, but knoweth also our necessities, and noteth our desires and cares before hee is admonished, hee vseth not many woordes, but thinketh it sufficient to make his prayers, as is expedient for the exercise of his fayth. And he acknowledgeth it to be a thing absurde and to bee laughed at, to deale with God rethorically, as if that he were bowed with copie of wordes. But if God, before we aske doth know what we haue neede of, it seemeth to be in vaine to pray. For if of his own accord hee be ready to helpe vs, to what purpose is it for vs to adde our prayers, which breake as it were the willing course of his prouidence? The answer is easie by considering the ende of prayer: for the faythfull doe not praye as if they admonished God of things that hee knewe not, or exhorted him to doe his dutie, or stirred him vpe as one negligent or slowe: but rather that they might stirre vp themselves to seeke him and exercise their sayth in meditating of his promises, and that they might ease themselves by discharging their cares into his bosome, and lastly, that they might testifie as well to themselves as to others, that of him alone they hope and aske what soeuer is good. And that which he freely and vnasked determined to giue vs, he yet doth promise to giue at our requestes. Wherefore both is to be holden, he of his owne will preuenteth our prayers, and yet by prayers we obtaine that which we aske. But why he some time delayeth vs to a longer time, and also sometime granteth not our requestes, shall be shewed in an other place.

Matthew 6.

9. After this maner therefore pray ye: Our father which art in heauen, hallowed be thy name.

10. Thy kingdome come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heauen.

11. Giue vs this daye our dailye bread.

12. And forgie vs our debtes, as we also for giue our debtors.

Luke 11.

1. And so it was, as he was praying in a certaine place, whē he praied, one of his disciples sayd vnto him: master teach vs to pray, as Iohn also taught his disciples.

2. And he said vnto them, when ye pray, say: our father, which art in heauen, hallowed bee thy name, thy kingdom come. Let thy will be done euen in earth, as it is in heauen:

3. Our daily bread giue vs this daye:

4. And forgie vs our sins: for euen we forgie euery man that is indebted to vs: and lead vs not into temptation, but deliuer vs from euill.

It is vncertaine whether Christ deliuered this forme of prayer to his disciples once or twise. This latter seemeth more probable to some: because Luke sayth that he was asked. But Math. bringeth him in teaching of his owne accord. Yet because that Matthew, as we sayd, gathereth together all the chiefe pointes of doctrine, that by the continued course the readers may the better perceiue the sum & meaning: And so it may be that Matthew omitteth the occasion which Luke reporteth, yet I will not contend with any man about this matter.

L V K E. 1. As Iohn also taught. That Iohn taught his disciples a priuate maner or forme of prayer, which I iudge he did as the time required. It is certaine that all things amongst the Iewes were then very corrupt, & the whole religion was then so decayed, that it is no maruell that there were but fewe which held the right order of prayer. Againe, when as the promised redemption was at hand, it was necessary that the minds of the faithfull should bee stirred vp to the hope & desire of the same. Iohn therefore might out of diuers places of the scripture gather some prayer which might be agreeable to the time, and most according to the spirital kingdom of Christ which he began now to reuale.

M A T H. 9. After this maner therefore praye you. For the which Luke sayeth, When you pray, say yee. Yet Christe commaundeth not his disciples to pray in these conceiued woordes, but onely sheweth to what purpose they shoulde resorte all their requests and prayers. Therefore in these 6. petitions ons is comprehended whatsoever is lawfull for vs to aske of God. And there is nothing more profitable for vs then this doctrine: for when as this is a principall exercise of godlines, yet in making prayers and conceiuing our requests all our senses doe fayle. So no man shall pray rightly, but he whose mouth & heart the heauenly maister guideth. For this cause was this rule giuen, according to the which it is necessary to frame all our prayers, if wee couet to haue them accounted lawfull and approued of God.

It was not the will of the sonne of God (as was sayd euen now) to prescribe vnto vs what wordes wee should vse, as if it were not lawfull to decline from that forme which he set downe: but yet he would that our prayers should bee so directed and ordered, least they should wander beyond these bounds. Whereby we gather that the law of prayer which he set down, consisteth not in words but in the matters of things themselues. Further, in that I sayd that this prayer consisteth of sixe petitions, it is to be knowne that the first three, not hauing regarde of vs, haue onely respect to the glory of God. And the last three are framed for those things which are profitable for our saluation. For as the lawe is deuided into two tables, whereof the first containeth the duties of godlines, and the other of charitie: so in prayer Christ commandeth vs partly to looke & seeke for the glory of God, and partly he permiteth vs to prouide for our selues. Therefore let vs know that we are then well prepared to prayer, if wee be not onely carefull of our selues and our owne commoditie, but doe first seeke the glory of God: for it were too preposterous, onely to haue care of our own matters, and to neglect the kingdome of God, which is to be preferred farre before all things.

Our father which art in heauen. So oft as wee prepare our selues to prayer, wee must especially consider two thinges, partly that we may haue entrance to God, partly that with full and perfect trust we may repose our selues vpon him, that is, his fatherly loue towards vs, and his great power. Wherefore let vs not doubt but that God will willingly embrace vs, but that he is ready to heare our prayers, and also that he is willing of his owne accord to helpe vs. He is called by the name of father. Therefore Christ in this epithite doth minister vnto vs much matter for the stay of our faith: but because that we rest on the goodnes of God onely in part, in the next clause he commendeth to vs his power. For when the scripture sayth that God is in heauen, it declareth that all thinges are vnder his power, and that the worlde and whatsoever is in it, is containd in his hand, that his power is spread in euery place, and all thinges are ordained by his prouidence. Dauid sayth in the Psalme 2.4. The dweller in the heauens shall laugh them to scorne. Also in the Psalme 115. 3. Our GOD in heauen hath done whatsoever he would. But God is not so placed in heauen, as if he were shut vp therein: for that rather is to be considered, which is sayd in the seconde booke of the Chronicles, second chapter, and sixt verse. The heauen of heauens cannot contayne him. But this maner of speech exempting him out of the order of his creatures, warneth vs that there ought no base or earthly thing enter into our mindes, when as he is considered of, because that he is greater then all the world.

Now we conceiue the purpose of Christ: namely, that in the beginning of prayer he would establish the faith of his disciples in the goodnes and power of God, for prayers shall want their fruite, except they be grounded vpon faith. Now sith it is fond, yea made arrogancie, to cal God father, but as grafted in to the body of Christ, we are acknowledged for sonnes: Hereby we gather that there is no other manner of prayer to come to God with, but in the person of the mediatur.

Hallowed be thy name. Here doth more evidently appeare that I sayd, that in the first three petitions, the care of our selues being not regarded, the glory of God is sought, not that it is seperate from our saluation, but that the maiestie of God deserueth to be preferred far aboue all other cares. It is for our good that God doth raigne, & that his glory be giuen vnto him: but no man is zealous inough for Gods glory, but he that after a sort forgetteth himselfe, and aduanceth forth himselfe to seeke the height of the same. Also there is great similitude and likeness betweene these three petitions. For the hallowing of the name of God is alwayes ioyned with his kingdome, and the principall part of his kingdome is established in this, that his will may be done. But who soeuer doth consider how great our coldnes is, and how sluggish we are in seeking the cheifest things of all, whereof we are here in these petitions admonished, he will grant that there is in this nothing superfluous or in vaine: but it is that these three things heere required, should be thus distinguished. To sanctifie the name of God is nothing else then to giue to God his honour, whereof he is worthy, that men should neuer speake nor thinke of him without great reuerence. This is hindered by prophaning of his name: that is, when either his maiestie is diminished, or that we do with lesse reuerence and honour vse it, then he doth deserue. Also the glory wheteby he is sanctified, riseth & dependeth of this, when as men do acknowledge his wisdom, mercy, iustice, power, and all goodnes that is in him. For God hath his holines alwayes remaining perfect to himselfe. but men do partly obscure the same through their owne malice and wickednesse, and partly defile and pollute it through their sacrilegious contempt. Therefore the summe of this petition is that the glory of God may shine in the worlde, and bee celebrated amongst men as it ought. And then doth religion flourish best, when men account that which proceedeth from God, to be right laudable, and full of righteousnesse and wisdom. For hereof it commeth to passe that they embrace his word in obedience of faith, and are satisfied and rest in all his desires and workes. For that faith which wee yeelde to the word of God (as Iohn sayth 3. 33.) is as a subscription, wherewith wee testifie that God is true: euen to incredulitie, and contempt of his word striketh him with most grieuous contumely. Now wee see for the most parte howe maliciously wee account of Gods works, and how great a libertie of reprovng, euery man taketh to himselfe. If he chaltice any of vs, they keepe a stirre, complaine and murmure, and some also doe breake out into open blasphemies, and except hee satisfie our affections, we do not thinke him liberal inough towards vs. Many do ouerthwartly or scornefully bable of his vnspokeable prouidence & secret iudgméts. Also his holy name is oft taken to grosse iestings: to bee short, the greatest parte of the worlde doeth prophane his holinesse as much as in them lieth. Therefore

It is no maruaile if we require first that he may haue in the world that reuerence that he deserueth. But this is no small account that God doth make of vs, when he comendeth to vs the care to seeke his glory.

10. Thy kingdome come. Though the Greeke verbe bee a simple, yet the sence shall remaine perfect if we reade it as a compound, as the old interpreter doth translate it. But first the definition of the kingdome of God is to be considered: for he is sayd to raigne amongst men when as their flesh is brought vnder the yoake, and that they haue bidden their affections farwell, and doe willingly and freely giue themselues to be ruled by him. For in this corruption of nature all our affections are so many souldiours of Sathan, which striue against the righteousnesse of God, and so doe hinder or disturbe his kingdome. Wherefore in this petition we desire that all lets being taken away, he would bring all mortall men vnder his gouernement, and lead them to the meditation of the heauenly life, and this is brought to passe partly by the preaching of the worde, and partely by the secret power of his spirite. His will is to gouerne men with his worde: but because his naked voyce, without the inward working of his spirite bee added, cannot pearce into the hearts, it is necessary that they both bee ioyned together to the establishing of the kingdome of God. Therefore we pray that God would exercise his power as well in word as in spirite, that the whole worlde may willingly submit it selfe vnto him. All disorder and confusion hindereth the kingdome of GOD: neyther is there any thing ordayned in the worlde, but when hee with his hand gouerneth their counsels and affctions. Heereby wee gather that the beginning of the kingdome of God in vs, is the destruction of the olde man, and the denyall of our selues, that we might be renewed into an other life. But God also raigneth after an other sorte, while that hee ouerthroweth his enemies, and bringeth them with Sathan their head perforce vnder his power, vntill they are all made his footestoolle. Wherefore the summe of this petition that GOD should lighten the worlde with the light of his worde, and with the breath of his spirite fiance the hearts in obedience to his righteousnesse, and that he would through his forces bring into order what soeuer is disordered vpon earth: and that he begin his kingdome at pulling vnder the lustes of our flesh. But now because the kingdome of GOD encreaseih continually vnto the end of the world, it is necessarie dayly to pray for his comming. For as much iniquitie as remaineth in the world, so farre is the kingdome of God from that full perfection it requireth.

Thy will be done. Although the will of God be one and simple, in respect of it selfe: yet it is proposed vnto vs in the scriptures after two sorts. For it is sayd to be done that pleased God, when hee performeth the secreete decrees of his prouidence, though men do obstinately bend themselues against it. But we are commanded to pray heere that his will may bee done after an other manner: that is, that all creatures may quietly and without resistance obey him. The which doth the better appeare by comparison: for as hee hath the Angels ready at all commaundementes (whereof they are called his ministers alwayes ready to obey him) so wee desire to haue all mens mindes framed to that consent to the righteousnesse of GOD, that they may willingly bend, which way soeuer he becke. And this is a godly will wherein wee submit our selues to the will of God, and subscribe to all his decrees: but this petition comprehendeth somewhat more: that is, that God abolishing all resistance of menne which ceaseth not to stirre against him, would make them apt to bee taught and humble to him, that they will not, nor desire any thinge except it please him and bee approued by him. Yet a question may bee moued .whether wee ought to pray to God, for that which he sayth shall neuer bee to the ende of the worlde. I answere it is no neede to siste euery man while we pray that the earth may bee framed to obedience. For it sufficeth vs to testifie in this petition, that what soeuer wee see against the will of God, we hate and sorrow & with the same extinguished: that he should not be onely a gouernour of all our affections, but that wee might offer vp our selues wholly to fulfill that wil, with that readinesse that becommeth vs.

11. Give vs this day our dayly bread. This is, as I sayd, the second table or parte, of the order of prayer which Christ taught vs: for that I might the more aptly teach, I did so at the first distinguish them. As of the 2. tables of the law the first giueth in charge for the right worship of God, and the other of the dutie of charitie. So in this prayer the first part instructeth vs to seeke the glory of God, then in the other part he sheweth what is conuenient for vs to aske for our selues. Yet it is also to be noted that those prayers which wee conceiue for our owne saluation or profit, ought to be referred to the last ende: for it is not lawfull for vs to be so occupied with the care of our owne profite, but that the glory of God should alwayes haue the first place. Therefore so oft as we pray, we must neuer turne our eyes from the marke or line. There is yet this difference betweene the two sorts or parts of prayer which I set downe: that while we speake of the kingdome of God, and of the hallowing of his name, it behooueth vs to lift vp our senses on high, that hauing no regard of our selues, they should attend vpon God alone. And then, that we should descend to our selues, and ioyne the care of our saluation with those former petitions, which belong to God alone. And although forgiuenes of sinnes is to bee preferred before foode, euen as much as the soule excelleth the body, yet Christ beginneth at bread, and the sustentation of this earthly life, that from such a beginning he might leade them higher. Therefore we do not desire to haue our dayly bread before reconciliation to God, as though that we should esteeme more of the corrupt foode of the belly, then of the eternall saluation of the soule: but our minds do ascend from the earth into heauen, as it were by steps. For when as God vouchsafeth to imploy himselfe to nourish the bodies, it is not to be doubted but that he is much more carefull of the spirituall foode. Therefore his so louing kindnes doth raise vp our faith higher. That many do take the Greeke word signifying bread, for more then substantiall or supernaturall, is altogether absurde. And the reason which Erasmus bringeth is not onely friuolous, but also contrary to godlinesse, it seemeth not probable to him, that while we appeare in the sight of God, Christ should command vs to speake of nourishmets. As though the like is not to be found out of diuers places of the scripture, that by the taste of these present goodes, wee may be led into the hope of heauenly thinges: nay, but this is a iust tryall of our faith, when as we aske nothing from any other then from God, and we doe not onely acknowledge him to be the onely fountaine of all good thinges, but wee also feele his fatherly goodnes stretched out euen to the least thinges, so that hee refuseth not to take care euen of our flesh.

And that Christ speaketh here of corporall foode, may first be gathered here of, that otherwise it should be maimed, and no full or perfect prayer. For we are commanded in many places to cast all our cares into the bosome of God, and he promiseth liberally, that he will sayle vs in nothing. Therefore in an exact rule of right prayer, it is necessary that somewhat should be commanded for the innumerable necessities of this present life. Also this word this day, signifieth that we aske here of God, that we need not care but for a day. For it is not to be doubted, but that his meaning was to restraints and moderate the couetousnes of earthly foode whereunto we are all immoderately caried. Also it is sufficiently knowne that the figure Synecdoche is vsed in this woorde breade, for vnder it the Hebrewes doe comprehend all kinde of nourishment. But it is vsed here more largely: for we doe not onely desire to haue foode giuen vs by the hande of God, but also that hee woulde giue vs what soeuer is necessary for to passe this life through with. Nowe the sense is cleare: wee are first commaunded to pray, that God woulde defende and nourish in this world the life which hee hath giuen vs: and because it needeth many helpes, that he woulde giue vs what soeuer he knoweth necessary. Now because that the loue of God floweth continually to feede vs, the breade which hee giueth, is called daily or continually comming, for so it may be interpreted.

Therefore this woorde signifieth as muche as if hee hadde sayde. Lorde sith our life hath daily neede of newe nourishment, be thou neuer weary in bestowing the same daily vpon vs. That Aduerbe This day, is vsed as I sayde before, to bridle our greedy couetousnesse, that wee might learne continually to depend vpon the goodnesse of GOD, and to be content with that measure which hee bestoweth vpon vs day by day (as they say.) But a question is moued: Sith it is certaine that Christe gaue vs this as a generall rule of prayer to all the godly: and of that number there are some rich men which haue much layed vpe in store, how hee commandeth them to aske that which they haue at home, and to aske for a day which haue a boundaunce to serue them a yeare. The answere is easie: for wee are warned by these woordes, that there is not any heape of store and prouision ought worth, except that God doe daily feede vs: though wheate, wine, and all other thinges doe abounde, except they be watered with the secretablessing of GOD, they shall presently vanishe away, or the vse of them shall be taken away, or that power which is ingrafted in them to feed vs, shall fall away, that in our abouundance we shall be hunger starued.

Wherefore it is no maruaile if Christe doeth generally call rich, and poore to this heauenly nourishment: but no man shall pray so heartily, as hee that hath learned by the example to hunger, and to abounde, so that hee canne beare his neede and want patiently, and not become drunke with the deceitfull hope of his abouundance?

If any manne demaunde, why wee aske to haue this breade giuen vs which nowe wee doe call and account our owne: I answere, it is called ours, not because that it is due to vs by righte, but because that it is appointed for our vse by the fatherly goodnesse of God. And so after that sorte it is made ours, for that the heauenly father doeth giue it vs greely, least our wante bee not supplied. Wee must till the fieldes, endeouour to gather in the fruites of the earth, euery manne must apply himselfe and beare the labour of his calling, that hee may gette his liuing, yet this letteth not, but that we are fedde by the free goodnes of God, without the which menne should wast away themselves in labour in vayne. Therefore we are taught to acknowledge as received from thence, whatsoeuer seemeth to be gotte by our industry. Yet by this worde it is also to be gathered, if wee desire to bee fedde of God, we must abstaine from that which is none of ours. For all the children of God, so oft as they vse this manner of prayer, doe testifie that they desire nothing but that which they may rightly call their owne.

11. Forgiue vs our debtes. Heere it behooueth vs to remember that which I sayde euen nowe, that Christe in placing the requesttes of his, regarded not what was first or last in order. For sith it is written in the foure and forty chapter of I say, and the two and twenty verse, and the fiftie, and nine, the second verse, and Lam. 3. 44. that our sinnes are as a wall which hinder vs from coming to God, and as a cloude whereby his eyes are hindered from beholding vs, it is necessary that our prayers shoulde alwayes beginne at the forgiuenesse of sinnes, because that wee are hereby first emboldned to pray to G O D while that hee is mercifull vnto vs, because that hee cannot bee otherwise appealed towards vs, then by forgiuing sinnes freely. But Christe comprehendeth in two petitions those things which appertaine to the eternall saluation and spirituall life of the soule: as these two are the principall partes of the couenant of God, in which our whole saluation consisteth: that hee offereth free reconciliation, not imputing sinnes vnto vs, and promiseth the spirite which engraueth the rightcoufnesse of the lawe in our heartes. Therefore we are commaunded to aske both, and first we make request for the obtaining of forgiuenesse of sinnes.

Matthew calleth sinnes debtes, because that in guiltines they binde vs to the iudgement seate of God, and make vs debtors: Nay, they do wholly estraunge vs from God, so that there is no hope of obtaining peace & fauour, but by forgiuenesse. So is that fulfilled which Paule teacheth, Romans 3. 23. All are guiltye and are deprived of the glory of God: for though the rightcoufnesse of God doth partly shine in his Saintes, yet so long as they are cloathed with flesh, they remaine laden with sinnes. So there can none be found so pure, which needeth not the mercy of God, whereof if we desire to be partakers, it is necessary that we should feele our owne miserie. And they that imagine that they haue such a perfection in this world, that they are free from all sinne and faulte, they doe so much forsake sinne, as they doe Christ himselfe, from whose Church they exclude themselves. For whereas he commaundeth all his disciples to flee daily to forgiuenesse of sinnes, he wipeth himselfe out of the number of his disciples, that thinketh this remedy to be superfluous.

Now

Now this remission which we desire to haue bestowed vpon vs, ouerthroweth those satisfactions which the world endeoureth to redeeme it selfe withal. For that creditour is not sayde to forgiue, which hauing receiued his payment doth require no more: but hee that willingly and freely leauing his owne right acquiteth his debtour. Neyther hath that common distinction of the fault and of the punishment, any place heere. For it is not to be doubted but that debtes doe signifie the deseruing of the punishment.

If it be forgiven vs freely, all recompences must needs vanish away. Neyther is Luke his meaning any other, though he nameth sinnes, because that God doeth not otherwise pardon, then by taking away the guiltinesse. As we forgiue. This clause is therefore added, least any man should presume to come to God to aske forgiveness, except he be free and voyd from all hatred, yet this pardon which we desire to be giuen vs, doth not depend of that which wee performe to others: but it was the will of Christ after this maner to forgiue all offences, and also the better to confirme the hope of our forgiveness as with a seale. Neyther is that clause which Luke hath, which signifieth As or For, any thing contrary: because that it was not the purpose of Christ to note the cause, but onely to admonish vs what minde we ought to beare towards the brethren, whiles wee desire to be reconciled to God. And certainly if the spirite of G O D doth raigne in our hearts, all euill will and desire of reuenge must cease. And sith the spirite is a witness of our adoption, wee see that here is simply set down a note whereby the children of God may be discerned from strangers. They are heere called debtors, not of money, or of some dutie, but they that are endangered to vs through iniuries offered vs.

13. And lead vs not into temptation. This petition hath bene corruptly deuided by some into two, when as by the matter it selfe it appeareth to be one and the same, and the conioyning of the woordes doeth shewe the same. For that coniuñction aduersatiue, which is placed in the middest, ioyneth two clauses together, which Augustine doeth also wisely consider. Therefore the sentence ought thus to bee taken, least wee bee caried into temptation, deliuer vs from euill. And the summe is, that wee acknowledging our own weaknesse, doe desire to bee defended by the power of G O D, that wee may stand strongly against all the attempts of Sathan. As out of the former petition wee haue shewed that no man can bee accounted a Christian, except hee acknowledge himselfe to bee a sinner, so by this wee gather, that wee haue no power of our selues to liue well, but as God doth giue the same vnto vs. For who soeuer for the vanquishing of temptations doth require the help of G O D, hee granteth himselfe to haue such neede of him to bee his deliuerer, that hee should otherwise be ouerthrowne. But this word Temptation is often taken generally for euery tryall: in which sense it is sayd that Abraham was tempted of G O D when his faith was tryed. So we are tried as with aduersities, so also with prosperities: because that by this occasion the affections which before lay hid doe come to light. But heere is noted the inward temptation which may be aptly called the scourge of the deuill to stirre vp our concupiscence, For it were absurd to aske of God, that he should deliuer deliuer vs from all instructions of our faith. Therefore all wicked motions which stirre vs vppe to sinne, are comprehended vnder this worde temptation. And though it cannot be, but that we shall feele such prickes in our mindes, because that through the whole course of life wee haue continuall warre with the flesh: yet we aske of the Lord that he make vs not subiect to temptations, or suffer vs to be ouerwhelmed. And that Christ might the better declare howe apt wee are to slide into these dayly falles and ruines, except God sustaine vs with his hand, he vsed this maner of speech, leade vs not into temptation: or as other translate it, Carie vs not. It is certaine that euery man is tempted of his owne concupiscence, as Iames teacheth in the first chapter, and fourteene verse. But because God doth not onely deliuer vs to the pleasure of Sathan, that he might kindle the fire of concupiscence, but vseth him as the minister of wrath, so oft as hee will driue men headlong to destruction, he also after his maner leadeth men to destruction. In the which sence it is sayde that the euill spirit of God came vpon Saule, and diuers places of the scripture tende to the same purpose, yet we may not call God the authour of euill: because that in deliuering men into a reprobate sence, hee doeth not exercise an vniust tyrannie, but executeth his iust iudgements though they bee secret. Deliuier vs from euill. Euill in this place may as well bee taken in the neuter gender as in the masculine.

Chrysostome referreth it to the deuill, who is the framer of all euils, and as a deadlyemie of our saluation, doeth dayly assault vs, yet it may as conueniently be taken for sinne, but there neede no strife about that matter: Because the sence remaineth almost all one: that is, that we are cast forth to the deuill and sinne, except the Lord doth defend and deliuer vs.

For thine is the kingdome. It is maruaile that the Latines did omit this conclusion of prayer. For it is not only added to stirre vp our heartes to require the glory of God, and to admonish vs what ought to be the end of our prayers: but also that it may teach vs, that our prayers which are heere taught vs, ought to be grounded no other where then vpon God alone, least we should stay vpon our owne merites.

Mathew 6.

14. For if you doe forgiue men their trespasses, your heauenly father will also forgiue you.

15. But if yee doe not forgiue menne their trespasses, no more will your father forgiue you your trespasses.

Marke 11.

25. But when yee shall stand, and pray, forgiue if ye haue any thing against any man, that your father also which is in heauen, may forgiue you your trespasses:

26. For if you will not forgiue, your father which is in heauen, will not pardon you your trespasses.

Luke.

Christe doeth heere onely set downe, for what purpose that clause

was

was added, forgive vs, as wee forgive: that is to say, that God will not be otherwise entreated of vs, then wee doe shew our selues ready to forgive, if any shall hurt vs. And certainly, except we were harder then yron, this exhortatiō should mollifie vs, that we might be ready to forgive offences. Except God doe daily forgive vs diuers offences, we know that we should perish many wayes. But hee promise th vs forgiueneſſe of no other condition, except we pardon our brethren whatſocuer they haue faulted againſt vs. Therefore they do willingly and with ſer purpose & mindes addicte themſelues to deſtruction, and they doe their diligence to prouoke Gods anger, which will not forget the iniuries offered and done vnto them.

Matthew 6.

Marke.

Luke.

16. Moreouer when yee faſt, looke not ſowre as the hypocrites: for they diſfigure their faces, that they might ſeeme vnto men to faſt. Verily I ſay vnto you, that they haue their rewarde.

17. But when thou faſteſt, annoynt thy heade and waſh thy face.

18. That thou ſeeme not vnto men to faſt, but vnto thy father which is in ſecrete: and thy father which ſeeth in ſecret, will reward thee openly.

He retourneth againe to the former doctrine. For when hee had begunne to reprehend the vaine oſtentation in almes and prayers, hee ſet down a lawfull rule of praying. Now as concerning faſting, he giueth the ſame commandement to his diſciples, that he gaue before of prayers and almes, leaſt they with greater diligence ſeek to pleaſe the world, then to haue God a witness of their workes. Also that hee commaundeth to annoynt the head and waſhe the face, is hyperbolically: for Chriſt doeth not ſo draw vs from one kinde of hypocriſie, that he might leade vs into an other.

Therefore hee doeth not commaunde vs to fayne daintineſſe, neither doeth hee ſo exhorte vs to a temperate diet, that he might nourish a delicacy in oyntmentes and apparelling: but hee doth ſimply exhorte vs to keepe a moderation, wherein there ſhould bee nothing eyther ſtraunge or aſſeſtate: as if he ſhould haue ſayd, we muſt ſo apply our ſelues to faſtinges, that we change nothing in the accuſtomed maner of our life. That he promiſeth from God a reward to faſtinges, is an improper manner of ſpeech, as it is ſayd a litle before of prayers, though there is a great difference betweene prayers and faſtinges. For prayers and almes are chiefe amongſt the duties of charitie: but faſting is of it ſelfe a woike indifferent, & not of that ſort which God requireth and approoueth, as almes are. But it pleaſeth him onely as it is referred to an other ende: that is, that it may exerciſe vs to abſtinencie, that it may tame the wantonneſſe of the fleſhe, that it may ſtirre vs vp and inflame vs to prayer, that it may be a teſtimony of our repentance, ſo oft as we are vrged with the iudgement of God. Therefore the meaning of Chriſtes words is, that God wil ſo ſometime declare openly that that those good works doe please him, which seemed to bee lost, because that men saw them not.

Matthew. 6.

19. Laye not vppre treasures for your selues vppon the earth, where the moth and canker corrupte, and where theeeues digge through and steale.

20. But laye vppre treasures for your selues in heauen, where neyther the moth nor canker corrupteth, and where theeeues neither digge through nor steale.

21. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.

19. Lay not vppre. This deadly plague raigneth euery where in the world, so that menne become madde through an insatiable desire of hauing. But christ reprooueth them of foolishnesse, that their felicitie beeing sette in riches, gathered with great care, is made subiect to woormes and the canker, and is layd forth to the spoyle of theeeues. And what is more contrary to reason, then to lay vp their goodes there, where as eyther they may perish of themselues, or be stolen away by men. But the couetous menne thinke not thus, for they shutte vppre their riches into chestes wel locked: yet they cannot auoide, but that their riches shall bee subiecte to theeeues or to the mothes. Therefore they are blind, and lacke their right sense, which bestowe so much labour and paine in gathering riches, which are subiecte eyther to rotnenesse, or stealthes, or to a thousand other such casualties: especially sith God doeth allow vs a place in heauen to lay vp treasure in, and doth louingly call vs to possessie those riches which doe neuer perishe. And they are sayde to lay vppre their treasure in heauen, which being loosed out of the snares of this worlde doe employ their cares and studies in meditation of the heauenly life.

Luke setteth not downe the Antithesis, but noteth the other occasion why Christe commaunded them to prepare sakes that doe not waxe olde. For hee had sayde: sell those things which you possessie, that you may giue alms. Now because it is hard and sharpe to men to spoyle themselues of their own goodes, to ease them of this trouble hee proposeth a large and a liberall hope of recompence: that is, that they which helpe the neede of their brethren vpon earth, doe lay vppre treasure for themselues in heauen, according to that saying of Salomon: Hee that giueth to the poore, lendeth to the Lorde. But that commaundement which hee giueth of selling the possessions, is not precisely to be vrged, as though it were not lawfull for a Christian to keepe any thing for him selfe. His will was onely to teach, that wee must not giue to the poore after that sort, as that if any thing bee superfluous, that should be bestowed of them: But our landes may not bee spared if the reuenues which wee haue at hande suffice not the necessitie of the poore. As if hee shoulde haue sayd let your liberality extend it selfe euen to the diminishing of the patrimonie & the alienation of landes.

33. Sell that you haue, and giue almes: make you bagges which waxe not olde, a treasure that canne neuer fayle in heauen, where no theefe commeth, neither moth corrupteth.

34. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.

21. Where your treasure is. In this sentence Christ conuinceth & proueth them to be miserable men, which haue their treasures layde vp vpon earth: because that their felicitie is corrupt & vanishing. But couetous men say, that they are nothing the lesse hindered, but that they may haue their heart in heauen. But Christ opposeth this generall rule, that whersoever men doe faine their chiefe felicity to be, they are thither bound and tied. It followeth hereof that they renounce heauen, which desire to be happy in this world. We know how diligently the Phylosophers disputed of the chiefe felicitie, yea & they traueiled most about this point, & not without a cause, sith that thereupon dependeth the whole course of framing of mans life, and all the senses haue regard to this.

If honour be adiudged to be the chiefe felicitie, it is necessary that ambition should wholly possess the mindes of men: if mony, then conetousnesse (that presently obtaine the kingdom: if pleasure, it cannot bee but that men should degenerate into a beastly wantonnesse: for naturally we are all enclined to desire the chiefe good, so it cometh to passe, that false imaginations do carry vs hither & thither. If that we were rightly & certainly perswaded that our felicitie is in heauen, it were easie to ascend & clime into heauen, treading the world vnder feete, and despying all earthly goodes, whose deceitfull baytes doe bewitch the most part of them. After this maner Paule, while hee would lift the faythfull vp on high, and exhort them to the studie of the heauenly life, proposeth Christ vnto them, in whom only the perfecte felicitie is to be sought: as if hee should haue sayde, that it were an absurde and an vnworthy thing, that their mindes should be settled vpon the earth, whose treasure is in heauen.

Matth. 6.

22. The light of the bodye is the eye: if that thine eye be single, thy whole bodye shall be light.

23. But if thine eye be wicked, then all thy bodye shall be darke, Wherefore, if the light that is in thee, be darkne: how great is the darknes?

24. No manne can serue two masters: for either hee shall hate the one, and loue the other: or else hee shall leane to the one, & despise the other, yee cannot serue God and riches.

Marke.

Luke 11.
34. The light of the bodye is the eye: therefore when thine eye is single, then is thy whole bodye light: but if thine eye be euill, then thy bodye is darke.

35. Take heede therefore, that the light, which is in thee, bee not darknesse.

36. If therefore thy whole bodye shall bee light, hauing no parte darke, then shall all bee light, euen as when a candle doth light thee with his brightnesse.

Luke 16.

13. No seruante canne serue two maisters: for eyther hee shall hate the one, and loue the other, or els hee shall leane to the one, and despise the other, yee cannot serue God and riches.

22. The light of the bodye is the eye. This is to bee remembred, which I did firste giue warning of, that heere are short sentences gathered together, and not a continuall sermon. Also the summe and meaning of this sentence is, that menne through slouth do goe astray : because they bend not themselves, as it becommeth them, to the right purpose. For whereof commeth it to passe that men so filthily doe wander, slide, or fall: but because that through their corrupt iudgement, while that they had rather satisfie their owne pleasures, then the iustice of God, they do not onely choake the light of reason, which ought to gouerne their life, but they doe wholly turne it into darkenesse? And Christ vseth a similitude, calling the eye the light of the whole body : as if hee shoulde haue sayd, when men walke, neither the handes, nor the feete, nor the belly can direct nor gouerne the way, but only the eye sufficeth to guide the other members. Therefore if the hands and the feete are rashly caried whether it is not meeete, the fault is to be imputed to the eyes, which did not their dutie.

Now the similitude is to bee applyed to the minde : all the affections are as certaine members of the same, but they haue neede of direction , because they are blinde of themselves . Nowe God vseth a reason, which may bring them into order, and excell a candle for shewing the way . But what vse they to doe for the most part? namely, that vprightnesse of mind that was giuē them, they do willingly corrupt and peruert , so that there remaineth not one sparke of light. He calleth that a simple eye, that is not couered with any webbe, nor blemished with beardnes, nor troubled with any other fault. He taketh poneron for faulty. The light body, which is lightened, so that his deeds are rightly ordered . And that is called darke, which is confusedly caried into diuers errors. Therefore we see as wee haue sayde before, that the slouth of those men is reproued in these words, which neglect the opening of the eies of their minds, to the gouernemente of their affections . And it is friuolous that the Papistes doe hereof gather, that men doe excell in reason and wisedome, so that they haue free election of good and euill. For Christ doth not declare in this place what power we haue : but howe it becommeth vs to walke : that is, that we may bee directed to some certaine purpose. And he teacheth that the course of mans life is therefore darke, because that no manne proposeth to himselfe a right ende, but all menne doe nourish themselves to follow that which is euill, greedily. I graunt that by nature there is reason grafted into menne, whereby they might discern betweene vices and vertues : but I saye that it was so corrupted through sinne, that it fayleth at euery stepp. Yet it followeth not, but that menne doe willingly thrust themselves into darkenesse, as if with cloased eyes they fledde the proffered light : because that witting and willing they follow after their owne lustes.

23. If the light that is in thee. He calleth reason light, how litle souer was lefte remaining in men after the fall of Adam : and he calleth darkenesse grosse and beastly affections. The meaning thereof is, that it is no maruaile if that men do so filthily and beastly wallow themselves in the myre of sinnes: seeing that there is no reason, which might gouerne the blind and darke pleasures of the fleshe. But he sayth, that the light is turned into darkenesse, not only when menne do suffer the iudgement of their minde to be ouerwhelmed with the wicked lustes of the fleshe : but yeelding their witte to peruerse thoughtes, doe degenerate as it were into beastes . For wee see howe maliciously menne doe turne that wisdome, that was giuen them to craft or subtiltie, that they might seeke deepe thoughtes, as sayeth the Prophet Esay 29. 15. that through their subtilt shiftes they might proudly rise vp against God: to bee short, they doe diuerse wayes attempt to be wise, to their owne destruction. Wherefore Christ doth not without cause pronounce, that it cannot bee, but that horrible and thicke darkenesse shall raigne in the life, when men of set purpose do make themselues blinde. The same is the meaning of those words in Luke, but that Christ doth there ioyne this sentence with that, which was expounded before in the fift chapter of Mathew, no man lighteth a candle, & setteth it in a secret place, &c. Also in stead of this clause, if the light that is in thee, are darkenesse, &c. he setteth downe an exhortation, Take heede that the light that is in thee be not darknesse: as if he should haue sayd, take heede, least thy minde, which should shine as a light, for the direction of all thy actions, doe not darken and peruert thy whole life. After hee addeth, when the body is lightened by the eye, all the members of the same shalbe the better governed, euen as a light lighted shineth and pearleth into all the parts of the chamber.

24. No man can serue. Christ returneth to his former doctrine, which is, that hee may withdraw his disciples from couetousnesse. He had sayd before that the heart of man is bound and tyed to his treasure. Now hee telleth them that their hearts are alienated from the Lord, which addict themselues to riches. For the greater part of men doe spoile themselues vnder a false pretence, while that they doe imagine that they can deuide themselues betwene God & their couetous desires. But Christ denieth it to be possible, that any man can at one time obey God and his owne flesh. And without doubt that prouerbe was then commonly vsed: no man can serue two maisters at once. Therefore that which was receiued by the opinion of all, hee taketh for granted, and so doeth apply it to the present cause, where riches doe raigne, there is the government taken from God. It is not impossible for them that are rich men to serue God: but whosocuer deliuereth himselfe to serue his riches, it is necessary that he should set himselfe free from the seruice of God: because that couetousnesse doeth alwayes make vs bondslaues of the deuill. I haue ioyned that to this text, which L V K E setteth downe in an other place: because when the Euangelistes doe here and there, as occasion serueth, set downe out of the doctrine of Christ sentences in diuerse places, we neede not thinke much to apply them together. But that which is heere especially sayd of riches, may bee well extended to all other kinde of vices.

When as God doth euery where commend so much sinceritie, and doeth abhorre the double heart, they are all deceiued, that thinke that hee will bee content with one halfe of their heart. They all confesse in word, that GOD cannot be truly worshipped, but with an entyre and whole affection: but in deede they denie it, while they endeouour to reconcile things contrary between themselues. The ambitious man sayth, I will not cease to serue God though I apply a good part of my wit to hunt after honors. The couetous, the voluptuous, the glutenous, the leacherous, the cruell, & euery one do boast the same for themselves, as though it were possible, for them to serue God in part, which are openly seene of purpose to fight against him. It is true that the faithfull themselues are neuer so wholly ad dicted to obey God, but that they are ofte withdrawne with sinfull lustes of the flesh. But because they sigh vnder this miserable sla-uerie, and are displeas'd with themselues, & doe not otherwise serue the flesh, but vnwillingly, and with resistance: they are not accounted to serue two mai-sters: because that their studies and endeuours are so approued to the Lord, as if they had yeelded perfect obedience vnto him. And heere is their hypocritie re- proued, which flatter themselues in their sinnes, as if they could ioyne light and darkenesse together.

Mathew 6.

26. If ye then be not able to doe the least thinges, why take ye thought for the remnant?

27. Consider the Lilies how they grow, they labour not, neither spinne they: yet I say vnto you, that Salomon himselfe in all his royaltie was not cloathed like one of these.

28: If then God so cloath the grasse, which is to day in the fielde, and to morow is cast into the ouen: how much more will he cloath you, O yee of little faith?

Luke. 12.

In this Sermon Christ doth reprehend the excessiue care of meat & cloathing, wherewith men doe vexe and torment themselues, and he giueth also a reme- die to heale this disease. That he forbiddeth them to be carefull, ought not to be taken so precisely, as if he would haue his to be carelesse. For we know that men are borne of that condition, that they should sustaine some care: yea, this is not the least portiõ of the miseries, which the Lord hath ioyned to vs, as a punishment, that he might humble vs. But he condēneth the immoderate care for two causes: that is, because men do waste & torment themselues there with in vaine, by taking more then is meete, or their calling will beare: then, that they take more vpon themselves, then is meete for them, and vsing their own industry, they neglecte to call vpon God. That promise is to bee holden, Psal. 127. 2. When the vnfaithfull doe lie downe late, and shall rise early, they shall eat the bread of sorrowe, the faythfull shall through the grace of GOD, enjoy rest and sleepe. Therefore the sonnes of God, though they bee not free from labour and care, yet it cannot bee properly sayde, that they are carefull for the life: because that they reposing themselves in the prouidence of God, doe quietly take their rest. Hereby it may be easily gathered, howe much euery man ought to care for their liuing: namely, that euery one of vs shoulde labour as much as his calling doth beare, and that the Lord doth further appoynte, that their necessitie shoulde prouoke euery man to call vpon God. Such a care is a meane betweene slouthfull securitie and excessiue tormentes, where with the vnfaithfull doe waste themselves. If that wee doe weigh the woordes of Christ well, he doth not forbid vs euery care, but that which groweth of distrust. Be not carefull saith he, what yee eat or drinke, for that is the property of them that tremble for feare of pouerty and want, as if that they should want prouision euery moment.

25. Is not the life more worth? He reasoneth from the more to the lesse. He had forbidden them to care too much how the life may be mayntained, now he addeth a reason: The Lorde, which gaue the life it selfe, will not suffer that those things should be wanting, which appertayne to the sustaining of the same. And certainly we do God no small iniury, so oft as wee distrust that God will not giue vs foode and cloathing, as though that he hadde cast vs out vpon the earth by fortune. For whosoeuer is certainly perswaded, that hee knoweth what the estate and condition of our life is, let not the same man doubt, but that he will very well provide for his necessities. Therefore as oft as any feare or carefulnesse for prouision shall assault vs, let vs remember that God hath a care of our life which he hath giuen vs.

26. Beholde the fowles. This is the remedy which I spake of: that is, that wee might learne to rest vpon the prouidence of God: for infidelitie is the mother of all these excessiue cares. therefore the onely meanes to amend this couetousnesse is, if wee embrace the promises of God, wherein hee witnesseth that he himselfe hath a care of vs. After this manner the Apottle minding to draw the faythfull from couetousnesse, confirmeth this doctrine, Heb. 13. 5. because it is written, I will not fayle thee, neither forsake thee. Therefore the summe is, that he exhorteth vs to truit in God, who neglecteth none of his creatures, though they be the meanest.

It is diligently to be noted, that hee sayth the heauenly father nourisheth the fowles. For although it is to be wondred at, how they sustaine their life, yet how many of vs do thinke that their life doth depend of that, that God doth vouchsafe to extend his prouidence euen to them? It that it be thoroughly fixed in our minds, that God doth with his had minister nourishment to the fowles, our hope may be the easier, which are created after his image, & which are accounted amongst his childré. When he saith that the fowles do not sow, nor mow, he doth not in these woordes perswade vs to slouth and idlenesse, but only meaneth:

neth that though all helpes should cease, yet the onely prouidence of God shall be sufficient, which abundantly bestoweth vpon the beastes, whatsoeuer is needfull.

Luke for the fowles, nameth Rauens, alluding peradventure to that place of the psal. 147. 9. who giueth foode to the young Rauens, that call vpon him. And some thinke that Dauid did especially speake of the Rauens: because that when at the first the olde ones haue forsaken them, it is of necessitie that they shoulde be fed of God. Hereby it appeareth, that Christes will was none other, then that he might teach his to cast their care vpon God.

27. Which of you by taking thought. Christ here condemneth an other fault, which is almost alwayes ioyned with the immoderate care of prouision: that is, that a mortall man taking vpon him more then is lawfull for him, doubteth not through sacrilegious boldnesse to passe his boundes. I know (sayth Ieremy, 10. 23. that the way of manne is not in himselfe, neither is it in man to walke and to direct his steps. And there is scarce the hundred man found, which dareth not promise himselfe any thing of his owne industry and power. Hereby it cometh to passe, that God being not regarded, they doe not doubt to attempt any thing, which challenge to themselues the prosperous successe of things. Christ that he might bridle his madde boldnesse, dooth say, that whatsoeuer pertayneth to the sustentation of our life, dependeth of the onely blessing of GOD. For it is as much as if he should haue sayd, menne do fondly weary themselues, when all their labours are superfluous and vaine, and all their cares doe come to no effecte, but as God blessing them: the which is more plainely expressed by Luke, when Christ addeth: If you cannot doe that which is least, why are ye carefull for the remnant? For by those woordes it sufficiently appeareth that he reprooueth not onely the distruste, but the pride that men do challenge to their witte more then is meete.

Not Salomon in all his glory. The sense is, the goodnesse of God which shineth in hearbes and flowers, doeth excell whatsoeuer men can doe with their riches, power, or by any other meanes: so that the faythfull may account that they shall want nothing of perfect plenty, although all outward meanes be wanting, so that the onely blessing of God may flourish.

O yee of little fayth. Christ dooth not without a cause in this behalfe blame the want and weaknesse of fayth: for the more care we haue according to the grosenesse of our witte: so much more doth our infidelity bewray it selfe, except that all things fall out after our desire: therefore very many, which in great matters seeme to bee endued at least with an indifferent fayth, yet doe faint at the daunger of pouerty.

Matth. 6.

32. For after all these things seeke the Gentiles: for your heavenly father knoweth that yee have need of all these things.

33. But seeke yee first the kingdome of GOD, and his righteousnesse, and all these things shall bee ministred vnto you.

34. Care not then for the morow: for the morow shall care for it selfe: the day hath inough with his owne greife.

ther knoweth that yee haue neede of these things.

31. But rather seeke yee after the kingdome of GOD, and all these things shall be ministred vnto you.

32. Feare not litle flocke for it is your fathers pleasure to giue you a kingdome.

He hath the same purpose here, that he had in the former doctrine: that the faithfull trusting in the fatherly care of God, and hoping to haue from him what things soeuer they thinke to be necessary for them, shoulde not torment themselues with extreame carefulnes. He forbiddeth them to be carefull, or to seeke, as Luke reporteth: that is, after their maner, which seeke heere and there, without respect of God, to whom onely they ought to bend themselues. Neither doe they rest at any time, but where they see abundance of increase: and they which doe not attribute to God the government of the worlde, doe swaite and vex themselves with continuall inquietnes. When hee sayth that Gentiles doe seeke after all these things, hee vpbraideth them with their too grosse folly, from whence all such cares doe spring. For whereof commeth it to passe, that the vnbeleeuers do neuer rest in quiet state: but because they imagine that God is idle, and sleepeth in heaven, or at the least that hee looketh not vpon those things which appertaine vnto men, as vpon them, whome hee hath taken into his charge, and feedeth as his household? So by this comparison, he declareth that they haue profited ill, and doe not as yet vnderstande the first rudiments of godlines: which doe not looke with the eyes of their faith to the hand of God, secretly filled with aboundance of al good things, that they might patiently, and with quiet mindes from thence looke for their sustentation. Your heavenly father, sayth he, knoweth that you neede these things: as if he should haue sayd, all they that are so carefull for their foode, do giue no more honour to the fatherly goodnes of God and his secret prouidence, then the vnfaithfull do.

L.V. 29. Stand not in doubt. This clause answereth to the last sentence which is set downe in Mathevv, Be not carefull for the morow. For Christ reproveth an other fault, that men bending their will to prouide for themselues, would gladly imbrace fise worlds. The word which Luke vseth doth properly signifie to looke aloft, as we doe commonly say, to make long discourses, for the intemperature of our flesh hath neuer enough, but that it would turne ouer the heauen and the earth a hundred times.

Heereof it commeth to passe, that they giue no place to GOD his prouidence. Therefore vnder this title is reprehended too much curiositie or carefulnesse: because that through the same we procure our selues troubles without profite, and doe so become willingly wretches before the time. That Matthevve sayeth, That the day hath inough with his owne greife, appertayneth to this purpose, that the faithfull shoulde temper their cares, least they desire to prouide beyond the bounds of their vocation. For as it is sayd, euery care is not condemned: but that which wandereth through ouerthwart and vnameasurable compasses, beyond boundes.

M A T. 33. First seeke the kingdome of God. He bridleth that too great care for foode by an other argument. For he reproveth that grosse & slouthfull neglect, which the soule hath of the heavenly life. Therefore Christ teacheth vs, that it is preposterous, that men being borne to a better life, doe wholly occupie themselues in earthly things: And whosoever shall esteeme of the kingdome of God as the best will not exercise himselfe in prouiding for his liuing, but moderately: neyther is there any thing fitter to bridle the wantonnesse of the flesh, that it triumph not in the course of this present life, then the meditation of the heavenly life.

The word righteousnesse may as well be referred to God, as to his kingdome: for we know that the kingdome of God consisteth in righteousness, that is, in spirituall newnesse of life. When he sayth, that other things shall be ministred, he meaneth those things, which belong to this present life, are to be placed in the second place and ought to be set after, or vnder the kingdome of God

L V. 32. Fear not my little flocke. With this sentence Christ confirmeth that hope, whereunto he exhorteth his disciples: for howe can God deny vile and corrupt meate to his, whom he hath adopted to be heires of his kingdome? And purposely he calleth his by the name of a little flocke, least they shoulde therfore think themselues to be of lesse account with God: because that through their fewnesse, they are nothing accounted of before the world. The word which he vseth, signifieth, that eternall life doth flow vnto vs out of the fountain of his free mercy. To this purpose also appertayneth the word of giuing. And when Christ witnesseth openly, that God hath giuen vs a kingdome, and that for no other cause, but for that it so pleased him: it is heereby more then manifest, that it is obtayned by no desertes of workes. Therefore so ofte as the Lord sayeth vs vp to the hope of eternall life, we must remember that we may not feare the want of dayly foode.

Hypocrite, cast out the beame that is in thine owne eye first, and then shalt thou see perfectly to pull out the moate that is in thy brothers eye.

1. Judge not. Christ doeth not in these wordes precisely reſtraine from iudging: but his will was to heale that diſeaſe, which is ſettled almoſt in all. For wee ſee how all men doe flatter and ſpare themſelues, and euery man is a ſeuere cenſor againſt others. And there is a certaine ſweetnes in this ſinne, ſo that there is almoſt no man that ytcheth not with a deſire to enquire out other mens faultes. All men doe confeſſe that it is a miſcheife intolerable, that they which ſpare themſelues in their own ſinnes ſhould be ſo malicious againſt their brethren. And in times paſt prophane men did alſo condemne it by many prouerbes: yet it continueth in all ages, and alſo remaineth at this day: nay, there is added to it an other plague worſe then that, that the moſt parte by condemning others, ſeeke to get themſelues further libertie of ſinning. This wicked delight in biting: carping, and ſlaundering doth Chriſt refrayne; when hee ſayth, Judge not. Neyther ought the faithfull to be ſo blind, that they ſhould diſcerne nothing: but onely that they ſhould bridle themſelues, that they bee no more deſirous to iudge then is meete. For it cannot be otherwiſe but that who ſoeuer deſireth to be iudge of his brethren, ſhould be too extreame and rigorous. There is the like ſentence in Iames, bee not many maſters. Yet he doth not reſtraine nor withdraw the faithfull from executing the office of teaching: but hee forbiddeth them to deſire honour ambitiouſly. Therefore to iudge, doth ſignifie as much as to enquire curiouſly into other mens deedes. But firſt this diſeaſe doeth alwayes drawe with it this ſinne, that wee condemne euery light offence, as though it were a moſt greinous faulte: then it breaketh out into a peruerſe boldnes: ſo that we doe proudly iudge ill of euery matter, although it may be taken in good part.

Now wee ſee to what purpoſe Chriſtes counſell tendeth: that is, that we bee not to deſirous, or ouerthwart, or malicious, or els curious in iudging our neighbours. But he that iudgeth by the word and law of the Lord, & directeth his iudgement according to the rule of charitie, doth alwayes begin his iudgement at himſelfe, he doth obſerue the right maner and order of iudging, where by it appeareth howe wickedly they abuſe this teſtimonie of this moderation, which Chriſt ſetteth downe, vnder which pretence they deſire to take away all diſference of good and euill. For it is not onely lawfull for vs to condemne and reprove all ſinnes, but alſo neceſſary: except we will wrangle with GOD himſelfe, and abrogate his lawes, cut downe his iudgementes, and ouerthrow his throno of iudgement. For his will is that we ſhould declare his iudgement which he pronounceth of the deedes of men, we muſt onely retayne that modeſty, that he may remayne the onely lawgiuer and iudge.

Least you be iudged. He de nounceth a punishment against those rigorous censors, which so much desire to sift out the faults of others: that is, it shal come to passe, that they shall be nothing gentler entreated of others, but they shall finde the same extremitie exercised against themselues, which they haue executed against others. As there is nothing more deare or precious to vs then our name: so there is nothing more sharpe and bitter, then to be condemned and subiect to the reproches and infamie of men: and through our owne faulte wee procure our selues that, which we of our owne nature doe so much abhorre. For which is hee amongst many, which doeth not search more narrowly into other mens deedes then is conuenient? which dealeth not hardlyer with light offences? which doth not more ouerthwartly improoue that which is of it selfe indifferent? And what is this else but to doe our diligence, to prouoke GOD to be a reuenger against vs, that hee againe may repay the like to vs. And though this be done by the iust vengeance of God, that they shulde againe be punished, which haue iudged others: yet the Lorde doeth execute this punishment by men. For the iudgement of Chrysofome and others, which referre it to the life to come is wrested. For as Esayas 33. 1. threatneth that they shall bee spoyled, which haue spoyled others: so CHRISTE meaneth that there shall not want reuengers, which shall puniſhe the wicked and slanderous men with the like poyson or rigor. If that men cease, so that they escape punishment in the worlde, which haue bene too desirously bent to condemne their brethren, yet they shall not escape the iudgement of God.

In Luke there is set downe a promise. Forgiue, and yee shall bee forgiven: giue, and it shall be giuen vnto you, the meaning whereof is, that the Lord will bring to passe, that hee that sheweth himselfe louing, gentle, and right towards his brethren, shall feele the same gentlenes of others towards himselfe, so that hee shall bee handeled gently and friendly of others. But that which often falleth out to the children of God, to be recompenced with a most vniust reward, so that they are oppressed with many vniust slaunders, when as they haue hurt no mans name, but haue spared the faultes of their brethren doeth not disagree with the sentence of Christ. For wee knowe that those promises which appertayne to this present life, are not perpetuall, nor without exception.

Also though the Lord suffereth the innocency of his children to be oppressed, and almost ouerwhelmed: yet withall hee fulfilleth that which he speaketh in another place, that their vprightnesse shal shine as the morning. So his blessing alwayes exceedeth all their vniust slaunders. For so hee maketh the faithfull subiect to vniust reproches, that at the length hee may shew forth the goodnes of their cause.

Furthermore, the faithfull ones, how soeuer they desire to execute that, which is right towards their brethren: yet because they are sometime caryed with extreame rigour against their brethren, which eyther are innocent, or are not so much to bee blamed, they prouoke through their owne faulte the like iudgement against themselues. And though it may bee imputed to the vnthankfulnessse of the worlde, that they they doe not receiue measure pressed downe and running ouer: yet certainly they must in parte impure it vnto themselves: because there is no manne that hath so liberally nourished his brethren, as he ought.

3. why seekest thou a moate. Hee doth expressly reprocue that faulte, which the hypocrites doe commonly committe. For when they are too quicke sighted in discerning other mennes faultes, and they doe not onely amplify them seuerely, but almost tragically, they cast their owne offences behind them: or els they are so wise in making them to seeme lesse, that euen in the most grosse offences they desire to seeme excusable. Therefore Christ reprocueth both the offences, too curious searching, which groweth of the want of charity, while wee wil too scrupulously search out the finnes of the brethren, and the sparing flattery, wherewith we couer and nourish our owne finnes.

M A T. 7. 6. Giue yee not that which is holy to dogges, neyther cast yee your pearles before swine: least they treade them vnder their feete, and turning againe all to rente you. There is no cause why I should often rehearse, that Matthew sceth downe many shorte sentences, which are not to bee read: as in owne text depending vpon an other. For this doctrine doth not depend vpon that which went before, but is altogether of an other matter. For Christe admonisheth his Apostles, and in their person all the preachers of the Gospell, that they shoulde preferue and keepe the treasure of the heauenly wisdom only for the sonnes of God, and that they shoulde not throw it foorth to the vnworthy and prophane contemners of God. But here ariseth a question: for afterward he commaundeth them to preach the Gospell to euery creature.

And Paule sayth, 2. Corinthians, 2. 16. that this preaching is to the reprobate a sauour of death. And there is nothing more certaine, then that God commaundeth it daily to bee proposed as a testimonie to the vnsaythfull, that they might bee thereby made the more inexcusable: I answere, because the ministers of the Gospell, and they that are called to the office of teaching cannot discerne betweene the children of GOD and swine, it is their parts to offer the doctrine of saluation generally to all. For although at the firste they shall see many stubborne and vnapt to bee taught: yet charitie doth not suffer vs presently to account of them, as castawayes and lost: for this is to be considered, that Christe calleth dogges and hogges, not all menne, that are wicked or voyde of the feare of God, and without true godlinesse: but them which by certaine tokens doe shewe a stubborne contempt of God, so that the disease may appeare incurable.

In an other place Christe opposeth dogges against the electe people of God, & them of the household of faith, when he sayth, it is not good to take the childrens bread, and to giue it vnto dogs: & here he vnderstandeth dogges and swine, which being too corrupted with a wicked contépt of God, wil not admit nor abide any medicine. Hereby it appeareth how wickedly they do wrest the words of christ, which thinke that he restraineth the doctrine of the gospel, to those only, which are apt to be taught, & wel prepared. For what shuld be done, if  $\text{¶}$  godly teachers should cal no man, but him that now by his obediéce prouétieth

the grace of God? but by nature wee all are rather wicked, and bente to stubbornesse. Wherefore the remedy of saluation is to be denyed to none but them that do sithily refuse the same offered vnto them, that it may appeare that they are reprobate, and damned of themselues: as Paul speakeith of Heretikes, Tit. 3. 11. But there are two causes, why Christe forbade that his Gospell shoulde be proposed to the desperate contemners. For it is a manifest profanation of the ministers of God, if we submit them to the reproachfull skornes of the wicked. Christ also minded to comfort his disciples, that they shoulde not cease to bestow their labour in teaching the Gospell to the electe of God, though they should see the same ouerthwartly refused by the wicked and prophane men: as if he should haue sayd, least this incomparable treasure should waxe vile, and be of no account, the swine and dogges are to be driuen from it. But these titles are to be noted, wherewith he adorneth the doctrine of saluation. Christe calleth it a holy thing, and compareth it to pearles. And hereby wee gather howe much wee ought to esteeme of it. Least they treade it vnder their secte, Christe seemeth to make a difference betweene swine and dogges: attributing a beattly dulnesse to the swine, and madnes to dogges. And certainly experience teacheth, that there are two such sortes of contemners of God. For example sake: whatsoeuer is spoken in the scripture of the corruption of mans nature, of the free iustification, of eternall election, many turne it eyther to carelesnesse, or to the wantonnesse of the flesh, such are aptly & worthily accounted swine. And others doe rend the doctrine & the ministers of the same, with sacreligious raylings: as though it should ouerthrow the desire of well doing, the feare of God, and all care of saluation. Therefore though Christ doth by both the names signifye the vncurable enemies of the word of God, yet by these two similitudes he briefly sheweth what some of them do differ from others.

11. If yee then which are euill can giue to your children good giftes, how much more shall your father which is in heauen, giue good thinges to them that aske him.

9. And I say vnto you, Aske, and it shall be giuen you: seeke and yee shall finde: knocke and it shall be opened to you.

10. For euery one that asketh, receiveth: and hee that seeketh, findeth: and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened.

13. If yee then which are euill can giue good giftes vnto your children, how much more shall your heauenly father giue the holy Ghost to them that desire him?

7. Aske. This is an exhortation to prayer: and because that in this exercise of godlinesse, which we should haue an especiall care of, wee are so slowe and slouthfull, Christ vrgeth this matter by speaking it three maner of wayes. For his speach is not in vaine, when he sayth aske, seeke, knocke: but hee applyeth himselfe to stirre vp our slouthfulness, least the doctrine should waxe cold. To the same purpose also belong the promises which are added, ye shall finde, it shall be giuen you, and it shall be opened to you. For nothing shall better incourage vs to pray, then a certaine assurance of obtayning. For it can not be that they should pray diligently, that doubt: yea prayer without fayth, is but a vaine and sporting ceremonie. Christ therefore that hee might effectually stirre vs vp to this part of our dutie, hee doeth not onely commaund vs what wee ought to doe: but promifeth that our prayers should not be in vaine. And this is diligently to bee noted: first, that wee might know that this lawe of prayer is appointed and prescribed vnto vs, that wee might bee certainly perswaded, that God is so mercifull to vs, that hee will heare our desires. Then, so oft as wee prepare our selues to prayer, or as oft as wee feele that wee are not earnest inough in this desire to pray, that we should remember this so louing a bidding, wherein Christ testifieth vnto vs, God his fatherly affection. So it shall come to passe, that euery of vs inioying the grace of Christ, may boldly pray, and freely call vpon God, as Paule teacheth Ephes. 3. 12. And because wee are more readie to distrust then is meete, Christ repeateth the promise in diuerse words, that hee might also reprove this fault. But hee vseth the Metaphor of seeking, because that wee thinke those thinges which wee haue neede of to bee farre from vs. and of knocking, because that the fancies of our fleshe doe imagine, that those thinges are shut vp from vs, which we haue not ready at hand.

8 For who soeuer asketh receiveth. Some thinke it is a prouerbe gathered of the common trade of life: yet I doe more willingly encline to the contrary parte: for that Christe offereth the fauour of the Father to them that pray: as if hee should haue sayde, God is willing and readie to heare vs, if that we pray, and that there are great riches layd vp for vs, if that we doe aske them. By which wordes hee declareth that they doe suffer iust punishmentes for their slouthfulnesse, which wanting things necessary, doe not seeke this remedie for their want.

It is certayne, that often when the faithfull doe sleepe, God waketh for their saluation, that he may preuent their requestes. For there is nothing more wretched then wee are, if in so great a weakenes, or rather a slouthfulnesse, he should waite for our prayers, if he should not looke vpon vs in so much carelessnesse of vs. Nay, he is not perswaded by any other then by himselfe, to giue vs fayth, which should preuent our praier both in order and in time. But because Christ speaketh heere to his Disciples, he doth onely teach how the heauenly Father would make vs partakers of his giftes. Therefore, although hee doth giue vs all thinges freely, yet that he might exercise our faith, hee commaundeth vs to pray, that he might grant to our requestes, those thinges, which come of his owne goodnes.

9. What man is there among you. This is a comparison from the lesse to the greater. First Christ opposeth the malice of men to the great goodnes of God. And selfe loue maketh vs malicious: for while euery man is too much addicted to himselfe, hee despiseth and neglecteth others. But fatherly loue ouercometh this fault, so that men forgetting themselues, doe more liberally bestow vpon their children. And from whence proceedeth this, but because that God from whom all fatherlinesse descendeth, Ephe. 3. 15. poureth this portion of his goodnesse into their heartes? If that a fewe droppes of ioue in man doe so much preuaile to doe well, what is to bee hoped for out of the sea it selfe, which canne neuer bee drawne drie? Can GOD himselfe bee straight, which doeth so open the heartes of men? yet heere must bee considered that saying of Esayas 49. 15. Although a mother should forget her children, yet the Lord will be like himselfe, so that he will alwayes shew himselfe to be a father.

11. Good giftes. Christ did of purpose vse these words, least that the faithfull in prayer should loose the raine too much to fond and euill desires. Wee know how intemperate and presumptuous our flesh is in this behalfe for there is nothing that we doe not aske of God: & except that he yeeld to our folly, wee fret and fume against him. Christ therefore maketh our requestes subiect to the will of God, that he should not giue vnto vs any thing, but that which he knoweth profitable for vs. Wherefore let vs not thinke that he hath no care of vs; so oft as hee granteth not our requests: because it is in him to iudge what is convenient for vs,

But now, because all our affections are blinde, the rule of our prayer must be taken out of the word of God, neyther are we meete to iudge of so weighty a matter. Therefore, whosoever desireth to come to God with faithfull prayer, let him learne to bridle his hearte, that hee aske not any thinge, but according to his will, as Iames teacheth, 4. 3. of his Epistle.

Luke in the last clause for good giftes, placeth the holy Ghost, not excluding other benefites, but shewing what is especially to bee desired. For that ought alwayes to be in our minde, seeke first the kingdome of God, and other things shall then be ministred vnto you. Wherefore it behoueth the children of God, to that ende that they might prepare themselves rightly to prayer, to put off earthly affections, and to ascend to the meditation of spirituall life. And so it shal come to passe, that they shall make lesse account of meat and cloath, then of the seale and pledge of their adoption: But when God shall giue so precious a treasure, he will not deny others that are lesse.

L V. 5. Which of you shall haue a friende. Luke addeth this similitude, where of Matthew maketh no mention, and the meaning is, there is no cause why the faythfull should faint in their heartes, if they do not presently obtaine their desires, or if that seeme hard to be obtained, which they doe desire. For if importunitie of demanding doth wrest out of men that, which they would not willingly doe, there is no cause why wee should doubt, but that God will bee entreated of vs, if wee constantly continue in prayer, and that our mindes cyther through delay or difficultie waxe not weary.

Matthew 7.

12. Therefore whatsoever yee woulde that men should doe vnto you, euen so do yee to them: for this is the law and the prophets.

13. Enter in at the streight gate: for it is the wide gate and broade waye that leadeth to destruction: & many there be, which go in thereat.

Marke.

Luke. 6.

31. And as yee woulde that men should doe to you, so do yee to them.

It is in vaine to shew howe this dependeth of the former, sith that often in such shorthe sentences, these clauses doe abounde. I sayde before, that Matthew doth not reporte one only Sermon of Christes: but out of diuers sermons hee gathereth the summe of the doctrine. Therefore this sentence is to bee read by it selfe, wherein Christe instructeth his disciples to equity, & setteth downe a shorthe and an easie definition of the same: that wee might knowe that so many contentions doe raigne in the worlde, and that men doe hurt one another so many wayes, for no other cause, but because that wittingly and willingly they treade equitie vnder their fecte: and yett enery one would haue the same streightly obserued to wardes himselfe. Where it standeth vpon our owne profit, there is none of vs that cannot distinctly & subtilly declare what is right. Therefore sith all men doe shew themselves ready teachers of righteousnesse for their owne commodity: how commeth it to passe, that the same knowledge is not ready, when either the profit or the losse of other men commeth in question: but because wee are onely wise for our selues, & no man prouideth for his neighbours. And not so onely, but maliciously, and of set purpose, we close our eyes at the rule of equity, which shineth in our hearts.

Therefore Christ teacheth that euery man may bee a rule vnto himselfe of iust and vpright dealing towards his neighbours. if he would perforce that to others, which he requireth to be done vnto himselfe. So he confuteth all vaine pretenses, which menne imagine to couer, or to counterfeit their owne vnrighteousnesse. For without doubt perfecte equity shoulde raigne amongst vs, if wee were as faythfull working (that I may so speake) disciples of charitie, as wee are ready teachers to haue others to doe to vs.

For this is the lawe and the Prophetes. Christe doeth not meane that this one poyn of doctrine is onely deliuered in the lawe and the Prophetes: but whatsoever is there commaunded concerning charitie, and what lawes and exhortations are there set down for the maintenaunce of righteousnesse, are all referred to this purpose. The meaning thereof is, that hee satisfieth the second table, if hee shew himselfe in that sort to others, as hee desireth others shoulde shew themselves to him: as if hee shoulde haue sayd, there should be no need of long and tedious disputations, if this simplicitie were maintained, and men should not with a preposterous loue of themselves blot out that equitie, which is engrauen in their heartes.

13. Enter in at the strait gate. Because there is nothing more against the flesh, then the doctrine of Christ, no man shall at any time well profite in the same: but hee that learneth to gather his owne senses and all his affections as into a narrow strait, that they may keepe themselves with in those straites, in which the heauenly maister brideleth our wantonnesse. Because men do willingly flatter themselves, leape and runne out of order. therefore Christ doeth here admonish his disciples, that they should prepare themselves, as to a strait & thorny journey. But because it is hard to restraine our lustes frō this vnbrideled & wandering folly, hee mitigateth this bitterness with a comfortable reward, when he sayeth, by the narrow gate and way we enter into life.

Againe, least being caught with the baights of a lycentious and a dissolute life, we should wander whether the pleasure of the flesh doth draw vs: he saith, that they doe runne headlong to death, which hadde rather goe through the wide way and broad gate, then to goe through the straites, which lead to life. But hee sayth expressly, that many doe run through the wide way: because that menne do ouerthrow one an other, by peruerse and euill examples. For whereof cometh it to passe, that all menne doe wittingly and willingly without all care, call themselves headlong: but because they doe not thinke that they shall perishe while they perishe with a great company? And on the other side, the small number of the faythfull doth make many carelesse: for wee are hardly brought to renounce the worlde, and to frame our selues and our liues after the maners of a fewe. For we thinke it an absurde thing to pull vs from the multitude, as if wee were not a parte of mankinde.

But though the doctrine of Christe dooth holde vs as bondmenne, bringeth our life into a streight way, seperateth vs from the multiude, and ioyneth vs to a fewe companions: yet this straightnesse ought to be no hinderance vnto vs, that wee shoulde any whitt the lesse striue after life.

But

But it doeth sufficiently appeare by Luke, that Christe sayde this at an other time, and not then when he vttered those paradoxes of the blessed life (which we haue seene before,) and deliuered to them an order of prayer. And that is it which I haue touched so oft. These things which are set downe by the other Euangelistes, according to the order of the history, are gathered together by Matthew into one summe, that so it might the better appeare, how Christe instructed his disciples. Therefore I thought it meete to adde all the place of Luke which agreeth to this matter. For when I shall diligently admonish the readers of the course of time which Luke obserueth, I hope they will graunt me pardon if in gathering the doctrine I be not more curious then Matthew.

23. Then sayde one vnto him, Lord are there fewe that shall be saued? And he sayd vnto them.

24. Striue to enter in at the straight gate, for many I say vnto you, will seeke to enter in, and shall not be able.

23. Then sayd. Although Matthew rehearseth this answer of Christ in one texte, with ether sentences spoken to the people, yet I thinke that he had occasion giuen him to speake this, by this present question. Furthermore, the occasion that moued that this question shoulde bee asked seemeth to bee, because that Christe who professed himselfe to be the authour of life, coulde scarce gather him a fewe disciples. And he might seeme to cōtemne the whole Church, a small company of menne onely excepted. But outwardly the whole people which regarded not the doctrine of Christ, but refused him altogether, seemed to be adopted of God as heires of life. And we oftentimes do doubt the same, so oft as wee behold the ouerthwart estate of the world. What meaneth this, that the greater part followeth a way contrary and disagreeing to the Gospell? Therefore Christe speaking to all, exhorteth them to striue to enter in at the straight gate. By which wordes Christ meant to drawe his dilciples from foolish curiosity, which hindereth and stayeth many, which looke about whether any other doe ioyne themselues to them, as though they woulde not bee saued but with a great company. In that he commaundeth to striue or to endeouour, he meaneth that they cannot come to euerlasting life without great and many difficulties. therefore let the faythfull rather bestowe their studie vpon this, then be too curious about the multitude that go astray.

24. For many will seeke to enter. This is therefore added, least we should bee deceiued with a vaine hope, as if many companions should helpe vs. I or as flesh is glad to flatter it selfe, many do promise themselues an easie way to life, which in the meane season do please themselues with euery thing. So others doe againe deceiue others, that they sleepe in a wicked securitie. Christ that he might shake off such delights from his disciples, affirmeth that they shall be excluded, which promise now vnto theselues a certaine possession of life.

and hath shutte to the doore, and begin to stande without, and to knocke at the doore, saying: Lord, Lorde, open to vs, and he shall answere, and say vnto you, I know you not whence you are.

26. Then shall ye beginne to say, wee haue eaten and drunke in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streetes.

27. But he shall say, I tell you, I know; ou not whence you are: depart from mee all ye workers of iniquitie.

28. There shall bee weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham & Isaac, & Iacob, and all the Prophets in the kingdome of God, and your selues thrust out at doores.

29. Then shall come many fro the East, & from the West, & from the North, and from the South, and shall sit at the table in the kingdome of God.

30. And beholde there are laste, which shall be first, and there are first which shall be last.

25. When the goodman of the house is risen. Although these thinges were spoken after another time, as I sayd euen nowe, yet I had rather to haue respect of the doctrine then of the time. For this is no small helpe to the vnderstanding, if those may be read together in one text, which do agree together in one sence. Because that Christ hadde affirmed that the gate is not opened to many which desired to enter into heauen. Now he sayth that they shall profit nothing, although they occupy a place in the Church: because that God shall at length rise in iudgement, that he may exclude out of his kingdome, all them that vsurpe a place amongst them of his housholde. And he vsith the similitude of a housholder: who if hee vnderstoode that some of his wicked and wanton seruantes should steale out by night, and leaue the house open to theeues: hee himselfe ariseth and locketh the gate: and will not let in those wandring and night straying menne, which doe out off season wander by the high wayes. Further, in these woordes hee admonisheth vs to take occasion while it is offered. For so long as the Lord calleth vs vnto him, wee as it were haue a gate sitte open for vs into heauen: but the greater part doth not vouchsafe to stirre a foote. Therefore Christe pronounceth that the gate shall at the length bee shut, and so they shall bee in daunger to be shut out which waite for company.

26. Thou hast taught in our streetes. Christe expressly excepteth, that it shall profit the Iewes nothing, that he came neare vnto them, and that he familiarly offereth himselfe that they should enioy him, except they answere at the day when they are called. But he doth not prosecute that similitude. For, speaking of a housholder, hee doeth plainly with out a figure declare himselfe to be the iudge: and this doeth not agree to any other then vnto him selfe. Thou hast taught in our streetes: that is, that the Iewes shoulde not through their negligence loose that saluation which they might now obtaine.

28. When ye shall see Abraham. When as the Iewes hadde nothing like vnto vnto the holy fathers, yet they would vainely brag of that stocke neyther was ther any thing so vsuall amongst the, as to abuse the title of the Church: Christ testifieth that this degenerate people, which departed from the faith and godlines of the fathers, are estranged from the kingdome of God. And heerein is contayned a secreteproofe, because that they which desire to haue companions in seeking saluation, did not rather endeouour to adioyne themselues to Abraham the Prophets, and the holy fathers, then seeke about for their equals, which by their examples were fallen farre out into innumerable corruptions. As if hee should haue sayd, if you doe now neglect to enter in at the straight gate, because the multitude of them which goe astray doth come behinde you, doe you not see how you are seperated from the companie of the faithfull, while you doe linke your selues to the companie of the vnfaithfull? If that the sight of the world doth now blind your eyes, this slouthfulnesse shall bee taken from you at the last day, but too late. For then you shall know that you and your like are strangers from the kingdome of God, and that you haue not any thing commo with Abraham.

29. They shall come from the East. It is an amplification gathered hereof, that the Iewes being reiecte (which thought themselues onely to bee the lawfull heires of God) the Gentiles should be set in their place, that they may receiue the life promised to Abraham and his stocke. And hee opposeth the Gentiles against them, that he might prickethem forward as with a godly ieaousie to faith. Euen as Paul Romanes 11. 14. writeth that it should be an ornament of his ministerie, if he might prouoke them of his owne countrie and flesh to such an emulation. And so it was necessarie that the Iewes should be pricked when as they pleasing themselues too much, did proudly contemne God and all his giftes. But because that Mathew hath this sentence againe a litle after, I doe now touch the same the more sparingly.

30. Behold there are last. Christ vseth these words oftentimes, as wee shall see other where, but in a diuerse sense. In this place hee meaneth nothing else but to ouerthrow the vaine confidence of the Iewes: which when all the world was forsaken, were chosen of God, being placed in this dignitie, imagined that God was bound to them: For this cause Christ telleth them that their lot shall bee shortly altered, so that the Gentiles which were then as outcastes shoulde haue the cheife roome: And the Iewes being put from their honour, should not hold the lowest corner in the Church.

15. Beware. Christ teacheth in these wordes that his Church shoulde bee subiect to diuers deceits, and therefore it would be dangerous least many should fall from the faith, except they bend themselues to take heede. Wee know how ready men are to vanitie, and so they doe not onely of nature desire to be deceiued, but all men seeme to be wise to deceiue themselues. And Sathan also a wonderfull craftes man in deceiuing, ceaseth not to lay snares wherein hee may entangle the simple and vnwarie. But the Iewes did hope that they should haue a pleasant estate vnder the kingdome of Christ, free from all trouble and vexation. Therefore he admonisheth his disciples, if they desire to stande fast, that they should prepare themselues to auoide the subtil sleights of Sathan. For it is the will of the Lord (as I haue already sayd) to exercise his Church with continuall warfare in this worlde. Wherefore, that we may continue his disciples vnto the ende, it sufficeth not onely that wee bee taught, and that we submit our selues to be governed by his word: but because that wee shall be daily assaulted by Sathan, it is necessary that our faith be armed to resist. And it is the cheifst thing, if wee suffer our selues to be governed of the good and faithfull ministers of Christ: but because that on the contrary side there doe arise false teachers, except wee doe watch diligently, and bee armed with constancie, wee shall be easily led from the flocke. To this purpose also pertaineth that saying of Christe, Iohn 10. 3. The sheepe doe heare the voyce of the shepheard. and they will not heare a stranger; but flee from him. Whereby wee also gather that there is no cause why the faithfull shoulde bee discouraged in their mindes, or troubled, while the wolues do breake into the fold of Christ: while the false Prophets doe endeuour with talte doctrines to ouerthrowe the pure faith of Christ, but they ought rather to be stirred vp to set diligent watch. For Christ doth not in vaine bidde vs beware, wherefore if our owne sloughfulness doth not circumuent vs, we shall easily escape all his deceits. And certainly without this hope we should not be bold nor couragious to take heed. When we know how that the Lord would not haue deceiued vs by the inuasions of Sathan, let vs goe forwarde without feare, asking of him the spirite of discretion, by whom as he sealeth the beleefe of his truth in our hearts, so, that he would reueale the deceits and subtilties of Sathan, least wee bee deceiued. When Christ sayth they come in sheepes clothing, which are inwardly wolues he meaneth that they want not faire pretences, if wee doe not with wisdom sift them throughly.

16. By their fruites. If this note of difference had not bene added, the authoritie of all teachers might without exception haue come in question. For if a deadly daunger were to be feared in the teachers, and that there were no meanes to auoyde it, then all of necessitie shoulde bee suspected.

45. A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth good, and an euill man out of the euill treasure of his heart, bringeth forth euill, for of the aboundance of the heart his mouth speaketh.

sted, and there shoulde not bee a better remedy, then for all men to shut their eares. And we see prophane menne pretend this daunger, that they might without punishment reiecte all kinde of doctrine, the weake also and the rude doe stand in doubt. Christ therefore least that his Gospel and the syncre & faithfull ministers of the same should loose the reuerence due, commaundeth that they should iudge of false Prophets by their frutes. Wherefore the Papistes are too foolish & corrupt, which that they might stirre vppe enuy against vs, do precisely cast forth this sentence of Christ: beware of false Prophets: and with their outcries they make the simple, not knowing any cause why, rashly to abhorre vs. But it is necessary that whosoever desireth to obey the counsell of christ, should iudge wisely and discreetly: for we do not onely willingly confesse, that false Prophets should bee taken heed off, but we do also diligently and earnestly exhort the simple that they should beware of them. Onely wee admonish them, that according to the rule of Christ they doe first certainly know then, least the simple doe beare the punishment of their rashnesse in refusing the pure worde of God: for there is great difference betweene carefull heede taking, & preposterous loathing. But the Papists do too wickedly abrogate the commaundement of Christe, which by casting forth a false feare, do drue the miserable soules from searching. Therefore let this bee first considered, that they which through feare do refuse or flee the doctrine which they know not, doe therein wickedly, and make small accounte of this commaundement of Christe. Now remaineth to be scene, what frutes Christ noteth, and in my iudgement they are deceiued which restrayne it to the life. For this triall were very vncertaine, when as the most wicked deceiuers doe imitate a most fained holinesse, and also pretende I knowe not what shoves of most straight life. I grant that their hypocritic shall be at the length reuealed, because there is nothing more harde then to counterfeit vertue. But Christe woulde not submitte his doctrine to so vntighteous and base iudgement, that it shoulde bee measured by the life of menne. Therefore vnder their frutes he comprehendeth the maner of teaching, and that is the chiefe. For thereby Christ proueth that hee was sent of God; because hee seeketh not his owne glory, but his fathers which sent him. Iohn 7. 18. If any doe obiekt that fewe haue that capacitie giuen them to iudge good frutes fro euil, I answer as I sayd euen now, that the faithfull when need is, shall neuer want the spirite of discretion, so that they distrust in themselues, and bid their owne vnderstanding farewell, and giue themselues wholly to bee governed of him. In the meane while let vs remember that all doctrines are to be brought to be tryed by the worde of God, and therefore to bee ruled by the analogie of fayth in iudging false Prophets. Then must bee considered what God enioyneth to his Prophets and ministers of his word, for thereby may their faythfulnesse be easily discerned. As for example sake, if wee propose vnto vs those things which Paule requireth in bishops, that onely discription shall suffice to condemne the whole dunghil of popery: for the Popish sacrificers seeme to doe their diligence to set vppe a contrary shew. Wherefore it is no miracle if they forbid men to iudge of false Prophets. But this place doeth evidently shewe that titles are nothing to bee accounted off, no, nor the calling it selfe is of any estimation, except they be called pastours, and being called to the of-

sice of teaching, do faithfully follow their calling. Doemen gather. By those pro-uerbes which were then commonly vsed, & received by the consent of all men, doth Christ proue that no man can be deceiued by false Prophets, but he which wil willingly be blinde. Because the frutes doe openly make triall which are the faithfull seruants of God, and the false labourers, euen as the frutes doe shewe the tree. The sentence in Luke seemeth to be generall, whereby Christ teacheth that euery man may be iudged by his frutes, as a tree is known by his fruit.
 For after hee had set downe a reproofe against hypocrites, which see a moat in the eye of an other, not seeing a beame in their owne, he presently addeth. For an euill tree cannot bring foorth, and that causall word (For) seemeth to ioyne two sentences together. But because it is certaine that Luke in that sixth chapter, rehearseth diuers sermons of Christe, it may bee also that he doeth briefly touch that which Matthew setteth downe more fully. Neither doe I rest vpon that causall aduerbe, which is oftentimes in other places superfluous, which may also appeare by that clause: for Luke so concludeth this speach, A good man out of the good treasure of his heart. Neither doe I doubt, but that Christ doth plainly set downe what maner of iudgement this should be, which he commandeth to be had by the frutes: that is, that the faythfull should diligently examine what fruite they bring foorth into the worlde, which professe themselues to bee the seruants of God: as if he should haue sayd, titles doe smally auaille, vntill he that speaketh shall proue indeed that he is sent from God: yet I do not deny but that this place may be applyed to the generall doctrine. And certainly the last clause, namely: that of the aboundance of the heart the mouth speaketh, doeth reach further then to the false prophetes, seeing that it is so common a prouerbe. If any doe object that mens tongues do often lie, so that they speake best which are worst affectionate: I answere, Christ doth here teach simply, that which is most commonly vsed. For although hypocrites do pretende one thing in wordes, which they doe neuer thinke in their heart: yet that letteth not but that the tongue may be aptly and very well called the figure or shew of the minde.

Matthew. 7.

21. Not euery one that sayeth vnto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdome of heauen, but hee that doeth my fathers will which is in heauen.

22. Many will say to me in that day, Lorde, Lorde, haue we not by thy name prophesied? and by thy name cast out deuilles? and by thy name done many greate workes?

23. And then will I professe to them, I neuer knewe you, departe from me, yee that worke iniquitie.

Marke.

Luke. 6.

46. But why
 calye me master, master, & do not thinges that I speake.

21. Not euery one that sayeth. Christe stretcheth his speach further.
 Neyther spake hee onely of false Prophetes, which breake in amongst the flocke, to strale and to deuoure: but of hirelinges, which vnder the countenance of shepherdes doe deceitfully thruste in themselues, and yet haue

haue no affection of godlines. And although this doctrine comprehendeth a l hypocrites what degree or place soeuer they are in: yet he doth properly touch false teachers which seeme to excell about others. Neyther doth he direct his speech to them alone, that he might waken them out of their securitie, wherein they lie as drunken men, but hee also admoniseth the faithfull, that they giue not to such disguised people, more then is meete. In summe, hee foretelleth that as soone as the doctrine of the Gospell shall begin to bring forth fruite, so that it shall haue many disciples, there shall be many not onely of the common sort which shall falsly and hypocritically giue their name to the Gospell, but also amongst the pastours, there shall bee the same falshoode, so that they shall denie in deedes and life that which they professe with mouth, Therefore who soeuer desireth to be accounted amongst his disciples, he must doe his diligence that he may sincerely and from his heart addict himselfe to meditate newnesse of life. In Luke there is a generall reproofe, But why call ye me maister, maister.
But because this corruption doth for the most part spring from dissembling teachers. and doth the more easly spread from them to the whole body: therefore in Mathew Christ doth namely inueigh against them. To doe the will of the father, doth not onely signifie philosophically to frame their life and maners to a rule of vertues, but also to beleue in Christ, as it is sayd in Iohn 6 40. Therefore in these wordes faith is not excluded, but is established as the spring from whence the rest doe flow.

22. Many shall say vnto mee. Christ citeth againe the hypocrites before his iudgement seate, as we sayd euen now out of Luke: for so long as they occupie a place in the Church, they doe partly flatter themselves, and also they do partly deceiue others. Therefore he sayth that there shall be a day wherein he will purge his floore, and the weedes and chaffe shalbe seperate from the pure wheate To prophesie in Christes name, is by his authoritie, and as it were by his gouernement to execute the office of teaching. For prophesie in my iudgement is taken in this place generally, as in 1. Corinthians 14. hee might haue simply vsed the worde of preaching: but purposely hee vsed that which was of greater estimation, that he might the better declare that the outward profelsion is nothing worth, how excellently soeuer men do account of it. So to work miracles in the name of Christ, is nothing els then to do miracles by his power, ayd, gouernement and leading. For although the name of works is sometime restrained to one sorte or kinde of miracles, yet in this place and in many others, hee noteth all miracles.

23. I will professe to them. By this speech Christ seemeth to allude to the vaine boasting wherein hypocrites doe now at this day vaunt themselves, as if hee should haue sayd, while they confessed me with their tongue, they thought that they had discharged their dutie well: and now a holow confession of my name with their tongue is heard. But I in like sorte confesse against them, that what soeuer they professe, is vaine and lying.

But what meaneth this confession of Christ, that he neuer accounted them amongst the number of his disciples: no not euen when they gloried that they were the pillars of the Church?

Therefore hee commaundeth them to cease, which vnder a deceitfull title haue for a time stolne an vniust possession to their house. It seemeth that Paule tooke out this sermon of Christ that which he sayth. 2. Tim. 2. 19. The Lord knoweth who are his, let euery one that calleth on the name of the Lord depart from iniquitie. For the first clause tendeth to this purpose, that the weak should not faint nor be troubled at the falling away of some, whose name was greate and famous. For he sayth that they were neuer knowne of the Lorde, though they dazeled the eyes of menne with a vaine shewe. Then hee exhorteth all them which would bee accounted amongst the Disciples of Christ, that they should speedely withdraw themselues from iniquitie, leait that Christ do driue them away out of his sight, when he shall seperate the lambes from the goates.

Mathew. 7

24. Who soeuer then heareth of me these wordes, and doth the same, I will liken him to a wise manne which hath built his house on a rocke.

25. And the raine fell, and the flouds came, and the windes blew, and beat vpon that house, and it fell not, for it was grounded on a rocke.

26. But who soeuer heareth these my wordes, and doth them not, shall be likened to a foolish manne which hath builded his house vpon the sand.

27. And the raine fell, and the floudes came, and the winds blew, and beate vpon that house, and it fell, and the fall thereof was great.

28. And it came to passe when Iesus had ended these wordes, the people were astonished at his doctrine.

29. For he taught them as one hauing authoritie, and not as the Scribes.

Marke

47 Who soeuer commeth to me, and beareth my wordes, and doth the same, I wil shew you to whom he is like.

48. He is like a man which built a house, & digged deep and laid the foundation on a rocke, and when the waters arose, the floud beate vpon that house, and coulde not shake it for it was grounded vpon a rocke.

49. But hee that heareth and doeth not, is like a man that built a house vpon the earth, without foundation, against which the floud did beate and it fell by and by, and the fall of that house was great.

Luke. 6.

24. Who soeuer then. Because for the most part it is hard to discerne the true professors of the gospell from the counterfeite, Christ by an apt similitude sheweth wherein they differ most. For he proposeth two houses, whereof the one was built without a foundation, and the other had a good foundation. For when ther was the shew the same outward appearance in them both, the first being beaten with wind and stormes, or shaken with floudes, doth presently fall, but the latter shall stand fast vpon his sure foundation against all violence. Christ therefore compareth the vaine and windie profersion of the Gospell, to a beautiful, but no sound building, which though it were set vp to the shewe, yet it was readie to fall at euery moment, because it lacked a foundation. Therefore Paul commandeth vs to be well & thoroughly grounded in Christ, and to haue

deepe rootes least we be caried a way at euery blast. In summe, this is the purpose, true godlines cannot be discerned from counterfeite holines, vntill an examination and triall doe come: for temptations wherewith we are tried, are like to floudes and stormes, which doe easily beate downe vnsable mindes, whose lightnes is not perceiued in a calme and quiet time. Heareth these wordes. The relatiue These, doth not note one kinde of doctrine, but the whole summe of doctrine. For the Gospell, except it be deeply fixed in our minds (he sayth) is like vnto a wall which is built high, and is strengthened with no foundation. Therefore it is as much as if he should haue sayd, that is in deede the true faith which taketh deepe rootes in the heart, and resteth vpon an earnest and a constant zeale as vpon a foundation, so that it yeeldeth not to temptations. But such is the vanitie of mans vnderstanding, they which dig and pearce not inwardly euen to the deniall of themselves, doe builde vpon the sande.

28. When Iesus had ended these wordes. I vnderstand as well that sermon which hee hadde when he descended out of the mountaine, as the rest of his doctrine which hee had now vttered to the people. Therefore the meaning is, when as he had in diuerse places giuen a taste of his doctrine to the people, they were all amased, because that a certaine new & vnwonted maicstie did draw the minds of men vnto him. What it is to teach with authoritie and otherwise then the Scribes were accustomed, I haue before declared.

Mathew 8.

Marke 1.

Luke. 5.

1. Now when he was come downe from the mountaine, great multitudes followed him.

2. And lo there came a Leper, and worshipped him, saying: master: If thou wilt, thou canst make me cleane.

3. And Iesus putting forth his hand touched him, saying: I will, be thou cleane: and immediately his Leprosie was cleansed.

4. Then Iesus sayde vnto him: See thou tel no man, but goe and shew thy selfe to the priest, and offer the gift which Moses commanded, for a witness to them.

40. And there came a Leper to him, beseeching him, & kneeled downe vnto him, & said vnto him: If thou wilt, thou canst make me cleane.

41. And Iesus had compassion, and put forth his hand, & touched him, & said to him, I wil: be thou cleane.

42. And as soone as he had spoken, immediately the Leprosie departed from him, and he was made cleane.

43. And after he had giuen him a straight commaundement, hee sent him away forthwith.

44. And said vnto him, see thou say nothing to any man, but get thee hence, & shew thy selfe to the priest and offer for thy cleansing those thinges which Moses commanded, for a testimoniall vnto them.

45. And by and by hee arose, and tooke vpp his bed, and went forth before them all, in so much that they were all amased, and glorified God, saying: wee neuer saw such a thing.

12. Now it came to passe as he was in a certain city behold there was a man full of Leprosie, & when he saw Iesus, he fel on his face, & besought him saying, Lord: if thou wilt thou canst make me cleane.

13. So he stretched forth his hand, & touched him, saying, I will: be thou cleane, & immediately the leprosie departed fro him.

14. And hee commaunded him that he shuld tel it no man: but go, saith he, & shew thy selfe to the priest, & offer for thy cleansing, as Moses hath commaunded for a witness vnto thee. 15. But so much were went ther a fame abroad of him: and great multitudes came together to hear & to be healed of him of their infirmities. 16. But he left himself apart in the wilderness & praied.

1. When hee was come downe from the mountaine. Now Mathew returneth to the historie. He sayd before that Christ ascended into the mountaine: Then he gathered as into one heape many poynts of the doctrine of Christ. and now he addeth, that when as he preached in the mounte, hee healed a certaine Leper. Marke and Luke doe report the same hystorie, though they doe not set downe the time. Also the Godhead of Christ was shewed in the same, in so much as with his onely word, and touching with his hand, hee presently cured the man of his leprosie. But though this leprosie had bin an other kinde of disease, then that which is called elephantiasis: yet it appeareth plainly that it was hard to be cured. And if it had continued any long time, it was a rare example to haue any man healed of the same. But if wee grant that Physicians could by the knowledg of their Art haue holpe the same, yet it appeared in this miracle, that there was no help o. man in it.

2. Hee came and worshipped. What the Verbe doeth signifie, which they translate to worship, may easily be gathered out of this place. For the other two Euangelistes doe helpe vs well in the interpretation of it: of which Marke saith hee kneeled downe, and Luke sayth he fell vpon his face. Therefore in his gesture, that is in his kneeling, the Leper shewed a signe of reuerence. And we know that the Iewes did commonly vse worshipping, as the people of the East are much bent to such ceremonies. Wherefore many thinke that this Leper thought not to worship Christ with anie diuine worship, but onely to salute him honorably as some excellēt prophet of the Lord. But I do not dispute with what affection he worshipped Christ: but what he attributed to him I see, that is, that hee could make him cleane if hee would. By which words he witnesseth that he acknowledged a diuine power in Christ. And when Christ answereth that he will, he sheweth that he hath more attributed to him by man, then is proper to man. For it is necessary that hee should bee of great power, that should restore men to health: for whether the Leper beleued Christ to bee the Sonne of God, or that he had this power giuen him as Moses and the Prophets: Yet he doubteth not but that he hath in his hand and power the gift of healing. And that he speaketh vnder condition: If thou wilt thou canst, is not contrary to that assurance of faith, which God requireth in our prayers: neither ought men to hope after more then God promiseth. And the Leper was not assured either by Oracle or by any promise of God, what Christ would doe to him, therefore he should haue done rashly if hee had passed beyond these boundes: for where as we reade that some did sometimes pray simply, it is to be vnderstood that they had some singular motions, which cannot be holden as a rule. Yet I know not whether one speaking properly, may say that the Leper conceiued this as a prayer: For hee onely sayth that he is so perswaded of the power of Christ, so that he doubteth not but that he could heale his Leprosie. When he offereth himselfe to be healed by him, being yet vncertaine of the successe: because the will of Christ was not as yet knowne vnto him.

3. Putting forth his hande he touched him. The touching of a Leper in the time of the Lawe was contagious: but because there was that puritie in Christe, which swalloweth vpp all vncleannesse and pollutions, he doth neyther defile himselfe by touching the Leper, neyther doth he transgresse the the lawe. Hee taking vpon him our fleshe, doeth not onely vouchsafe vs the touchinge of his hande, but tooke vpon him one, and the same body with vs, that wee might be flesh of his fleshe: Neyther doth he onely reach his arme to vs, but descended from heauen euen to the very helles: yet not withstanding, hee was not any thing blotted thereby, but remayning perfect, hee tooke away all our filthinesse, and hath washed vs with his holinesse. But when with his word alone, he was able to heale a Leper, he also touched him with his hand, to witnesse his mercifull affection, and no marueile, seeing that he would take vpon him our fleshe, that hee might purge vs from all our sins, wherefore reaching out of his hand, was a signe & a token of his great fauour & goodnes. And certainly, that which wee doe carelesly passe by through our cold reading, cannot bee well considered without great wonder, that the Sonne of God was so far from abhorring to speake with the Leaper, that hee reached out his hand also to touch his vnclenesse.

4. Iesus sayde vnto him, Some, that they might excuse the Leaper, doe not thinke that hee was earnestly forbidden by Christe, that hee should not publishe the myracle, but that it was rather vsed to pricke him forwarde: yet others are of a better iudgement which thinke that the cause of his forbidding was, for that the time appoynted was not yet come. I grant that this myracle ought not to haue bene suppressed: but there was some certaine reason why the Lord would not haue his fame spread so soone, or at the least not vttered by the Leaper, therefore I iudge that the Leaper by his preposterous zeale was so farre from deseruing any praye, that he was rather to bee condemned because hee did not obey the commaundement. If hee would haue bene thankfull to him that healed him, hee could not otherwise haue done it better then by obedience, which with God is preferred before all sacrifices, 1. Sam. 15. 22. and it is the beginning and chiefe of all lawfull worshippe.

Therefore by this example wee are taught, that they doe wickedly, which maintaine an vnaduised zeale: for the more they apply theselues in the seruice of God, the more they increase the nūber of rebelles against his cōmaundement

Shewe thy selfe to the Priest. Because the Ceremonies of the lawe were not as yet abrogated, Christ would not that they should bee contemned or pretermitted. Nowe God in his lawe hadde commaunded (as it is reported in the fourteenth Chapter of Leuiticus, and the seconde verse,) that if any man was censed from his Leprosie, that hee should offer himselfe to the Priest, with a sacrifice of thankesgiuinge. And the ende was, that the Priest by his iudgement should approoue the benefite of GOD, and also that hee that was healed, should shewe some testimonie of his thankfulness. Christe therefore sending the Leper to the Priest, doeth declare that hee hadde no other purpose, but that he might sette foorth the glory of God. For the shewing is referred to a triall, and the gift was a token of thankes giuing. His wil was that the Priestes should iudge, that the grace of God might be the more euident and vndoubted: and that the Leper should acknowledge that hee was healed of God. Yet (as I sayde euen nowe) hee commaunded to keepe the rites prescribed in the lawe vnto the time of the abrogation.

The Papistes are without all reason, in that out of this place they gather a lawe of their confession . Allegorically they call sinne a leprosie : and the sacrificers which the Pope consecrateth, to bee the iudges of the spirituall leprosie. But if wee shoulde graunt that this power was giuen to the Priestes in the lawe, that the people might knowe that all their cleanness and iudgement of the same did depende vpon the Priesthoode : Yet the Popish sacrificers did wickedly, to take that vnto themselues . For what honour soeuer was giuen to the Priestes of the lawe, the same doeth Christe nowe challenge to himselfe alone. Therefore hee onely knoweth and iudgeth of the spirituall leprosie, and hee is onely worthy to whom they that are cleansed, should offer the gift of their purgation. And therefore vnder the lawe was their cleansing sealed by the offering of a sacrifice, because that men are not otherwise cleansed then by the shedding of blood. Therefore to giue that right to any other, which God hath assigned to his owne sonne, is most haynous sacriledge. And that Christe commaunded the ministers of the Gospell to declare vnto sinners that they are made cleane, which the Papistes do imagine to appertaine to their fained iurisdiction , is not to bee wrested that they might discerne of the leprosie.

MARK E. 44. For a witnesse vnto them. Some doe take a testimony for a law or statute, as it is said in the hundredth two & twenty Psalm, & the fourth verse. God gaue this as a testimony to Israell. Yet this seemeth to mee to bee colde : for I doubt not but that the pronowne Them, hath relation to the priests. Therefore in my iudgement Christ had respect to the circumstance of this present matter, because that in this miracle there shoulde bee most euident prooffe to conuince them for their vnthankfulness. Neither is that any let that Christ commaunded the Leper to holde his peace: for his wil was not that the remembrance of this miracle should be buried for euer. Therefore, when as by the commandement of Christ the Leper came into the priestes sight: it was to witnesse vnto them that were inexcusable, if they would not embrace Christ for a minister of God, and also all occasion of speaking euill was taken away, when as Christ did not omitte any poynt of the law.

In summe, if they had not beene incurable, they might haue beene brought to Christe, but this so solemne a witnesse of God was effectuell enough for the condemning of the vnbeleeuers.

45. So that Iesus coulde no more. Hereby wee gather why Christe would not that this miracle shoulde so soone haue beene vttered, that hee might by that meanes haue the more liberty to teach, not that the enemies rose vppe against him which sought to stoppe his mouth : But because the importunity of the people was so great in desiring miracles, that hee hadde no time for doctrine : and his will was to haue all menne more bent to the worde then to signes.

Therefore Luke sayeth that hee dwelled in the desertes . For hee auoyded the sorte of menne, because hee saw hee coulde not satisfie the desires of the people, except hee shoulde ouerwhelme his doctrine with aboundance of signes.

7. And Iesus sayd vnto him, I will come and heale him,

8. But the Centurion answered saying: Maister, I am not worthy that thou shouldest come vnder my rooffe: but speak the word on ly, and my seruant shall be healed

9. For I am a man also vnder the authoritie of another, and haue souldiers vnder me: and I say to one, Go: & he goeth, and to another, come, and he commeth, & to my seruant, do this, & he doth it

10. When Iesus heard that, hee maruailed and said to them that followed him: Verely I say vnto you, I haue not founde so great faith euen in Israell.

12. And the children of the kingdome shall be cast out into vtter darkenes: there shall be weeping and gnashyng of teeth.

13. Then Iesus said vnto the Centurion: Goe thy way, & as thou hast beleueed, so be it vnto thee. And his seruant was healed the same houre.

5. When Iesus was entred. They which think that Mat. & Luke do set down two diuers hystories, do striue about a matter of nothing. This only diueritie is in the words. That Mathew sayth that a Centurion came to Christ, But Luke saith that he sent certain of the Iewes which should speake vnto him in his name. But Mathew doth not without cause attribute that vnto him, which was done at his request and in his name. But the two Euangelists do so agree in all circumstances that it were folly to imagine two miracles of one. Also I doubt not but the

1. When he had ended all his sayings, in the audience of the people, hee entred into Capernaum.

2. And a certaine Centurions seruant was sicke, and readie to die, which was deare vnto him.

3. And when he heard of Iesus, hee sent vnto him the Elders of the Iewes, beseching him that hee woulde come and heale his seruant.

4. So they came to Iesus, and besought him instantly: saying, that he was worthy that he should doe that for him.

5. For he loneth, sayd they, our nation, and hath built vs a Synagogue.

6. Then Iesus went with them: but when he was now not far frö the house, the Centurion sent freinds to him, saying to him, Lord, trouble not thy selfe: for I am not worthy that thou shouldst enter vnder my rooffe.

7. Wherefore I thought not my selfe woorthy to come vnto thee: but say the word, and my seruant shall be whole.

8. For I likewise am a man set vnder authoritie, and haue vnder me souldiours, and I say vnto one, Go, and he goeth, & to another, Come, and he cömeth and to my seruant, Doe this, and hee doth it.

9. When Iesus heard these thinges, hee maruailed at him, and turned him, and sayd to the people that followed him, I say vnto you, I haue not found so great fayth: no not in Israell.

10. And when they that were sent, turned back to the house, they found the seruant that was sicke, whole.

companie of souldiours, which the Centurion guided, had their standing in the Citie of Capernaum, as they were wont to distribute legions for the defence of the cities. When he perceiued the maners of the people to be very wicked and corrupt: (for we know that Capernaum being a citie neare to the sea side, was filled with moe superstitions then others,) yet that hindered not but that the countrie superstitions being condemned, he might haue a tast of true & sincere godlines: for he could not build a synagogue for the Iewes without some enuie and danger, neyther could he loue that nation, but because that he embraced the worship of God alone. Therefore before that Christ healed his seruant, he himselfe was healed of the Lorde. And that was wonderfull, that a warrour which had passed the seas with a band of souldiours, that hee might accustome the Iewes to beare the yoke of the Romanes tyrannie, should willingly submit himselfe and yeelde obedience to the God of Israell. That Luke sayth that this seruant was deare vnto him: he by this meanes preuenteth a doubt which might come into the readers minds. For wee know that the maisters had not the seruants in such estimation, except they were such as through singular industrie, faith, or some other vertue, had obtayned their fauour. Luke therefore declareth that he was no common or vile bondman, but a faithfull seruant endued with rare giftes, which was in great fauour with his maister: for this cause hee had so great a care of his life, and did so diligently commend him. But it appeareth by both the Euangelists, that it was a sodain palse which at the first did put him in despaire of his life, for the slow palties are without torments. And Matheue sayth that the young man was greiuously vexed. And Luke sayth he was neare vnto death. so both sayings preuayle to set forth the glory of the miracle, either the sorrow and paine, or the great daunger, so that I dare say the lesse, for the certaintie of the maner of the diseafe.

L V K E. 5. For hee loueth our nation. It is not to be doubted but that the Iewes comméd him for his godlines. For he could not for any other cause loue so detested a nation, then for loue of the lawe and worshipec of God. And by building of a Synagogue, he did evidently declare that he fauoured the doctrine of the lawe. Wherefore they say, and not without a cause, that he was worthie to haue Christ shew himselfe bountifull to him, as to a godly worhipper of God. Yet it is to be wondered at, that by their entreatie they shoulde obtayne the fauour of God for a Gentile, which they themselues contemptuously refused. For if Christ be a minister and a dispenser of the giftes of God for them, why doe not they enioy that grace themselues, beefore they get it for strangers. But such securitie doth alwayes raigne amongst hypocrites, that they thinke to make God after a sorte obedient vnto them, as if it were in their power to make the grace of God subiect to their power and will. Then being filled therewith, or rather because they doe not vouchsafe to taste thereof at all, they resigne it vnto others as a thing superfluous.

M A T H E W. 8. I am not woorthy that hee shoulde come vnder my rouse. Because Matheue is shorter, hee bringeth the man speaking thus himselfe. But Luke expressing it more fully, sayeth that hee gaue this in commaundment to his friendes, but the meaning of both is all one. But there are two cipall poyntes of this sentence . The Centurion sparing Christe , for honour sake, requireth that Christe shoulde not weary himselfe, because he accounteth himselfe vnworthy of his comming . Then he attributeth so great power to him, that hee beleueth that by his onely will and worde, hee canne restore his seruauent to life. A wondertull humilitie : that hee shoulde extoll a man of a seruite and a captiue nation so much aboute himselfe. And it may bee that being accustomed to the pride of the Iewes, through his owne modeltie he did not take in ill parte to bee accounted a prophane manne, and so was a frayde to iniurie the Prophete of God, if hee should be compelled to come to a man that was a Gentile and vncleane. Whatsoever the matter is, it is certaine that hee speaketh from his heart, and that hee esteemeth so reuerently of Christe, that hee dareth not call him to him. Nay, as it followeth in the texte in Luke, he accounteth himselfe as vnworthy his speache. Yet it may bee demaunded by what reason hee was perswaded so highly to extoll Christe : and that which presently followeth, encreaseth the doubt the more. Onely speake the worde and the childe shall bee healed. For if he had not knowne Christe to be the sonne of God, it had bene superstition to haue giuen the glory of God to a man.

But it is scarce credible that hee coulde bee rightly instructed in the Godhead of Christe, which as yet was vnknowne almost to all. Also Christe imputeth not, nor chargeth his woordes with ignoraunce, but declareth that they proceede of fayth. And this reason enforced many interpreters to thinke that the Centurion celebrateth Christe as the true and onely God. But I thinke, that when the godly manne was fully assured of the diuine woorkes of Christ, hee simply apprehended the power of God in him . And without doubt hee hadde also hearde somewhat of the promised Redecmer . Therefore though hee vnderstoode not Christe to bee God manifested in the fleshe : yet hee was so perswaded, that the power of GOD was shewed in him, and that such a gift was giuen him, that in his myracles hee shewed the presence of God. So hee doeth not superstitiously ascribe that vnto man, which was proper to God : but considering what was committed of God to Christ, hee beleued that by his word alone, he could heale his seruant.

If any obiekt, that there is nothing more proper to God, then to do by his woorde what hee pleaseth, and that this mighty power cannot without sacriledge bee giuen to a mortall manne : that againe is easily answered. Although the Centurion did not so subtilly distinguish, yet hee did not attribute this power to the woorde of a mortall manne, but of God, whose minister he was certainly perswaded Christe was. This hee doubted not off. Therefore when as Christe hadde the power of healing, hee acknowledging it to be a heauenly power, doeth not tie it to his bodily presence, but is satisfied with his woorde, from whence he beleueth that such power proceedeth.

The similitude whiche the Centurion vseth, is not taken of the like, as they say : but compareth the lesse with the greater . For hee accounteth more of the Diuine power, which hee declareth to be in Christe, then of the power which hee himselfe hadde ouer his seruantes and souldiours.

10. Iesus marueiled. Although it cannot befall to God to maruaile, because that it ariseth of things that are newe and vnlooked for: yet may it befall to Christe, as hee hadde with our flesh taken vpon him mannes affections. Now that which Christ sayeth, that he found not so great fayth euen in Israell, was spoken in a certaine respecte, and not simply: for if we consider all the poyntes of fayth, the fayth of Mary did herein at the least excell, that she beleened that shee was with childe by the holy Ghost, and that she should beare the onely bogotten sonne of God. Then, that she acknowledged her sonne borne of her wombe, to be her creatour, and the maker and only redeemer of all the world. But Christ commended the fayth of this heathen manne before the fayth of all the Iewes for two especiall causes: Namely, that of so little and small a taste of doctrine, he brought forth so great fruite, and that so sodainly: for this was not common, so highly to extoll the power of God, which only beganne to shine as certaine sparkes, in Christe. Then, whereas the Iewes were bent to outward signes more then was meete, this heathen man requireth no visible signe: but sayth that the onely word shoulde satisfie him. Christe was a coming to him, not that he needed, but that he might proue this fayth of his. Wherefore for this cause especially he commendeth this fayth, because he rested vpon his word onely. What would euen one of the Apostles haue done? Come Lord, see and touche. This manne desireth neither his corporall coming nor his touching: but beleueth that there is so great power included in the word, that thereby he doth certainly looke for the health of his seruant. And hee giueth this honour not to the word of a man, but to the worde of God, which sheweth that Christ is not a priuate manne, but a Prophet sent from God. And hereby may a generall rule be gathered, although God woulde that our saluation shoulde bee wrought in the flesh of Christe, and doeth daily seale the same by his Sacramentes, yet the certaintie of the same is to be fetched out of the word. For except this authoritie be giuen to the worde, that we beleue that so soone as God speaketh by his ministers, our sinnes are forgiuen vs, and wee restored to life, all the hope of our saluation falleth away.

11. Many shall come from the East. As in the person of the seruant, Christ gaue a taste, and as it were the first frutes of his grace to the Gentiles: so hee teacheth that his maister was a token of the calling of the Gentiles which was to come, and of spreading the fayth throughout all the world. For he teacheth that they shoulde come, not only out of the next borders, but from the furthest coastes of the worlde. And though this was witnessed by many prophecies of the Prophetes, yet at the first this seemed to bee absurde and incredible to the Iewes, which imagined that God was bound to the stocke of Abraham. Wherefore this cannot be hearde without admiration, that those which were then straungers, shoulde bee of the houthoulde and heires of the kingdome of God. And not onely so, but the couenaunt of saluation shoulde presently be published, that all the world might be gathered into one body of the Church, while the Gentiles which shoulde come to the fayth, shoulde, as hee sayeth, bee made partakers of the saluation with Abraham, Isaac and Iacob. Hereby wee doe assuredly gather that the same saluation which is giuen vnto vs through Christe, was in times past promised also to the Fathers:

For otherwise inheritance could not be common, except the fayth were one, which is the meanes to obtaine the same.

In the worde sitting downe there is an allusion to tables. Yet because we know that the heavenly life needeth not meate and drinke, the speech signifieth as much as if it had beene sayd, they shall enjoy the same life.

12. But the children of the kingdome. Why calleth hee them the children of the kingdome, which were nothing lesse then the children of Abraham? For certainly it is not meete that they should bee accounted in the flocke of God, which are straungers from the fayth. I answer, although they were not rightly of the Church of God: yet because they did occupie a place in the Church, he graunteth them this title. Then it is to be noted, that the couenaunt of God was of such force, that so long as it continued in the flocke of Abraham, the inheritance of the heavenly kingdome shoulde properly belong to them. At the last, in respecte of God himselfe, they were then as yet holy braunches of a holy roote: and the forsaking which followed, sheweth sufficiently that they were then retained in the hould of God. Secondly, it is to be noted, that Christ speaketh not of perticuler menne, but of the whole nation. And this was much harder then the calling of the Gentiles. For it was somewhat tollerable that the Gentiles shoulde bee grafted by free adoption into the body of Abraham with his posterity: but that the Jewes themselves shoulde be thrust out, that the Gentiles might succede into their empty rounth, that was accounted wonderfull. Yet Christ sayth, that both these thinges should come to passe, that God woulde admitte straungers into the bosome of Abraham, and that he woulde driue out the children. In outward darkenesse, there is a secret Antithesis For God declareth that out of his kingdome, which is the kingdome of light, there raineth nothing but darkenes. And the scripture doth metaphorically by darknesse signifie a horrible griefe, which cannot be expressed by words, nor in this life can be comprehended in any sense.

13. Goe, and as thou beleuest. Hereby it appeareth howe louingly Christ powreth forth his grace, where hee obtayneth a vessell of fayth opened. For although hee speaketh of the Centurion in these woordes: yet it is not to bee doubted, but that by him hee calleth vs all to hope well. But wee are hereby also taught, why God for the most parte dealeth more strictly towardes vs: for our vnbeliefe restrayneth his liberality. Therefore if by fayth wee open a passage for him, he will heare our requestes and prayers.

11. And it came to passe the day after that he went into a citty called Naim, and many of his disciples went with him, and a great multitude.

12. Nowe, when he came neere to the gate of the citty: behold, there was a dead man carryed out, who was the onely sonne of his mother, which was a widow, and much people of the citty was with her.

13. And when the Lorde saw her, hee hadde compassion on her, and sayde vnto her, weepe not.

14. And hee went and touched the coffin, and they that bare him stood still, and he sayd, young man I say vnto thee, arise.

15. And hee that was dead, sate vpp, and began to speake, and hee deliuered him to his mother.

16. Then there came a feare on them all, and they glorified GOD, sayinge, a greate Prophet is raised vpp amonge vs, and GOD hath visited his people.

17. And this rumor of him went forth throughout all Iudea, and throughout all the region round about.

11. And it came to passe. When as in all the myracles of Christ, that analogie is to be holden, which Matthew teacheth, let vs know that this young manne, which Christ rayfed from death, is a token of the spirituall life, which Christ restoreth to vs. The name of the citty maketh for the certaintie of the history. To the same purpose also appertaineth that which Luke sayth: that a great company followed them both: for both Christ had many companions with him, & many for dutie sake, were present with the woman, to perfourme the buriall. Therefore the resurrection of the young man was seene of so many witnesses, that the myracle might not be doubted of. Hyther also apperteineth the famousnesse of the place: for wee know that the assemblies were in the gates. And that the dead was carried out of the citty, was according to the old maner of all nations. Also Hierome writeth that the citty of Naim stood in his time, and it was scituated two myles beneath the mount Tabor towards the South.

12. The onely begotten sonne of his mother. This reason perswaded Christ to rayse the young manne: for hee seeing a widdowe depryued of her onely sonne, tooke pittie vppon her. Neyther did he deferre his fauour, vntill some shoulde require it, as hee did in other places: but hee preuenteth the prayers of all, and restoreth the young manne to his mother, which looked for no such thing. Wherein wee haue a notable spectacle of his free mercy, while that hee quicken vs, and rayse vs vpp from death. It may be, that by touching the coffin, his minde was to shew how little he feared death, and the graue, that hee might giue vs life. And certainly hee doeth not onely vouchsafe to touch vs with his hande, that hee might giue life to the dead: but that hee might carry vs in to heauen, he himselfe descended into the graue.

Young man, I say to thee. By this phrasе Christe declarerh how truly Paule teacheth, Rom. 4. 17 God calleth those things which are not, as if they were. He calleth the dead man, & maketh him to heare him, that death it selfe might sodēly be chaunged into life. And herein wee haue first a notable token of the resurrection to come, euen as he cōmandeth, Ezechiel 37. 4. to cōmand the dry bones to heare the word of God. Thē we are also taught, how Christ doth quicken vs, spirituallly, through fayth: namely, while hee addeth his secrete power to his woorde, so that it peirceth euen to the dead soules; euen as he sayth, Iohn 5. 25

The houre commeth, when the dead shal heare the voyce of the sonne of God: and they which heare it, shall liue.

16. There came a feare on them all. It is necessary that the feeling of the presence of God should bring a feare with it. But this difference there is between the feare of vnbeleeuers and the godly: the vnbeleeuers are eyther altonied through feare, or being afraid, they some against God. But the godly and the religious being touched with a reuerence, doe willingly humble themselues. Therefore this feare is taken in good part: because that they yeelding, honour to the power of God, which they behold, they doe not onely reuerence God: but also giue thanks to him. That they doe say, that God visiteth his people, I vnderstand it not of euery visitation, but such as should wholly restore thé. The Iewes were not onely fallen, but they lay in a miserable and a vile slauerie, as if God had not looked vpon them. This onely hope remaind that GOD had promised himselfe to bee their redeemer, after they were afflicted with extreme miseries. Therefore I thinke that by this miracle they were warned to hope for their restitution at hand. They are onely deceiued in the maner of the visitation. For though they acknowledge and commend the wonderfull grace of God in him, that a great Prophet was risen: yet this title is farre inferiour to the dignitie and glory of the promised Mefsias. Whereby it appeareth that the fayth of that people was then very confused, and ouerwhelmed with manie cloudes of fanfics.

Mathew. 8.

Luke. 9.

19. Then came there a certaine. Mattheuwe proposeth to vs two men, but L.V.K.E. three: which, when they were all readie to giue their name

20 Christ, yet as they were by their severall vices hindered from a right course, so accordingly they receiued diuerse answers. Yet at the first it might seeme absurde, that Christ should turne away, and not receiue him into his company, which offered presently and without delay to follow him: and retayneth the other with him, which was more slowe and not so readie, but asked a time of respite. But he had good reason for both. Whereof proceedeth such readines of the Scribe, that he should so readily prepare himselfe to waite vpon Christ: but because he did not account how hard and straight the condition was of his followers? It is to be noted that the Scribe, which was accustomed to a quiet & a profitable life, and had beene in honour, could not haue borne the reproches, poertie, persecutions, and the crosse. This man would follow Christ: but he dreameth of a soft and pleasant way, and of lodgings filled with all good things when as Christes Disciples should walke through thornes, and should through continuall sorrowes, goe forward to the crosse. Therefore the more hast he maketh, the vnreadier he is: for hee doth euen as hee would goe to waite vnder the shadow and in dalliance, without sweating, out of the dust, and without the reach of the darts. It is no maruaile to haue such refused by Christ: because that as they do rashly thrust in themselues, so being discouraged at the first brunt, and being tired at the first skirmish, they take them to their feete, and doe filthily forsake their place. Consider also that this Scribe might seeke to bee with CHRIST, that hee might bee fedde at his table freely, daintily, and in yalenesse. Wherefore let vs vnderstande that we are all admonished, that we should not rashly and carelesly intrude our selues to be the disciples of Christ, accounting nothing of the crosse & troubles: but let vs rather consider before hand what a condition remaineth for vs. For with this instruction he entertaineth vs into his schoole, that we denying our selues should take vp our crosse.

20. The Foxes haue holes. The Sonne of God declareth what the condition of his life should be, whilest he was conuersant vpon the earth: and he prescribeth to all his disciples what maner of life they ought to frame themselues: yet it is maruaile, that Christ sayth, that he hath not a foote of ground, where he might lay his head, when as there were many kinde and godly men, which would haue receiued him into their house. But it is to be noted, that hee sayde this for admonition sake, least that the Scribe should looke for a large & a fatte reward, as from a rich maister, when the Lord himselfe liued by intreatie in other mens houses.

21. That I may bury my father. Wee haue sayde that the Scribe was refused to be a companion of Christ: because that he rashly thrust in himselfe, imagining that he should haue a profitable kind of life. But this which Christe retayneth had a contrary fault: for this imperfection, that it was hard for him to forsake his father, hindered him, that he would not presently haue followed the calling of Christ. But it is to be supposed that he was an old man: because he sayth suffer me, that I may bury him. For this speach declareth that he had not much time left him. Luke declareth that he was commanded of Christ, that he should follow: For the which Mathew sayth, that it was one of his disciples. Also hee refuseth not the calling, but craueth that hee may haue libertie for a time to goe goe to doe his dutie to his father. For his excuse signifieth as much, as if hee should saye, that hee were not free, vntill his father were dead. But by the answer of Christe wee vnderstand that children must so doe their duty to their parentes, that so oft as God calleth other where, they not regarding the other, should giue the chiefe place to his commaundement. s. For all duties to men ought to giue place, so oft as God commandeth that our diligence be employed vpon him.

Nowe every manne must see what GOD requireth of them, and what the calling asketh of them, to which they are tyed: least the earthly parentes should hinder them from yeelding the right, which is due to the chiefe & onely father of a'l men.

22. Let the dead bury their dead. Christ doth not in these words condemne the dutie of buriall. For it were filthy and beastly to cast out the bodies of the dead, without buriall. And wee knowe that the right of buriall was deliuered of God to men, and was vsed amongst the Saintes, for to confirme the hope of the last resurrection. His will was onely to teach, that whatsoeuer calleth vs backe, or hindereth vs from a right course, doeth sauour of nothing but death. As if hee should haue sayde: that they alone doe liue, which apply their endeouours and all the partes of their life to obey GOD: and they which sitte in the worlde, and doe passe by their dutie to God, that they might yeeld themselves obedient to menne, are like to dead men, which in vaine and vnprofitably employ themselves in caring for the dead.

L V. 60. Goe and preach. Matthewe sayeth onely, 'follow mee: But Luke doeth more plainly declare to what end he was called: namely, that he should bee a minister and preacher of the Gospell. For if hee should haue bene left in a priuate life, there had bene no necessitie of leauing his father: so that for fauour of his father, hee fainte not from the Gospell. But because the preaching of the Gospell suffered him not to sitte at home, Christ for good cause draweth him from his father. But as the wonderfull goodnesse of Christ appeareth in him, that hee would bestow so honourable an office vpon a man, as yet so weake: so it is worth the labour to note, that he with flattery doth not nourish, but correcteth the fault, which as yet stooke fast on him.

L V. 61. And another sayth. Matthewe maketh no mention of this third man. And it appeareth that he was more tyed to the world, then at liberty, and ready to follow Christ. He offereth himselfe to follow Christ, but with an exception, when he had bid them of his household farewell: that is, when he hath set his busines in order at home, as they vse, which prepare themselves to go forth or depart. This is the cause why Christ doth so sharply reprove him. For in word he professeth himselfe to be a follower of Christ yet he turneth his backe towards him, vntill he had done his earthly businette. Now when Christ saith, that they are not fitte for the Kingdome of God, which looke backe, wee must diligently seeke what he meaneth hereby. They are sayde to looke back, which being intangled with the cares of this worlde, doe suffer themselves to bee lead out of the right way: and especially they, which drowne themselves in those cares, which make them vnprofitable to follow Christ.

Matth. 9.

1. Then he entred into a ship, and passed ouer, and came into his owne cittie.

2. And lo they brought to him a man sick of the palse, lying on a bed, and Iesus seeing their faith, said to the sick of the palse, son, be of good cōfort, thy sins are forgiven thee.

And because they could not come neere vnto him for the multitude, they vncouered the roose of the house where he was, & whē they had braken it open, they let downe the bed, wherein the sicke of the palse lay. 5. Now when Iesus sawe their faith, hee said to the sick of the palse, son, thy sins are forgivē thee. 6. And there were certaine of the Scribes, sitting there, and reasoning in their hearts. 7. Why doth this man speake such blasphemies? who can forgive sinnes but God onely? 8. Luke 5.

17. And it came to passe, on a certaine day, as he was teaching that the priests & doctors of the law sat by, which were come out of euery towne of Galile, & Iudaea, & Ierusalē, the power of the lord was in hī, to heale them. 18. Then behold, men brought a man lying in a bed, which was taken with a palse: and they sought meanes to bring him, & to lay him before him.

19. And when they could not find what way they might bring him in, because of the prease, they went vpon the house, & let him downe through the tylinge beā & all, in the midst before Iesus. 20. And when hee sawe their sayth, hee sayd vnto him, man, thy sins are forgiven thee.

21. Then the Scribes, and pharises began to thinke, saying, who is this & speaketh blasphemies? who can forgive sinns, but God onely? 22. But when Iesus perceiued their thoughtes, he answered and sayde vnto them, what thinke ye in your heartes?

23. Whether is it easier to say, thy sinnes are forgiven thee, or to say, arise, and walke.

24. But that ye may knowe that the sonne of man hath authoritie in earth to forgive sinnes (he said to the sicke of the palse) I say to thee, arise, take vppe thy bed, & go to thine own house.

25. And immediatly he rose vp before them, & tooke vp his bed whereon he lay, & departed to his owne house: praying God.

26. And they were all amazed, & praised God, & were filled with feare saying: doubtes we haue seen strang things to day

MAT. 1. And came into his owne citie. This place declareth that the citie of Capernaum was commonly thought to haue been the place, where Christ was borne: because that hee did much frequent the same. It is not to bee doubted, but that the three doe set downe the same historie, although one doe more exactly set downe the circumstances then the other. Luke saith, that the Scribes came out of diuerse partes of Iudea, in whose sight Christ healed the man sicke of a palsie. Yet he declareth that othar were also healed by the grace of Christe. For before he come to speake of the man sicke of the palsie, speaking in the plural number, saith, that the power of God was shewed in healing their diseases. The glory of this miracle was wonderfull, that a man taken in all the partes of his body, whom they had let down in a bed by cordes, suddenly arose both sound & nimble. Yet there is an other especiall cause, why the Euangelistes doe stand more vpon this miracle, then vpon others: that is, because the Scribes doe take in scorn, that Christ should take vpō him the power and authoritie of forgiving of sins: but it was the will of Christ to confirme and seale the same with a visible signe.

2. And when he had seene their faith. God onely knoweth our faith, but in that their painefull trauaile they shewed a token of their faith: for they would neuer haue taken vpon them so troublesome a busines, neyther woulde they haue wrestled with such lets and hinderances, if their mindes hadde not bene assured with hope of certaine successie: so the fruit of their faith appeared in this that they were not wearie, though they could enter in no way. For that opinion seemeth hard to me, that some thinke Christ, as hee was God, knewe their sayth, which lay hid within. Now because that Christ granted to their faith that benefite, which hee was about to bestow vpon the man sicke of the palsie, it is accustomed to be demaunded in this place, how much men may bee holpen by the faith of other men. And first it is certaine, that the faith of Abraham profited his posteritie, while that he embraced the free couenant of saluation offered to him & to his seed. The same may also be taught of all the saythfull, that through their faith, they cause the grace of God to spred to their children, and that before they are borne. And that hath place in young infancies, which by reason of their age, are not capable of faith. But they which are of age and haue not faith of their owne (whether they be strangers or borne of Gods children) in respect of the eternall saluation of the soule, cannot be holp by the faith of others, but by meanes. For whereas our prayers are not without fruit, wherein we aske of God, that he would conuert the vnbeleeuers to repentance it appeareth that our faith doth profit them: yet so that they cannot bee saued, vntill that they haue faith themselues. And it is well known, that whereas there is a mutuall consent of faith, there the saluation of some is againe holp of others. This also is without controuersie, that the vnbeleeuers haue earthly benefices bestowed vpon them for the godlies sake. Concerning this present place though it is sayd, that Christ was moued by the faith of others: yet the sicke man could not haue his sinnes forgien, except he had faith of his owne. Christ doth often giue the health of body to the vnworthy, as God doth daily make his sunne to rise vpon the good and euill: but hee reconcileth vs vnto himselfe by no other meanes but by faith: wherefore that figure Sinecdoche is in that word them because that Christ did not so behold the faith of them that bore the sick man, but that he beheld also his owne faith.

Thy finnes are forgiven thee. Christ in these words seemeth to promise to the manne sicke of the pallsie more then hee sought for: but when hee would cure his bodie, he beginneth to take away the cause of his disease, and also hee teacheth the man sicke of the pallsie, how hee came by that sicknes, and howe hee ought to make his prayers. For because that commonly men do not think those paines, which they endure, to be Godswhips, they doe onely wish for release and ease in the flesh, and are carelesse for their finnes. Like as if a sicke manne neglecting his disease, should onely seeke remedie for his present greife. But the onely deliuerance from all troubles is, to haue G O D mercifull vnto vs. Sometime it falleth out, that the wicked escape out of their troubles, and yet haue God no lesse their enemiethen before. but while they thinke themselues discharged, they presently fall either into the same dangers againe, or into more, and those more greiuous, which do testifie that there is no measure or end, vntill the wrath of God be appealed. as he witnesseth by the Prophet Amos 5. 19 If thou escape from a Lyon, a Beare shall meete thee: if thou shut thy selfe into a house, a serpent shall bite thee. So this phraze of speech is oft vsed in the scriptures, to promise forgiveness of finnes, when release of paine is sought for.

It behooueth vs also to vse this order in prayers, that being admonished of our finnes, by the feeling of our sorrowes, we might first be carefull to obtaine forgiveness, that God beeing reconciled vnto vs, might withdraw his handes from punishing.

3. And behold, certaine of the Scribes. They accuse Christ of blasphemy, and of sacriledge, because hee challengeth that vnto himselfe, which is proper to God. For the other two Euangelistes doe adde, who can forgie finnes, but God alone. Also it is not to be doubted, but that their desire to speake euill, caried them headlong to this wicked iudgement. If they thinke it worthy to be reprobued, why doe they not search it out? Then, sith the speech is ambiguous, and Christ speaketh no otherwise, then the Prophetes were woont, when they witnessed the grace of God, why doe they take it in the worse part, which might be more fauourably interpreted? Therefore it appeareth, that they were first infected with euill will and choler, which doe so gladly take an occasion to condemne Christ. Also they doe secretly imagine in their heartes, how in his absence they may diffame him amongst their companions. This is truly sayd of them, that God onely hath power and authoritie to forgie finnes, but they conclude euill, that it belongeth not to Christ, when as hee was God manifested in the flesh. It was their dutie to haue demanded by what right Christ tooke that authoritie vpon him. Now, without any inquirie, they imagine him to bee some of the common sort of men, they do rashly proceede to condemne him.

4. When Iesus saw their thoughts. Herein doth he make a manifest shew of his godhead, in that he vttereth their secret thoughts. For no man knoweth what is in man, saue his spirit, 1. Cor. 2. 11. Therefore Marke addeth that he knew in his spirit, as if he should haue sayd, man could not discern that, which lay hid in their hearts: but Christ by his diuine spirit searched and pierced thither. And he saith, that they thought euill things. not that it grieved the to haue that attributed to a mortal mā, which God challengeth to himselfe alone: but because they did did proudly and maliciously refuse GOD, offering himselfe openly vnto them.

5. Whether is it easier. The meaning is: Sith it is not easier by a worde to giue life to a dead body, then to forgiue sinnes, it ought not to be wondred at, that hee forgiueth sinnes, whereas he performeth the other. But Christ seemeth to reason very slenderly: For as much as the soule excelleth the body: so much doth forgiuenes of sinnes, exceede the curing of the body. But it is easily answered: for Christ applyeth his speech to their capacitie, which as they were men vnregenerate: so were they more moued with outward signes, then with all the spirittuall power of Christ, which auayled to euerlasting saluation. So in Iohn 5. 28. he proueth the effectuall power of the Gospell to giue life to men by this, that at the last day hee will raise vp with his voyce the dead out of their graues. Therefore this argument was forcible inough to confute them, which did moste esteeme of an outwarde miracle, that they could not rightly denie, but that hee had forgiuen the sicke mans sinnes, while that hee restored him strength and health: because that the forgiuenesse of sinnes appeared by this effect.

6. Hath authoritie in earth. This power was farre beyond that, which was committed to the Apostles, and which the Pastors of the Church do execute at this day. For they doe not forgiue, but testifie forgiuenes, while that they vtter the ambassage committed vnto them. But Christ in these words affirmeth, that he is not onely a minister and a witness of this grace, but also the authour of the same. But what meaneth that clause, vppon earth? For why should hee say, that we had our sinnes forgiuen vs here, except the same were confirmed in heauen? Namely, this was the will of Christ, to shew that they neede not to seeke farre for forgiuenesse of sinnes: because that in his person it was brought as it were into mens hands. For (such is our readinesse to distrust:) wee neuer dare account GOD to be mercifull towards vs, except hee comming neere, doe shewe himselfe familiarly vnto vs. Now, because that Christ for this cause came downe to the earth, that hee might offer to men the present grace of God, hee is sayd to forgiue sinnes vpon earth: because that in him, and through him the will of God was reuealed, which, to the capacitie of the fleshe, was hid before, about the cloudes.

8. When the multitude saw it. For this marueiling, whereof here is mention made, the other two doe say they were astonied or amased. Luke also addeth that they were afraide: but it is the purpose of them all to teach, that the power of God was not only simply known, but that they were al stricken into a marueiling: so that they were enforced to giue the glory to God. But the feare which followed this marueiling, preuayled thus farre, that they should not murmure against Christ, but that they should reuerently submit themselues vnto him, as to a Prophet of God.

Mathewe expressly sayth, that they glorified GOD, which had giuen such power vnto men: wherein they seeme to be farre wide. For though they see a man with their eyes, yet in their mind they ought to behold in him somewhat about manne. This was well done, that they as firme that the nature

nature of man in Christ was endued with so great power, for the good of all mankind: but their confession was somewhat erroneous, because they do not as yet vnderstand him to be God, manifested in the flesh. In summe this was true, that God had giuen such power to men, but these men, which knew not the maiestie of God ioyned with flesh, did not as yet vnderstand the maner & cause of the giuing.

Mathew. 9.

9. And as Iesus passed forth from thence, he saw a man sitting at the receite of custome, named Mathew: and he said vnto him, follow me, and he arose, and followed him.

10. And it came to passe, as Iesus sate at meate in his house beeholde many Publicans and sinners, that came thither, sate downe at the table, with Iesus and his disciples.

11. And when the Pharises saw that, they sayde to his disciples, why eateth your maister with Publicans and sinners?

12. Now when Iesus heard it, hee sayd vnto them, the whole neede not the Phisition, but they that are sicke.

13. But go yee, and learne what this is, I will haue mercy, and not sacrifice: for I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

Marke. 2

13. Then hee went againe towards the sea, and all the people resorted vnto him, and he taught them.

14. And as Iesus passed by, he saw Lewi the son of Alphaeus sit at the receit of custome and said vnto him, follow me and he arose & followed him

15. And it came to passe, as Iesus sate at table in his house, many Publicans and sinners, sate at table also with Iesus and his disciples: for ther were many that followed him.

16. And when the Scribes & Pharises saw him eate with the Publicans and sinners, they sayd vnto his disciples, how is it, that hee eateth and drinketh with Publicans & sinners?

17. Now, when Iesus heard it, hee sayde vnto them: the whole haue no neede of the Phisition, but the sicke, I came not to call the righteous, but the sinners to repentance.

Luke. 5.

27. And after that he went forth and saw a Publican, named Lewi, sitting at the receite of custome, and sayd vnto him, follow me.

28. And he left all, rose vp, and followed him.

29. Then Lewi made him a great feast in his owne house, where there was a great company of Publicans, and of other, which sate at table with them.

30. But they that were Scribes and Pharises among them, murmured againste his Disciples, saying, why eate yee, and drinke yee with Publicans and sinners?

31. Then Iesus answered, & sayd vnto them, they that are whole, neede not the Phisition, but they that are sicke.

32. I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

9. sitting at the receit of custome. That Mathew is receiued frō the custome house (which place as it was wont to be giuen to spoyles & vniust exactions, so it was then become most infamous) not only into the fellowship of Christ, but is also called to the office of an Apostle: We haue herein a notable example of the fauour of God. And it was the will of Christ to chuse into that office not onely simple and vnlearned men, that he might ouerthrow the wisdom of the world but also this Publican, which had liued a life not to bee commended, full of diuers corruptions that he might be a spectacle of his gracious goodnes, and that hee:

he might teach in his person, that the calling of vs all doth not depende vpon the deseruing of our owne righteousnesse, but vpon his mee re liberalitie. Therefore Matth. was not only a witnessse & a preacher of the grace giuen in Christe, but also a testimony & a figure of the same. Now in this he declareth his thankfulnes, that hee is not ashamed to commit to perpetuall memory what manner of man he was, & from whence he was taken, that he might the more set forth the grace of Christ in his owne person. After the same maner speaketh Paul, 1. Tim. 1. 15. This is a true saying, & by all meanes worthy to be received, that Christe Iesus came into the world to saue sinners, of whome I am chiefe. It appeareth that this was a gentile name, in that Marke & Luke do name him Leuy. but the cause why he tooke this forren name was because he was a Publican. Follow me. It is not to be doubted, but that Christ shewed in moe words to what purpose, & vpon what condition he called him: and that is more plainly gathered out of Luke, who sayth that he arose, & left all, that he might follow Christ. For it was not necessary, that he should haue left all things, except he had bin called to be a daily disciple of Christ, & in hope of an Apostleship. Further, we behold the diuine efficacie of the voyce of Christ, in this, that he is so quickly ready to obey: not that it inwardly pierceth alike into the hearts of al men, in to whose eares it soundeth: But it was the will of Christ to shew a singular example in this man, that we might know that he was not called by man.

L V. 29. And he made him a feast. This seemeth to differ from that which Luke had sayd, that hee left all thinges: But the answere is easie, Matth. reiecting all impedimentes, giueth himselfe wholly to Christ: yet so that hee did not cast away his substance belonging to his houshold. While Paul by the example of souldiers exhorteth the ministers of the word, that they being freede & deliuered from all impedimentes, shoulde imploy their endeuour vpo the church, saith, 2. Tim. 2. 4. No man that warreth, entangleth himselfe with the affayres of this life: because he would please him, that hath chosen him to be a souldier: but he doth not meane that they which are chosen to be souldiers, doe diuorce their wiues from them, forsake their children, & renounce their houses for euer: but for a time to abstaine from their houses and from all cares. Nothing withheld Matthew, but that he followed whether Christ called him, & yet so farre as the estate of his calling did permitt, hee did freely vse his house and his goodes. But it behooued him to bid the custome house fare well: because that being occupied there, hee coulde not bee a companion of Christ. The greatnesse of the feast is not so much referred to the multitud of the guesstes, as to the plentie and daintiensse of the meates. For wee knowe that Christ vsed not that austeritie, but that hee suffered himselfe sometime to bee daintily entertayned of rich menne, yet so as all gluttony was secluded. And it is not to be doubted, but as hee was a singular example of temperaunce, so hee would exhort his hostes to a moderate and a meane diet, and would neuer suffer prodigall and excessiue daintyes. That Matthew sayeth that sinners came that is, menne of most wicked life, or noted with infamie: by this it came to passe, that the Publicans did not escheue the company of suche, because that they themselues were commonly hated and infamous. For as a litle correction doeth make them that sinne ashamed: so too much seueritie doeth driue driue some to dispaire, so that they casting by all shame, doe throw themselves into all filthinesse. It was no offence to gather tribute or custome: but when as the Puplicans sawe themselves reiected as prophane and detestable menne, through the common reproach, they did not despise, but reioyced in the company of the infamous, and sometimes they thrust in themselves amongst the adulterers, the drunkards, and such like: whose wickednes they would haue condemned, and they would haue bene nothing like them, if they had not bene driuen to this necessitie by open hatred and reproches.

M A T. 11. Why eateth your maister with Publicans. The Scribes doe as fault the disciples of Christe, and that they may procure them to fall a way, they lay foorth that, which at the first sight is euill and shamefull. For, to what purpose became hee a peculyar maister to them, but that they should withdraw themselves from the common people, that they might leade a more holy life. But it seemeth that he leadeth them from an honest and tollerable estate of life to a prophane lycenciouse, that they might defile themselves with filthy guests. This reproach might haue driuen the disciples, which were as yet but rude and flexible, to forsake their maister. But they doe well in that they make their cōplaint to their maister: because they themselves were not sufficiently armed against this caul: for Christ answering for them, confirmeth them against the time to come.

12. The whole need not. By Christes answer it appeareth that the Scribes offended two wayes: that they made no account of the office of Christ: & in sparing their owne faultes, they doe proudly despise all others. Which thing must therefore be noted: because that this disease hath alwayes been too common. For hypocrites being full and drunken with a windie hope of their own righteousness, doe not account wherefore Christe was sent into the earth: they knowe not in howe great a laborinth of mischiefes mankinde is drowned, how horrible a wrath and curse of God doeth lie vpon all menne, and with howe confused a heape of sinnes they are pressed downe: and so it commeth to passe, that they being not moued with the miseries of menne, do neuer thinke vpon any remedy. And now they pleasing themselves, will not abide to bee brought into order, and they thinke themselves vnworthy to be accounted amongst sinners. Christ reprooueth this second error, by answering that the whole need not the Physitian. For by a figure he teacheth that they are therefore offended at the beholding of sinners: because they challenge themselves to be righteous. Because (sayeth he) you are whole, you despise the sicke, so that you loath them, and the sight of them is troublesome vnto you: but it behooueth a Physitian to bee sicke otherwise. After he sheweth that hee must take vpon him the parte of a Physitian, because that he was sent of the father to call sinners. And though Christe beginneth with reproouing them: yet if we desire to profit in his doctrine, that must be especially holden, which he setteth downe in the second place: namely, that his coming was, that hee might giue life to the dead, that he might iustifie the guiltie and condemned, that hee might cleanse the polluted, and them that are defiled with filthinesse: that hee might pull them that are lost euen from the helies: that hee might cloath them with his glory, which are couered with filthinesse: that he might renew the that are

If wee consider that this is his dutie and the ende of his comming, if wee remember that for this cause hee put vpon him our flesh, shed his bloud, became a sacrifice of death, and descended euen to hell, it shall neuer seeme strange vnto vs, the vilest amongst men, eue those that are couered with a dunghill of sins, are gathered by him into saluation.

Hee seemeth to thee to be vnworthy of the grace of Christ, whome thou doest abhorre: why then became Christ a sacrifice for sinne, and accursed, but that hee might reach out his hande to accursed sinners? Nowe if wee begin to loath that both Baptisme, and also the holy Supper doth ioyne vs in companie with wicked men: so that their company shall seeme to defile vs with any blot, let vs presently enter into our selues to search our owne finnes without flattery. And this examination shall bring vs to this passe, that we will gladly suffer our selues to bee washed in the same fountaine with the most vncleane, so that wee will not refuse that righteousnesse, which hee commonly offereth to all the wicked, that life giuen to the dead, and saluation to them that were lost.

13. Goeyee, and learne. Hee sendeth them away, and commandeth them to departe: because they seemed to be stubborne, and such as would not learne. Or he sheweth that they contend with God and the Prophet, which through pride being become cruell, doe grudge that the wretched should be holpen, and that phisicke should be ministred to the sicke. This testimonie is taken out of the prophet Ose. 6. 6. where the Prophet preaching of the vengeance of God against the Iewes, least they shoulde take exception that they obserued the outward worship of God, as they were accustomed in securitie to brag of their ceremonies: hee affirmeth that God is not pleased with their sacrifices, where their mindes are voide of godlines, and their maners estranged from integritie and righteousnes. But that God sayth, that he will not haue sacrifices, appeareth by the second clause to bee spoken by comparison, that the knowledge of God is more to be desired then sacrifices. By which wordes hee doth not precisely reiect sacrifices: but hee maketh lesse account of them, then of godlines and faith. Yet wee must so account, that faith and spirituall worship do of them selues please God, that charitie and the duties of men towards their neighbours are required for themselves. The sacrifices are but accidents (as they say) which are of no estimation or account, whereas truth it selfe is wanting. Of the which thing, I haue entreated more at large vpon the tenth chapter to the Hebrewes. In that word mercie the figure Synecdoche is to bee noted: For vnder one part the Prophet comprehendeth what dutie soeuer wee owe vnto our brethren.

For I came not. Although this is spoken to ouerthrowe the pride and the hypocrisie of the Scribes: yet it generally containeth a very profitable doctrine. For wee are admonished that the grace of Christ shall no otherwise profit vs, then while wee beeing greiued with our finnes, and sighing vnder the burthen of them, doe humbly come vnto him. Againe, weake consciences are here put in a certaine hope: for they need not feare least Christ should reiect sinners, because he descended from his heauenly glory to call them.

But that clause is also to be considered, to repentance: that wee might knowe that our forgiuenes is not such, as nourisheth finnes: but such as calleth vs to endeouour our selues to liue holy and godly. For he reconcileth vs to the father with this condition, that being redeemed with his blood, wee should offer our selues true sacrifices, as Paul teacheth, Titus 2. 12. Heerein appeareth the mercie and loue of God, that denying worldly lustes, we should liue soberly and righteously, &c.

Mathew 9.

14. Then came the disciples of Iohn to him, saying: why doe wee and the Pharises fast oft, & thy disciples fast not?

15. And Iesus sayde vnto them, can the children of the marriage chamber mourn as long as the bridegroome is with them: but the daies will come, when the bridegroome shall be taken from them, & then shall they fast.

16. Moreover, no man peeceth an old garment with a peece of newe cloath: for that that should fill it vp, taketh away from the garment and the breach is worse.

17. Neither do they put new wine into olde vessels: for then the vessels would breake, and the wine would be spilted, and the vessels should perish: but they put new wine into new vessels. and so are both preserved.

Marke 2.

18. And the disciples of Iohn, and the Pharises: did fast, and came and said vnto him, why do the disciples of Iohn and the pharises fast, & thy disciples fast not?

19. And Iesus said vnto them, can the childre of the marriage fast, whiles the bridegroome is with them? as long as they haue the bridegroom with them, they cannot fast.

20. But the dayes will come, when the bridegroome shall be taken from them, & then shall they fast in those dayes.

21. Also no man seweth a peece of new cloath in an old garment: for else the new peece taketh away the filling vp from the old, and the breach is worse.

22. Likewise no man putteth new wine into olde vessels: for else the new breaketh the vessels and the wine runneth out, and the vessels are lost: but new wine must be put into new vessels.

Luke. 5

33. Then they sayd vnto him, why doe the disciples of Iohn fast often, & pray, and the disciples of the Pharises also, but thine eate and drinke?

34. And hee sayd vnto them, can yee make the children of the wedding chamber to fast, as long as the bridegroome is with them?

35. But the dayes will come, even when the bridegroome shall be taken from them: then shall they fast in those dayes.

36. Againe hee spake also to them in a parable: no man putteth a peece of a new garment into an olde vesture: for then the newe renteth it, and the peece taken outte of the newe, agreeth not with the olde.

37. Also no manne powreth newe wine into olde vesselles: for then the newe wine will breake the vesselles, and it will runne out, and the vesselles will perish.

38. But newe wine must be powdered into new vesselles: so both are preserved.

39. Also no manne that drinketh olde wine, straight way desireth newe: for hee sayeth, the old is better.

14. Then came. Luke bringeth in the Pharises speaking: Marke seemeth to ioyne them both together. And it is not to be doubted, but that the Pharises maliciously endeouored by this subtiltie to drawe the disciples of Iohn to their side, and to quarrell with the disciples of Christ. Their likenes in prayers and fastinges was a plausible baight to make them ioyne in fellowship: And the contrary behaviour of Christe was an occasion of discord & displeasure to the forwardes and them that were too much giuen to please themselves. By this example wee are admonished wisely to take heede, least wicked and crafty menne doe by any light pretence sowe discordes amongest vs. Truly Sathan is a marauelous workeman in forging such deceites: and it is an easie matter to disturbe vs about a matter of nothing. And we must especially beware, least for outward rites the consente of fayth be hindered, and the band of charitie be broken. All men almost are troubled with this disease, so that they attribute more then is meete to ceremonies and elementes of the world (as Paul calleth them, Colloft. 2. 8. Galla. 4. 3, 9.) So that they doubt not to preferre thole first rudimentes forre beyond the chiefe perfection.

Then followeth of frowardnesie and pride an other mischief: for that all menne would gladly driue the whole worlde to followe their example. If any thing please vs, wee doe presently desire that it shoulde passe for a law, that others shoulde liue according to our pleasure. When wee reade heere that the disciples of Iohn were taken with the snares of Sathan: let vs first learne that holinesse consisteth not in things that bee outwarde and indifferent, and also to bridle vs with the bridle of moderation and equitie, least wee desire to binde others to follow our pleasure: but let euery manne remaine in his owne liberty. I thinke that Iohn exercised his disciples in a certaine rule of fasting and prayers, and hadde for that ende certaine appoynted dayes for fastinges, and a prescripte torme, & certaine appoynted houres for prayers: & therefore I accounte these prayers amongst outwarde rites. For though calling vppon GOD is one of the chieftest in spirituall worshippe, yet the same being framed to the rude capacitie of menne, is worthily accounted amongst Ceremonies and things indifferent, the obseruation whereofought not too seuerely to be vrged. Nowe, why Iohns discipline was more straight then Christes, I haue sayde other where, and shall haue more couenient place to speake of the same againe.

15. The children of the bridgrome. Christe excuseth his disciples by the circumstance of the time: because that God would as yet handle them gently, as if they were in the mariage chamber. For hee compareth himselfe to a bridegrome, which maketh his friendes merry with his presence.

Chrysofome thinketh that this similitude was taken out of the testimonie of Bohn Baptist. He that hath the bride is the bridegrome: whi. h opinion I doe not reprove, but I do not thinke that it is of sufficient force. Let this satisfie vs, that Christe sayeth, that he spareth and cherisheth his disciples so long as he is conuertant with them.

But, least any manne shoulde enuy that short time of pleasure which they hadde, hee declareth that they shall shortly bee handled more hardly & more streightly. And so this is the excuse, that prayers and fasting doe belong to them that are saide and in aduerfitie : I speake of the extraordinary prayers, whereof he maketh mention in this place. But it was Christes will by a little at once to accustome them to beare greater things, and hee woulde not lay a greater burden vpon them, vntill they had gotten more strength.

Hereof for doctrine may two things bee gathered : we may not murmure, if God at any time doe beare with the infirmitie of our brethren, and do handle them gently, while that hee doeth handle vs more hardly and more streightly. Then, if at any time God giue vs a release from sorrow and troubles, we must take heede that wee become not drunken with delightes, but let vs rather remember that the maryages shall not last alwayes. The children of the bridegroom, or of the bride chamber, is vsed in the Hebrew phrase for the guesstes bidden to the mariage.

16. No man peeceth an olde garment. Hee confirmeth the former sentence with two similitudes : whereof one is taken of garments, and the other of wine vessels. They that thinke that olde garments and olde bottles are compared to the Pharises, and the newe wyne and newe cloath to the doctrine of the Gospel, haue no colour. But the similitude is very apte and fitte for the present matter : if wee interpret this of the weake and tender disciples of Christ, and of discipline more harde and streight then they were able to beare. Hee reporteth it not, as if antiquitie were not fitte for young schollers : neyther doeth Christe compare his disciples to olde bottelles, and torne garmentes, as if they had bene worne with long vse : but because they were weake, & not strong enough.

The summe is this, that all menne generally are not to bee driuen to one, and the same manner of lyuing : because their estate is vnlike, and all things doe not agree to all menne, the weake are especially to bee borne with, least they bee broken with violence, or ouerthrowne with the weight of the burden. Further, Christe speaketh after the manner of the country : in that hee vseth the name of bottelles for barrells or firkinnes.

L V. 39. No manne that drinketh olde wine. Luke only maketh mention of this, and it doeth very well agree with that, which goeth before. And although it is diuersly wretted by the interpreters : yet I doe simply take it to bee an admonition to the Pharises, least they giue more credit then is meete to an olde receiued custome. For howe commeth it to passe that wine not altering the taste, shoulde not please all mennes mouthes alike : but because that vse and custome doeth frame the taste? By this order, which Christ vseth towards his disciples, it followeth that, that, which hath but small pompe and shewe, is nothing lesse to be accounted of : as olde wine, though it doth not so fume as newe wine doth, yet it is as pleasant, and as good for nourishing the body.

Mat. 9.

18. While hee thus spake vnto them: beholde there came a certaine ruler, & worshipped him, saying. My daughter is nowe deceased, but come and lay thine hand on her, and shee shall liue. 19. And Iesus arose & followed him with his disciples. 20. And beholde, a woman which was diseased with an issue of bloude 12. yeares, came behind him, & touched the hem of his garment. 21. For she sayd in her selfe: If I may touch but his garmēt only I shall be whole. 22. Then Iesus turned him about, & seeing her did saye: daughter bee of good cōfort, thy faith hath made thee whole: and the woman was made whole at that houre.

Marke. 5.

22. And beholde there came one of the rulers of the Synagogue, whose name was Iairus: and when he saw him, he fell downe at his feete. 23. And besought him instantly, saying: My litle daughter lieth at the poynt of death: I pray thee that thou wouldest come and lay thy handes on her, that shée may be healed, and liue. 24. Thē he went with him, & a great multitude followed him, & thronged him. 25. And there was a certaine woman, which was diseased with an issue of bloud twelue yeares. 26. And hadde suffered many thinges of Phisitians, and had spent al that shee had, and it auailed her nothinge, but shee became much worse. 27. And when shee had heard of Iesus, shee came in the prease behinde, and touched his garment. 28. For shee sayde: if I may touch but his cloathes, I shall bee whole. 29. And straight way the course of her bloude was dried vppe, and shee felt in her body, that she was healed of that plague. 30. And when Iesus did knowe in himselfe the vertue that went out of him, hee turned him round about in the prease, and sayd, who hath touched my cloathes? 31. And his disciples sayde vnto him: Thou seest the multitude throug thee, and sayest thou who did touch mee? 32. And hee looked round about, to see her that had done that. 33. And the woman feared and trembled: for she knewe what was done in her, and shee came and fell downe before him, and tolde him the whole truth. 34. And hee sayde to her: daughter thy fayth hath made thee whole: Goe in peace, and be whole of thy plague.

Luke 8.

40. And it came passe to whē Iesus was come againe, that the people receiued him, for they all waited for him. 41. And behold there came a man named Iairus, & he was the ruler of the Synagogue, who fel downe at Iesus feete, & besought hī that he would come into his house. 42. For he had but a daughter only, about twelue yeares of age, & she lay a dying, & as he went the people thronged him. 43. And a woman hauing an issue of bloud 12. yeares long, which had spent al her substance vpon Phisitians, & could not bee healed of any. 44. Whē she came behind him, she touched the hem of his garmēt, & immediately her issue of bloud stanchēd. 45. Thē Iesus said, who is it & hath touched me? when euery man denied, Peter saide, and they that were with hī master tread on thee, & sayest thou who hath touched me? 46. And Iesus said. Som one hath touched me: for I perceiue & vertue is gon frō me. 47. Whē the woman saw that shee was not hid she came trēbling, & fell down before hī, & told him before all the people, for what cause she had touched hī, & how she was healed immediately. 48. And he said vnto her: daughter be of good comfort, thy fayth hath made thee whole goe in peace.

10. While he thus spake. They that imagine that Marke and Luke doe not sette downe the same history which Mathewe doeth, are so playnely confuted confuted out of the text, so that it neede not any long disputation.

Three with one mouthe doe say that Christe was required by the ruler of the Synagogue, that he would come to his house to heale his daughter. In this they differ, that the name of Iairus is suppressed by Matthew, is set downe by Marke and Luke. And he bringeth in the father speaking thus : my daughter is deceased, the other two doe say that she was at the poynt of death, and that hee was tolde of her death by the way, as he was bringing Christ. But in that there is no difficultie : for Matthew endeuouring to bee short, doeth in a word set downe together those things which the other do digest distinctly in their places. But seeing all other things do so aptly agree together, sith so many circumstances doe concord in one, as if three figures should seeme to bee directed together to shew one thing, no reason doth suffer this history to be drawne to diuers times. The Euangelistes doe with one mouth declare, that when Christe was required of the ruler of the Synagogue to come to his house, by the way a woman was healed of an issue of bloud by a secret touching of his garment, and that Christ after hee was come into the rulers house, did raise a dead maiden. So I doe not thinke it needfull to vse a long circumstance of words, to prooue that the three doe report one & the same history. Let vs now come to the particulars. Beholde a certaine ruler. Although it appeareth by the other two Euangelistes that his faith was not so strong, that he hoped that he could restore his daughter to life: yet it is not to be doubted, but that hee being rebuked by Christe, conceived a greater hope then he had brought from home. But Matthew (as it is saide) endeuouring to be short, placeth in the beginning that which was wrought in successe of time, yet the history is thus to be gathered : that Iairus first demaunded to haue his daughter cured of her disease: and then to be restored from death to life, after, when Christ had encouraged him Worshipping is taken for the bowing of the knee, as we gather by the words of Marke & Luke. for Iairus did not giue diuine honour to Christ, but worshipped him as a Prophet of God. And it is well known that the bowing of the knee was very comon amongst the inhabitants of the East. Come and lay thine hand on her. Wee haue here a notable spectacle of the fauour of God towards vs: if thou comparest the ruler of the Synagogue, with the Centurion a heathen man, thou wilt say that in him there was a full great light, & in this scarce one litle drop of faith: he imagineth that christ hath no power to do her good, except he touch her, and hauing receiued word of her death, he is so a fraide as though there were no further remedie. Therefore we see that his sayth was weake and very colde: but that Christe yeeldeth to his requestes, and encourageth him to hope well, declareth that his sayth how small soeuer it was, was not vnerly reiected. Therefore though we be not instructed fully in the sayth, as it were to bee wished, yet there is no cause why our weakensie should hinder vs or driue vs from calling vpon God.

20. A woman which was diseased with an issue of bloud. The Euangelistes doe expressly declare that this issue of bloud hadde endured for the space of twelue yeares, and that the woman hadde not beene slacke in seeking remedies, in so much that shee had consumed all her substance vpon Phisitions, whereby the glory of the myracle was so much the greater. For it doeth evidently appeare that the disease being incurable, was not healed by the power of man, and that so sodenly, and by the touching of his garment only. But that the woman thought shee should bee presently whole, if shee might onely touch his garment, was the singular worke of the holy Ghost, and may not bee drawne to a generall rule. Wee knowe how overthwartly superstition playeth with a foolish and an vnaduised imitation of holy men: but they are Apes and not imitatours, which take vpon the to follow any onesingular exâple, without a commandement from God, and rather after their owne fansie, then by the direction of Gods spirit. Also it may be that the faith of the woman, had mixed in it some fault or errour, which Christe through his mercy doeth tolerate and pardon. And that after shee was found to bee the partie, shee doth feare and tremble, such doubting cannot be excused, because it is contrary to faith. Why doth shee not rather directly come to Christ? If shee would not for reuerence, from whence then did shee hope for helpe, but by his mercie? Then how cometh it to passe that shee feare: h as one that had offended, if shee were perswaded of his fauour? Christ vouchsafeth to commend her faith. For that is it which I touched euen now, God doth deale louingly and gently with his, so that hee accepteth their faith, though it be maimed and weake, not imputing the defects and wants of the same. Therefore this woman came to Christ by the direction of fayth. But that shee sticke in his garment, rather then shee would by prayers offer her selfe vnto him to be healed, shee did peraduenture of an vnaduised zeale somewhat goe out of the way. especially sith that by and by after, shee sheweth that shee attempted it of a doubtfull and awauering minde. But if we grant that shee was thus directed by the spirite, yet that rule remaineth fast that our faith must not bee caried hither & thither by priuate examples, because it must be throughly grounded vpon the word of God, according to that saying of Paul, Rom. 10. 17. faith commeth by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

This admonition is very profitable, that we should not giue the title of faith to euery vaine conceiued opinion: Who is it that toucheth? Marke declareth it more plainly, that Christ looked about him, that he might know who it was. But this seemeth to bee absurde, that Christ should poure forth his grace, not knowing to whom he should doe good. And that is as hard that he sayth a litle after, that he felt that power was gone out of him. As though it shoulde passe from him after any other order then of his free gift, when and to whom he shall thinke good to distribute the same. But it is not to be doubted but that wittingly and willingly hee healed the woman, and it is not to be doubted but that by his spirit he drew her vnto him that hee might heale her: but hee requireth her that shee would willingly come forth amongst the people. If Christ himselfe should haue declared his owne miracle, peraduenture his wordes shoulde not haue bene beleued: but nowe when as the fearefull woman telleth what is befallen vnto her, her confession hath the more credite.

22. Daughter bee of good comfort. The weakenesse of her faith is prooued by this speech: for if her fearefullnesse had not bene faultie, Christ would not haue reproued her, by exhorting her to bee of good comfort, yet hee also prayseth her faith, whereby is gathered that which I sayde before, when as by the direction of the the spirite and a sincere desire of godlines she sought Christ

y et shee wauered so that shee needed not to be confirmed. So wee see that faith th at it may please God, hath neede of forgiuenes, and also to bee raysed with ne we helpes, that it may get more strength. Now this must Analogically bee led from the healing of the bodie to the saluation of the soule: for as Christ attrib uteth the deliuerance of the woman from her disease to faith, so it is certaine that by faith which reconcileth vs to God, wee obtayne forgiuencie of finnes. When he commaundeth her to goe in peace, and sayth that shee is healed of her disease, heereby wee gather that shee had then truely confirmed that benefite which shee had receiued, when as shee heareth that by the mouth of Christ which shee had now found by experience. For we cannot otherwise enjoy the benefites of GOD truely and with a quiet conscience: but while wee possesse them hidden in the treasure of his promises.

Mathew 9.

23. Now when Iesus came into the rulers house and sawe the minstrels and the multitude making noyse.
24. Hee sayde vnto them, get yee hence: for the mayd is, not dead, but sleepeeth. And they laughed him to scorne.
25. And when the multitude were put soorth hee went in, and tooke her by the hand, and the maide arose.
26. And this brute wente throughout all that land.

Marke 5.

35. While hee yet spake, there came from the rulers house certaine, which sayd: Thy daughter is dead. Why disteasest thou thy maister any further.
36. As soone as Iesus heard that word spoken, he sayde vnto the ruler of the synagogue: Be not afraid, only beleene
37. And hee suffered no man to follow him, saue Peter, Iames, and Iohn the brother of Iames.
38. So he came vnto the house of the ruler of the Synagogue, and sawe the tumult, and them that wept, and wailed greatly.
39. And he went in & saide vnto the why make ye this trouble and weepe? the child is not dead, but sleepeeth.
40. And they laughed him to scorne: but hee put them all out, and tooke the father and the mother of the child, & them that were with him, and entred in where the child lay.
41. And tooke the child by the hand, and said vnto her Tabitha cumi, which is by interpretation, maiden I say vnto thee arise. 42. And straight way the maiden arose and walked. for she was of the age of 12. yeares, and they were astonied out of measure.
43. And he charged them straightly, that no man should know of it, and commaunded to giue her meate.

Luke 8.

49. While hee yet spake, there came one from the ruler of the synagogues house, which sayd to him, Thy daughter is dead, distease not thy maister.
50. When Iesus heard it, he answered him, saying: Feare not, beleene onely, and shee shall bee made whole.
51. And when he went into the house, he suffered no man to goe in with him, saue Peter and Iames and Iohn, and the Father and the mother of the maide,
52. And all wept and sorrowed for her, but hee sayde: weepe not, for shee is not dead but sleepeeth.
53. And they laught him to scorne, knowing that shee was dead
54. So he thrust them all out, and tooke her by the hande, and cryed, saying: maid, arise.
55. And her spirite came againe, and shee rose straight way and he commaunded to giue her meate.
56. Then her parentes were astonied, but hee comanded them, that they shoulde tell no man what was done.

MARK E. 36. Bee not a fraide, only beleue. The message of death caused him to despair, because hee hadde required nothing else of Christe, but that hee woulde helpe the sicke maide. Therefore Christe commaundeth that he shoulde not with feare and distrust shutte out all hope of grace, which death it selfe cannot hinder. For by this phrase only beleue, he declareth that he wanteth not power, so that Iairus will accept him & he also exhorteth him to be of good comfort, for he cannot beleue more, then God in his great power is able to perfourme. And verily it so falleth out with vs al: for god would deale more liberally with vs, if we were not so strait: but our hardnes of life doth hinder God, that he powre not his gifts more plentifully vpō vs. In sum, we are taught in this piace, that we can neuer exceed measure in beleeuing, because our fayth howe large soeuer it be, can neuer conceiue the hūdred part of the goodnes of God.

37. And he suffered no man. He forbade them enterance, either because they were vnworthy to be witnesses of the myracle: or because that hee woulde not haue the myracle ouerwhelmed with the murmuring multitude: for it were better that the damsell whose body they had seene deade, shoulde sodainly come forth alieue and strong into the sight of men. Marke & Luke say that he tooke with him but three of his disciples, they both adde the parents: And Marke on-ly sayth that he tooke them which were Iairus his companions when he came to require Christ. Matthew who is shorter, omitteth this circumstance.

L V K E. 52. And all wept. The Euangelists do make mention of mourning, that their hope in the resurrection may be the more certaine. Also Mat- shew sayth expressly that there were minstrels, which was not wont to bee, but whereas they were assured that the body was dead, and when as they prepared the funeralles. In the mournfull funeralles the pipe did sound, sayth hee. And although they thought after this manner to honour their deade, and as it were to adorne their buriaill, yet we see how the world is alwayes ready, not onely to nourish, but also to stirre vppe her owne faultes. . It was their duty to apply themselues by all meanes to appease mourning, but as though they had not of- fended inough with their outragious sorrow, with new prouocations they doe ambitiously prouok the same. The gētiles also thought that this melody appeased the ghosts wherby we gather with how many corruptions Iudea wasthē filled.

MARK E. 39. But sleepeth. To sleepe is taken in diuers places of the scripture, for, to die. And doubtlesse by this similitude gathered of the temporal rest, is noted the resurrection to come. And Christ doth here especially make a comparison betweene sleepe & death, that he might confirme the hope of life: as if he should haue sayd, you shall see her presently raised vp, whome now you thinke to be dead. And it is no maruell that he was laughed to scorne of block- ish and grose men, which were wholly occupied in prophane mourning, & vn- derstoode not his purpose. And yct this auaileth to the setting forth of the my- racle, that none of them doubted of her death.

41. Hee tooke her by the hande and sayde . Although this crie did natu- rally profite nothinge to the weakeninge of the senses of the deade, yet doeth Christe heere shewe notably the power of his voyce, that hee might the more accustome menne to giue eare to his doctrine. And herein appeareth how effectuall the voyce of Christ is, which peirceth vnto the dead, so as it gi-

ueth life euen in death it selfe. Therefore Luke sayeth that her spirite came againe: as if he should haue sayd, that the spirit being called by the commaundement of Christe, was straightway present,

43. And charged them. Although Christe woulde not generally admit all to behold her raising vpp, yet the myracle could not remayne long hid. And it was not meete to suppress the power of God, whereby the whole world was prepared to life. Why then did he command the maides parentes to silence? It may bee that his will was that they should not so much conceale the thing it selfe as the maner, and that only but for a time: for we see in other places also, how hee sought for opportunitie. They that thinke that they were forbidden to speake, that they might be the more whetted on, are hardly taken, when they flee to this answer. I graunt that Christ wrought not this myracle, but that it shoulde be vttered, but at a more apt time, or when the multitude was dismissed, where was no meane nor moderation. Therefore he would giue them space that the more quietly and adusedly they might consider the worke of God.

Matthew. 9.

27. And as Iesus departed thence, two blind men followed him, crying and saying: O soone of Dauid, haue mercy vpon vs.

28. And when hee was come into the house, the blinde men came to him, and Iesus saide vnto them: beleeue yee that I am able to doe this? and they sayd vnto him, yea Lorde.

29. Then touched he their eyes, saying: according to your sayth be it vnto you.

30. And their eyes were opined, and Iesus charged them, saying: See that no man know it.

31. But when they were departed they spread abroad his fame through out all that land.

32. And as they went out, behold they brought to him a dumbe man possessed with a deuill.

33. And when the deuill was cast out, the dumbe spake: Then the multitude, marueiled saying: the like was neuer seene in Israel.

34. But the Pharisies sayde: Hee casteth out deuils, through the prince of deuils.

Marke.

Luke.

27. And as Iesus departed. The other Euangclistes do say nothing of these 2. myracles: for, as we haue sayd othre where, and Iohn doeth plainly affirme that it was not their purpose to rehearse all the deedes of Christ, but onely to gather some principall poyntes, which prooue him to be the Messias. Further, Matthew sayeth that two blinde men were restored to their sight, but not so speedily, as often othre where hee was accustomed to helpe the miserable. For he doth not answer them as they cry after him in the way, but as though he dissembled the matter, he suffereth the to follow him into the house. There he doth at length enquire of them what they do beleeue of his power. Therefore his minde was in deede and woordes to examine their faith, for hee holding them in suspense pen<sup>ce</sup>, nay paſſing by as though he heard not, he maketh a triall of their patience, and what roote faith had taken in their mindes. After, when he demandeth whether they beleue, he proſecuteth the ſame examination. But it may be demanded whether to be perſwaded of the power of Chriſt and of God, is ſufficient to make any man faithfull. For thus much doe the words ſignifie, doe you beleue me, that I can doe it? But it appeareth out of diuers other places of the ſcripture, that the knowledge of the power is but vaine and colde, except wee be aſſured of his will. Yet Chriſt being ſatiſfied with their anſwere, approueth their faith as perfect in all poynts, I anſwere, when at the firſt they confeſſed him to be the ſonne of Dauid, they conceiued ſomewhat of the grace. For with this title they honoured the redeemer of their nation, and the authour of all their good. Therefore he demanding of his owne power, hee doeth more deeply enquire, whether they doe conſtantly beleue. Therefore faith comprehendeth the mercie and fatherly loue of God with power, & the ready will of Chriſt with might. But becauſe that men doe commonly attribute leſſe to the power of God and might of Chriſt then is meete, the blinde men are not aſked without a cauſe, whether they beleue that Chriſte can doe that which they profeſſe, though the purpoſe of Chriſt was ſimply to know whither that from their heart they gaue to him the honour of the Meſſias. And for this cauſe is their faith approued, that in ſo baſe and contemptible an eſtate, they acknowledged the ſonne of Dauid.

29. According to your faith. Although it is ſayd that this benefite is eſpecially beſtowed vpon two blind men, yet out of theſe preſent words of Chriſt, wee may gather this generall doctrin, that we ſhall neuer be ſuffered to depart without our requeſts, ſo that we pray with faith. If that theſe two by a ſmall faith, as yet not thoroughly grounded, do obtaine that which they require, much more at this day ſhall their faith preuaile which being endued with the ſpirit of adoption, and made partakers of the ſacrifice of the mediatur, doe come to God.

30. He charged them. Eytter his will was to haue other witneſſes of the miracle, or elſe that he would deferre the report thereof to an other time. Therefore that is worthy to be reprobued, that they doe vtter the ſame preſently eue<sup>ry</sup> where. For that ſome imagine that Chriſt forbade them, that hee might the rather ſtirre them forward we haue confuted in an other place. It is certaine there was ſome cauſe of forbidding which is vnknowne vnto vs: but theſe men of an vnaduifed zeale doe vtter it before the time.

32. They brought vnto him a dumbe man. It is probable that this man was not dumbe by nature, but when he was deliuered vp to the deuill, that he was deprived of his ſpeech: yet all thoſe that are dumbe, are not poſſeſſed of deuils. But this man was ſo afflicted, that by manifeſt ſignes it appeared that his tongue was tied, and that after his healing the people do cry out, that the like was neuer ſene in Iſraell, ſeemeth to be an hyperbolicall kinde of ſpeech: for by greater miracles had God in times paſt reuealed his glory amongſt that people. But it may be that they had regard to the end of the miracle, ſo that then the mindes of all men were ſtirred vp to looke for the comming of the Meſſias. And they ſo extold the preſent grace of God, ſo as they would diminiſh nothing from his former works. And it is to be noted, that this ſpeech was not premeditate, but ſuch as in admiration brake out ſuddenly.

34. The Pharises sayd. Heereby it appeareth how mad they were, which were not afraid to defame with wicked speech so notable a worke of GOD. For the Antithesis is to be noted betwene the praise of the people and the blasphemie of these men. For that the people sayth the like was neuer done in Israell, was a confession proceeding from a feeling of the glory of God. Whereby it doeth the better appeare that these men were starke madde, which durst blaspHEME God to his face. Yet we are also taught, when wickednes is growen to extremitie, that there is none so manifest a worke of God which it will not perueit. But this is monstrous, seldome seene and incredible, that mortall men should rise vp against their maker: but that blindnesse is so much the more to be feared, (which I spake of before) whereby the Lord after his long sufferance executeth his vengeance vpon the wicked.

Luke.

35. And Iesus went about all cities and townes, teaching in their Synagogues, and preaching the Gospell of the kingdome, and healing euery sicknesse, and euery disease among the people.

36. But when hee sawe the multitude, hee had compassion vpon them, because they were dispersed and scattered abroad, as sheepe hauing no shepherds.

37. Then sayd hee to his disciples, surely the harvest is great, but the labourers are few.

38. Wherefore pray the Lord of the harvest, that hee would send forth labourers into his harvest.

35. And he went about. This is spoken by preuention, that wee might knowe that the whole ministerie of Christ is not particularly described: but generally, that he was diligent in his office, namely that he might publish the doctrine of saluation, and confirme the same by miracles. We haue sayd in an other place before, that it is called the Gospell of the kingdome of the effect: because that by this meane God doth gather vnto himselfe a people that was miserably dispersed, that he might raigne in the midst of them: and for that cause truly hath he rayed vp his throne, that he might endue all his with full felicitie. Yet let vs remember that it behooueth vs to become subiect to God, that by him we may be caried into celestially glory.

36. He had compassion vpon them Hereby we gather first how sluggish the priests were, which being placed through out the whole land, that they might shewe forth the light of the heauenly doctrine, were become idle bellies. And they proudly boasted themselues to be the cheife bishops of the people: and there was no small multitude of the which gloried in this title: yet Christ acknowledgeth none of them to be pastours. The same wante is found at this day in Poperie, which yet is replenished with pastorall titles: for great is that sinke or heape of that lewd companie which vnder the name of the cleargie doe deuoure vp the people. For though they be dumbe dogges, yet they are not ashamed arrogantly to bragge of their hierarchie. But the worde of Christ is to be heard which sayeth that there are no pastours, whereas there are no labourers, and that those those sheepe are wandring and disperfed, which are not gathered together into the folde of God by the doctrine of the Gospell. And in that he stouched with compafsion, he proueth himfelfe to bee a faithfull minister of his Father, in caring for the faluation of the people, for whose sake he had taken vpon him our flefhe. And though hee is nowe receiued into heauen, and hath not the fame affections, whereunto he was fubieft in this mortall life, yet hee cafteth not away the care of his Church: but he hath regard vnto his wandering sheepe and his owne flocke cruelly put to flight and fcattered by the wolues.

37. The haruest is great. By this Metaphore he declareth that many of the common fort were ready to receiue the Gospell. For though the greater number did most vnworthily and vnthankfully refuse faluation offered them: yet hee compareth that small number of the elect which was mixed amongst the vnbelecuers, vnto a plentifull haruest, because that God esteemeth more of that small companie of them, then of all the world beside. And though many did then intrude themselues in: yet he doth not account them amongst labourers, because that few did behaue themselues faithfully: for hee taketh this name of labourers in the good part. When Paul complayneth of cuill workers, he hath respect vnto their vaine-glory and boasting. For he bestoweth not this title vpon them that apply their labour onely in destroying and wafing: but because that vnder a false pretence they chalenge the fame vnto themselues.

Pray the Lord of the haruest. Because that no sincere or fit minister of the Gospell will thrust in himfelfe: neyther doe others rightly discharge the office of teaching, but those which are raised by the Lord, and are by the spirit furnished with their giftes, so oft as wee see the want of good pastours, it is necessary that wee should lift vp our eyes to him for remedie. But there was neuer more need of this prayer, then in the horrible confusion of the Church, which doeth now appeare in euery place.

Mathevv. 8

23. And when hee was entred into the ship, his Disciples followed him.

24. And beholde there arose a great tempest in the Sea, so that the shippe was covered with waues: but hee was a sleepe.

25. Then his disciples came and awoke him: saying, maister saue vs, we perish.

26. And hee sayde vnto them: why are yee fearefull, O yee of little faith? Then hee arose, and

36. And they left the multitude, and tooke him as hee was in the shippe, and there were also with him other ships.

37. And there arose a great storme of winde, and the waues dashed into the ship, so that it was full.

Luke. 8.

22. And it came to passe on a certaine day, that hee went into ship with his disciples: and hee sayde vnto them. Let vs goe ouer vnto the other side of the lake, & they launched forth.

23. And as they sayled, he fell a sleepe, and there came down a storme on the lake, and they were filled with water, & were in iopardy

23. Then they went to him & awoke him saying: maister, maister, we perish. And hee arose and rebuked the wind and the waues of water, and they ceased and it and rebuked the winds and the sea : and so there was a greate

calme.

27. And the men
maruiled, saying :
what mine is this,
that both the windes
and the sea obey him.

ked the windes, and sayde vnto the sea, peace, and be still. So the wind ceased, and it was a great calme.

40. Then he sayd vnto them why are yee so fearefull : howe is it that yee haue no faith ?

41. And they feared exceed-dingly, and sayd one to another was calme.

25. Then hee sayde vnto them, where is your faith ? and they feared, and wondered among themselves, saying : who is this that commaundeth both the windes and the water, and they obey him ?

Because that shortly after there is againe mention made of a lake, where-into it is sayd, the swine were caried headlong : all doe not agree whether it be one and the same lake. All do confesse that the waters of Genesara were pleasant to the taste, and whole some to bee vsed : but Strabo sayeth that the lake of Gadara was so noysome & pestilent, that the beasts which dranke of it lost their hooues and their haire. Therefore it is not to be doubted, but that they were two diuers lakes, and in space farre distant one from an other. But without question this place ought to be vnderstood of Genesara : which Christ passied ouer and went to the Gadarens, which are called Gergesens by Mathew. And they which of the diuersitie of the name do gather that two diuerse hystories are recorded, while they would seeme to be subtile, they slip into too grosse ignorace For the Country of the Gergesens was also called Gadarena, of a famous City called Gadaris. The name was changed in Hieromes time, therefore hee calleth them Gerasens, according to the custome then receiued. Yet I do not denie but that the swine were caried headlong by the deuils, into the lake of Ga-dara. But when Christ sayth, let vs goe to the further shore, I cannot interpret that but of Genesara. Nowe it remaineth that wee shoulde consider the time, which cannot bee gathered neyther by Matheue nor by Luke. Onely Marke noteth that it was the euening of that day when Christ spake of the pre-ching of the Gospell, vnder the parable of the seede. Whereby it appeareth that they did not obserue the order of the time, the which Luke doeth also eu-dently declare, when hee sayth that it came to passe vpon a certaine day : by which words he sheweth that hee did not much busie himselfe what was done first or last.

23. When he was entred into the ship. Marke sayth that other ships did passe with them also : but that Christ with his disciples went vp into his owne shippe Luke doth also hearse his words. Mathew is brieffer, yet in summe they agree namely, that Christ layd himselfe to rest, and while hee slept, sodenly there arose a tempest. First it is certaine, that the tempest which did trouble the lake, came not by chance. For how can it be that God would suffer his owne Sonne to be tost with the blind force of the windes ? But his will was by this meanes to reueale to his Apostles how little and how weake their faith was as yet.

And though Christes sleepe was naturall, yet it auayled to the same use, that the Disciples shoulde the better know their owne infirmitie. I will not say, as many doe, that Christe fained himselfe to bee a sleepe, that hee might try them: I doe rather iudge that hee slepte as the condition and the necessitie of humane nature did require. Yet his Godhead did watch, so that the Apostles ought not to haue feared but that they shoulde haue presently bin comforted, helpe being prepared for them from heauen. Therefore lette vs know that all this was done by the secret prouidence of God, that Christ slepte, that the storme arose, the waues couered the shippe, and that the shippe hardly escaped drowning. And lette vs learne hereby, so oft as any aduersitie doth arise, that our fayth is tryed of the Lorde: but if the troubles doe encrease, so that they doe almost ouerwhelme vs, it is by the same purpose of God to exercise our patience: or that by this meanes our hidden infirmitie might come to light: as we see, when the waues couered the Apostles, their infirmitie was reuealed, which before was hidde.

25. Maister saue vs. A godly prayer, as it seemeth: for what could they haue done better, then being at the poynt to be lost, to seeke for preseruatiō at christ? But sith that Christe condemneth them of infidelitie, wee must seeke wherein they offended. And I doubt not but that they stucke too much to the carnall presence of their maister. For, as it appeareth by MARK E, they doe not simply entreat him, but they expostulate the matter with him: Maister carest thou not that we perish? Luke also noteth an amazed trembling: Maister, maister wee perish. They ought to account that the Godheade of Christe was not oppressed with the sleepe of the flesh, and to haue fledde to the same. But they rest vntill extreeme danger enforceth them: then excessiue feare amaseth them, so that they thinke they cannot be safe, except they waken Christ. This is the cause why he accuseth them of infidelitie. For in that they required that hee would helpe them, was rather a testimonie of their faith, if they had trusted in his diuine power, and patiently without feare hadde hoped for the helpe which they required. And thus is the question answered, which may be demaunded of his reproouing them: whether all feare is naught and repugnant to faith. First he doth not simply reprove them because they feare, but because they bee feareful. Marke also vseth such a phrase as noteth that they did feare beyond measure. Then by opposing faith to their feare, he sheweth that he speaketh of excessiue feare, which doeth not so much exercise their faith, as shake the rootes of fayth out of their mindes. And thereby appeareth that enery feare is not contrary to faith: for if we feare nothing, a tchicless securitie of the flesh doeth oppresse vs: so faith fainteth, the desire to pray waxeth dull, and the remembrance of God is at length extinguished. Further, they which are not touched with a feeling of euilles, are rather blockish then constant. So we see that feare which stirreth vp faith, is not of it selfe to be condemned vntill it exceede measure. And herein is excesse, if that the tranquillitie of our faith, be therby either troubled or waxe faint, which ought to rest vpon the word of God: but because it neuer fallerh out, that the faithfull doe so gouerne themselves that their faith is kept vnshtaken, they doe almost alwayes offend in fearing. But it is requisite to determine, not to condemne the shaking of faith for euery feare, but for that feare which disturbeth the peace of conscience, so that it rest not in the promise of God.

26. He rebuked the windes. Matthew rehearseth also the words of Christ, where with he speaketh to the sea, and commaundeth it to be silent, that is, to be calme, not that the lake had any senses, but that hee might shew that the power of his voyce doth peirce euen into the dumbe elements. And not onely the sea & the windes, creatures without sence, do obey the commandement of God, but the wicked also themselues with all their stubborneffe. For when as God will appease warlike tumults, hee doth not alwayes mollifie the cruell mindes of men, and frame them to obey him, but hee yet causeth their weapens to fall out of their hands, be they neuer so mad. And so is that fulfilled which is written. Psal. 46. 9. He maketh warres to cease vnto the ends of the world: hee breaketh the bow, & cutteth the speare in sunder, and burneth the chariots with fire.

27. And the men maruailed. Marke and Luke seeme to attribute this to the Apostles: for after they had said that Christ had reprobued them, they adde, they cryed out with feare, who is this? yet this is rather to be applied to others, which did not as yet know Christ. But let vs follow both: herein doth now appeare the fruite of the myracle, when the glory of Christ is shewed forth. If any think that the Apostles spake it, then this shall be the meaning of the wordes: his diuine power was sufficiently prooued, in that the winds & the sea do obey him. Yet because it is more probable that other spake it, the Euangelittes doe teach in these wordes, that their mindes were so striken with the myracle, that the reuerence of Christ, was a certaine preparation to fayth.

Matth. 3.

28. And when he was come to the other side, into the countrey of the Gergesenes, there mette him two possessed with deuilles, which came out of the graues very feirce so that no manne might goe by that way.

29. And beholde they cryed out: saying, Iesus the sonne of God, what haue wee to doe with thee? Art thou come hether to torment vs before the time.

30. Now

Marke 5.

1. And they came ouer to the other side of the sea, into the countrey of the Gadarens.

2. And when he was come out of the shippe, there mette him incontinently out of the graues, a man which had an vnclane spirite.

3. Who had his abiding among the graues, and no man coulde binde him, no not with chaines.

4. Because that when hee was often bounde with feters and chaines, hee plucked the chaines asunder, & brake the feters in peeces, neither could any manne tame him. 5. And alwayes both night & day he cryed in the moittaines, & in the graues, & stroke him selfe with stones. 6. And when he saw Iesus a farre off, he ran and worshipped him. 7. And cryed with a loud voice and sayd what haue I to do with thee Iesus, the sonne of the most high God? I charge thee by God, that thou torment me not.

8. For

Luke 1.

26. So they sailed vnto the regio of the Gadarens, which is ouer against Galile.

27. And as hee went out to land, there met hē a certaine man out of the city, which had a deuill a long time, & hee ware no cloathes, neither a bod in house, but in the graues

28. And when he saw Iesus, he cryed out, & fel downe before hē, & with a loud voice said: what haue I to do with thee, Iesus the son of God the most high: I beseech thee torment me not. 29. But hee commaunded the foule spirite so come out of the man: (for oft times he had caught him: therefore hee was bound with chaines, and kept in feters: but hee brake the bands and was carried of the deuill into wilder nesse.)

30. Then

30. Now there was a farre off from the a great herde of swine feeding.
31. And the devils besought him saying: If thou cast vs out, suffer vs to goe into the herd of swine.
32. And he sayd vnto them: Goe, so they went out, and departed into the herde of swine: and behold, the whole herde of swine was caried with violence from a steepedown place into the sea, and died in the water
33. The herd men fled, & when they were come into the citie, they told all things and what was become of them that were possessed with diuels.
34. And beholde all the citie came out to meete Iesus, and when they sawe him, they besoughte him to departe out of their coastes.
8. For he sayd vnto him: Come out of the man thou vncleane spirit.
9. And he asked him: What is thy name? and he answered, saying: my name is Legion for wee are many.
10. And they prayed him instantly, that he would not send them away out of the country.
11. Now there were ther in the mountaines a great herde of swine feeding.
12. And all the diuils besought him: saying, send vs into the swine, that wee enter into them.
13. And incontinently Iesus gaue them leaue. Then the vncleane spirits went out and entred into the swine, and the herd ran headlong from the high banke into the sea, (and there were about two thousand swine) and they were drowned in the sea.
14. And the swincherdes fledde and told it in the citie, and in the country, and they came out to see what it was that was done.
15. And they came to Iesus, & saw him that had bene possessed with the deuill, and had the Legion, and in his right minde, and they were afraid.
16. And they that sawe it told them what was done to him that was possessed with the deuill, & concerning the swine.
17. Then they began to pray him that he would depart out of their coasts
18. And when he was come into the ship, he that had bin possessed with the deuill, praied him that hee might bee with him.
19. Howbeit Iesus would not suffer hi, but said vnto him: Goe thy way home to thy freindes, and shewe them what great things the Lord hath done vnto thee, and how he hath had compassion on thee.
20. So he departed, and began to publish in Decapolis, what great things Iesus had done vnto him: and all men did maruaile,
30. Then Iesus asked him: saying, what is thy name. And hee said, Legion, because many devils were entred into him.
31. And they besought him, that he would not command the to goe out into the deepe.
32. And there was therby, an herd of swine feeding on an hill, & the devils besought him that he would suffer them to enter into them: so he suffered the.
33. Then went the devils out of the man, & entred into the swine: and the herd was caried with violence from a steepedown place, into the lake, & was choked.
34. When the herdmen saw what was don, they fled. & when they were departed, they told it in the city and in the country.
35. The they came out to see what was done, and came to Iesus, & found the man out of who the devils were departed, sitting at the feete of Iesus, clothed, and in his right mind. and they were afraid.
36. They also which saw it, told the by what means he that was possessed with the deuill, was healed.
37. Then the whole multitude of the countrey about the Gadarenes, besought him, that he would depart fro them, for they wer taken with a great feare, & he went into the ship and returned.
38. Then the man, out of who the devils were departed, besought him that he might be with him: but Iesus sent him away, saying.
39. Returne into thine owne house, and shewe what greate things God hath done vnto thee. So hee went his way, and preached throughout all the city: what great things Iesus had done vnto him.

I haue before confuted their error which thinke that Marke and Luke doe report not this, but an other miracle. For when as the three Euangelists do note that region which is against Galile, as Luke also declareth, and all the circumstances doe agree: who will belecue that all these things fell out at diuers times

28. There met him two possessed with deuils. This difference caused the interpreters to erre, and to separate Mathewe from the other two: because hee nameth two, and the other but one. But Augustines coniecture is probable, who thinketh that there were two, yet they made mention but of one, because hee was the more famous: and so the miracle should be the more notable in him by reason of the greatnesse of the disease. And certainly wee see that Marke & Luke do bestow moe words in amplifying the crueltie of the deuill, that it might appeare that the miserable man of whom they speake, was wonderfully tormented. Therefore in that they report a notable example of the diuine power of Christ though they say nothing of the other man, yet they dissent not from the history of Mathew, which addeth the hystorie of the other who was so well knowne. That Luke sayth, a certaine man met him out of the citie, it is vncertaine whether he meaneth that he was a citizen of Gadara, or whether he came out from thence to meete him. For when as he was commanded to goe home, and to preach the grace of God amongst his owne freinds, Marke sayeth that hee did this in Decapolis, which was a countrie next ouer against Galile, wherby it is to be coniectured that he was not a Gadaranite borne. Further, Mathewe and Marke doe expressly say that hee came not out of the Citie, but out of the graues. And Luke himselfe in the whole course of the hystorie, declareth that hee liued in the desert. Therefore these wordes (A certaine man met him out of the citie) I doe thus interpret, before Christ came to the Citie, a certaine man possessed with a deuill, met him by the way out of that coast. But their opinion which thinke that he dwelt in the graues, either because the deuils were delighted with the fauour of the dead carcases, or that they were pleased with the sight of the sacrifices, or because they would catch the soules which desired to bee neare vnto their bodies, is friuolous and foolish. The vncleane spirit did rather hold this man amongst the graues, that he might be consumed with continuall terror, by the sorrowfull beholding of the dead, as one banished from the company of men, would dwell amongst the dead. Further, wee learne hereby that the deuill doth not onely vexe men in this present life, but persecute them euen vnto death, so that his kingdome might flourish euen in death.

MARK E. 3. And no man could bind him, no nor with chaines. Hee could not naturally breake chaines, whereby wee gather that Sathan is permitted to haue sometime extraordinarie motions, whose force exceedeth our vnderstanding and vsuall reason. And it is often seene that frantike men haue much more strength, then if they were in perfect health. And it is not to bee denied but that the deuill doeth there also play his partes, so oft as God doeth suffer him, but this violent force which the Euangelistes do here speake of, was farre greater. Truly a sorrowfull & a horrible spectacle, but wee are thereby admonished how miserable and fearefull a thing it is, to be subiect to the tyranny of Sathan: and wee must much more feare the vexation of the oule then the torments of the bodie, how sharpe or cruel fouer they bee.

6. Hee worshipped him. This was the order of the history, when the possessed with deuilles mette him, Christe commaunded the vnclene spirites to come out of them, then did they humbly beseech him that he woulde not torment them before the time. Therefore hee did not worshippinge Christ, before Christ spake to them: neither did they complaine that Christ troubled them, vntill he commaunded them to go forth. But it is to be noted that they came not willingly into Christes sight, but drawne by the secret power: for as they were wont before by their furious fiercenesse to draw men into the graues: so now a greater power bringeth thē against their will to the tribunal seat of their iudge, whereby we gather that all the kingdome of Sathan is subiect to the power of Christ. For the deuils haue not now any more their owne desire, when Christe citeth them before him, then the miserable manne had before, which by his tyrannie were carried hither and thither. To be short by the secret power of Christ they are brought before him, that by casting them out, he might declare himselfe to be the deliuerer of men. Also by compulsion they worshippinge him, and their reprochfull complaints doe testifie that their confession was not voluntary but wrested out by violence, they say: What hast thou to doe with vs? By which woordes they desired to driue him away: but because they sawe themselves holden fast bound, so that it were vaine to flee from his power, they complaine that they are tormented before the time, and with it they ioyne an in-treatie. So wee see the deuilles doe nothing but breath out crueltie againste God, and yet with their pride wherein they swell, they fall downe as confounded creatures, and that at the same present: because their malice and peruerfnesse, which is neuer tamed, ceaseth not to wrastle against the power of God, and yet in the meane season it is enforced to giue place.

This seemeth to be the cause why Christe doeth not openly reiecte here the confession of the deuill, as he did in other places: because it was euident that he could not do such harme in that place. Note that Christ had a consideration of men, and for that cause, when malicious and wicked menne were by, that hee might the readilier stop false reportes and slaunders, hee did the more sharply put the deuils to silence. As concerning this place it is inough, and more then inough, that the deuils humbly entreating, did outrageously fret against him.

MATH. 29. Art thou come hither to torment vs before the time. Some interpret this to bee the kinde of torment, that they are enforced to leaue that manne which they possessed, free, and at libertie. Other referre it to the last day of iudgement. But I vnderstand that they being amazed at the presence of their iudge, did thinke of their punishment, for an euill conscience telleth them what they haue deserued though Christe holde his peace. For euen as the wicked being at the iudgement seate, doe conceiue their punishment: so of necessitie must the deuils and all wicked men tremble at the sight of God: euen as if they did now feele the helles, the fire vnquenchable, & the tormentes to come. And when the deuils knew that Christ should bee the iudge of the world, it is no maruell if his sight stricke a feare into thē of present torment. The questiō is in yaine which some do moue, whether they knew of the day of iudgement. Then what doeth this clause meane, Before the time? namely, because the reprobate doe neuer thinke it time for them to bee punished: for they doe gladly delay it from day to day. For as they account delay for gaine, so long as the Lorde doeth beare with them: so (though to no purpose) by running backe they flee his iudgement.

MAR 9. My name is Legion. Christ asked this question of the deuill, that hee might the better set forth the excellencie of his grace. This man had not so great a vengeance laide vpon him without a cause, that as it were an hoast of deuils shoulde dwell in him. Then, what great mercy were it to drawe this man out of so many destructions, which was lost more then a thousand times? Also the power of Christe did shine herein wonderfully, that at his voyce hee sodenly put to flight, not one deuill, but a great multitude. And this word Legion is not taken for a certaine number of menne, but onely for a great multitude. Heereby it appeareth how miserable a creature man is, whereas hee is without the protection of God: for euery man lyeth open, not only to perticular diuels, but is a receptacle to whole multitudes of deuilles. Heere is also confuted the common error which the Iewes and Christians haue borrowed of prophane men: namely, that perticular men are assaulted by perticular deuilles. But the scripture doth plainly affirm, that the Lord as hee pleaseth, sendeth one deuill to scourge a whole nation, & sometime many to torment one man: so againe sometime one Angell is set ouer a whole people, & to perticular men are many appointed to watch ouer the for their saluatiō. So much the more carefully it behoueth vs to watch, least so great a multitude of enemies do circumsēt vs.

10. They prayed him instantly, Luke saith that the entreated that they might not be sent into the deepe, which is so expounded of some as if they fled the desert, But I do refer it to the desire which they had to hurt, because the deuils do only desire this one thing, to wander amongst men, as Lions hūting after their pray. It greueth the to be drowned in the deepe, wherein their power to hurt & to destroy should be taken away. And it may be gathered by Markes words, that this is the natural sence of this place For he saith that they required that they might not be compelled to go out of that country. In sum, they declare this to be their nature, that they desire nothing more, then the destruction of mankinde.

MAT. 31. Suffer vs to goe into the heard of swine. Some thinke that they desired to enter into the swine, because they doe hate deadly all the creatures of God. I graunt that this is true, that they are wholly bent to ouerthrow and peruert the whole order of nature framed by God: but it is certaine that they had a further regard, namely that they might cause the inhabitants of that nation to curse God for the losse of their swine. For the deuill sent lightening vpon Iob his house, not for the hatred of the woode or the stones: but that the holy man, bearing vnpatiently the losse, shoulde murmur against God. And Christ allowing it, doeth not heare their requestes, but for this cause, that he might know what manner of people the Gadarens were.

And it may bee that hee gaue that liberty to the deuilles ouer their swine, that hee mighte by that meanes punishe their offences. But as no certaine cause doeth appeare vnto vs, so it doeth behouue vs reuerently to deeme of the secret iudgement of God, and with godly humilitie to honour the same.

But

But this place doth teach vs how foolishly certaine prophane menne do trifle, which imagine that deuilles are not essentiall spirites, but onely wicked affections. For howe can couetousnesse, ambition, crueltie and infidelitie, enter into swine? Therefore wee knowe the euill spirites (as they are appoynted to destruction) to bee enemies of mankinde: to that end, that they may cary as many headlong with them to the same destruction as they can.

MAR. 15. They came to Iesus. Wee haue heereby a notable instruction, all which feele the hand of God doe not profit as they ought: that they might thereby submit themselues vnder true holinesse. The Gadarens beholding the myracle, were afraid: namely, because the maiestic of God did shine in Christ. Thus farre they did well: But that they send him out of their coasts, what could they haue done worse then that? They also were scattered: the shepheard is ready, which gathereth together may, God stretcheth out his armes by his own sonne, that he might cary them (which were ouerwhelmed with the darkenesse of death) in his owne armes into heauen. They had rather loose the saluation offered them, then any longer abide the presence of Christ. They seeme to bee offended at the losse of their swine: but Luke noteth a greater cause, that they were taken with a great feare, and certainly being exasperated by receiuing that losse, they would els not haue required him, but they would haue driuen him out more roughly. But when they reuerence him, as a minister of God, and being afraid, doe yet desire to haue him further from them, we see that they were touched with no feeling of the grace of God. And certainly, though all the wicked doe reuerence God, and do bestow much time in appeasing him: yet if their choise were giuen them, they would conuay themselues a great way from him: because his face is terrible to them, so long as they thinke him to be a iudge rather then a father. Hereof it cometh to passe, that the doctrine of the Gospell (then the which nothing can bee imagined to bee sweeter) is in diuers places grieuous and sowre, so that a great part of the world would wish it buried. Yet it is true, that part of their feare riseth through their losse: So at this day, while men doe openly and priuately account that the kingdome of Christe is againt their comodities, being possessed with a wicked feare of the flesh, they wil not taste of his grace. Therefore at his comming, they, imagine God rather to be angry then mercifull, as mu: has in them lieth, send him away to an other place. And this is a token of vile blockishnes, that the losse of their hogges doth more terrifie them, then the saluation of the soule doth make them ioyfull.

L V. 38. The man besought him The gadarens cannot abide him, with them: but the man which was deliuered from the deuill, desired that he may loose his country, and foillow him. Hereby appeareth how much difference there is betweene the knowledge of the goodnesse, and of the power of God: because the power striking in a feare, maketh men to flye from the sight of God, and driue them farre away: but the goodnes doeth sweetly allure, so that they account nothing more to be desired, then to be vnited to God.

It is vncertaine why Christe refused to haue this manne to followe him, except hee hoped that greater profite shoulde aryse by his telling that so excellent and notable a benefit amongst his owne country menne. And

Mar. & Lu. do testifie that he did so. Christ purposely cōmandeth him to shew forth the worke of God, not his owne: so that he being accounted for a true Prophet and minister of God: and this he doth that he might get credit to his doctrine. For so it was meete by a litle at once to instruct that rude people, which as yet knew not his god-head. And though Christ is the ladder whereby we ascend to God the father: yet, because he was not as yet reuealed, he beginneth at the father, vntill he haue a more fitte oportunitie.

Now this doctrine is to be added: Christe in the person of one man sheweth a token of that his grace, which he extendeth to all mankinde. For though we are not tormented of the deuill, yet hee holdeth vs bound vnto him, vntill the sonne of God deliuer vs from his tyranny. We wander naked, rent, and deformed vntill hee restore vs to a sound and a perfect minde. It remaineth that wee testifie our thankfulness in celebrating his grace.

Matth. 10.

1. And hee called his twelue disciples vnto him, and gaue them power against vncleane spirits to cast them out, and to heale euery sicknes, and euery disease.

2. Now the names of the twelue Apostles are these: the first is Simon, called Peter, and Andrew his brother: Iames, the son of Zebedeus, and Iohn his brother.

3. Philip and Barelemew, Thomas and Matthew the Publican: Iames the sonne of Alphesus, and Lebbeus, whose surname was Thaddens.

4. Simon the Cananite, and Iudas the Iscariot, who also betrayed him.

5. These twelue did Iesus send forth, and commaunded them, saying, goe not into the way of the Gentiles, & into the city of the Samaritans enter yee not.

6. But go rather to the lost sheepe of the house of Israel

7. And as yee goe, preach, saying, the kingdome of heauen is at hand

8. Heale the sicke, cleanse the Leapers, raise vpp the dead, cast out the deuils, freely ye haue receiued, freely giue.

- Marke 6.

7. And hee called the 12. and began to send them two and two and gaue them power ouer vn- cleane spirits

Luke 9.

1. Then called he the twelue disciples together, and gaue them power & authoritie ouer deuils, & to heale diseases.

2. And hee sent them to preach the kingdom of God, & to cure the sicke.

Heere is described the calling of the Apostles: but not suche a calling as you hearde of before, when the Lorde minding to prepare them to their office, chose them into his fellowship: for nowe they are called to the present execution of the same, They are commaunded to prepare themselues to the worke, commissions are giuen them, and least they shoulde lacke authoritie, they are adorned with the power of the spirit. Therefore firste they were chosen and prepared in hope that they should worke, now Christ telleth them that the houre is come, when they must set their hand<sup>s</sup> to the worke. Yet it is to be noted, that he speaketh no: as yet of the perpetuall Apostleship: but onely of a temporall embassage, whereby the mindes of men might be stirred vp and wakened, that they might be the readier to heare Christ. Therefore now they are sent into Iudea, to declare that the time of the promised restitution and saluation is at hand: and afterward Christ ordaineth them to spread the Gospell through all the world. Heere he onely chuseth them as helpers, to prepare that people to come to heare him, where his voyce could not come. After he resigneth vnto them that office of teaching, which hee executed himselfe. And this is worth the noting, least we should imagine that here were set downe a certaine and a perpetuall law to all the ministers of the word, while the Lord doth giue in charge to the publishers of his doctrine, what he would haue them doe for a short time. The ignorance whereof deceiued many, insomuch that without difference, they would bring and tie all the ministers of the word to this rule.

1. He called his twelue. The number of the twelue doth note the reformation that should be of the Church. For as the people came of the twelue Patriarches: so Christ doeth now call the remnantes dispersed to the remembrance of their first beginning, that they might conceiue some certaine hope of their restitution. And though the kingdome of God did not so flourish in Iudea, as to finde there remaining a perfecte estate of the people: but that nation which was now miserably decayed, deserued through their vnthankfulnesse rather twise to perish for despising the grace offered: yet this hindered not but that they should be borne againe a newe. And after it came to passe, that God our of Syon sent the scepter of the power of his Sonne further abroad, that floudes might run out of that fountaine, which should plentifully water the foure quarters of the world: Then GOD gathered together his Israell from euery place, that not onely the dispersed and torne members should bee knit together into one body, but also such men, as before were altogether strangers from the people of God. Therefore the Lord doth not in vaine appoint twelue, as patriarkes, but doth thereby declare the renewing of the Church. Note further that by this number he admonished the Iewes to what end he came. And because they gaue no place to the grace of God, he begat a new Israell to himselfe.

If thou shouldst behold the first beginning, this might seeme to thee a matter to be laughed at, that Christ doth lay such honorable offices vppon men so obscure, and of no estimation: yet the incredible successe, and the plentifull encrease of the Church doth shew that the Apostles in degree of honour, and in fruitfulness of children are nothing inferiour to the Patriarches, but that they farre exceede them.

Hee gaue them power. Because the Apostles were almost not accounted of amongst men, and the embassage, which Christ committed vnto them was diuine, and because they did excell neyther in wisdom nor eloquence: and that the excellency and newnes of the matter required moe then humane giftes, it was necessary that they should haue some other authoritic.

Therefore Christe giuing them power to worke miracles, furnisheth them

them with ensignes of celestially power, which might get them credite & reuerence amongst the people. And by this is the lawfull vse of miracles gathered. For when Christ ordayned them preachers of the Gospell and workers of miracles ioynly together so that the miracles should be nothing els then seales of their doctrine, it is vnlawfull to breake that knot that cannot be vnknit. Wherefore the iapostles are false counterfeites, and doe wickedly depraue the workes of God, by seperating the word from the miracles.

2. First Simon. The Romanistes doe very fondly gather their supremacie from hence, we doe willingly grant that Simon Peter was the first amongst the Apostles. but no reason doth allow to extend that to the whole world, which was of force amongst a few men. Note further that hee which is first numbred hath not therefore presently Lordship amongst his fellowes, if wee graunt all those things, which they demand of Peter, vntill they proue these wicked and sacrilegious Apollates to be Peters successours, his dignitie shall make nothing for the Romane seate

5. In the way of the Gentiles. Hereby appeareth more euidently that, which I touched euen now, that the office which was layd vpon the Apostles was for no other purpose, but to make the Iewes attentiu to heare Christ, by stirring them vp to looke for their saluation at hand. Therefore now he encloseth their voyce within the boundes of Iudea, which he after commandeth to sound euerie where to the furthest coastes of the worlde: the reason is: because hee was sent of the Father, a minister of circumcision, to fulfill the promises made in times past to the fathers, Rom. 15. 8. But GOD had made a speciall couenant with the stocke of Abraham. Therefore CHRIST doth not without cause at the beginning continue the grace of GOD amongst the elect people, vntill the full time came for the further publishing of the same. And after his resurrection he spread forth that blessing, which was secondly promised to all the Gentiles: because that the vayne of the Temple was then rent and the partition wall was pulled downe. Therefore, if this discharge seeme to any to bee too hard, in that Christ alloweth not the Gentiles to bee partakers of the Gospell, let him plead with God, who excluding the rest of the worlde, did make his couenaut onely with the seede of Abraham, of which couenaut this commaundement of Christ doeth depend.

6. But goe rather to the lost sheepe. Hee assigneth, as I sayd. the first place to the Iewes, because they were the first borne: and because GOD did then account them onely of his houthold, when the other were strangers. And he calleth them lost sheepe, partly that the Apostles being touched with compafsion, might the more readily, and with more willing endeour helpe them: partly that they might knowe that there was great aboundance of worke for them, and yet vnder that figure of that nation Christ teacheth what is the condition of all mankind. The Iewes, which were neere, and in couenaut with God and so heires of the eternall life, are yet accounted lost, vntill they recouer saluation in Christ. Therefore what remaineth for vs, which are farre inferiours in honour to them? But hee giueth that name of sheepe also to the reprobate, which were not properly of the stocke of God: because the adoption belonged to all the people : so otherwhere hee calleth them the children of the kingdome, which for their vnfaithfulnesse were to bee caste out, Matthew 8. 12. In summe; Christe commendeth the Jewes to the Apostles vnder the title of sheepe, that they might bestow their labour vpon them : because none coulde bee accounted as in the flocke of God, but those which were gathered into the sheepfold.

7. Preach saying. This is that embassage wherewith I said, Christ would that the mindes of the people shoulde be stirred vppe in hope of the redemption at hand. For the kingdome of heauen, Luke saith, the kingdome of God, in the same sense : namely that the Iewes might know, first, that they were to be restored by the benefit and good worke of God, and not of men : then that their estate shoulde bee happy vnder God their king : thirdly, hee promiseth them not an earthly and a fraile felicity, but a heauenly and euerlasting.

8. Heale the sicke. As hee gaue them power, so hee commaunded them to bee faythfull and liberall disposers of the same : and he commaundeth them not to suppress those things, which were layd vppe with them for the common good of all menne. But by these myracles hee declareth for what purpose hee was sent of the father, and what is the ende of his Gospell. Neither is it with out aduise that hee commaundeth them rather to raise the dead, and to heale the sicke, then to afflict the whole with diseases, or to kill the that liue. Therefore these myracles haue an Analogie and similitude with the office of Christe, that we might knowe that hee came to be the authour of all good things to vs, which shoulde deliuer vs from the tyranny of Sathan and of death, which shoulde heale our sicknesse and our sinnes, and shoulde helpe all our miseries.

Freely yee haue received. That they might the more willingly bestow those gifts, which he had guen vnto them, he declar. th that they were not bestowed vpon them for their owne priuate glory, but that they might bee as it were certaine conduit pypes for the conuenance of the free goodnesse of God, as if he should haue said, consider from whence you had this power : as it came vnto you by none of your owne deseruing, but of the meere grace of God, so nowe it is meete that by your ministry it should be freely bestowed vpon others.

Wee know how hardly euery man doth part from that to others, which hee thinketh to be peculiar to himselfe : also where some one is lifted vp about the rest of his brethren, how ready he is to despise all other. Therefore hee could not better perswade to a free bestowing of spirituall gifts, then by teaching the, that no man excelleth by his owne industrie, but by the free liberalitie of God. And Christ now sheweth in his ministers a token of that grace, which was foretold by Isaias, 55. 1. All yee that thirst, come yee to the waters, drinke, and take wine and milke without money : yet he also sheweth that no man can be a sincere minister of his word, and dispenser of his grace, but hee that is ready to bestow his labour freely : & that all hyrelinges doe vnworthily corrupt and prophane the holy office of teaching. But this is not against free bestowing, that the teachers of the Church are maintained with publike stipendes, so that they do willingly & freely serue Christe and the Church ; and let their prouision for their liuing bee as it were an increase of their labour.

Math. 10.

9. Possesse not. Because the order of their ambassage was such, that Christe woulde that his Disciples shoulde goe throughout all Iudea in a fewe dayes, and speedily to turne againe to him, he forbiddeth them to cary burdens with them, which shoulde hinder this speede. But some doe thinke very foolishly, that this is prescribed as a perpetual law to the ministers of the word, or the Apostles. A little after doe followe very many sentences, which extend further: but it is certaine that these commaundementes of leauinge all lettes and hinderances are restrayned to that ambassage, which we sayd was appoynted for a time.

Further, that prohibition in Mathew of golde, siluer, a scrippe, and two coats ought to be read in one sentence, as it appeareth by the other two. Therefore I had rather translate it, cary not with you: because it was the Lordes will simply to forbidde that they should not take any thing with them for prouision for that iourney. At home they might haue scrippes, and shoes, and other coates: but that they might bee the lighter for the iourney, hee commaundeth them to leaue all burdens. Thereunto belongeth that saying of Marke, that they shoulde be shodde with sandalles. They seeme to differ in the rodde or staffe:

for in Marke a staffe is allowed, in Mathew and Luke it is denied, But seeing the interpretation of the Hebrew word shot is doubtfull amongst the Hebrewes though the Euangelistes did write in Greeke, they haue diuersly taken the word raddon. Therefore Mathew and Luke doe meane staues, which are a burdent to them that beare them: but Marke meaneth a staffe whereon traualliers do ease or rest themselues. And it appeareth that it was the maner of them that trauailed to cary a staffe: according to the which vse that was sayd, Gen. 32. 10. With my staffe I passed ouer this Iordan. In which words Iacob confesseth that hee came into Syria emptie, and not laden with riches.

10. For the workeman is worthy of his meate. Christ answereth a doubt: for that condition might seeme to be hard to goe through Iudca, not furnished with any prouision for the iournie. Therefore Christ willeth them not to be afraid of fainting for want: because that whither soeuer they should come, they should at least be worthy of their meate.

Hee calleth them labourers, (not that they were like the ordinary ministers, which doe dresse the vineyarde of the Lorde, and which in planting and watering doe apply themselues in husbanding of the same) but onely because they were preachers of a more plentifull and full doctrine. Neyther had they as then enioyned them any other office of teaching, then to make the Iewes giue eare to the preaching of the Gospell. Least they should object that they should be defrauded of their due foode, because that no man would acknowledge the for labourers: Christ preuenteth that difficultie also, commanding to enquire, who in euery citie was worthy of that message of saluation. In which words he commaundeth them to enquire whether there bee any godly and honest men, which haue any feare of God & religion in them, of whose aptnes to be taught there may be any hope, that they might especially offer their labour to them. For because it was not lawefull for them longe to tarie in euery place, it was meete that they shoulde beginne there, where there was some preparation.

11. Tary there vntill. This declareth also the hast they should make, for if they shoulde in any place haue made any longer tarying, they shoulde haue changed their hoste, least they should charge any one man too much. Therefore, when as Christ commandeth them to tarie with their host, vntill they go into an other citie, hee declareth that they must make haste, that they shoulde presently runne into an other citie, when they haue preached the Gospell in one.

12. Salute the same. Because they could not discern the true worshippers of God from contemners he commandeth them that at the entrance into euery familie, they should freindly insinuate themselues. For the saluation is a certaine entrance to speech. Now, they were willed to goe to such men as were knowne and reported to seeke after godlinesse. But because that it falleth often out, that they, which haue the greatest fame, doe bewray their owne vngodlinesse, when they shall be thorovly tried, it was meete that this commaundement should be added.

Therefore

Therefore this is the meaning, try at the first entrance, whether the hostes will gladly heare you: whofoeuer will gladly imbrace your doctrine, tary with them, that your saluation may bee confirmed: if any refuse it, depart presently from them, and as much as you can, pull backe againe, your saluation. For the phrase signifieth as much, as if he should haue sayde, because that through their vnthankfulnes they are vnworthie to enioy that blessing of God, which you prayde for them, breake off all communication with them. The name of peace hath relation to the maner of saluting, which the Iewes commonly vsed. For sith peace doth with them signifie a prosperous estate, they pray for peace to them, whom they desire to be well and prosperously, and whose good they wish to bee safe. I grant that the Apostles brought an other kind of peace to men: but their sight is to swift, which draw this place to the free reconciliation of God with men.

14. Whofoeuer receiueth you not. A seuered denouncing of vengeance against the contemner of the Gospell: whereby Christ would encourage his Disciples, least the vnthankfulnes of the world shoulde hinder them in their office. Hee commandeth his Apostles what he would haue them doe, if they fall amongst contemnners: yet this was his especiall purpose, to comfort them in their sorrow and wearines, if their doctrine were any where refused, least they should faint in the midst of their course. And wee see how Paule, 2. Cor. 2. 15. vsing this comfort, doth boldly despise all contempt of men, doth constantly go forward through all lets, and doth glory that he is a sweete fauour to God, though hee is deadly to them that perish. But this place teacheth how much the Lord esteemeth his Gospell: and certainly, sith it is an incomparable treasure, they are too much and vilely vnthankfull, which refuse the same, being offered vnto them.

Further, when as it is the scepter of his kingdome, it cannot be reiected but with manifest reproch to him. Shake off the dust. As the Lord doth here commend the doctrine of the Gospell, that all men might receiue the same with reuerence, and striketh a feare vnto the rebellious by this greiuous decree of vengeance for them: so hee commaundeth his Apostles to be the declarers of that vengeance, which he appointeth, which cannot bee, but that they should bee enflamed with a moste vehement zeale to vtter that doctrine, which they preach. Therefore it is to be noted, that no man can be a fit teacher of the heauenly doctrine, but he that is so affected, that he is vexed and tormented at the contempt of the same. It is probable that the Iewes then vsed to shake of the dust, as a figure of cursing, as if they did it to witnes, that the inhabitants of the place were so wicked, that they infected the earth with their contagion. I gather that it was an accustomed maner by this, that Christ speaketh as of a thing knowne. And this maner of execration doth the more confirme that, which I sayd before, that God was not more offended with any offence, then with the contempt of his word. Neyther doth he command vs after so solemne a sort to detest either adulterers, or murderers, or any other wicked persons.

15. Truly I say vnto you. Least it shoulde seeme to bee a vaine skarcrow, CHRIST affirmeth that they shall bee more greiuously punished, which contemne the Gospell, then the Sodomites. That is farre from the meaning ning of Christ, which some haue, imagining this to be spoken of the destruction of Hierusalem. For wee must vnderstand the day of the generall iudgement, wherein they shall both giue an account, that there may bee a comparison of the punishments. Christ nameth Sodom rather than any other cities, not onely because it excelled all in most haynous sinnes, but because it was consumed of the Lord by a wonderfull maner of destruction, that it might be an example to all ages, and that the name it selfe should be abhorred. Yet it is not to be marueiled, that Christ saith, that they shall bee more easily dealt with, then the vnfaithfull, which refuse to heare the Gospell. For when men shall denie authoritie to their creator and maker, neyther will vouchsafe to heare his voyce, but doe reiect him calling louingly, and will not belecue him, promising all things liberally: this wickednes is as the greatest heape of all sinnes. If that so honorable a punishment doth follow the repulse of so base or obscure manner of preaching, how terrible a punishment doth nowe remaine for them, which reiect Christ speaking with full mouth?

Further, if God doth so seuerely threaten the contemners, what shall become of those furious enemies, which fight against the Gospell eyther with blasphemies and a venemous tongue, or doe cruelly persecute it with fire and swordes?

Mathew. 10

16. Beholde, I sende you as sheepe in the midst of wolues: bee therefore wise as serpents, and innocent as dones.

17. But beware of men: for they will deliuer you vp to the coisels, & wil scourg you in the Synagogues.

19. But when they deliuer you vp, take no thought how or what you shal speake. for it shall be giuen you in that houre what yee shall say.

20. For it is not yee that speake: but the spirit of your father, which speaketh in you.

Marke

Luke. 12.

11. And when they shall bringe you vnto the Synagogues, and vnto the rulers and princes, take no thought how, or what thing yee shall answeere, or what yee shall speake.

The commandements, which Mathew heretofore set downe, do onely belong to their former progresse or iournie, which was in few daies to be ended. Now Christ proceedeth further, and he armeth them against the time to come that they might knowe that they were chosen to declare that message not for a short time, but that there remained for them a matter of greater weight, and of much more trauaile. For though they were not presently brought forth into these broyles, wherof Christ speaketh. yet it was profitable for them to be warned before hand, that if they the shuld abide any troubles, they might knowe, that these were but certaine preparations of a more harder way far, whereunto they were prepared prepared . This was also true in the first ambassage , that the Apostles were like to sheepe amongst woolues : but the Lord sparing their infirmitie , helde backe the seueritie of the woolues, that they should not hurt , peculiarly referring it to that time, which the Lord had appoynted to handle the more straightly. For they were vsed as marriage guesstes, the Bridegroome being with them before the resurrection : but after the Bridegroome departed from them that tendernesse and ease ceased, and their estate was then so hard, that they should then vnderstand , that they were not in wayne furnished before hand with these defences. Also it may be, that these wordes, which were spoken at diuerse tymes, were here by Mathew gathered into one place : for Luke , as we shal see after, reporteth that the same wordes were spoken to the seuentie Disciples, which were putte in the place of the Apostles.

But this is out of question, that they were not by these wordes fore tolde what successe they should haue of this iourney : which they nowe entred into, but that they were forwarned of the whole course of theyr apostle his

16. Behold I sende you. The exhortation which presently followeth dooth the we evidently whereto this admonition tendeth. Therefore the text ought thus to be resolued, you haue neede of wisdom and simplicitie, because you shall be as sheepe amongst woolues. But the reason is gathered of the necessitie : because except they doe wisely looke to themselves, they should bee presently deuoured of woolues, but if they were afraid of the madnesse of the woolues, or were not carefull, that they should not wauer, and so at length fall from their office. Wee will first declare what this meaneth, that they should be sent as sheepe amongst woolues. Although men are cruell and bloudie , the Lord could mitigate their crueltie, who tameth and maketh gentle the wilde sauage beastes so oft as he pleaseth. The Lord doth not bring a great company into the obedience of his Gospell, but leaueth them in the feircenesse of their wit, hee doth it of purpose that hee might exercise his ministers. And though all are woolues by nature, whom G O D doeth not regenerate with the spirit of meekenesse : yet Christ doth especially note the raging enemies of the Gospell, which hearing the shepherdes voyce , are not tamed, but are enflamed with greater crueltie. Therefore the Lorde sendeth forth the ministers of his worde on this condition , that they should liue amongst woolues : that is, that they shoulde haue many deadly enemies, and shoulde bee compassed about with many daungers on euery side, so that they shoulde hardly execute their office amongst so many leutes. And that their tryall might be the sharper, he giueth them no weapons wherewith they should violently defende themselves : but casteth them vnarmed and naked to the teeth of the woolues. For in that hee compareth them to sheepe, is not referred to gentle and quiet manners, or to the lenitie of the minde: but hee onely declareth, that they are nothing stronger, or more able to resist the violence of the enemies, then are the sheepe against the madnes of the woolues.

Christ also requireth of his Disciples that they shoulde haue mindes as sheepe, that they might sturue with patience against the malice of the wicked, and shoulde receiue iniuries quietly : but the simple meaning of this place is, that the Apostles had many enemies mighty and cruell, prepared against them, when as they themselues should be without al defence. If any man except that this Antithesis cannot after this sort stand betwene the sheepe and the woolues, the answer is ready. For though the Lorde by calling the enemies of the Gospell wolues, doth rather uete their power then their delight to hurte: Yet because no man is knowne for a wolfe, except hee waxe mad against the Gospell: therefore hee ioyneth these two together, that they are caried with a desire to suck bloud, and also that they haue power to performe the same.

Bee yee therefore wise. The meaning is, that the wisdom in taking heede shoulde to bee tempered, that they should not bee more fearefull then becometh them, and so become more negligent in their office. For wee see them which would be accounted circumspecte and prouident, to become very ty morous and slouthfull. It is meete for the disciples of Christ to be circumspect to take heede, seeing that daungers do hang ouer their enery where. But because the greatest daunger is, least they should through slouth waxe negligent, hee commaundeth them sincerely to go forwarde whether soeuer their calling shall carry them. And this hee declareth by two similitudes, when serpentes perceiue that they are hated, they doe diligently auoyde and flye from whatsoeuer is noysome to them: to the faythfull are commaunded to haue care of their life, least they leape into daunger, and throwe themselues into all perillies. But the Doves on the contrary parte, though they bee fearefull by nature, and are subiect to innumerable daungers, do waite as carelesse creatures while they are stricken, and commonly they cast themselues into the snares of the takers. To this simplicitie doth Christe exhorte his Disciples, least too much fearefulness shoulde hinder them in performing their course. There are some, which, as Phylosophers, will more subtilly argue here of the nature of the Serpente and of the Dove: but the similitude reacheth no further. Therefore wee see that carnall wisdom, or rather craftinesse condemned by Christe, wherein a great multitude of menne flatter themselues more then is meete, while they looke hether and thither about them so far as they can go. So while they will not cast themselues into daunger, they renounce Christ that callth them.

17. Beware of men. Erasmus addeth them: because he thought that the article had the force of a pronoun demonstratiue. But in my iudgement it is better to take it indefinitely: as if Christe shoulde haue sayde, you must walke wily amongst menne, where all things are full of deceits and daungers. But he seemeth to fight against himselfe: for this were the best way of taking heede, to do their owne businesse at home, and not to send them forth abroad. In answer, he noteth here another kinde of heedfulness, not that they should leaue their office for feare, but that they should not be troubled beyond measure with sodaine mischiefs. For we know that they which are assaulted vnawares, doe become as people halfe dead.

Therefore Christe commaundeth his to locke before what shall followe, that they might in time prepare their mindes to beare conflicts.

To be short, he foundeth an alarum to them, that they may the speedilyer prepare themselves to battell. For as too little forecast, & too much doubtfulness doth weaken many: so carelessse securitie doeth make many drunken, that they running on vnadvisedly, doe faint at the most neede. For they will deliuer you vp to the counsellors. Wee may easily gather by these wordes, that the contentions; which Christ now speaketh of to his Apostles ought not to be tyed to their first journey, wherein they found no such thing. But this is the purpose of his forewarning, that they should not at any time be dismaide: for it was a poynt of singular vertue, that poore men should be of a bolde courage: when they should come before Princes, and not be amized at any glistring shewe of the worlde. He admonisheth them also that they shall not haue contentions in Iudea only, but in places further distant, not onely that they might prepare themselves by long meditation for that warfare, but that being confirmed with their masters woordes, they should not doubt but that they were gouerned by the heavenly prouidence. That which is added for a witnesse to them and to the Gentiles, hath his meaning; the will of God is to bee declared also to strange Princes and to nations that be a farre off, that they may bee inexcusable: whereby it followeth that the Apostles shall not lose their labour: for euen where men shall be convicted for contumacy, the iudgement of God shall be shewed.

19. Bee not carefull. This is added for a comfort: for Christe should haue exhorted his disciples a hundred times in vaine, if hee hadde not also promised them that G O D would be present, and that through his power they should certainly bee conquerers. Heereby wee gather, that it was not the purpose of Christ in vttering these daungers, to diminish their zeale: whereby it was necessary that they should be the more enflamed, if they would execute their office rightly.

It is a great thing to come before Princes, for not onely feare, but euen shamesfastnesse also doth amaze the mindes of good menne. Then what if Princes should breake out, and almost thunder with deadly anger? yet Christ forbiddeth his to be carefull: because the spirite shall teach them what to say. For the more a manne knowing his owne weakenesse, distrusteth himselfe, so much the more hee feareth, except hee haue helpe from an other place. And wee see many which doe therefore faint, because they measure the successe of these things, which they take in hande to doe by their owne forces, which are very small, or none at all. Therefore Christ forbiddeth his disciples to looke what they can doe, and commaundeth them onely to depend and trust to the heavenly grace.

The question is not (here sayth hee) of your abilitie, but of the power of the holy Ghoist, who frameth & directeth the tongues of the faithful to a pure confession of sayth. And leait they should feare a present want, hee declareth they shall haue helpe: sent them euen in the very moment. For the Lord doth make the faithfull voyd of the gifte of vtterance, so long as he requireth no witnesse of them, and where necessitie shall require it, hee maketh them very eloquente, which seemed before to be tongue tyed. So in our time wee haue seene certaine martyres, which beeing almoste brutish, after they were called to make confession of their faith, they excelled wonderfully with the gift of speaking aptly and learnedly. Further, Christ would not that the Apostles should be without all feare: for it was profitable for them to be carefull to sue by prayers, that the holy Ghost might be giuen them, but he would that they should cast away that carefull meditation, wherewith men did much hinder themselues. For while they inquire with themselues what shall come to passe if this or that should fall out, they are vexed with miserable disquietnesse, and doe not rest vpon the prouidence of God. And whosoever will not giue this honor to the prouidence of God, that it is able in due time to supply their want such certainly are worthy to be tormented.

Mathew. 10.

21. And the brother shall betray the brother to death, and the father the sonne, and the children shall rise against their parents, and shall cause them to die.
 12. And yee shall be hated of all men for my names sake: but he that endureth to the end he shall be saved.
 22. And when they persecute you in this citie, flie into another: for verely I say vnto you, yee shall not finish all the cities of Israell, till the sonne of man bee come.
 24. The disciple is not above his maister, nor the seruant above his Lord.
 25. It is enough for the disciple to be as his master is, and the seruant as his Lord. If they haue called the maister of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call him of the household?

Marke.

Luke. 6.

40. The disciple is not above his maister: but whosoever will be a perfecte disciple, shall be as his maister.

21. And the brother shall betray. First, he admonisheth them how greiuous troubles doe remaine for them: then hee mittigateth all the sharpnesse by adding a notable consolation. First, he declareth that these things, which were wont to bee a defence, or to bring some ease, should bring an increase of greater miserie to his disciples: for the brethren, which ought to helpe the oppressed, to reach the hande to them that are in calamitie, and to prouide for their safegard, should become their deadly enemies. Yet they are deceiued, which thinke that this doth befall onely to the faithfull, to bee deliuered to death by their brethren. For it may bee, that the Father may persecute the soane of a godly zeale, if hee see him to bee an Apostate from the sincere worship of God. And in this behalfe the Lord commandeth vs to bee forgetfull of fleshe and bloud, and apply all our endeouour to the maintenance of the glory of his name. Neyther doth euery man spare his kinsfolkes where the feare and religion of God doth flourish: but he had rather they should all perish, if neede so required, then to haue the kingdome of Christ shaken, the doctrine of saluation extinguished, and the worship of God abolished. If our affections were ordered a right, this should be the onely cause of right hatred. But when Christ would establish the kingdome of God, and restore godlinesse into his perfect strength, but woulde also call men backe, from destruction to saluation: there is nothing more vnworthy then for that cause to hate the ministers of so comfortable doctrine. This, as it is a monstros thing against nature, might haue much troubled their simple mindes: yet Christ foretelleth that so it shall come to passe.

22. Hee that endureth. This one promise is sufficient enough to stay the mindes of the golly, although all the world should rise against them, while hee promiseth them a happy and a blessed end. For if the assurance of their purpose doth cary them to death, which fight vnder earthly captaines, being vncertaine of the end of the warre, shall men then doubt to imploy themselues to follow Christ to the end, which are certaine of the victorie?

23. And when they persecute you in this citie. He preuenteth that, which they might haue excepted. If the hatreds of the whole worlde were to bee borne, what end then at the length? Though therefore they could be in safetie in no place: yet Christ admoniseth them not to despayre: but where they are throwne out of one place, they should rather attempt whether they may profit any thing by their labour in an other place. And the interpreters are deceiued, while they thinke this to be a naked permission, when Christ rather commandeth his disciples what hee would haue them to doe. For he that hath abiden one persecution, would gladly take his ease as a souldiour that hath done his dutie. But Christ alloweth not such a vacation to his, but willeth them to run the whole course with an vnwearied minde. In summe, the Apostles are commanded to offer themselues to new skirmishes, least they should thinke that they had done their dutie, when they had passed ouer one or two. Neither doth hee suffer them to flie into corners, where they might lie ydly. But though their labour tooke not good successe in one place, the Lord doeth exhort them to goe forward. But vnder the commandement is also containyd a permission. And the flying of persecution is thus to be vnderstoode. For all that flye are not generally to be condemned, neither yet is euery flight lawfull. The heate of some of the old writers was too great in this matter, which condemned flight, as if it were a kinde of deniall. For if this were true, some part of the ignominy should redound to Christ and his Apostles. Againe, if it were lawfull generally to flye, there should be in the time of persecution no difference betweene the good pastor and the hyreling. Therefore that moderation is to bee noted, whiche Augustine prescribeth to Honoratus, least any man fearefully forsaking his standing, should eyther traitorously forsake his flocke, or giue an example of slouthfulness: and yet that no man should vnadvisedly thrust in himselfe headlong. If eyther the whole Church bee assayed, or that part bee followed to death, the pastor shall doe ill, if hee withdraw himselfe, whose duetie it were to oppose his life for euery particular man of his flocke: but it may bee sometime that his absence shall be beneficiall to the Church, by appealing the furie of the enemies. Therefore let in such a case, the simplicitie of the Dove preuaile, least nice men make a cloake for their fearefulnesse, as flesh is alwayes too wise in auoyding of troubles. For verely I say vnto you. That is not likely that some do vnderstand it of their first sending forth: but it rather comprehendeth the whole Apostleshippe. But herein consisteth the difficultie, what the com-

ming of the Sonne of manne shoulde signifie. Some menne expounde it, that the Gospell shoulde haue such passage, that all menne should know that Christ shoulde raigne truely, and that the restitution of the kingdome of Dauid should bee hoped for of him. Other doe referre it to the destruction of Ierusalem, wherein Christe appeareth as a reuenger of vnthankfulness. The first exposition is tollerable, the latter is more wrested: yet I do iudge that to be a comfort giuen peculiarly to the Apostles, Christ is sayd to come when he bringeth remedy to things in despayre.

The ambassage, which they were to vnder take, was wonderfull, that they should spread the doctrine of the Gospel throughout the whole world. Therefore Christ promiseth that he himselfe wil come before they shal passe through all Iudea: namely, because he will beautifie his kingdome, by the power of his spirite, that that glory and maiestie shoulde verily shine in the Apostles, which as yet was hid from them.

24. The Disciple is not aboue his maister. Now hee exhorteth them to patience by his owne example. And certainly this comfort is such, as swalloweth vpe all sorrow, while wee consider that our lot is common to vs with the Sonne of GOD: yet that hee might make vs the more ashamed thereby, he taketh two similitudes from the custome of menne. The Disciple accounteth himselfe honoured, to be made equal with his maister: and dares desire no greater honour. Then, that condition, which the Lords do beare patiently, the seruantes doe not refuse to beare the same. Sith the Sonne of God is both these wayes aboue vs, as hee to whome the chiefe authoritie is giuen of the father, and hath the office of a maister committed vnto him: let vs bee ashamed to flye from that, which hee himselfe disdayned not to take vpon him for our cause. But these things doe rather neede meditation, then exposition: because they are euident enough of themselves. Luke reporteth this sentence in his sixt chapter, not depending vpon the text: but vttered abruptly amongst other wordes. And because Mattheue doeth in this place declare very well to what purpose it appertaineth, I thought that I coulde not place it better any other where. But in the translation I followed neyther Erasmus, nor the olde interpreter, for this cause. The Greeke Participle doeth signifie as well a thing made perfecte, as art, like, or meete. Further, sith Christe speaketh heere of a lykenesse, and not a perfection, the latter sente seemeth to bee the better, as if hee shoulde haue sayde, there is nothing more meete nor conuenient, then that the disciple should frame himselfe after the example of his maister.

25. If they haue called the maister of the house. It is as much as if hee shoulde haue called himselfe the Lord of the Church: as the Apostle to the Hebrewes 3.2. comparing him to Moses and the Prophets, saith, that they were seruants: but that he was the sonne and heire. For though he vouchsafeth vs the honour of brethren: yet he is the first borne and the head of all the body: to be first, he hath the chiefe gouernement & power in his hand. Wherefore there is nothing more absurd then to desire to bee accounted amongst the number of the saythfull, and yet to grudge at God when he frameth vs to the image of his own Sonne, whom he hath set ouer his whole houshold.

For what nice fancies are these, if we would possess a place in his house, & exceed about the Lord himselfe? The meaning is, we are too soft & dainty, if it be hard for vs to beare the reproaches, which our Prince did willingly submit himselfe vnto. The word Beelzebub is corrupted: it should properly be called Baalzebub. So they called the chiefe of the feigned Gods of the Philitins, which the cittie Accaron did worship. And the lesser gods were called Baalim, which at this day in popery are called Patrons. And whereas Baalzebub signifieth a Patrone of a flye, or of flyes: some thinke that the name was deriued & taken of this, that the temple swarmed with abou'dance of flyes, through the plenty of the sacrifices. But I doe rather coniecture that they sought helpe at the idoll against the flyes, which were noysome to the place. For whē Ochozias superstitiously sought an answer of his health frō it, he called it so. Wherby it appeareth that it was not a name in skorne. For as godly men translated the word Gehennaz, to the hels, that they might note that place with infamy: so for hatred & detestatiō of the Idoll, they called the deuill Baalzebub. wherby we gather that the reprobate, that they might make christ the more detestable, noted him with the greatest infamy they could, as by calling him a deuill, who should bee the greatest enemy of religion. Wherfore, if it befall vs to be touched with the same ignominy, it ought not to seeme strange to vs, to haue that fulfilled in the mēbers, which began in the head.

Mat. 10.

26. Feare them not therefore: for there is nothing covered, that shall not be disclosed, nor hid, that shall not be knowne.

27. What I tell you in darknesse, that speake yee in the light: and what yee heare in the eare, that preach yee on the houses.

28. And feare ye not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soule: but rather feare him, which is able to destroy both soule and body in hell.

29. Are not two sparowes solde for a farthing, and one of them shall not fall on the ground, without your father?

30. Yea, and all the haire of your head are numbred.

31. Feare yee not therefore, yee are of more value thē many sparowes.

Marke. 4.

22. For there is nothing hid, that shall not be opened, neither is there a secret, but that it shall come to light

23. If any manne haue eares to heare, let him heare,

Luke 8.

17. For nothing is secret, that shall not be euident, neither any thing hid, that shall not be knowne & come to light.

Luke. 12.

2. For there is nothing covered, that shall not be reuealed, neither hid, that shall not be knowne. 3. Wherefore what soeuer ye haue spoken in darknesse, it shall be heard in the light: & which yee haue spoken in the eare, in secret places, shall bee preached on the houses.

4. And I say vnto you, my friendes be not afrayde of them that kill the body, & after that are not able to do any more

5. But I will forewarne you, whome yee shall feare: feare him, which after hee hath killed, hath power to cast into hell, yea, I say vnto you him feare.

6. Are not fīue sparowes bought for two farthings, and yet not one of them is forgotten before God.

7. Yea, and all the haire of your head are numbred: feare not therefore, yee are more of value then many sparowes.

26. Fear them not therefore. When as the Apostles shoulde see the Gospell to be so contemptible, and that they should remember the fewnes of the beleeuers, they might also cast off all hope for the time to come. Now Christe answereth this doubt, declaring that the Gospell should be spread further, and that it shall passe through all the lettes of menne, so that at length it shall shine forth openly. For though this saying seeme to bee a prouerbe, there is nothing couered, that shall not bee disclosed: yet here it ought especially to bee restrained to the doctrine of saluation, which Christ sayth, shall bee the conquerour what soeuer men deuise to oppresse the same. Though he preached sometime openly in the Temple: yet because his doctrine was refused, hee yet lay hid as it were in darke corners, but hee sayeth that the time shall come when it shall bee vttered abroad, which wee know was done shortly after: for there was neuer any sound of thunder more heard in any quarter of the world, then the voyce of the Gospell which sounded throughout the whole worlde. And because this promise ought to comfort their mindes, Christ exhorteth thẽ that they should boldly and valiantly apply themselues to the same, and that they should not be afraid though they saw the Gospell as yet not regarded, but that they should bee crying preachers of the same. That which I reported out of Marke, was spoken peradventure at another time, and in an other sense: yet because there are read short sentences, I follow that which was most probable to me. For after that Christ commaunded there his disciples, that as burning lights they should giue a cleare light farre from them, presently after he addeth, there is nothing hid which shall not bee made open. And the light of the Gospell was lighted by the Apostles in darke places, so that by their ministry it shone aloft through the whole worlde. And the text in the eight after Luke is altogether like this. As concerning the place of the 12. chapter, it is not to bee doubted but that it answereth to this, yet in words there is some difference: for Christ commaundeth there, that the Apostles shoulde bring those things into light, which they had spoken in the darke: whereby hee declareth that they had as yet but whispered of the Gospell, but that the message which they did beare, was so notable that it should spread it selfe to the furthest partes of the world.

28. And feare yee not them. Christe teacheth his disciples to contemne death by a most notable reason, because that menne created to enioy the celestiall immortalitie ought to despise this fraile and transitorie life. For the summe tendeth to this purpose, if the faythfull would consider wherefore they were borne, and what their condition is, there is no cause why they should so greedily desire this earthly life. Though the sence of the woordes are more full and more plentifull, for Christe teacheth that the feare of God is vterly dead in them, which for feare of tyrantes doe fall from the confession of their fayth, and that there raigneth a beastly blockishnesse in their heartes, which for feare of death doubt not to forsake the same confession of faith. For the Antithesis betweene the two contrary feares, is to be noted. If the feare of God be choaked with the feare of men, doth it not appeare that we yeeld more to them then to God himselfe? Now hereof it followeth that the heavenly and eternall life being reiected, we cause that this only remaineth for vs, that wee become like to beasts. The power of eternal life and death is in the hand of God alone: him wee neglect because the feare of men doth carie vs away. Doth it not euidently appeare that the shadowish life of the body is more esteemed of vs, then the eternall state of the soule? nay, the celestially kingdome of God is nothing set by of vs, in respecte of the fleeing and vanishing shadowe of this present life. Therefore the wordes of Christ ought thus to be resolued: Knowe that you haue giuen you immortal soules which are subiect to the will of God alone, they come not into the power of men. And so your faith ought not to yeeld to no terrors or threatnings of men. For how commeth it to passe, that in your vexation the feare of men should preuaile, but because the body is preferred before the soule, and immortalitie is lesse esteemed of, then this transitorie life. Therefore in Luke there is an emphaticall repetition. Certainely I say vnto you, feare him. As if Christ should haue said, we haue no respect of God, so oft as wee giue place to the feare of men: contrariwise if we reuerence God, the victory is easily in our owne hands, so that no force of men should draw vs from our duty. Also the experience of all times teacheth vs how necessary this exhortation of Christ was to the ministers, & generally to all the godly. For there was neuer time wherein men haue not violently lift vp themselves against God, & haue endeouored to ouerwhelme the gospel. All are not armed with like power to caule & strike a feare of death: but in the greater nūber that monstrous crueltie doth raigne, which when occasion serueth, sheweth it selfe. Also Sathan doth oft suborne the giants, at whose fight the seruants of Christ do fall downe dead, except they be armed with this doctrine, to bee constant without shaking. But when as these two clauses doe ioyne together in one sentence, some that are vnlearned, do naughtily take this part frō the other, that men are not to be feared. For Christ (as was now said) opposeth the godly & holy feare of God, as a remedy against the peruerse feare of men, which draweth vs out of the right way. Otherwise the consequence doth not follow, if we feare God who is Lorde of body & soule, men are not to be feared, whose power reacheth not beyond the body. And that Christ attributeth to men a power of killing, is spoken by a kind of graunting. So God slacketh the bridles to the wicked, that they being puffed vp with the trust of their owne power dare do any thing, & they do also amaze the minds of the simple, as if they could do every thing. Therefore the wicked doe triumph in vaine, as if the lite of the godly were subiect to their pleasure, & God holdeth the bound, so that he restraineth their crueltie & violent forces, as oft as he pleaseth. yet by this permission they are accounted able to kill: because he often suffereth their furie weakely to creepe. Lastly, the sermon of christ consisteth of 2. parts: for that we might learne patiently, to beare the losse of this bodily life, he doth call vs first to the beholding of the eternal life & death. The by degrees he descendeth hither also, that the keeping of our life is in the hād of god.

29. Are not 2 sparowes. Christ proceedeth further, as I said euen now, though the tyrants become mad, yet they haue not any power ouer the body: therefore they do wickedly which feare the cruelty of men, as if they were not in the custodie of god. Therefore in dangers let vs remeber this second comfort, sith god is the keeper of our life, we may safely rest our selues in his providēce. nay he is injured if we count not our life to him, wherof he vouchsafeth to take the charge. But he extendeth the providence of god generally to al creatures, that frō the greatest to the the least he might shew that we are preserued by his defence. There is almost nothing lesse esteemed then sparowes ( for two were then solde for a farthing . or as Luke sayth, five for two farthings ) and yet the eye of God is watchfull to defend them also, so that nothing can come by chance vnto them. Will he neglect the life of men, who is carefull for sparowes ? But two things are here to be noted . for first Christ doth define the prouidence of God farre otherwise then many doe, which are not much vnlike to the Philosphers: which though they say that the world is gouerned of God, yet they imagine a confuse prouidence, as if God regarded not particular creatures. But Christ distinctly affirmeth that euery one of the creatures are vnder the hand and custodie of God, so that nothing is left to fortune. For certainly the will of God is opposite to chance neyther yet by this meanes is the Fatum of the Stoyckes established: for it is one thing to imagine a necessitie wrapped or tied fast to the manifold course of causes, and an other thing to make all the world and all the partes of the same subiect to the will of God. I grant that there is a chance in the very nature of things: but I say that nothing can fall in the blinde wheele of Fortune, where the will of God doth gouerne. Secondly it is to be noted, that the prouidence of God is to be considered, not as curious and vaine men doe vse, but that it may bee a helpe to our faith, and may stirre vs vp to call vpon God. For he doth not there fore teach that all the haies of our head are numbred, that hee might nouriſh the vaine speculation, but that wee might learne to depende of the fatherly care of God which he hath for this fraile flesh.

31. Ye are of more value. This is generally true of all men, for whose cause the sparowes are created: yet it is spoken properly of the children of God, which haue a greater right then by creation. But that dignitie doth not other waies appertaine to men then by the free liberalitie of God.

Mathew 10.

Mar. 8.

32. Who soeuer therefore shall confesse me before me, him will I confesse also before my father which is in heauen. 33. But who soeuer shall denye me before men, him wil I also deny before my father which is in heaue 34. Thinke not that I am come to send peace into the earth: I came not to sende peace, but a sword. 35. for I am come to set a man at variance against his father and the daughter against the mother, & the daughter in law against her mother in law. 36. And a mans enemies shall be they of his owne house.

38. For who soeuer shall be ashamed of me, & of my wordes among this adulterous & sinful generation: of him shall the sonne of man be ashamed also, when hee cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy Angels.

26. For who soeuer shall be ashamed of me & of my words, of him shall the sonne of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his glory, and in the glory of his father, and of the holy angels.

Luke 12.

8. Also I say vnto you, who soeuer shall confesse me before men, him shall the Sonne of man confesse also before the Angels of God.

9. But he that shall denie me before men, shall be denied before the Angels of God.

In the same chapter.

51. Thinke ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you nay, but rather debate.

52. For from henceforth ther shall be 5. in one house deuided, three against two, & 2. against three

53. The father shall be deuided against the son & the son against the father: the mother against the daughter, and the daughter against the mother, the mother in law against her daughter in lawe, & the daughter in law, against her mother in lawe.

32. Who soeuer therefore. He applieth that now to the present purpose which he spake before of the contempt of death, because wee must striue against the honour of death, least it draw vs from a free confelsiõ of faith which God doth straitly require, and the worlde cannot beare it. Therefore for this ende it becommeth the disciples of Christ to be alwayes strong and couragious, that they may be alwayes ready for Martyrdome. Further, though the confession of Christ is neglected as a light matter of the greater part of men: yet here it is accounted and worthily, as an especiall worship of God, and a singular exercise of godlineile. For if earthly kings for the greater defence of their glory and encrease of their riches, doe call their subiects to armes, why should not the faithfull defend the glory of their heavenly king at least with their tongue? Wherefore it is certaine that they doe quench faith as much as in them lieth, which suppress the same inwardly, as though the outwarde profession of it were but vaine. For Christ doth not in vaine call vs here his witnesses, by whose mouth his name should be renowned in the world. I say the will of Christ is, that the profession of his name should be opposed against all false religions. Because it is an odious thing, he teacheth vs, that no mans faith should lie choaked in the heart, but that it should openly shew it selfe before men. Who focuer auoydeth it and holdeth his peace, doth he not by dallying with the sonne of God, banish himselfe out of the household of God? There is required of the teachers a more notable confession of faith, then of priuate men. Then because all men are not indued with like measure of faith, as euery man doth more excell with the gifts of the holy Ghost, so ought he to go before in his example. Yet there is not one of the faithful which the Sonne of God will not haue to be a witnes. But where when, how oft, and how farre our faith is to be professed, it is hard to set downe a certaine law: but the occasion is to be considered that none of vs doe faile in his dutie in time. And we must aske also of the Lord the spirit of wisdom and boldnesse, by whose direction we may knowe what is couenient, and that wee may boldly execute that which is certainly committed vnto vs.

Him will I confesse. There is added a promise, which in this behalfe should kindle our zeale. The Antitheses are to be noted: for if we compare our selues with the Sonne of G O D, howe vile a thing is it to denie him our testimonie, when hee offereth his againe to vs as in steade of recompence? If we compare men mortall and of no estimation, with G O D and Angels, and all the heavenly glory, how much more excellent is that which hee promisseth, then that which hee requireth? For although men be vnfaithfull and peruerse, yet Christ esteemeth as much of it that wee giue testimonie to them, as if it were the companie of God and Angels. Therefore to amplifie it, it is sayd by Marke and Luke, In this adulterous generacion, least we should thinke that we lost our labour, because the hearens are not meete for it. Further, if the promise moue not any man sufficiently, there followeth a horrible threatning, when Christ shall appeare to iudge the world, he will denie all them, which vnfaithfully haue denied him before men. Now let the enemies of the crosse goe and please them selues with their owne disimulation, when as Christ shall blot them out of the booke of life. For who shall God acknowledge in the last day as children, but them which are offered to him by Christ? And hee declareth that he himselfe selfe will bee a witness against them, that they shall not falsly thrust in themselves. That which is sayd, that Christe shall come in the glory of his Father, and the Angels, is thus much in sense: his diuine glory shall then be shewed openly. And the Angels as they doe now compasse the throane of God, so shall they attende vpon him to adorne his maiesty. The place out of the 12. of Luke answereth to the text of Matthew. But that which we set downe out of the 9. chapter, & out of Marke, seemeth to bee spoken at an other time, but because there is no difference in the doctrine, I thought good to ioyne them together.

LUKE. 51. Thinke yee that I am come. That which Christe required euen now of his disciples every one of vs might performe for himselfe without any businesse, if all the worlde with one consent would subscribe to the doctrine of the Gospell. But because the greater part is not onely against it, but doeth also sharply resist it, we cannot confesse Christ without the variance and hatred of many. Therefore Christ admonisheth his disciples that they should prepare themselves to the battell: for of necessitie they must fight for the testimony of the truth. And so he preuenteth a double offence which otherwise might haue troubled their weakemindes not a little. Sith the Prophet promised peace & a quiet state vnder the kingdome of Christ, what should the disciples else hope for, then to haue all things quiet whether soeuer they should come? Now when Christ is called our peace, and the Gospell reconcileth vs to God: it followeth that there should be also brotherly concord amongst vs. Therefore to haue strifes and contentions kindled in the world where the Gospell is preached, seemeth not to agree with the prophesies of the Prophets, and much lesse with the office of Christ, and nature of the Gospell. But that peace which the Prophets commend, because it is ioyned with fayth, flourisheth not but amongst the true worshippers of God, and in godly consciences, and it belongeth not to the vnbeleeuers, though it be offered them. And there is nothing but they can abide, rather then to come in fauour with God: whereby it cometh to passe that the message of peace, doeth stirre them vpe into a greater tumult. For in so much as Sathan possesseth a kingdome amongst the reprobate, he is made at the name of Christ, and as soone as the doctrine of the Gospell is vttered, their wickednesse is whetted, which lay before a sleepe. So Christ who is properly the author of peace, through the malice of men, is the occasion of troubles. Hereby we learne how much the wickednesse is of our corrupt nature, which doeth not onely defile so incomparable a gift, but doth turne it to the worst. In the meane season if tumultes doe rise, where the kingdome of Christe beginneth to shew it selfe, let vs not be troubled as with an new or an vnwonted matter: when he himselfe compareth his Gospell to a sworde, and sayeth that it is a separation or make bate. Some thinke that here is described the punishment which is layd vpon the conteniners of the Gospell, that some of them should rise as enemies against others: but the text sheweth that Christ exhorteth here his disciples to constancy, if a great part of the world should dissent from them, and that with their voyce, as with the sound of a warlike trumpet they should stirre vp very many enemies to their armes.

35. For I am come to sette at variance. Heereby is more evidently perceived that which wee sayde before, that against the nature of the Gospell, it falleth out through the fault of the wicked, that contentions & tumults do arise. For that which Malachie 4. 6. speaketh of Iohn Baptist, belongeth to all the ministers of Christ, that they are sent for this ende, that they should turne the heartes of the fathers to the children, & the hearts of the children to the fathers. But the malice of the wicked bringeth to passe that they which were ioyned before, should at the hearing of the voyce of Christe, bee deuicid into two contrary parts, so that they should breake all bands of friendship. Further more Christ declareth that the world was come to that confusio, that all lawes of nature should be litle esteemed, & that no humanitie should be any more accounted off. For when Micheas complaineth 7. 6. that a mans enemies are them of his owne house, hee bewaileth an extreme and a sore corruption. Christ declareth that the same shall come to passe, where his doctrine shall be vttered, which otherwise were not to be beleued. Yet he doth not meane that this shall be alwayes, as some froward men do dreame that they can not otherwise be good disciples of his, except they bee deuicid from their parents, children & wiues, but al lawfull fellowship is rather sanctified by the vntity of faith. Christ onely giueth warning, that it becōmeth not his disciples to be troubled so oft as y falleth out.

Matth. 10.

37. He that loveth father or mother more then mee, is not worthy of mee. And hee that loveth sonne or daughter more then me, is not worthy of me.
38. And hee that taketh not his crosse, and followeth after mee, is not worthy of mee.
39. He that will saue his life, shall lose it: & hee that loseth his life for my sake, shall saue it.
40. He that receiveth you, receiveth me, and hee that receiveth mee: receiveth him that sent mee.
41. He that receiveth a Prophet in the name of a Prophet, shall receive a Prophets reward, and hee that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous manne, shall receive the reward of a righteous man.
42. And who soever shall give vnto one of these litle ones to drinke, a cup of colde water onely, in the name of a disciple: verily I say vnto you, hee shall not lose his reward.

Mar. 9.

41. And who soever shall give you a cup of water to drinke for my names sake, because ye be long to christ verily I say vnto you, hee shall not lose his reward.

Luke. 14.

25. Now there went great multitudes with him, and hee turned & said vnto them.
26. If any man come to me, and hate not his father and mother, and wife and children, and brethren, and sisters: yea and his owne life also, he cannot be my disciple.
27. And who soever beareth not his crosse, & commeth after me, cannot be my disciple.
28. For which of you minding to builde a tower, sitteth not down before, & counteth the cost, whether he haue sufficient to performe it.
29. Least that after he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to performe it, all that beholde it, begin to mocke him.
30. saying: this man began to builde, and was not able to make an end?
31. Or, what king going to warre against another king, sitteth not downe first, and taketh not counsel, whether he be able with ten thousand, to meete him that commeth against him with twenty thousand?
32. Or else while he is yet a great way off, he sendeth an ambassage, and desireth conditions of peace.
33. So likewise who soever hee bee of you, that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple.

37. He that loueth. Because this is very sharpe and repugnant to the sense of nature, to make them his enemies which should be most his freinds: therefore Christ sayth now that we cannot of any other condition be his disciples. He doth not command vs to lay from vs humane affections, he doth not forbid, but that euery man may performe due beneuolence to his freindes: but hee onely willeth that what mutuall loue soeuer there is amongst men, should be brought into order, that godlinesse may haue the cheife prehemience. Therefore let the husband loue his wife, the father, the sonne, and againe the sonne: the father, so that the loue towards men do not ouerwhelm that duty which is due to Christ. For as amongst men themselues, some (as we are tied vnto them with a straighter band) are more loued then others, sower it an vnworthy act if Christ alone should not be preferred before them all. And certainly we doe not sufficient-ly account with thankfull minde what it is to be a discipl of Christ, except the excellencie of this dignitie doe preuaile to bringe vnder all the affections of the flesh. Luke hath a harder speach, Who soeuer hateth not his father; but the sense is the same, If the loue of our freindes doth hinder vs from following Christ, it must be mightily withstood. As Paul sayth to the Philip: 3. 8. that he accounted things losse for Christs sake, which he esteemed before as aduantage to him, & that he lost all those things willingly.

38. He that taketh not vp his crosse. He proceedeth from a particular to the generall, that wee might know that wee cannot otherwise bee accounted for his disciples, except wee be prepared to beare many dangers. If it torment vs and weke vs, that wee haue discord for the cause of the Gospelly with father, or wife or children, let this condition come to our memorie, that Christ dedicateth all his disciples to the crosse. Yet let vs remember this comfort, that in bearing the crosse, we become the fellowes of Christ: so it shall come to passe, that all bitterness shall easily become pleasant. The reprobate are no lesse tied to their crosse, and cannot shake it off, striue they neuer so much: but because the crosse without CHRIST is accursed, there remaineth for them an unhappie ende. Wherefore let vs learne to knit these two together, the faithfull must take vp the crosse that they may follow the maister: that is, that they may conforme themselves after his example, and as faithfull companions walke in his steps.

39. He that will saue his life. Least the former doctrine (as it is very hard and troublesome to flesh) should of it selfe worke but small effect, Christ in this sentence confirmeth the same two wayes. For he sayth that they are to warie and prouident: when they shall with themselves thinke they haue preserved their life best, they are deceiued, and they haue loste the same. Againe, they which neglect life, shall loose nothing, because they shall saue the same. Wee knowe that all things are done and omitted for life sake: there is suche a loue of the same planted in vs: wherefore it was necessary for Christ, that hee might encourage his to contemne death, so to promise and to threaten. To finde life, signifieth in this place to possesse the same as vnder a safe custody: for they which are too couetous of earthly life; while they keepe themselves out of all perils, they please themselves with a vaine trust, as if they had well provided for themselves, but their life fenced with suche defences, shall fleece away, because at length they must die, and death shall be to them destruction.

On the contrary part where the faithfull doe offer themselves to death, their soule which seemeth at that present to vanishe away, is restored to a better life. Furthermore, because there are some found which sometime do loose their life, eyther for ambition sake, or for a furie, Christ expressly declareth the cause why we should suffer death. It is doubtfull whether this sermon was made at another time, which Luke declareth. The Lord doth there also exhort his disciples to beare the crosse, but not in so long a sermon. Also for the confirming of this sentence he addeth presently two similitudes, whereof there is no mention made in Mathew: but for the consent in the summe of the matter, I made no doubt to bring those things which are found in Luke hither.

L V K E. 18. Which of you is it, minding. Least it should bee troublesome to any man to follow Christ on this condition, that hee should renounce all his desires, there is a profitable admonition proposed, that men should meditate before hand what the profession of the Gospell doth require. For heereof it cometh to passe that many doe fall away, at all light temptations, because they fancied to themselves meeer wanton delights, as though they should alwayes be in the shade and in idlenes. Therefore he shall neuer be a fit seruant of Christ except he prepare himselfe to the war a long time before. Now for this purpose doe the similitudes very well agree. It is a matter full of trouble and wearines to builde, and also smally welcome by reason of the charge: also no man taketh war vpon him, but against his will, because it bringeth with it so many discomforties, and threatneth almost ruine to mankinde: and yet the profit of dwelling allureth men that they doubt not, to lay out their substance: necessitie also compelleth, so that they refuse no expences in making wars. But there remaineth a farre more excellent reward for the builders of the temple of God; and for them which giue their names to the warres of Christ. For Christians doe neither labour for a transitorie building, nor fight for a vaine triumph. But that saying of Christ: If any king be vnable to beare the brunt of batteil, least he bee ouercome with shame, let him seeke peace with the enemy: cannot be applyed to this present purpose, as if wee might make any reconciliation with the spirituall enemy if riches and forces doe faile vs. For it were a fond thing to wrest all particular clauses in parables to the matter which is handled. But the Lord simply meaneth that we should so be furnished, least wee being taken without iust offence, doe shamefully turne our backs. Neyther is euerie one of vs a king, which doth make warre with his own forces. And as their rashnes is reprov'd by this doctrine, which foolishly leape beyonde their measure, or make themselves pleasures, not thinking of bearing the crosse so wee must beware least this meditation whereto Christ exhorteth vs, doe feare vs, or slacke our forwardnesse. Many because they haue not presently taught themselves the law of patience, euen from the prisons, they, through nicenes returne back fro the course of their race: for they wil not abide to be Christians of any other condition, then that they may be free from the crosse. Others, while they haue proposed vnto them a condition hard & vnfauorice to the flesh, dare not come to Christ. But there is no cause why the knowledge of our want should discourage vs, whom the Lord doth helpe in time. Certainly I grant, if wee account the charges, wee are all so poore and weake, that wee can not lay one stone, or draw the sword against the enemy. But sith the Lord from heaven will giue vs matter, costes, weapons and forces, our sluggishnesse or slouthfullnes shall haue no pretence of the hardnes. Therefore the purpose of Christ is to admonish his of bearing the crosse, that they may gird themselves with strength.

33. So likewise who soeuer hee bee of you, that forsaketh not. This clause doeth shew what the accounting of the charges doeth meane, whereat Christ commandeth his to begin: namely, that they must meditate of this account, to forsake all things. For in vaine they doe thrust themselves in, to professe Christianitie, which are delighted with a sweete and idle estate void of the crosse. Also vnderstand that they must renounce all things, which doe so preferre Christ as before their life: as also all the desires of the flesh, so that nothing shall hinder them from a right course. For if any man shall precisely vrge the letter, he shall deale preposterously: as though no man were the disciple of Christ, but he that should throw what soeuer hee possesseth into the sea, and so should be diuorced from his wife, and should bid his children farewell. By such fantasies, foolish men haue bene allured to monkerie, that being willing to come to Christe, haue fallen from humanitie. But no man doth more truly renounce all things which he possesseth, then hee which being readie to leaue all things at euery moment, doth imploy himselfe wholly as free and bound vnto the Lord, and passing by all lets, doth follow his calling. So the true deniall which the Lord requireth of his, is not settled so much in the action (as they say) as in affection, that euery man liuing for a day, should not set his heart vpon that which hee governeth with his hand.

M A T. 40. He that receiueth you. This is an other comfort, that though a great part of the world be offended with the disciples of Christe, so that they should prouoke the hatreds of all men against them: yet the Lord, that he might allure many to shew kindnesse to them, disdaineth not to account it as receiued to his owne tables, what soeuer is giuen to them. For thereby it appeareth howe much he loueth them, while hee suffereth what things soeuer were done to them, to bee imputed to himselfe. Also hee doeth not speake so much of the receiuing of the doctrine as of the men. I grant that this latter doth depend of the former: but the purpose of Christ is to be considered: for his mind was to speake, that which he saw most apt and fit for the helping of their infirmitie. If any man should receiue them louingly, and should gently helpe them he would accept that kindnesse as to himselfe, as if hee had bene liberally entreated in their person: and not so onely but they offered a sacrifice of a good fauour vnto God the father.

41. He that receiueth a Prophet. Hee beginneth at the Prophets, but descending at length to the lowest degree, he comprehendeth all his disciples, Therefore he commendeth without exception the true worshippers of God, and the louers of his Gospell. And to receiue in the name of a Prophet and of a righteous man, signifieth as much as to do them good for the honour of the Gospell, and in respect of godlines. For though God commandeth vs to doe the duties of charitic to all mankind: yet for good cause he preferreth his about the rest, that there may be an especiall care and regard had of them.

Some thinke that here is noted a mutuall recópence, that is, that the Prophet of God should giue spirituall things for earthly giſtes: but if this exposition be receiued, what shall be the reward of the iust? Others vnderſtād that they shall be partakers of the same reward which is laid vp for the Prophets and the righteous, because they had bene liberall towards them. Many reſerre it to the communion of Saintes, that as by our liberalitie wee declare that wee are one body with the seruants of Christ, so by this meanes wee are made partakers of all good things, which Christ communicateth amongst the members of his body. I do more simply take it for a reward which is fit for the worthinesse of the person vpon whom the liberalitie shall be bestowed. For Christ meaneth that this shall be a notable declaration, how much he esteemeth his Prophets & society of his disciples: for by the large reward it shall appeare, that none of that was lost, which was bestowed vpon thē. And he amplifieth the matter in that he promiſeth a reward euen for the meanest deeds, as that is, to giue a cup of colde water. He calleth not only thē litle ones, which are the last & of least account in the Church, but al his disciples which are troden down by the prid of the world

Matthew

Marke 6.

Luke 9.

12. And they went out and preached that men should amend their liues.

13. And they cast out many devils: & they anointed many that were sicke (with oyle) and healed them.

6. And they went out, and went through every towne preaching the Gospell, and healing every where.

12. And they went out and preached. Mathew passeth ouer with silence what the Apostles did: Marke & Luke do declare that they went about to exercise the office laid vpon them: by whose words that which I sayd, doth more euidently appeare, that this office which Christ then layd vpon them, was but for a time, & that of a few dayes. For they say that they went through cities and townes, and it is not to bee doubted but that shortly after they returned to their maister, as shall be shewed in an other place. This onely needeth to be interpreted, that Marke reporteth, that they annointed many that were sicke with oyle. For it is demanded, for what purpose they vsed oyle, sith Christ had giuen them power of healing. Some learned men thinke that it was a kinde of medicine. And I grant that oyle was much vsed in those countries, but there is nothing more vnlikely, then that the Apostles should vse ordinarie and naturall remedies which should darken with cloudes the miracles of Christ. For they were not instructed by the Lord in the Arte and skill of sargerie, but they are rather commanded to worke miracles which should stirre vp all Iudea. Therefore I thinke that this was a visible signe of spirituall grace, wherby they declared that the healing proceeded of the secret power of God, whose ministers they were: for it was vsed vnder the law, by oyle to figure the grace of the spirit. But howe preposterously they imitated the Apostles, which established in the Church a perpetuall ceremonie of annointing the sicke, doth thereby appeare, that Christ gaue the gifte of healing to the Apostles, not that they should conuey the same by right of inheritance to their posteritie, but that it should be for a time a seale of the doctrine of the Gospell. And at this day the ignorance of the Papists is too ridiculous, which challenge filthily annoynting (wherby they bring them that are halfe dead to the grave,) for a sacrament,

Luke. 7

1. And it came to passe that when Iesus had made an end of commanding his twelve disciples, he departed thence to teach and preach in their cities.

2. And when Iohn heard in the prison the workes of Christ, he sent two of his disciples, and said vnto him.

3. Art thou he that should come, or shall we looke for another?

4. And Iesus answering, said vnto them: Goe and shewe Iohn, what things yee haue heard and scene.

5. The blind receiue sight, & the halt go: the Lepers are cleansed, and the deafe heare: the dead are raised vp, and the poore receiue the gospel.

6. And blessed is he that shall not be offended in me.

18. And the disciples of Iohn shewed him of all these things

19. So Iohn called two of his disciples, and sent them to Iesus, saying: Art thou he that should come, or shall we wait for another?

A little after.

21. And at that time he cured many of their sickness and plagues, and of euill spirites, and vnto many blinde men he gaue their sight.

22. And Iesus answered & said vnto them: Go your wayes & shew Iohn what things ye haue scene & heard that the blind see, the halt goe, the lepers are cleansed, the deafe heare, the dead rise again, and the poore receiue the gospel. 23. And blessed is he that shall not be offended in mee

1. And it came to passe. In this place Mathew sheweth nothing else, but that Christ ceased not from the course of his office, while the Apostles laboured other where. Therefore as soone as he had sent them, with their commandements to go through Iudea, he applied himselfe to teaching in Galile. But there is waight & force in that word commanding: for Mathew declareth that they had not a free embassage permitted them, but that it was prescribed and tolde to them what they should say, and how they should behaue themselves.

2. And when Iohn heard. The Euangelists doe not meane, that Iohn was moued with myracles, so that then at length he acknowledged the mediatur: but because he saw that Christ became famous, and accounting that the ful and perfect time was come, wherein his testimonie was approued in him, he sent his disciples to him. That is too absurde, that some thinke that he sent for his own cause also, as though that he had not bene fully perswaded and plainly taught, him to be the Christ. That is also a friuolous imagination of them, which imagine that when the Baptist was neare his death, he should demaund of Christe what message he should beare from his mouth to the fathers which were dead. But it is euident that this holy cryer of Christ, because hee saw himselfe not to be farre distant from the ende of his race, and that his Disciples remained as yet in suspence, though hee hadde bestowed much labour in teaching them, sought this last remedie to heale their infirmity. Hee faithfully behaued himselfe in this (as I sayde) that his disciples might embrace Christe without delay. Sith by dayly calling vpon, they had profited so little, he doeth not feare without a cause, least after his death they should fall away wholly: therefore by sending them to Christ, his will was to waken their slouthfulness throughly. Againe, the pastours of the Church are in this place admonished of their dutie, that they shoulde not endeavour to holde disciples addict or as it were bound to them, but to direct them to CHRIST, who is the onely maister.

John at the beginning professed himselfe not to be the bridegroom. Therefore which is the part of a faithfull friend of the bridegroomes, he offereth a chaste & apure spouse to Christ himselfe, who is the onely bridegroom of the Church. Paul 2. Cor. 11. 2. declareth that he had the same care: & the example of them both is proposed to all the ministers of the Gospell to follow.

3. Art thou hee that should come? Iohn taketh that for granted, which the disciples had learned from their childhood. For it was a common lesson of godlinesse amongst all the Iewes, that there should come a Christ, the authour of saluation and perfect blessednesse, wherefore hee moueth no question of that principie: but demandeth onely whether Iesus is that promised redeemer. For it behooued them after they were perswaded of the redemption promised in the law and the Prophets, to embrace the same offered in the person of Christ. Whē he addeth, shall wee looke for another? In this clause hee sharply reproveth their slouthfulness, which being taught so certainly before, should wauer so long with doubtfull minds. He also sheweth what is the nature & force of faith, namely, that being grounded in the truth of God, it loketh not about hither or thither nor varieth: that being content with Christ alone, it turneth not any other way.

Goe, and shew Iohn. As Iohn had taken the person of an other vpon him: so hee commandeth to carie worde backe againe to him, which should rather haue bene obserued of his disciples. That he answereth not simply, he doth it first for that purpose, because it were better the thing it selfe should speake: then, that he might giue his forerunner more free scope of teaching: yet he doth not giue him in his miracles a naked matter without forme, but he applyeth the miracles to their end out of the Oracles of the Prophets. And he noteth one place especially out of the 35. chapter of Esay, and an other out of the 61. that the disciples of Iohn might know that to bee fulfilled and performed, which the Prophet witnessed of the kingdome of Christ. In the first place is contained a description of the kingdom of Christ, vnder the which gouernemēt God promiseth that he will be so liberall and bountifull, that he would helpe and remedy all diseases. And it is no doubt but that he speaketh of a spirituall deliuerance from all euils and miseries. But Christ by outward signes (as it is sayde before) sheweth that he came to be a spirituall phisition to cure soules. So it came to passe that the disciples might depart without any wauering doubt, hauing a plaine answer without obscure or vaine circumstances. The last place is like to the first in this, that teaching that the treasures of the grace of God for the world were proposed in Christ, it declareth that Christ was peculiarly sent to the poore and the afflicted. And he alleazeth this prophesie purposely: partly that he might teach all his humility: partly, that hee might take away the offence which the wisdom of the flesh might conceiue at his contemptible flock. For as we are proud by nature, we esteeme almost of nothing, except it bee set forth with much glory. But the Church of Christ being gathered of poore men is furthest of all from that gay and gorgeous shewe. From hence hath the contempt of the Gospell crept into many, because it is not received of all great men, and of men of great dignitie. But howe ouerthwarte and wicked this estimation of the Gospell is, Christ doeth admonishe vs by the nature of the Gospell it selfe, when as it is sente but to the poore and abiectes, whereof it followeth that it is no newe thing, or ought that should trouble vs, if it be despised of all the mightie, which being puffed vp with their riches, doe leaue no void place for the grace of God: nay, if it be refused of the most part of men, there is no cause why we should maruaile, when as there is scarce the hundredth man, which swelleth not with a vaine confidence. And as Christ defendeth his Gospell from contempt: so againe he declareth who they be that are fit to receiue the grace of saluation which is there offered: and he calling louingly miserable sinners to the hope of saluation, he rayseth them vp into an assured hope. For it is certaine that the poore are called, whose condition is miserable and vile, and which are nothing accounted of. Therefore as euery man is most abiect and meane, let not his pouertie cause him to despaire, but let it comfort him the rather to seeke after Christ. But let vs remember that none else are accounted poore, but they that thinke themselves to be such: that is, which lie oppressed with the feeling of their owne pouertie.

6. And blessed is he. By this clause it was the will of Christ, to teach, that if any will remaine constant and firme in the faith of the Gospell, hee must resist and striue against offences which shall arise to the hinderance of the course of faith. But this is a preuention wherewith hee shieldeth vs against all offences: for we shall neuer want occasions to moue vs to refuse the same, vntil we list our minds about all offences. Therefore this is first to be noted, we must warre with offences, that we may stand fast in the faith of Christ. Neither is Christ wrongfully called the rocke of offence, and the stumbling stone wherewith many do fall. It is certaine that that cometh to passe through our fault: but he cureth this disease also, when he pronounceth them blessed which are not offended at him. Whereby we also gather that the vnbeleeuers haue no excuse, though innumerable offences fall out: for what should hinder them that they should not come to Christ? or what should offend them that they should fall from Christ? namely, because he with his crosse appeareth as one contemned and vile, being cast out with his crosse to the reproches of the world: because he calleth vs into the societie of his afflictions: furthermore, because his glorie and maiestie, as it is spirituall, is neglected of the worlde. Then, because his doctrine is contrary to our vnderstanding: also because that by the craft of Sathan many troubles doe arise, which defame and bring the name of Christ and the Gospell into hatred. Lastly, because euery man, as of set purpose frameth to himselfe a heape of offences, because that with no lesse malice then desire, all men withdraw themselves from Christ.

16. The law and the Prophets endured vntill Iohn: and since that time the kingdome of God is preached, and euery man preaseth vnto it.

7. And as they departed. Christ commendeth Iohn to the people, that they might remember that which they had heard of him, and giue credite to his testimonie: for his name was famous amongst the people, and they spake honourably of him: but his doctrine was smally esteemed, and they were but fewe which had respect to his ministry. But Christ telleth them that they lost their labour which went forth into the wildernesse to see him, except they would reuerently apply their mindes and studies to his doctrine. Therefore the meaning of the wordes is this, you went forth into the wildernesse, your lightnes was fond and to be laughed at, if your journey had not some certayne ende. But you neither sought the pompe of the world, nor had any other foolish thing, but your purpose was to heare the worde of God out of the mouth of the Prophet. Therefore that you may now shew what fruit you had of your purpose, let that be well remembered which he spake vnto you.

8. They that weare soft cloathing. They are deceiued which thinke that courtly daintinesse is condemned by this saying of Christe: there are very many other places, where the pride and immoderate glory in apparell is reprobued. But the simple meaning of this place is, that there was no such thing in the wildernesse, which should allure the people thither. For all things there were rude and filthy, which should bring nothing but a lothsomnesse: they should rather looke in kings courtes, for fine trimming which delighteth the eyes. Though he may seeme also after a sort to reprove the tyranny of Herod, for that hee held Iohn in pryson, because hee had freely condemned his incestuous marriage. Therefore he declareth that it is but a fonde thing to esteeme of Prophets according to the goodwill and fauour of Princes, because that flatterers doe raigne there.

11. Verely I say vnto you. In these wordes is not onely the authoritie of Iohn confirmed, but also his doctrine is preferred about the old prophetes, that the people might consider the right purpose of his ministerie. For because they accounted not to what purpose he was sent, it came to passe that they profited almost nothing by his doctrine. Therefore Christ extolled and placeth him about the order of the Prophets, that they might learne and know that he had some peculiar and more excellent commandement giuen vnto him. But that he in another place doth denie himselfe to be a Prophet, is not contrary to this title of Christ. For he was not a Prophet after the order of others, whom the Lord in times past had set ouer his Church as interpreters of the law, and messengers of his will: yet he was more excellent then the Prophets, because hee spake not a farre off, and darkely vnder shadowes: but he tolde them that the time of their redemption was at hand and before them. To the which purpose also appertaineth the prophesie of Malachie, which presently followeth: namely that Iohn excelled in this, that hee was the crier and the forerunner of Christ. For though the old Prophets spake of his kingdome, yet they were not placed as Iohn was before his face, that they should shew him present. Let the readers looke the rest out of the first chapter of Luke.

There arose not. The Lord proceedeth further, asmuch as Iohn exceeded the prophets, so much more excellent are the ministers of the gospell then he. They haue erred too ignorantly, which thought that Christ compared himselfe with Iohn, for he speaketh not here of the dignity of the person, but the excellency of the office is commended: which doth more euidently appeare by the words of Luke, there arose not a greater prophet. For the greatnesse is expressly referred to the office of teaching. In summe, Iohn hath so excellent a title giuen him, to that end that the Iewes should the more diligently obserue the message that he brought. Then the teachers which should shortly after follow him, are preferred before him, that the maiesty of the gospell might be preferred about the law, and also that message which came betweene them both. And as Christe would prepare the Iewes to receiue the Gospell, so it is meete for vs to be wakened at this day, that we may reuerently heare Christ, speaking to vs out of his high throne of his heauenly glory: least that hee reuenge our contempt with that horrible curse, which he denounceth against the vnfaithfull by Malachie in the same place. The kingdome of heauen and of God, is taken here, as in other places before, for the new estate of the church, because that at the comming of Christ there was promised a restitution of all things. That which I translated the least, is read in the Greek in the comparatiue degree the lesler. But after this maner the sense is the plainer, while it appeareth that it comprehendeth all the ministers of the Gospell. Also, that many being endued with a smal portion of faith, are far inferior to Iohn, this nothing letteth, but that their preaching may be more excellent in that it proposeth Christ the conquerour of death, and the Lord of life, which hath performed the euerlasting cleansing by his only sacrifice and by taking away the vaile, it lifteth the disciples into the heauenly sanctuary.

12. From the time of Iohn. I doubt not but that Christ commendeth the maiestic of the Gospell of this, that it was sought after with a seruent defire of many. For as God raised vpp̄e Iohn, that he might be a proclaimer of the kingdome of his sonne, so the spirite gaue effecte to his doctrine, that it might enter into the heartes of menne, and might kindle their zeale. Therefore it appeareth that it came from God, which so strangely and sodainly spreadeth out, and raiseth great stirres. But in the second clause there is added a restrainte, that the violent doe take it. For because the greater part was no more moued, then as if the Prophets had neuer spoken of Christe, or as if Iohn had neuer come as a witnesse of him, Christ declareth that the violence whereof he speaketh, is found but in one certaine kinde of men. The meaning thereof is, there is now a great concourse of men, as if that men would violently enter into the possession of the kingdome of God. For at the opening of the mouth of one manne, they doe not onely couetously, but with violent force they doe receiue the grace offered. And though very many are slouthfull, and are no more touched, then if Iohn should tell a tale in the wildernesse, nothing appearing to them: yet many runne with violent zeale. And to this purpose tendeth the saying of Christ, that they are inexcusable which contemtuously, as with cloased eyes doe passe by the manifest power of God, which shone as wel in the teachers as in the hearers. Yet by these wordes we learne what is the true nature and force of fayth: namely, that men should not coldly and for fashion giue care to God when he doth speake, but they should aspire to him with an ardent affection, and breake through as it were with a violent endeour.

L V K E. 16. The lawe and the Prophets to Iohn. Because the Lord had sayd that those things which the Prophets had foretolde (of the renewing of the Church that should be) was an entrance to the matter for the peoples sake; now he compareth the ministerie of Iohn with the law & the Prophets, as if he should haue said: it is no maruel if God doe nowe so mightily worke in the mindes of men. For he doeth not shew himselfe a farre off, as hee did before in obscure shadowes, but openly and at hand is he present to establish his kingdom. Hereof it followeth that they haue lesse excuse, which do stubbornly refuse the doctrine of Iohn, the the contēners of the law & the prophets. There is an emphasis in the word of Propheysing, for the law & the Prophets did not set God before the eyes, but only by figures they drew out as in a shadow, one absent.

Now we see whereto this comparison tendeth: namely, that it is not meete that men should be now so cold, sith God sheweth himselfe present vnto them, which helde the olde people in suspence by propheies. But there is no absurditie in that, that Christe doeth now number Iohn amongst the ministers of the Gospell, whom he had first placed in the midst betweene them and the Prophets, because his preaching, though it were a parte of the Gospell, yet it was but a certaine rudiment of the same.

M A T. 14. And if ye will receive it. Now hee doth declare more plainly howe Iohn began to preach the kingdome of God: for this is verily that Elias which was promised to be sent before the face of God, for Christe would that the Iewes should now see and know that great and terrible comming of God spoken of before by Malachi, sith that Elias which is there promised, doeth now execute the office of a forerunner. Also in these wordes (if ye will receive it) he reprooueth the hardnesse of their hearts, that are so maliciously blind in so great light. But what if he be not receiued, shall he not be that Elias? It

It is not the meaning of Christ to say that the office of Iohn doth depend vpon their likings: but after he had sayd that he was that Elias, he reproveth them of slouth & vnthankfulnes if he haue not that credit, which hee deserueth.

15: He that hath eares. We know that Christ vseth this sentence as oft as he entreateth of an earnest matter, which hee would should be diligently & carefully noted. Yet he also declareth that the misteries, whereof he speaketh, are not received of all: because that many of the hearers are deafe, or else haue stopped their eares. But because that man is not only hindered by his owne incredulitie, but that diuers do also hinder others, christ here exhorteth the childre of God, whose eares are opened; that they should bee diligent to consider this excellent mystery of God, and that they should not waxe deafe with the vnbeleeuers.

Luke 7.

16. But whereunto shall I liken this generation? It is like vnto little children, which sit in the markets, and call vnto their fellowes.

17. And say, wee haue piped vnto you, and yee haue not daunced, wee haue mourned to you, and yee haue not lamented.

18. For Iohn came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, he hath a deuill.

19. The Sonne of man came eating and drinking, and they say, behold a glutton and a drinker of wine, a freind vnto Publicans and sinners: but wisdome is iustified of her children.

29. Then all the people that heard, and the Publicans, iustified God, being baptised with the baptisme of Iohn.

30. But the Pharisees and the expounders of the law despised the counsell of God against themselves, and were not baptised of him.

31. And the Lorde sayde, whereunto shall I liken the menne of this generation? and what are they like vnto.

32. They are like vnto children sitting in the market place, and crying one to another, and saying, wee haue piped to you, and yee haue not daunced: we haue mourned to you, and yee haue not wept.

33. For Iohn Baptist came, neither eating bread, nor drinking wine: and yee say he hath the deuill.

34. The sonne of man is come, and eateth and drinketh: and yee say beholde a man which is a glutton, & a drinker of wine, a freind of Publicans and sinners. 13. But wisdome is iustified of all her children.

L V. 29. Then all the people that heard. This claufe is omitted by Math which yet bringeth great light to the text: for hereof Christ tooke occasion to reprove the Scribes, when he saw that they remained so obstinate in contempt of God. The summe of this place is this, the common people and the Publicans glorified God: but the Scribes, which gloried too much in the trust they had to their owne vnderstanding, made no account of any thing that was spoken by Christ. And this at the first sight much darkned and deformed the glory of the Gospel, that Christe gatherd not his disciples, but of the dregs and officouring of the people: and because that they which excelled either in shewe of holinesse or of learning, refused him.

But it was the Lords will to shew this spectacle, as an example in the beginning, least that either the men that then lyued, or the posterity that should followe after, should esteeme of the Gospell by the auctoritie of men that allowed of it: for almost all men are by nature bent to this sin. And there is nothing more preposterous, then that the trueth of GOD should be brought in subjection to the iudgement of men, whose quicknes of witte and sharpnesse of vnderstanding, is altogether nothing but meere vanitie. Therefore, as Paule sayeth, 1. Cor. 1. 27. God chose the weake and foolish things in the world, that he might ouerthrow the mighty and the wise from their imagination. But it is our part to preferre this foolishnes of God, (as the same Paule teacheth 1. Cor 1. 31.) before all the excellencie of mans wisdom.

They iustified God. This speach is worthy to be noted, that they are sayd to iustifie God, which with reuerence embracing his sonne, do subscribe to the doctrine brought by him. Wherefore it is no maruaile, if the holy Ghost doe euery where adorne faith with most excellent titles, giuing the price vnto it in the worshipping of God, accounting it to be most perfect obedience. For what holier office can be imagined, then to ascribe vnto God his iustice due to him? Yet this word iustifying doth generally extend to all the prayse of God: as if it should be sayd, that God was approued and glorified of the people, which rested in the doctrine which came from him. And as faith iustifieth God: so it cannot be, but that incredulitie is blasphemie against him, & spoyleth him of his prayse. But this phrase teacheth vs, that men are after this manner brought rightly to beleue, when they haue bid the wisdom of the fleshe farewell, accounting that nothing proceedeth from God, but that which is right and pure, not taking so much libertie to themselues, as once to murmure at his worde and his workes.

Being baptised. Luke meaneth that the fruite of Baptisme, which they had receiued, did then appeare: for it was a good preparatiue for them towards the receiuing of the Gospell, and this was a token of godlines that they had offered themselues to be baptised. Now the Lord leadeth them from that mean beginning to higher degrees: euen as the Scribes by despising the baptisme of Iohn, through their owne pride did shut vp the gate of faith against themselues. Therefore if wee desire to ascend to sound perfection, we must first take heede that wee despise not the least of Gods callings and matters. but let vs be humbly prepared to begin at the least elements. Secondly, wee must doe our diligence, that our faith though it haue a weake beginning, may by degrees dayly profit more and more.

30. They despised the counsell of God against themselues. The counsell of God is for honours cause opposed against the wicked pride of the Scribes: for there is a force in the word counsell, which deliuereth this doctrine of GOD from the contempt of men. But word for word Luke sayeth that they despised it against themselues. Neither do I reiect that sense, which others do rather allow, that they were rebellious to their owne destruction. But because the words of Luke are plaine, and that they are thus vsed oft, I had rather translate it in themselues: as if he should haue said, though they withstood it not openly and directly: yet, as they swelled with an inward pride inwardly, so they despised it in themselues.

31. Whereunto shall I liken this generation? Hee meaneth not all the men that then liued: but hee speaketh properly of the Scribes and their flatterers. Hee vpbraideth them, that when the Lord had attempted diuers wayes to draw the vnto him, they most obstinately refused his grace. But hee vseth a similitude which is taken, as it is supposed of a game commonly vsed by children: neither is this coniecture vnlike, that children leading seuerall daunces, did so sing one to another. And verely I thinke that Christe purposely that hee might overthrow the pride of the Scribes, tooke occasion to reprove them of children playing together, declaring that though they were neuer so proud, yet the song which children sing, while they play in the market place is inough to condemn them.

33. For Iohn came. When as this man liued an austere and straight life, founded repentance and sharp reprehensions, as though he sang a mournfull song, and the Lorde himselte, as with a merry and cheerefull song applyed himselte more pleasantly to allure them to his father: what cause should there bee that neither of these wayes profited nothing amongst them, but their yron obstinacy or hardnesse of hearts? But this place teacheth vs why there was so great difference in outward shewe of life betweene Christ and the Baptist, which yet did both apply themselues to one matter: for it was the will of the Lord by this varietie in taking as it were vpon him diuerse persons, the more to conuince the vnbeleeuers: for that he bending and transforming himselte to their manners, could not yet bend them. If that all excuse be taken away from the men of that age, which with obstinate malice refused both those wayes, which the Lord vsed to call them by, we also are in their person found guiltie: when as the Lord omitteth no kind of cheerefull dealing, or of mournfull & sorrowfull musicke to draw vs vnto him, wee remaine as dead stones. As menne not well in their minde, or out of their wit, are commonly called Lunatike. so they called Iohn, a man possessed with a deuill.

34. The sonne of man is come. To eat and to drinke in this place signifieth to liue after the cōmon order of men: as Christ saith, Iohn came neither eating nor drinking: because he liued not after the cōmon order of men, for that he abstained from the cōmon meates and common order of diet: which Luke expresseth more plainly in these words, not eating bread, neither drinking wine. Let them note this place: which thinke the estate of perfection to be in outward austeritie of life, & they thinke him to liue an Angels life, which liueth sparingly, or pineth away himselte with huager. For according to this rule, Iohn should bee better then the sonne of God: but this is rather to be holden as a rule, bodily exercise profiteth little, but godlines is profitable vnto all things, 1. Tim. 4.8. Yet vnder this pretence liberty may not be given to the flesh, to pamper vpp it selfe in delicacie & wantonnes: only superstition must be auoyded, least foolish men imagining perfectiō to be in these outward elements, they neglect the spirituall worship of God. Adde this also, Christ applied himselte to liue after the common order of mans life, that he might sanctifie godly temperance, and not nourish the superfluitie of others either by any shew or example of his.

35. But wisedome is iustified. This place is diuersly expounded by the interpreters. Some say that wisedome was iustified or acknowledged by the Iewes,

Iewes to be without fault, in that they being faultie in their owne consciences, and iudges of their owne infidelitie, were enforced to witnesse that the doctrine was good and holy, which they reiected. And they take the children of wisdom for the Iewes, who set out themselues with this title: Others do thinke that it is spoken in scorne: as thus, doe you in this maner approve the wisdom of God, whose children you boast your selues to be? But because the Greeke Preposition here vsed, is not properly referred to the partie, which is the doer, there are some, which expound it thus, wisdom is discharged of her children so that now shee is not by any law bound vnto them, as if the inheritance were translated to some other: as Paul sayth, that Christ was justified or freed from sinne, Rom. 6. 7. because the curse of sin had no further power ouer him. Some vsing a greater libertie interpret it more hardly, as that wisdom shoulde bee estranged from her children. But howsoeuer the Greeke Preposition be heere interpreted, in my iudgement an other sense is more apt: wisdom though her owne children doe vtterly despise her, doth yet loose nothing of her excellencie and dignitie: but remaineth sound. The Iewes, and especially the scribes vaunted themselues to bee the children of the wisdom of God: yet when they trod their mother vnder feete, they did not onely flatter themselues in so great sacriledge, but in their iudgement they would that Christ should also haue fallen: on the other side Christ sayth, though wisdom hath wicked and degenerate children, yet shee remaineth safe, and her credite and authoritie cannot bee ought impayred by their malice, which doe wickedly and maliciously slander her. But I haue not yet set downe that sense, which in my iudgement doth best agree with the place, and is most naturall. First, in the wordes of Christ there is a secret Antithesis, betweene naturall children and bastardes, which vaunt of a vaine title without a cause: as if Christ should say: let them goe on in their pride, which gloriously boast themselues to be wisdomes children in vaine, shee shall yet haue her prayse and her authoritie amongst her naturall children. Therefore Luke addeth this vniuersall note of all her children, whereby hee declareth that the resistance of the Scribes was not such a let to any, but that all the elect of God should remaine in the faith of the Gospell. For the Greeke Preposition, it is not to be doubted but that the same word is sometime diuersly vsed. As to omit many examples, when Christ saith, Luke, 17. 25. The Son of man must first suffer many things, & be reprooued of this generatiō. No man will denie but that there is the like maner of speaking vsed in the Greeke, in the other clause. Chrysostome also, whose naturall language was the Greek tongue passeth by this, as a matter of no waight. And besides this, this sentence shall thus better agree and answere to the former sentence, where it is said, that God was justified of the people. Therefore though many Apostates doe fall away from the Church of God: yet alwaies shall the faith of the Gospell continue safe amongst all the elect, which are indeede of the flocke.

Luke. 10.

1. After these things, the Lord appointed other seuentie also, and sent them, two and two before him him into euery citie and place, whither hee himselfe would come.

2. And he sayd vnto them: The haruest is great, but the labourers are few: pray therefore the Lord of the haruest to send forth labourers into his haruest.

3. Goe your wayes: behold I send you forth as lames among wolues.

4. Beare no bag, neither scrip, nor shooes, and salute no man by the way.

5. And into what soeuer house yee enter, first say Peace be to this house.

6. And if the sonne of peace bee there, your peace shall rest vpon him: if not, it shall turne to you againe.

7. And in that house tarrie still, eating and drinking such thinges, as by them shall bee set before you for the labourer is worthy of his wages, Goe not from house to house.

8. But into whatsoeuer citie yee shall enter, if they receiue you, eate such thinges as are set before you.

9. And heale the sicke that are there, and say vnto them. The kingdome of God is come neere vnto you.

10. But into whatsoeuer citie yee shall enter, if they will not receiue you, goe your wayes out into the streetes of the same, and say,

11. Euen the very dust, which cleaueth on vs of your citie, wee wipe of against you: notwithstanding, knowe this, that the kingdome of God was come neere vnto you.

12. For I say to you, that it shall be easier in that day for them of Sodom then for that citie.

1. After the feshinges. It may bee gathered by many circumstances that the Apostles were turned backe againe to Christe, before that these seuentie were substituted in their roomes. For the twelue were sent to stirre vp the Iewes in hope of the saluation at hand: after their return when there was neede of more diligent attentiuenes, there were moe sent out as second messengers, which shoulde euery where in all places spread abroad the fame of the comming of Christ. But there was no speciall ambassage committed to them, Christ onely sent them before him, as forrunners, which might prepare the mindes of the people to receiue his doctrine.

In the number of seuentie hee seemeth to follow that order whereto the people had heeretofore beene accustomed. That must be remembered, which wee spake of the twelue Apostles, that looke how many tribes there were in the flourishing estate of the people, so many Apostles were there chosen as Patriarches, which shoulde gather the members of the torne bodie together ther that thence might come a perfect restitution of the Church. The reason was not vnlike in the seuentie. We know when Moses was not able to beare the burden, hee chose vnto him seuentie Iudges, which should gouerne the people together with him, Num. 11. But the Iewes being now returned from the captiuitie of Babylon, had a counsell called synedrion, which they through corruption called sanedrion, which consisteth of seuentie and two Iudges. But as the common speech is in such numbers: so when they spake of the synedrion, they onely called them seuentie Iudges, and they were chosen of the posteritie of Dauid, as Philowitnesseth, that there might yet remaine some authoritie in the kingly stocke. Wherefore after many miserable murders, this was the last part of their destruction, when Herod had ouerthrowne that counsell, he spoyled the people of their lawfull gouernement. Furthermore, because their returne from Babylon, was a figure of the true and perfect redemption, the Lord nowe seemeth to chuse these seuentie preachers of his comming, thereby to promise after a sort, a restitution of their decayed estate: Yet hee made them not iudges with power, because the people was to be called backe againe to one head, but hee commanded them onely to goe before, that he alone might rule and gouerne. In that he sent them two together, it seemeth that hee did it in consideration of their weakenes: for it was to be feared, least they being seuered alone should haue had lesse courage then was necessary for the through performance of their office: Therefore that some should mutually encourage others, they are sent two together.

3. The harvest is great. I expounded this sentence in the 9. Chap. after Matthew: yet it was conuenient to be set downe heere againe: because it is heere vttered vpon an other occasion. For that Christ might thereby the better stirre vp his Disciples diligently to apply their labour, he telleth them that the harvest is great: whereof it followeth that their labour should not be in vaine, but that they should finde aboundance of matter, wherein they might exercise theselues. After he admonisheth them of dangers, contentions and troubles, and he commandeth them to girde vpp themselues, that they might speedely goe through all Iudea: then hee rehearseth those commandments, which he had giuen to the Apostles: therefore it were superfluous heere to load the readers with moe wordes, sith the full exposition of all these things may bee had there: onely they are to be admonished what this speech meaneth, Salute no man by the way. It is a token of great hast, whereas if any man meete vs in the way, we goe forward, and speake not to him, that might hinder vs, though it were but a little. So 2. Reg. 4. 29. when Elizeus sent his boy to the Sunamite, he forbad him to salute any by the way. Would Christ therefore haue his Disciples to be so vnkind, that he would not allow them to salute any by the way? No, but hee commandeth them to make speede, that they should passe ouer all lets. Luke also hath this onely, that the Disciples shoulde eate and drinke those thinges, which shoulde bee set before them. In which wordes Christ doeth not onely command his to bee content with common and meane diet: but hee also alloweth them to eate of other mens charges. And thus is the simple & naturall sense, it shall bee free for you to liue of other mens charges, so long as you shall bee in this iourney: for it is meete that they, for whose cause you labour labour should giue you foode. Some thinke that that scruple is taken away, that the Disciples should not abhorre or refuse any kind of meat. but Christe meant no such thing: nay, his purpose was not to giue them any thing in commandement concerning frugall diet: but onely to grant them in stead of reward to be fed in this their ambassage of their hostes that entertayned them.

Mathew. 11.

20. Then beganne he to vpbrayde the Cities wherein moſte of his great workes were done, because they repented not.

21. Woe bee to thee, Chorazin: woe bee to thee Bethsaida: for if the great workes, which were done in you, had bene done in Tyrus and Sidon, they had repented long agoe in sackcloath and ashes.

22. But I say vnto you, it shall be easier for Tyrus and Sidon at the day of iudgement then for you.

16. Hee that heareth you, heareth me: and he that despiseth you, despiseth mee: and hee that despiseth mee, despiseth him that sent me.

20. Then he began to vpbrayde. Luke sheweth when and wherefore Christe fo inueighed against these cities: namely, when he had sent his Disciples into diuerse partes of Iudea, to preach as they went that the kingdome of God was at hand: he considering their vnthankfullnes amongst whom he had laboured as a Prophet long time, and had wrought many miracles, and they not profiting thereby: he brake out into these words, as if he should haue sayd, that the time was now come that he would goe to other cities, sith he found that the inhabitants of that coaste, where hee began to preach the Gospell and to worke miracles, were a stubborne and malicious people. But not speaking of his doctrine, hee vpbraideth them, that they were not drawne to repentance by his miracles: for it is euident that the Lord shewed his power by miracles: to this end, that hee might thereby call men vnto him, and sith that by nature all men are set against him, it is necessary that they begin at repentaunce. It is well knowne that Chorazin and Bethsaida are cities situated vpon the shore side of the lake Genazareth.

21. If the great workes which were done in you had beene done in Tyrus and Sydon. Christ of purpose brought this comparison of Tyrus and Sydon, because they were infamous in wickednes, pride, luxuriousnes, and other sinnes, and euen their neighbours hard by them, that hee might pricke his councitriemen, the Iewes, the rather. For there were none of these, which accounted not the Tyrians and Sydonians for most wicked contemners of God. Therefore Christe amplifieth his curse the more, when hee sayth, that there was more hope of amendment in those places (where there was no religion) then appeared in Iuda it selfe. But lest any should moue curious questions of Gods secret iudgements, it is to be considered that the Lord applyed his words to the common capacitie of mans vnderstanding, comparing the citizens of Bethsaida and their neighbours with the Tyrians and Sydonians, hee disputeth not what God forsaue in secret counsell should become eyther of these, or of those, but what the others would haue done, as might by outward appearance be gathered. For that those cities were so corrupt in manners, and dissolute in behaiour, might bee imputed to their ignorance, that the word of God was neuer heard there, neither had they by miracles that calling to repentance: but the cities of Galile reproued by our Sauour, were hardened in obstinacie, as appeareth by contemning the miracles, which they had seene wrought abundantly amongst them, without any profit. In summe, the wordes of Christ tende to this purpose, that Chorazin and Bethsaida excell Tyre and Sydon in malice and outrageous contempt of GOD: and yet there is no cause to contend with God for passing by them, in whom there was more hope, and shewed his power amongst the wickedest, and them that were past hope: Whomsoeuer hee employed not his mercie vpon, hee iustly appoynteth to destruction.

Now, if hee withdraw his worde from some, and suffer them to perish: but that others may be more inexcusable, and that he sollicite and exhort them to repentance, by this or by any other meanes: who can therefore charge him of ill dealing? Therefore acknowledging our owne infirmitie, let vs learne humbly to reuerence this high misterie. For their proud & arrogant frowardnes is not to be borne with, which cannot abide that God should be accounted righteous, further then their senses can reach vnto: and they proudly refuse the mysteries of God, which of dutie they should reuerence: because it agreeth not with their reason.

If these great workes had beene done. Wee sayd, that wee are by these wordes taught the right vse of miracles, yet in these great workes is also comprehended the doctrine. For it is not to be thought that Christ held his peace, while hee shewed the power of his father: nay, the miracles were annexed to the Gospell to make them more attentiuie to the wordes of Christ.

In sackcloth and ashes. Repentance is heere described by the outward signs, which then were solemnly vsed in the Church of GOD: not that Christe esteemed these outward rites, but because hee applyed himselfe to the capacitie of the common people. Wee knowe that the repentance of the faithfull is not tyed to a fewe dayes, but they must dayly exercise themselucs in meditating thereof vnto their death. But it is not necessary to put on sackcloth, and to bee sprinkled with ashes euery day: therefore this outward shewe of repentance is not alwayes to bee vsed, but when that from some greiuous falling away men turne againe to GOD. And then sackcloth and ashes are shewes of guiltines: vsed to appease the wrath of the iudge, and doe properly belong to the beginning of conuersion. And sith that men do testifie their sorrow and their greife by this outward ceremonie, it is necessarie that the hatred of sinne, the feare of GOD, and the mortification of the fleshe should goe before, according to that saying of Ioel, 2. 13. Rent your hearts, & not your garments.

: Now wee see why Christ, when hee spake of Tyre and Sydon, ioyned sackcloth and ashes to repentance: whose inhabitants could not haue the Gospell preached vnto them: but he condemneth their former life, leaving them no refuge, but to flye to a sorrowfull shew of their guiltines, and humbly to seeke for forgiuenesse. To the same purpose also may the word Sitting be applied: for it signifieth a lying prostrate vpon the ground, which men forlorne doe vse to testifie and shew their mourning, as appeareth in many places of the Prophets.

33. And thou Capernaum. Hee nameth Capernaum especially, because he was so much conuersant there, that men thought hee had bene borne there. And this was an inestimable dignitie, that the Sonne of God should begin his kingdome and his priesthood there in that citie, and that hee had choen it in steade of a palace and a sanctuary for him. But shee was so drowned in her owne filthinesse, as if no drop of Gods grace had euer bene amongst them: therefore Christ pronounceth that the greater blessings of God they had, so much the more horrible punishment remayned for them. This place is diligently to be noted, that the prophaning of Gods giftes, because it is ioyned with sacrilege, shall neuer escape vnpunished. Therefore the higher a man is in dignitie, the more seuerely hee is to bee punished, if hee prophane the giftes of God bestowed vpon him: and then especially is there a horrible vengeance at hand, when wee (being enriched with the spirituall giftes of Christ) haue him and his Gospell in derision.

If they had bene done in Sodome. It is sayd before that Christe spake after the manner of men, and that hee did not shewe, as out of a heauenly Oracle, what he foresaw should haue become of the Sodomites, if a Prophet had bene sent vnto them. If this answer doe not satisfie the contentious: yet this one thing shall take away occasion of further quarrelling from them, though God had a remedie in his hand, whereby he could haue saued the Sodomites: yet he was a iust reuenger in destroying them.

L V K E. 16. Hee that heareth you. They are deceived, which thinke that, that is repeated heere, which wee had in Matthewe, 10. 40. Hee that receiueth you, receiueth mee. For Christe spake there of the persons, and now heere of the doctrine: that receiuing pertayned to the duties of charitie: but now hee commendeth that sayth, which receiueth God in his worde. This is the summe, that the godlinesse of men is tryed by the obedience of faith: and they that refuse the Gospell, though they glory that they are great worshippers of GOD, yet they doe openly shewe a wicked contempt of him. Furthermore, the purpose of Christe is to bee considered: for whereas a great part of the world, preposterously esteemeth of the Gospell after the dignitie of men and therefore despise it, when it is brought by men of a meane and a base estate, Christ heere meeteth with this peruerse iudgement. Also sith there is that pride almost in all men, that they will hardly submit themselues to their equals, or to them, whom they contemne in respect of themselves: and God appoynteth to governe his Church by the ministerie of menne, and chuseth the ministers of the worde oft times out of the dregges and offscouring of the common people: it was therefore necessary for him to set forth the maiestie of the Gospell, least it should become vile: because it is vttered out of the mouth of man. This therefore is a notable commendation of the outward ministerie, that Christ sayth, what honour or reuerence soeuer is giuen to the preaching of men so that it be faithfull, that God accepteth it as imployed to himselfe. Wee may profit by this commendation two wayes: for first nothing can better encourage vs to embrace the doctrine of the Gospell, then to heare that it is a most excellent seruice of God, and a sacrifice of a sweete smelling sauour, to heare him speaking to vs by the mouth of menne, and to submit our selues with that reuerence vnto his word brought by men, as if he himselfe should descend from heauen, or should reueale his counsell by Angels. Then this established assurednes taketh all doubt from vs, when wee heare that the testimonie of our saluation witnessed to vs by men, sent from God, is so to be receiued and credited, as if his owne voyce should sound from heauen. Contrariwise, to driue vs from contempt of the Gospell, hee addeth a seuerer sentence, affirming that they disdain not men, but him, and God his father, which disdain to heare his ministers, though they bee but meane men. And as the dignitie of those pastors, which sincerely and faithfully doe execute their office is highly here extold: so the pope maketh him selfe ridiculous with his shauelings, while vnder this pretence, hee would maintaine his tyranny. For it is certaine that Christ speaketh not, as if hee would resigne to men that right, which hee had receiued from his Father: but this is his onely purpose, to deliuer his Gospell from contempt: Whereof it followeth, that he transferreth not the honour due to him, to the persons of men, but onely to seeke that it bee not separated from his word. Therefore, if the Pope will bee receiued, let him bring the word for a warrant, whereby he may bee knowne to bee a minister of Christ, but so long as hee goeth on in his owne likenesse, that is, as a cheife enemy of Christes, and hauing nothing like to the Apostles, let him leaue decking himselfe with others feathers.

Luke. 10.

17. And the seuensie turned againe with ioy, saying, Lord, euen the deuills are subdued to vs, through thy name.

18. And hee sayde vnto them, I saw Sathan lyke lightning, fall downe from heauen.

19. Behold, I giue vnto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and ouer all the power of the enemy, and nothing shall hurt you.

20. Newer

20. Neuerthelesse, in this reioyce not, that the spirits are subdued vnto you : but rather reioyce: because your names are written in heauen.

17. And the seuentie returned againe. It appeareth that the seuentie disciples did not at the first fully and perfectly beleue Christes wordes, when as they returned reioycing, as at a strang matter and a thing, not to bee hoped for, that they should cast out deuilles by the power of Christe. But this authoritie was committed to them, & they had also a commandement: yet I thinke not when they went forth, but that they were perswaded that their maister had said nothing to them in vaine: yet after, when the strangnesse of the matter exceeded their opinion, they were amazed at those wonderfull sightes. But this commonly falleth out, that the faithfull doe only conceiue a certaine taste of the power of God by his word: then experience carrieth them into admiration. But what maner of ioy they had, shall more plainely appeare by Christes answer.

18. I saw Sathan. Christe leadeth his disciples from one speciall sorte to a whole generalitie: namely, that he commaunded his Gospell to bee preached to this ende, that hee might ouerthrow the kingdome of Sathan. And because the disciples tooke that example, which in experience they had seene, without further application, Christe telleth them, that the force and efficacie of their doctrine should reach further, and that the tyranny which Sathan exercised against all mankind should bee ouerthrowne. Now we conceiue the meaning of the wordes, when Christ commanded his Gospel to be preached, he did not attempt a matter, the end where of was doubtfull, but hee saw before that Sathan should thereby be ouerthrowne. Now, sith the sonne of God cannot be deceived, and this his foreknowledge belongeth to the continuall course of the Gospell: it is not to be doubted, but as oft as he raiseth vp faithfull teachers, but that he will giue like happy successe to their labours. Whereby wee gather, that we cannot be otherwise deliuered from the seruice of Sathan, but by the Gospell, then, they profit rightly by the Gospell, in whome the power of Sathan falleth downe, that they dying vnto sinne, begin to liue to the righteousnesse of God. The similitude is also to bee noted, which he vscth, that Sathan fell downe as lightning at the thunder of the Gospell: for so is the diuine and incredible power of the doctrine expressed, which so sodainely casteth downe headlong with violence the prince of the worlde, furnished with so great powers. Heere is also expressed how miserable the condition of man was, ouer whome Sathan triumphed, who raigned in the ayre, and held the worlde subiect vnder his secte, vntill Christ the deliuerer came.

19. Beholde I giue vnto you power. This is spoken by way of agrault, Christe denieth not, but that it is an excellent gift, wherein they reioyce: but hee specially warneth them to looke somewhat deeper into the matter, and not to stay at the outward myracles. Therefore, as their ioy was not conceiued of nothing, so he doth not altogether condemne it, but sheweth that it is not such as it ought to be: because they pleased themselues too much in these outward shewes, and did not lift vp themselues to heauen. And almost all the godly are sicke of this disease: for though they consider the goodnesse of Gods benefits with thankgiuing: yet they go not so far with the, as they ought, as with ladders to be holpe by them to clime into heauen.

Therefore they haue neede to be raised vp by the Lord, as with an outstretched arme, to be holden, that they fall not dovn vpon the ground, but that they should aspyre to a heavenly newnelle of life. Hee calleth all daungers the power of the enemye: because the deuill throweth vpon vs whatsoeuer he knoweth may make against vs: not that he hath in his power those things, which can hurt men: but because that he being armed with the curse of God, he endeouoreth to turne all his scourges to our destruction, & taketh them as weapons to wound vs with.

20. Your names are written. Christe purposing to withdraw his disciples from a vaine ioy, to glory & to ioy in eternall life, he leadeth them to the headspring & fountaine of the same: namely, that they are chosen of God and adopted to be sons. He might haue commanded them to reioyce, for that they are regenerate by the spirit of God, to be new creatures in Christ, that they are lightned in the hope of saluation, & haue the seale of the same giuen vnto them: But his wil was to set down vnto them the head, fro whence all these good things do come: that is, the free election of God, least they shoulde ascribe any thing to themselves. The benefites of God, which we feele in our selues, do giue vs occasiō to prayse God: but the eternall electiō, which is without vs, doeth shew more plainly, that the meere goodnes of God is the foundation of our saluation: Further, he saith metaphorically, that their names are written in heauen, meaning they are accounted before God, as sons & heires, as if they were written in a Catalogue.

Matth. 11.

25. At that time Iesus answered, and sayd, I giue thee thanks, O father, Lorde of heauen and earth because thou hast hidde these thinges from the wise, and men of vnderstanding, and haste opened them vnto babes.

26. It is so, O father: because thy good pleasure was such.

27. All thinges are giuen vnto mee of my father: and no manne knoweth the sonne, but the father: neyther knoweth any manne the father, but the sonne, and he to whome the sonne will reueale him.

28. Come vnto mee all yee that are weary and laden, and I wil ease you.

29. Take my yoke on you, and learne of mee, that I am meeke and lowly in heart: and yee shall finde rest vnto your soules.

30. For my yoke is easie, and my burden is light.

Marke.

21. That same houre reioyced Iesus in the spirite, and sayde: I confesse to thee father, Lord of heauen & earth, that thou hast hidde these thinges from the wise & learned, and haste reuealed them to babes, euen so father, because it pleased thee.

22. Then hee turned to his disciples and sayde, All thinges are giuen to me of my father: and no manne knoweth who the sonne is, but the father: neyther who the father is, sawe the sonne, and he to whome the sonne will reueale him.

Luke. 10.

25. Iesus answered. Though the Hebrewes doe commonly vse this worde answering, even in the beginning of a matter or speache, yet I thinke that in this place there is a greater Emphasis, and that Christ tooke occasion of the present matter to speake thus: and Lukes wordes doe more plainly confirme it, in that he saith, that Christ the same houre reioyced in the spirite. But whereof should this reioycing proceede: but that Christ esteemed the Church gathered of meane and contemptible men, as deare and as precious to him, as if all the nobilitie and excellencie of the worlde had bene gathered with their glorious shewes into the same? And the words, which hee speaketh to his father, haue more vehemencie in them, then those words which he speaketh to his disciples. Though it is certaine that in respect of them, and for their cause he gaue thanks to the Father, least any should be offended with the meane and base estate of the Church. For wee doe alwayes seeke after glorious shewes, and nothing seemeth more vnlikelie to vs, then that the heauenly kingdome of the Sonne of God, whose beautie is so gloriously described by the Prophets, shoulde consist of the dregges and offscouring of the people. And surely wonderfull is the counsell of the Lord in this, that he hauing the whole worlde in his hand, had rather chuse a peculiar people to himselfe out of the meane despised common people then from amongst the mightie men of the world, which might haue the better beautified and adorned the name of Christ with their nobilitie. But Christe heere withdraweth his disciples from a proud and disdainfull iudgement, least they should be so bolde as to despise the meane and base estate of the Church, wherein he himselfe delighteth and reioyceth. But, that he may with more force ouerthrow and ouerwhelme the curiositie, which heereof ariseth in the mindes of men, he listeth vp himselfe above the world, & reuerenceth the secret iudgements of God, that he might drawe other with him to haue the same in admiration. And truely, though this order of God farre differeth from our iudgement, yet too madde, arrogant and blind are wee, if wee once murmure when Christ our head doeth reuerently accept and account of the same. But now it is conuenient to weigh the wordes, I giue thee thanks, O Father. In these wordes hee declareth that he setleth himselfe in that decree of his father, which differeth so much from the iudgement of the world. There is also contained vnder these wordes a secret opposition betweene this prayse, which hee giueth to his Father, and the malicious slaunders, or frowarde barkings of the world.

Now it is to be considered, wherefore he thanketh his father: namely, because that he being Lorde of the whole worlde, preferred the babes and simple ones before the men of vnderstanding. For in respect of the circumstance of the argument, it is of no small force, that hee calleth his Father, Lord of heauen & earth. For in these words hee sheweth that this difference onely dependeth of the will of GOD, that the wise are blinde, and that the rude and vnlearned doe vnderstand the mysteries of the Gospell. There are many other like places, wherein the Lord sheweth that they are all freely cholen by him, which attayne to saluation: because that hee is the maker and creator of the world, and that all nations are his. Further, wee learne by this sentence two things: first, that it is not for wante of power in GOD, that all doe not obey the the Gospell: for hee is able to subdue all creatures to his power. Secondly, it is onely by the worke of his free election, that some become faithfull, & others remaine ignorant and obstinate: for hee drawing some, and passing by other some, doth onely make the difference betweene men: whose estate by nature is one and equall: Yet in that he chose the simple rather than the wise, hee had consideration of his owne glory.

For, as flesh is alwayes too proud: so if wise and learned men should go before, this opinion would presently take place, that men obtayned faith by dexterity, or by wisdom, or by learning. Wherefore the mercie of God could not otherwise be so manifest, as it deserueth: but by making such a choyce, as might plainly declare, that whatsoeuer menne bring of themselves is nothing worth. Therefore it is meete that the wisdom of man should be ouerthrowne least it should obscure the praise of Gods grace. Yet it is further demanded, who Christ calleth men of vnderstanding, and whom he calleth little ones. For experience teacheth vs, that all the rude and simple haue not faith, nor all the wise and learned are left in their blindness. Therefore they are accounted the wise and men of vnderstanding, which being lift vp with a deuillish pride cannot abide to heare Christ speaking from heauen. And that this is not a general rule that all they are forsaken of God, which in pride delight in themselves more then they ought, wee are taught by the example of Paule whose pride Christe tamed: yea, if wee descend to the rude common people, as the greater parte of them appeare to be full of deadly malice, so wee see them left together with the great and mightie men to their owne destruction. I grant, that all vnbeleeuers are puffed vp with a vaine trust of themselves, whether they apply themselves to be accounted wise, honest, honourable, or rich: yet I doe thinke that Christe doth heere simply comprehend all that doe excell in wisdom and learning, without noting of the fault: as againe he accounteth them not in respect of vertues to be little ones: for though Christ is maister of the lowly, and that this is the first rudiment of faith, that no man should be wise in his owne conceit: yet hee speaketh not here of wilfull wickednesse: but Christ by this reason amplifieth the louing mercie of the father, who disdaind not to descend to the lowest, and vilest places, that he might raise the poore out of the myre. But heere ariseth a question, sith that wisdom is a gift of God, howe commeth it to passe that it should hinder vs from seeing the light of God, which shineth in the Gospell. That must be remembered, which I sayde euen now, that the vnfaithfull doe defile whatsoeuer vnderstanding is giuen them: and therefore excellent wits are often hindered, that they cannot submit themselves to be taught.

But, concerning this present place, I answer, though wisdom be no light to the wise, yet they may be deprived of the light of the Gospell. For, sith that all menne were in one the same, and like condition, why should not GOD at his pleasure take these or those? And why hee chose not the wise and mightie, Paule teacheth vs, 1. Corinthians. 1. 27 namely, that hee chose the weake and foolish things of the world, that hee might confound the glorious pride of fleshe. But, wee doe note againe, that Christes speech was not generall, where hee sayde, that the militeries of the Gospell were hid from the wise. For, if of five menne of vnderstanding foure refuse the Gospell, one receiue it, of so many simple menne, two or three become the disciples of Christe, this sentence is fulfilled: which is also confirmed by that place of Paule, which I euen now rehearsed: for he banisheth not all that are wise, noble and mighty out of the kingdome of God, but only sheweth that not many of them shall be sau'd.

Now is the question answered, that wisdome is not here condemned, as it is the gifte of GOD, but Christe onely sayeth, that it is of no value to the obtaining of fayth, as againe' he commendeth not foolishnesse, as though menne were thereby reconciled to God: but he denyeth it to be any hindrance to his mercy: but that notwithstanding hee might lighten the rude and simple men with heavenly wisdome. Now it remaineth to declare, what to reueale, and to keepe secreete meaneth. That Christ speaketh not of outwarde preaching may be gathered by this, that hee offereth himselfe generally a teacher to all menne, and gaue the same commaundement to his Apostles. Wherefore this is the meaning, no manne can attaine fayth by his owne wisdome, but onely by the secret lightning of the spirit of God.

26. It is so, O Father. This sentence taketh from vs the occasion of vaine and wanton inquiringe, which ofte prouoketh and stirreth vs. For God requireth no harder a matter of vs, then that wee shoulde account his will for a perfecte reason and righteousnesse. Hee doth ofte rehearse that his iudgements are as a great bottomles depth: yet wil we run headlong with violēce into that depth: and if we finde ought that please vs not, we grudge and murmur against him: and many breake out into open blasphemies. But the Lorde hath prescribed this rule vnto vs, that wee shoulde account that to bee right, which pleaseth GOD. And this is to bee wise, as wee ought to bee, to esteeme of the one good pleasure of God, as of a thousand reasons. Christe coulde haue alledged the causes of this difference, if their hadde bene any: but beeing satished with the good pleasure of GOD, hee enquireth no further why hee calleth the little ones to saluation rather then others, and framed his kingdome of the obscure common people. Whereby it appeareth that they rage against Christe, which grudge when they heare that some are chosen freely of the good will of GOD, and that other some are forsaken: for it greeueth them to giue place vnto God.

27. All things are giuen to mee of my Father. The interpreters doe yll apply this sentence with the former, which thinke that the onely purpose of it is, that Christe shoulde encourage his Disciples with greater boldnesse to the preaching of the Gospell. But I thinke that Christ spake it for an other cause, and to an other end. For, as he saide before, that the Church came out of the secret fountaine of Gods free election: so now hee sheweth how that grace of saluation commeth vnto men. For many, when they heare that none other are heires of eternall life, but those whom GOD chose before the worlde was made, they doe curiously enquire how they may be certaine of Gods secreete counsell: and so they caste themselves into a laborinth, out of the which they canne finde no passage. But Christ commaundeth to come presently to him, that the certaintie of saluation may bee fetched from thence. The meaning therefore is, that life is reuealed to vs in Christe himselfe: and therefore that no man can be partaker of the same, but he that entreteth in by the gate of faith.

Now wee see how he ioyneth sayth with the eternall predestination of God, which foolish men doe so pecuilly compare together, as if they were contraries. For though our saluation be alwayes hidde with God: yet Christe is the conduit pipe whereby it commeth to vs, and is by sayth receiued of vs, that it may bee confirmed and ratified in our hartes. Wherefore it is not lawfull to shrinke from Christe, except we will refuse the saluation prepared for vs. No man knoweth the sonne He speaketh this for this cause, least his maiestie shoulde vainly be esteemed of, after the iudgement of men. The meaning thereof is, that if wee will know what Christe is, wee must credit the testimony of the father, who onely can tell vs truly and rightly what he hath giuen vnto vs in him. And certainly by imagining him to be such a one, as our minde in the imagination thereof conceiuech, wee spoyle him of a great parte of his power: therefore he is not knowne rightly, but by the fathers voyce, though the onely voyce sufficeth not without the direction of the spirite: for the power of Christe is so deepe and secrete, that men cannot reach vnto the same, vntill they be lightened of the father. Note therefore that the father knoweth him not for himselfe, but for vs, that he might reueale him vnto vs: yet the sentence seemeth not to be full: because the two partes of it agree not together.

It is said of the sonne, that no man knoweth the father but he, & he to whom he will reueale him: but of the father this onely is saide, that he onely knoweth the Sonne: but there is no mention made that he should reueale. I answere, it should haue beene in vaine to haue rehearsed that, which hee had spoken but now. For what doth the former thanksgiuing containe, but that the father hath reuealed the Sonne, to whom he hath thought good. Therefore that which followeth now, that no man knew the sonne, but the father, is as a reason rendred of that hee hadde spoke: for this imagination might haue risen: what neede was it that the father shoulde reueale the sonne, who hath shewed himselfe to bee seene openly? Now, that wee vnderstand wherefore it is sayde that the sonne was knowne of the father alone: it remaineth that wee should consider the latter part of the sentence: That no man knoweth the father, but the sonne. Also this knowledge differeth from the former: for it is not sayde, that the sonne knewe the father, because hee shoulde reueale him by his spirite: but in that hee was the liuely image of the father, hee sheweth him visibly after a sorte in his owne person. Yet I exclude not the spirite, but I referre the reuealing, whereof Christe nowe speaketh, to the manner of the knowledge, and so the text agreeth well together: for Christe confirmeth that, which hee saide before, that all thinges were giuen vnto him of the father, that wee mighte knowe that the fulnesse of the God-head dwelte in him. This is the summe, it is the gift of the Father, that the Sonne is knowne: for hee openeth the eyes of our mindes by his spirite, wherein wee see the glory of Christe, which otherwise was hudden from vs: but the father who dwelleth in light, whereto no man can reach, and is incomprehensible in himselfe, is reuealed vnto vs by the son, who is the liuely image, so that hee is sought else where in vaine.

28. Come vnto mee all ye. Now he doeth louingly call vnto him them, that hee acknowledgeth to be fitte to be his disciples. For though hee be ready to reucale his father to all, yet the most part neglecteth to come, because they are not touched with the feeling of their wantes. Hypocrites care not for Christe, because they being drunke with their owne righteousnesse, neither hunger nor thirst for his grace. They that are giuen to the worlde, make no account of the heavenly life: therefore Christe should call those two sortes of people to him in vaine. he turneth therefore himselfe to the miserable & to the afflicted. Also he calleth them that labour & mourne vnder the burden: neither doth he generally meane all the that are oppressed with sorrow & griefes, but them which being confounded in their own sins, and stricken with the feare of Gods wrath, are ready to fal down vnder so great a burden. God humbleth his elect diuers waies: but because the most part of men oppressed with miseries, do yet remaine stubborn & vntamed, Christ meaneth by men weary & loaden, the that haue their consciences afflicted with the guiltines of eternall death, and are prickt inwardly with their own miseries that they faint. for this feeblenes maketh vs apt to receiue his grace. For it is as if he should haue said, that his grace is therefore contemned of the most part, because few do feele their owne want: yet there is no cause why their pride or obstinacie, should hinder afflicted consciences which sigh for remedy. Wherefore let vs leaue all the which are bewitched with the sleights of Sathan, and do either perswade themselues to haue righteousnes without Christ, or els do imagine themselues to be blessed in this world. Our miseries do driue vs to seeke after Christ. And because Christ admitteth none to the enioying of his rest, but them that faint vnder the burden, let vs learne that there is not a more deadly poyson, then that sluggishnes which planteth in vs a false & deceitfull opinion either of an earthly felicitie, or of righteousnesse and vertue: therefore let euery one of vs daily stirre vp our selues, & first let vs busie our selues to shake off the delightes of the world: then let vs empty our selues of all vaine trust in our selues. But though this preparation to receiue the grace of Christ doeth discourage men: yet it is to bee noted that it is the gift of the holy Ghost: because it is the beginning of repentance, whereto no man can attaine of himselfe. Neither is it the purpose of christ to teach what man can do of himselfe, but onely how they ought to be affected which come vnto him. They which restraine this burden and this labour to the ceremonies of the law, doe tie the sentence of Christ too short. I graunt that the burden of the lawe is intollerable, and that it would ouerwhelme soules: but that must be remembered which I said, that Christ reacheth out his hand to all that be afflicted, that hee might make a difference betweene disciples and contemners of the Gospel. But that generall speach of Christe is to bee noted: for Christe doeth therefore without exception comprehend all that labour, and are laden, least any man through faithlesse doubting, should shutte vp the way against himselfe. And yet all they are but few in number: because that of that innumerable company of them that are about to perish, fewe feele themselues going to destruction.

The refreshing which Christe promiseth, consisteth in the free forgiuenesse of sinnes, which onely easeth vs.

19. Take my yoake on you. Because wee see that many doe abuse the grace of Christ, while they turne it to serue the wantonnesse of the flesh: therefore after Christ hath promised ioyfull rest to the miserable afflicted consciences hee also warneth them that he is a deliuerer vpon this condition, that they shoulde take his yoake on them: as if he shoulde haue sayd, that he did not therefore free the from sins, that they hauing God mercifull to them, shuld therby take a liberty to sinne: but that they being comforted by his grace, shoulde take on them a yoake, & that they being freed in conscience, they might keepe in bondage the wantonnes of the flesh. And hereof is gathered a definitiō of that rest wherof he spake: that is, it freeth not the disciples of Christe from the warfare of the crosse, that they should liue pleasantly, but it exerciseth the vnder the burden of discipline, & containeth them vnder the yoake. Learn of me. They are in my iudgement, deceiued, which thinke that christ spake here of his meekenes, least his disciples (as the cōming of mighty men is wont to be feareful) because of his diuine glory, shoulde flie from him. For he rather frameth vs to follow him, because that by reason of the stubbornesse of the the flesh, wee flie the yoake as a sharpe and a hard thing. A little after he sayeth that his yoake is sweete: but how can it bee that any man shoulde submit his necke willingly and ioyfully, except hee being cloathed with meekenes, he becōmeth like to Christ? Further, it appeareth that this is the meaning: Christe exhorteth his disciples to beare his yoake, least the difficultie should terrifie them, he addeth presently after, learn ye of me, signifying that that yoake should not be grieuous vnto vs, when we are by his own example taught and framed to meekenesse and humilitie. That also pertaineth to the same purpose, that he addeth, ye shall finde rest. So long as the flesh is at liberty wee murmur: but they which refuse the yoake of Christ, and endeouour to please God an other way, they doe weary and tire themselues in vaine: As we see the Papiſts doe vex themselves miserably, and they beare a cruell tyranny, vnder the which they are tormented, yet with silence they passe it ouer, least they shoulde become subiect to the crosse of Christ.

And hee said vnto them the Sonne of man is Lord also of the sabbath day.

1. Iesus went on a Sabbath. The purpose of the Euangelistes in this historie was to shew, partly how malicious the Pharises were, and partly how superstitiously they were addicted to outward rites of small importance, in so much that they set all their holines in them. For they accuse the Disciples of Christe, because that they being an hungred in their iournie, did pulle eares on the Sabbath day. as if they had so broken the Sabbath. The obseruation of the Sabbath was an holy exercise, but not as they imagined it, that one coulde scarce moue his finger, but with a trembling conscience. Hypocrisie made them so scrupulous in so light matters, when as they beare with themselves in grosse superstitions: as Christ in an other place vpbraideth them, that they tithed Mints and Aniseedes, but contemned the greater matters of the law. And this is alwayes the custome of hypocrites, to take libertie to themselves in great matters, and to be diligent in obseruing of ceremonies. And this is the matter why they are so straight in looking to the obseruing of outward rites, because they thinke that God is onely pleased with a carnall worship. But this reprehension came rather of malice and enuie, then of superstition. for they were not so captious against others. And it is meete that we should consider how they were affected, least it should amaze any man to see that Christ had the doctors of the law so much his enemies.

L V. 1. On the second Sabbath, after the first. It is not to be doubted but that this Sabbath belonged to some one of the feast daies, which the law commanded to be celebrated once euery yeare: therefore some thought that the feasts continued for the space of 2. dayes: but because that after the captiuitie of Babylon, the Iewes so deuicd their feasts, that there was alwayes a day between that opinion is confuted. They speake more probably which say that it was the last day of the solemnization, which was as much esteemed as the first. Yet I like their iudgement better, which take it to be the second feast of the yeare. & the name agreeth very wel to be called the second sabbath after the first, because that in order of time it was the second of those high and yearely feasts. The first was the Pasceouer, therefore it is probable that this was the feast of the first fruits of Christ, for pulling eares of corne in an other mans field, but because they breake the Sabboth. As though the Sabboth had bin ordained to this end, that hungry men should perish, rather then they shoulde relieue their hunger. But this was the onely cause of the Sabboth, that the people sanctifying themselves to God, should exercise themselves in true & spirituall worship: then that they being freed from all worldly busines, might the better frequent the holy assemblies. Wherefore the lawfull obseruation of it must be referred to this purpose: for the interpretation of the law must bee fetched from the mind of the lawgiuer. But heereby appeareth how malicious and obstinate superstition is: especially you may see how disdainfully and cruelly hypocrites do lift vp themselves where ambition and hatred of the person doe meete together for not onely the affecting of fained holinesse, as I layd before, made the Pharises so sharpe and so cruell. But sith that of purpose they desired to carpe at all the words and deeds of Christ, it cannot be but that they should draw those things into the ill part, wherein there was no fault, as all malicious interpreters doe. There is no contrarietie in that, that Matthew and Marke say, that the fault was layde vpon the Lord, and Luke, vpon the Disciples. For it is probable that the Disciples were so troubled, that the accusation was brought against the maister himselfe. Also, it may be that the quarell being first layd against the Disciples, came at length to Christ himselfe, and that the Pharises prouoked by malice, layde the fault vpon him, that he did suffer his disciples to breake the Sabboth, and he yet held his peace at it.

M A T. 3. Haue yee not read what Dauid did. Christ confuteth their cauilt by five arguments. First hee excuseth his Disciples by the example of Dauid, 1. Sam. 21. 6. for Dauid flying the wrath of Saule, when hee asked vittales of Ahimelech the Priest, who had no common bread, hee obtayned this fauour, that the shew bread was giuen him. If necessitie freed Dauid from faulte, the same reason may be of force for others. Whereof it followeth that the ceremonies of the law are not defiled, so that godlines be not hurt. Christ taketh it as granted, that Dauid was without fault: because the Priest which gaue him leaue to take that shew bread, is commended by the holy Ghost. When he saith that it was not lawfull but for the Priests onely, Exod. 29. 32. to eat that bread, the meaning is by the common law: for if Dauid had in this attempted any thinge vnlawfull, Christ had brought forth his example in vaine, but necessitie made that lawfull, which was forbidden for a certaine ende.

5. How the Priests on the Sabboth dayes. The second argument whereby Christ prooueth that the breach of the Sabboth whereof the Pharises complained, is voide of offence, is this: because it is lawfull on the Sabboth dayes to kill sacrifices, to circumsise infantes, and to doe all other things that pertaine to the worship of God. Whereof it followeth that the works of godlinesse cannot bee contrary one to the other: for if the temple doth sanctifie the handy labours imployd about the sacrifices and the other outward worshippings: the holinesse of the true and spirituall Temple is greater, to purge their worshippers fro al fault while they apply the works of godlines. Also the disciples applyed themselves to offer vp their soules consecrated to God by the Gospell. Matthew only toucheth this argument. Now that hee sayth that the Sabboth was broken by the priests, priestes, is an vnproper maner of speech which Christ vseth, that he may frame himselfe to the hearers. For when the law commandeth men to abstaine from their workes, it doth not for bid men from religious exercises: for Christ granteth that to be true, which might but seeme to be so to the common people, ha- uing enough that the workes of the temple offend not God.

7. If yee knewe what this is. Matthevv only maketh mention of the third argument. Christe reprooueth the pharises, because they considered not for what purpose the ceremonies were commaunded, nor to what end they be- longe. And truly this hath beene a common fault almost in all ages: and therefore the Prophet Oseah 6.7. reprooueth the menne of his age, for that they being addicte to ceremonies, made no account of the woorkes of charitie, but God telleth them otherwise, that hee accounteth more of mercy then of sacrifices: By the woorde Mercy are noted by a figure all the workes of cha- ritie, euen as vnder sacrifices is all the outward worshippe of the law compre- hended. Christ applyeth the same sentence to his time, and accuseth the pha- rises, for that they did wickedly wrest the law of God into a contrary sence, in that they neglecting the seconde table, did apply themselues wholly to ceremo- nies. Yet here ariseth a question, why God sayeth that he regardeth not sa- crifices, sith he commaunded in the law that they should bee straightly obser- ued. This may be readily answered: outward rites in respecte of themselues are not esteemed nor required of God, but in respecte of the ende where vnto they are directed. Againe God doeth not simply refuse them, but comparinge them with the woorkes of charitie, he sheweth that hee doeth lesse esteeme of them then of the other. Yet notwithstanding this, in the perfection of righte- ousnesse, the worship of God hath the chiefest place: then secondly come these duties which belong to men. For though godlinesse of right is so much more accounted of, then charitie, as God excelleth and is aboue menne: yet because the faithfull by maintaining mutuall charitie amongst theselues, doe giue testi- mony that they worshippe God effectually: God doeth not without cause call the hypocrits to this, for they faine a godlinesse in outward signes, and they do wonderfully peruert the same by resting only in a carnall and outward worship. Furthermore, Christe gathereth effectually by the testimonie of the Prophet, that his disciples are guiltlesse for God exercising his people in the rudimentes of the law, minded nothing lesse then to kill men by famine.

8. For the sonne of man is Lord. Some ioyne this sentence with the former, there was no greater then the Temple: but I thinke them to be diuers. For Christ first alluding to the people, affirmed that to bee no breach of the law, that was annexed to the holy seruice of the same. But he sayeth here, that he hath power giuen him, to set his disciples free fro the necessitie of obseruing the Sabbath. The Sonne of man (sayeth hee) can of his owne power moderate the obser- uing of the Sabbath, as he doeth the other ceremonies of the law And certainly, without Christ the bondage of the law is miserable, from the which he only freeth them whom he enricheth with the free spirit of adoption.

MAR. 27. The Sabbath was made for manne. This fiste argument is reported by Marke onely. And this is the summe, that they doe wickedly which conuert the Sabbath to mans destruction, which God instituted for his

take. The Pharisies saw the disciples of Christ occupied in holy woorke, they saw them weary with the labour of the iourney, and also oppressed with hunger: yet they grudge that the hungry men shoulde comfort their wearied bodies with a few cornes of wheate. Is not the purpose of God wickedly peruerced in this maner, if the obseruation of the Sabbath be required with the losse of men, for whose commoditie the Lorde instituted it? But in my iudgement they are deceiued which doe thinke that the Sabbath is altogether taken away: for Christ doth only teach the right vse of the same. For though he sayd a little before, that he was Lorde also of the Sabbath: yet the full tyme of abrogating the same was not come, because the vaile of the temple was not yet rent.

Matth. 12.

9. And hee departed thence, and went into their synagogue.

10. And beholde, there was a manne which had his hande dried vpp. And they asked him, sayinge: Is it lawfull to heale vppon a Sabbath day, that they might accuse him.

11. And hee sayde vnto them: what manne shall there bee amonge you, that shall haue a sheepe, and if it fall on a Sabbath daye into a pitte, will not he take it and lift it out?

12. Howe much more then is a manne better then a sheepe? Therefore it is lawfull to doe well on a Sabbath day.

13. Then sayde hee to the manne: Stretch forth thine hande. And hee stretched it forth, and it was made whole as the other.

Marke 3.

1. And he entred againe into the Synagogue, and there was a man which had a withered hande.

2. And they watched him whether he would heale him on the Sabbath daye, that they might accuse him.

3. Then he sayde vnto the man which had the withered hand: arise, stand forth in the middes.

4. And he said to them: Is it lawfull to do a good deed on the sabbath day, or to doe euill? to saue the life, or to kil? but they held their peace

5. The heloked round about on the angerly, mourninge also for the hardnes of their hearts, & said to the man: stretch forth thine hand, & he stretched it oute, and his hand was restored as whole as the other.

Luke 6.

6. It came so passe also on another sabbath, that he entred into the Synagogue & taught, & there was a man whose right hand was dried

7. And the Scribes & pharises watched hi, whether he would heale on the Sabbath day, that they might find an accusatiō against hi

8. But he knew their thoughts & saide to the man which had the withred hand: arise & stand vp in the middes, and he arose & stooode vp.

9. The said Iesus vnto the, I wil aske you a questiō, whether is it lawfull on the sabbath daies to doe good, or to do euill? to saue life or to destroy it? 10. And he beheld the al in cōpasse, & said vnto the man: Stretch forth thine hand, & he did so, & his hād was restored againe.

9. And he departed thence. This history and the former, tende both to one end: which is, that the Scribes were maliciously bent to carpe and cauill at euery thing that Christ did, and therefore it is no maruell, if they whose mindes were so poysoned with frowardnes, continued obstinate enemies against him. Yet wee see that this is a cōmon matter with hypocrites, onely to follow a shadow of the righteousnes of the law. & as they say cōmonly, rather to be in shew then in substance. First therefore let vs learne to bring with vs, when we are to giue iudgement of any thing, pure mindes free frō all malicious affection. For if hatred or pride, or any such like thing raigne in vs, we shall not onely be iniurious to men, but with cōtempt of God himselfe, we wil turne light into darknes.

No

No man voyd of malice would haue denied this to haue beene a godly worke, which these good doctours doubt not to condemne. From whence commeth this madnesse, but that all their senses were fraught with vile hatred of Christ, so that they would not see in the bright sunne shine? Wee are also warned to take heede, least by giuing to Ceremonies more then is meete, we omit those things which are of greater account before God, and which Christ Mat. 23. 23. calleth the weightier matters of the law. For wee are so bent to outward Ceremonies, that wee can neuer keepe a meane in that behalfe, except wee remember that whatsoeuer is commaunded of the worship of God ought first to bee spirituall, then, to be measured and guided by that rule which is here prescribed by Christ

10. They asked him saying. Marke and Luke doe onely say that they watched what the Lord would doe: but Mat. setteth it downe more plainly, that they rempted him also in words: but Mat. setteth it downe more plainly, that they rempted him also in words: hauing therefore taken occasion of that, they demaund of him whether he thinke it lawfull for him to doe againe, that he had done before. But they shoulde haue considered with themselues whether it had beene the worke of God or of man, to heale a dried hand, only by touching it, or with a word. For God who instituted the Sabbath, laid not a law vpon himselfe, neyther did he bring himselfe into any bondage, but that he might labour on the Sabbaths, as he should thinke meete as vpon other dayes. Therefore it was a poynt of too great madnesse, by mouing this question to driue God himselfe in to order, and to abridge him of his free course in his workes.

11. What man shall there be among you, that shall haue a sheepe. Christ sheweth againe, which is the true and right obseruation of the Sabbath, and also hee reproveth them for their malicious dealing, because they cauld at him, for that which was an vsuall maner amongst them all. For if any mans sheepe fell into a pit, no man did forbid the pulling of it out: and howe much more a manne is worth then a beast, so much more lawfull is it to helpe him. Therefore it appeareth that if any do helpe the necessitie of the brethren, that he breaketh not the rest commaunded by the Lord. Marke & Luke haue not this similitude: they onely say that Christ demaunded whether it was lawfull to doe a good deede on the Sabbath day, or to doe euill? for he that loseth the life of a man, is guiltie of an offence: yea he little differeth from a manslayer which hath no regard to helpe him that hath neede. Therefore Christ reproveth them, that vnder the pretence of a holy rest, they would enforce them to doe euill: for not only he doth sinne, as it is sayd, that doth any thing against the law, but he also which neglecteth his dutie. Heereby we also perceiue that Christ did not alwayes vse the same reasons, to ouerthrow this caull with: for he disputeth not here of his Godhead as he doth in Iohn, neither was it needefull, for this one defence was sufficient to conuince the Pharises, for these two cannot agree that he should be accounted a breaker of the Sabbath, who should follow God.

L V 8. But he knew their thoughts. If Mat. say true, they did openly bewray with their speech, what they had in their mind. Therefore christ answereth not to their secret thoughts but to their open words. But both may stand, that they spake openly, & that christ iudged of their secret thoughts. Neither did they vnderstand what they meant, as Mat. declarerth, that their demand was captious: therefore Luke meaneth nothing else, but that Christe knewe their deceites, though they pretended an other matter in words. Marke addeth that Christ looked vpon them angerly: for he might well be angry at their wicked obltinacie. And that wee might knowe that his anger was iust and holy, hee sayeth that it sprang of this, that hee mourned for the hardnes of their hearts. First therefore Christ is sorrowfull that men exercised in the law of God, should be in such grosse ignorance. But because that malice blinded them, hee also conceiuech anger with his sorrow. This is a right moderation of zeale, when we moune for the destruction of wicked menne, and are angry for their vngodlines. And as this place declareth that Christ was not free from humane affections: so wee doe heereof gather that the passions themselues are not sinfull, so that a temperate meane be kept. Wee cannot hold the meane by reason of our corrupt nature, wee are neuer angry, no not for iust causes without sinne: these things were not to be found in Christ, for not onely the integritie of nature did beare rule in him, but in him there also shone a perfecte example of righteousnesse. Therefore wee must pray that the spirite of God may be giuen vs from heauen to correct and bridle our imperfections.

Mathew. 12.

14. Then the Pharises went out, and consulted against him, how they might destroy him.

15. But when Iesus knew it, hee departed thence, and great multitudes followed him, and he healed them all.

16. And charged them that they should not make him knowne.

17. That it might bee fulfilled, which was spoken by Esayas the Prophet, saying:

18. Beholde my seruant whom I haue chosen, my beloued in whome my soule delighteth: I will put my spirite on him and hee shall shewe iudgement to the Gentiles.

19. Hee shall not strize nor crie, neyther shall any manne heare his voyce in the stretes.

20. A bruised reede shall hee not breake, and smoking flaxe shall hee not quench, vntill hee bring forth iudgement into victorie.

21. And in his name shall the Gentiles trust.

Marke 3.

6. And the Pharises, departed & straight way gathered a counsel with the Herodians against him, that they might destroy him.

7 But Iesus auoided with his Disciples to the sea: and a great multitude folowed him from Galile, and from Iudea,

8. And from Ierusalem, and from Idumea, and beyond Iordan, & they that dwelt about Tyrus & Sidon, whiche they had heard what great things hee did, came vnto him in great number

9. And he commanded his disciples, that a shippe should wait for him, because of the multitude, least they should throng him.

10. For he had healed many, insomuch that they preased vpon him, to touch him, as many as had plagues.

11. And when the vnleane spirites sawe him, they fell downe before him, and cryed, saying: Thou art the sonne of God

12. And he sharply rebuked them, to the end they should not vtter him.

Luke. 6.

11. Then they were filled full of madness and communed one with another what they might doe to Iesus.

14. Then the Pharises. See whether obstinate fury carieth the reprobate, in resisting and struing against God: for they being vanquished with his answers, doe yet poure out their poyson more and more. This certainly is a detestable monster, that the cheife doctors of the lawe, which had the gouernement of the Church, should as the eues seeke after murders. But it is necessary it should so come to passe, so oft as they desire to haue ouerthrowen whatsoeuer is against their pleasure, though it be from God himselfe. It is not to be imputed to feare, that Christ escapeth away by flight, for he was not any thing more courageous after, then now. but he was led by the strength of the same spirit when he fled, wherewith he was endued after, when he willingly offered himselfe to death. And this was a portion of his humbling which Paule commendeth, Phil. 2. 7 that when he could by a miracle haue readily defended his life, hee had rather by flying take vpō him our infirmitie Also he did not defer to die for any other cause, then because that a time conuenient, appointed by the father was not yet come. Yet it is euident that he was preserued rather by a heauenly power then by flight: for it had beene no hard matter for his enemies to haue broken into that place whether he went: for hee drawing such company after him, and making that place famous by his miracles, hid not himselfe in the darke, but only he withdrew himselfe out of their sight, least he should make them more mad. Marke addeth that they tooke counsell with the Herodians, who they yet hated most deadly For when they would seeme to be keepers and defenders of the publike libertie, it was necessary that they should professe themselves to haue a deadly hatred against the tyrants officers: yet their mad hatred against Christ so far preuailed, that they not only conspired with strangers, but familiarly they insinuated themselves into their fauour, whose company they otherwise abhorred For when vngodlines by carying men hether and thether, driueth them into diuers debates and controuersies, yet it knitteth them together with one consent to strue against the Lord. So no hatreds nor enmities doe let, but that the extremest enemies doe ioyne hands together to ouerthrow the truth of God.

16. And hee charged them. Marke setteth downe an other more speciall matter, that hee put the vncleane spirites to silence, which cryed out that hee was the Sonne of G O D. Wee haue in another place shewed the cause why hee would not admit any such witnesses. Neyther is it to be doubted but that this confession was wrested out of the deuils by the power of God, but after that Christe had shewed that they were subiecte to his power, hee also not without cause refused their testimonie. But that extendeth farther which Mattheu sayeth: that is, that Christ commaunded that the fame of the miracles which he wrought, shoulde not be spread abroad: not that hee would haue it vterly suppressed: but that the roote being setled, it might bring forth fruit abundantly in due season. For wee knowe that Christ played not with his miracles, but had proposed this ende, that hee might proue himselfe to be the Son of God, and a Redeemer giuen vnto the world. But he shewed himselfe by a little and a little, euen by certaine degrees: neyther was he otherwayes reuealed what he was, then the time ordayned by the father allowed. Yet it is a matter worthy to be noted, while the wicked doe most endeouour to ouerwhelme the glory of God, they are so farre from obtayning that which they hope for, that God applyeth all their wicked endeouours rather to the contrary : for though Christe was gone out of that famous place , yet his glory ceaseth not to shine euen in secret corners, yea, and breakeh out notably into his excellēt brightnesse.

17. That it might be fulfilled which was spoken. Matthew meaneh not that the prophetic was altogether fulfilled in this, that Christ charged that rumors of his power should not be much vttered : but herein is also shewed a token of his humilitie, which Esayas describeth in the person of the Mefsiah. The miracles which Christ wrought amongst a few, and which he would not should be much boasted of, were able to shake the heauen and the earth. Therefore hee doeth plainly shew how far hee was from the vaine glory and pompe of the worlde. Yet it is conuenient to sift the purpose of Mathew more narrowly : for he would declare by this circumstance, that the glory of the Godhead of Christ ought not to be the lesse esteemed, because it appeared not in a glorious shew. And certainly the holy Ghost directed the eyes of the Prophet to this purpose. For as flesh doth alwayes desire an outward glorious shew, least the faithfull should seeke for it in the Mefsiah, the spiritite of God doth declare, that he shall be farre vnlike to earthly kinges, which make great stirres and noyses, and fill the cities and townes with tumult, that they may be had in admiration where soeuer they come. Now we see how aptly Mathew applyeth the saying of the Prophet to the present cause : for because God hath laid so humble and so abiect a person vpon his throne, least the simple should take offence at his so contemptible & obscure estate, as well the Prophet as Mathew do meete in one, and they say that it was not done without consideration, but by a celestiall decree, that he should come in that estate. Whereof it followeth that all they doe wickedly which despise Christ, because his outward condition answereth not their fleshly affections. Neither is it lawfull for vs to deuise a Christ, which shall bee like to our imagination. but it is simply necessary for vs to embrace him as he is offered vnto vs by the father. Therefore he is unworthy of saluation, in whose eies the humilitie of Christ seemeth vile, in the which the Lord declareth that hee is delighted. Now I will enter into the wordes of the Prohper Esay 42. 1.

18. Behold my seruant whom I haue chosen. That God may tie vs to waite vpon his will, he sheweth as it were with a finger, him whom hee would send, and for this cause is this note of demonstration (Behold) vsed. There is the like reason also in the Epithites which follow, that he nameth him his seruant, and his chosen wherein his mind delighteth. For how should it come to passe that men should be so bolde as to measure Christ by their owne imagination , except it be because they weigh not that their salutiō doth depēd vpon the meere fauour of God ? And this is to wicked a libertie, when God offereth vs an incōparable treasure, that men should esteeme of it according to our fleshly desires. And he is called seruant, not as one of the common people, but in respect of dignitie, for that God hath layd vpon him the office of redemption of his Church. And because that no man taketh honour to himselfe, but he which is called, is so worthily to be esteemed: God sayth that he chose in his owne counsell, that hee should come in this order: whereof it followeth, that it is not lawfull for men to refuse him, because that so they should bee contumelious against God. And certainly it is too absurde, that the holy and inuolable calling of God should shoulde be made of none effecte, through our pleasure or pride. Yet that which God addeth by the Prophet, that his soule delighteth in Christ, hath a further meaning. For though the calling of euery one of vs commeth from the free grace of God, as from the onely fountaine: yet this is an especiall delighte in Christe, for that in his person God the father comprehendeth and embraceth the whole Church in his loue. For when we were all by nature the enemies of God, his loue coulde neuer haue come to vs, except hee had first begun at the head, as it is said before, and shall bee seene againe in the 17. chapter.

He shall shew iudgement to the Gentiles. The Prophet doth here describe briefly the office of Christ, when hee foretelleth, that it shall come to passe, that hee shall shew iudgement to the Gentiles. The Iewes do comprehend vnder this word iudgement, a state rightly and orderly established, where in equitie and vpright dealing flourisheth. Therefore it is as much as if the Prophet should haue said, that one should come, which shoulde restore righteousnesse decayed: and that he should be the gouernour not onely of the people, but that hee shoulde bring the Gentiles also vnder the gouernement of God, amongst whom there hadde raigned heretofore nothing but confusion. And this is the signification of this word shew, or to bring forth, which the Prophet useth: for it was the office of Christ to spread the kingdome of God through all the worlde, which was then shut vp in a corner of Iudea, as it is saide in the Psalme, 120. 2. the Lorde shall sende the Scepter of thy power out of Sion. There is also expressed the maner of bringing forth of this iudgement: namely, that God will powre his spirite vpon Christ. It is true that there was neuer any thing done rightly in the worlde, which proceeded not frō the spirit of god, & was let forward by the heauely power of the same: as also there was neuer any of the kings, which coulde erect or defend any lawful order, but as he was instructed by the same spirit. But Christ in bringing forth iudgement, doth far excell al others, for he receiued the spirit frō the father, which he imparteth to all his disciples: & he doth not only declare by word or by writing what is right but by the power of his spirit he doth inwardly frame the hearts of men to the obseruing of the rules of righteousnesse.

19. He shall not strine nor cry. The summe is, as I said euen now, that the coming of Christ should not be troublesome, because hee shall want the kingly furniture & pompe: yet presently it is said, that it is so, for mans saluation, that this humilitie may be brought into fauour, which is euery where despised in the world. And certainly the foolishnes of men is wōderful, that they should esteeme of christ the worse, because hee doth louingly & humbly submit himselfe to their capacity. If christ should appeare in his glory, what thing should come to passe, but that we should be ouerwhelmed with the same? What forward wickednesse then is this, that is vnwilling to receiue him, who for our cause descended from the height of his glory? Therefore, that the gentlenes of Christ might get him reuerence amongst the faithful, the Prophet Isaiah doth admonish vs shewe profitable and necessary it was. Euery one of vs knoweth his owne frailty, and thereby it behoueth vs to consider, how conuenient it is for all men to be louingly and gently receiued and cherished by Christ?

I speake not of the vnbelceuers, which are as yet without any sparke of Gods grace: but they which are now called of the Lorde, vntill the light be more fully kindled in them, & that their strength become more perfect. Are they not all like to a Reede halfe broken, and to a smoking match? Therefore let vs learne to remember this great goodnesse of Christ, who franieth himselfe to our infirmities. Yet in the meane while let no man flatter himselfe in his sins: but let every man endeouour to profitt better in our selues, least we wander al our life long, or bend & turne at every blast, like vnto Reedes: but let vs grow on to perfecte menne, that we may stand fast against the sundry assaults of sathan. Let not our faith be like a few small sparkes hidden in a darke smoake: but let it shew foorth bright shining beames. Nowe by the example of Christe, all his ministers haue prescribed vnto them, how they ought to behaue themselues. But because that vnder pretence of this place, some do falsly & foolishly pretend, that mildnesse is generally to be vsed towards all men: that difference is to be noted, which the Prophet expressly maketh between the weake and the obstinate. For there are some that are too strong, whose hardnesse it were meete shoulde be broken with the violence of a beetle: which either endeouour to bring darknesse ouer all places, or els are fire-brands to kindle consuming fires euery wher, and it is necessary that their smoke shoulde be scattered, & that their heat shoulde be quenched. Therefore as the faithfull ministers of the word, must dilligently apply themselues, that by sparing the weake, they may encrease and nourish the grace of God, which as yet is but small in them: so they must in wise dome take good heed that they nourishe not the malicious obstinate, which are nothing like to the smoking flaxe or the brused Reede.

20. Till he bring forth iudgement into victory. The words of the Prophet are somewhat otherwise: namely, that hee shall bring forth or lead forth iudgement in truth. yet the speech which Mat. vseth, is full of great importance: that we may knowe that righteousnesse cannot be placed in the worlde without great strife and labour. For the deuill casteth in what lettes and hindrances hee may, that righteousnesse shoulde not shew foorth but by great wrastring: and that is confirmed by the word victory, which is not obtained but by fighting. For that which presently followeth, the Prophet hath, the Iles shall waite for his lawe. And though matthew hath chaunged the wordes, yet he agreeth in sense, that the grace of Christ shall be common to the Gentiles.

Matth. 21.

22. Then was brought to him one, possessed with a deuill, both blinde and dumme, & hee healed him, so that he which was blinde & dumme, both spake and sawe.
 23. And all the people were amazed, and sayd: Is not this the sonne of Dauid?
 24. But when the Pharisees heard it, they sayd: this man casteth deuilles no otherwise out, but through Beelzebub the prince of deuils.

Luke 11.

14. Then he cast out a deuill which was dumme: & when the deuill was gone out, the dumme spake, & the people wondered.

It is not to be doubted but that Marke meaneth some certaine space of time long enough, when he descendeth from the miracles to that wicked conspiracie, which Christs kinsmen made amongst themselues, that they might bind him as a mad man. In Mathew and Luke there is expresse mention made of one onely myracle, by the which the Pharises tooke occasion of quarrelling. But because they all three agree together in this latter sentence, therefore I thought good heere to set downe that which Mark reporteth. And it is wonder thatther was such frowardnes in Christs kinsmen, which should haue beene the cheife helpers in furthering the kingdome of God. When they see that hee hath gotten him any name, ambition pricketh them so, that they desire to become famous at Ierusalem: for they exhorted him that he would goe vp thither, that he might the better aduance himselfe. Now that they see that hee is partly hated of the rulers, partly subiect to many euill speeches, and also despised of the most part: least any danger or enuie, or reproach should come to the whole stock or kindred, they deuse to lay hands vpon him, and to bind him at home, as a man out of his wits: & that they were so perswaded, it appeareth by the words of the Euangelist. Whereby wee doe first learne how blinde mans vnderstanding is, that iudgeth so peruerfly of the manifest glory of God. Certainly, the power of the holy Ghost did shine most excellently in all Christes words & deedes, so that if it had bin obscure to others, how could it be hid from his kinsmen, they being so familiarly acquainted? But because the maner of life which Christ led pleased not the world, and so gat him no fauour, but rather procured him many mens hatred, they faine him to bee a mad man. Secondly, let vs learne that the light of faith commeth not of flesh and bloud, but of heauenly grace, least any man should glory in any other birth, but in the new birth of the spirit, as Paul warneth vs, 2. Cor. 5. 17. If any man will be estceded in Christ, let him bee a new creature.

22. Then was brought to him. Luke calleth the deuill, (by whom the man was possessed) dumbe, because of the effect: yet Mathewe sayeth that there was a double plague layd vpon the man. It is certaine that many are blind and dumbe of naturall diseases: but it appeareth that this man was blind in his eyes, and deprived of his speach, though there was no want in those partes pertaining to the sight, or in the proportion of the tongue: Also it is no maruaile that Sathan hath so much libertie as to corrupt the senses of the body, when as by the iust iudgement of God he corrupteth and peruerteth all the powers of the soule.

23. And all the people were amazed. Hereby we gather that the power of God was manifest to bee seene, which caried the common people which was cleare and free from all malicious affection, to haue him in admiratiō. For how should it come to passe that all the people should be so amazed & wonder, but because the matter so compelled them? And certainly there is none of vs which may not behold in this hystory as in a glasse, the wonderfull power of God. whereby it is to be gathered that the Scribes had their minds infected with deuilish poison which were not afrayd to cauill at this so excellent a worke of God. But the fruite of the myracle is to be noted: that they which saw it were amased, and enquired amongst theselues, whether Iesus were the Christ. For the power of god being known, they are led as by the hād to faith, not that they profit at the first, so much as they should (for they speak doubtfully) but this is no small fruit, that that they stirre vp themselues more diligently to consider the glory of Christ. Some take it to be a full affirmation: but the wordes sound no such thing, and the matter it selfe sheweth, that they beeing amased at a thing vnlooked for, could not giue a perfect iudgement, but onely that it came into their mindes that it might be that he should be the Christ.

24. But the Pharises sayd. Because they cannot deny a matter so euident and so plaine, yet they doe maliciously slaunder that which Christ did by the power of God, neyther do they only obscure the prayse of the miracle, but they endeouour to bring it into slaunder, as though it had beene wrought by some magicall Exorcisme: & that worke which could not be attributed to man, they attribute to the deuill, as to the authour thereof. Of the word Beelzebub, I haue spoken in the 10. chapter. And we haue spoken in the 9. cha. of the governmēt amongst deuils. For it is not an opinion gathered of the errour or superstition of the common people, that the Scribes held that there was one that was princely ruler amongst the wicked spirites, but of a receiued opinion amongst the godly, that as Christ is the head of the church, so the reprobate should haue their head.

Lu. 12. 10. And whosoever shall speake a word against the son of man, it shall be forgiven him, but vnto hi that shall blaspheme the holy ghost, it shall not be forgiven.

25. But Iesus knew their thoughts. Though Christ knew well enough, & had oft tried that the Scribes vsed of malice to wrest whatsoeuer hee did, to the worst part: yet it is euident that Math. & Luke do meane that Christ knew their hearts. And it seemeth that they spake openly to Christ, that hee might heare their cauels: but Christ by his diuine spirit knew of what mind they cauld. For it cometh oft to passe, that men iudge preposterously which fall through ignorance, & do not impugne the truth of purpose, nor nourish any secret or hidden poyson in them, but are onely caried headlong with rashnesse. Therefore the meaning of this text is, that Christ did so much the more vehemently inuey against them, because he was witnes & iudge of the malice which they had conceiued inwardly. Euery kingdom. He first confuteth the cauil obiected against him by a cōmon prouerb. Yet that constitution seemeth not to be so full: for we know with what sleights sathan sometimes deludeth men, making a shew of variance, that he may therby snare the minds of men in superstitions. For the exorcismes in popery, are nothing else but deuised and fained conflicts of sathan against himselfe. But there can be no such suspicion in Christ: for he so casteth out deuils, that he maketh them whole & sound to God. As oft as the deuill hath this consist with himselfe, he so suffereth himselfe to be bound in iest, that hee himselfe yet hath the victory & triumpheth. But Christ assaulteth the deuill with open defiance, so that he casteth him cleane out, & leaueth him not any place to rest in. He overthroweth him not on the one side, that he may be stronger on the other: but he vtterly overthroweth all his deuices. Therefore Christ reasoneth aptly, that hee hath no fellowship with him: for this father of deceit hath no other purpose but to vphold & maintaine his kingdom. If any obiect that the deuils are oft caried with a wilde giddinesse and a blind madnesse, to overthrow themselues: the answer is ready. The meaning of Christes wordes is, that there is nothing more absurd, then that the deuill should willingly overthrow that power that he hath ouer men, who endeouureth and applyeth all the meanes he can to haue them in his bondage. Furthermore Christ so vseth the cōmon prouerbs, as probable coniectures, and not as sound and perfect proofes. Lastly, he speaking of a matter knowne and wel proued, he vrgeth it the lesse against his enemies consciences. No man was ignorant but that Christ came to thrust Sathan out of his possession, and there was nothing more manifest then that all his myracles tended to this end. Whereby it was easie to iudge that his power which was so contrary to Sathan, was of God.

27. By whō do your children cast the out? Hee accuseth the of wicked & malicious iudgmēt, that they iudged not a like of one & the same matter, but as they were affected towards the persōs. But this inequality shewed that equity & right prevailed not, but they were ouer ruled either with blinde loue or hatred. & this was a signe of wicked selfeloue & of enuy, to cōdemne in christ, which they accounted praise worthy in their own childrē. Some take their childrē for the childrē of al the natiōs. Some think that the apostles were so called, because they were accounted as childrē, wher they accounted christ as a strāger. others refer it to the old prophets. But I am perswaded that he meaneth the Exorcistes, of which sorte there were many then amongst the Iewes, as it appeareth in the Actes, 19. 17.

for it is likely that they thought no better of the disciples of Christe, then they did of the maister. And it is too much wretched to draw it to the dead prophets, when as the woordes doe plainly set downe a comparison of the same time. The lawes hadde no Exorcistes by the prescript order of the law: but we know that God, that hee might keepe them in fayth and in sincere worshipp of him, testified his presence amongst them by many myracles. And so it might be, that by calling on the name of GOD the deuilles fled. And the people hauing experience of that great power of God, thereof rashly made themselves an ordinary office. The Papistes also afterward, least their estate should be any thing inferiour to them, counterfaieted them in creating Exorcistes, and so were Apes of Apes. Furthermore, it was not needfull that Christ should in condemning their malice, approoue those Exorcismes which they helde as holy adorned with the name of God, and yet they make Christe a seruant of Beelzebub: for the objection is directed (according to the common phrase) to the person. That which followeth presently after, that their children should bee their iudges: this is vnproperly spoken, you neede not to seeke farre for your condemnation: the myracles which I worke, you apply to Beelzebub, and you prayse the same in your children. Therefore you haue inough at home to condemne your selues. If that any hadde rather take it otherwise, to wit, that he vpbraideth them of the grace of God, which was sometime shewed amongst them by the Exorcistes, I doe not greatly gainstand it. For though they were degenerate, yet the Lord woulde not altogether deprive them of his power, but that hee would adorne the priesthoode, and the seruice of the temple, with some generall testimonie. For it was very necessary that they should be distinguished by some euident notes from the superstitions of the Gentiles. But the first interpretation seemeth in my iudgement to bee most naturall.

28. But if I cast out deuilles by the spirite of God. Luke Metaphorically calleth it the Finger, for the spirite. For because that God worketh & sheweth his power by his spirite, the name of a finger is aptly giuen it. And this speech was common amongst the Iewes, as Moses reporteth, that Pharaohs enchanter sayd, Exod. 8. 19. This is the finger of God. But Christ gathereth of those former wordes, that the Scribes were vnthankfull to God, which woulde not that he shoulde raigne ouer them. Hetherto hee hath answered their friuolous Obiection: now hee giueth charge as vnto menne conuicte, that they shoulde not oppose themselves wickedly against the kingdome of God. And hee holdeth not himselfe within the cōpalle of this one myracle: but by occasiō thereof hee speaketh of the cause of his coming, declaring to them that they should not onely consider this one peculiar facte of his, but some thing farre more excellent then this: namely, that God by reulasing the Messias, woulde repayre their decayed estate, and restore his kingdome amongst them. Therefore wee see Christe complayneth of their vnthankfulnesie: because that they furiously reiect and cast from amongst them the incomparable grace of God. For this worde Come is very forcible: to wit, that God appeared willingly to them as a redeemer: but they as much as they coulde, driue him from amongst them, and woulde giue no place to him that was come, ready and prepared for their saluation.

29. How can a man enter into a strong mans house? Though the Euangelists doe differ somewhat in wordes, yet they agree notably for the summe of the matter: for Christ profecuteth that, which hee touched a litle before of the kingdome of God: and he sayth, that it is necessary that Sathan should be throwne forth by violence, that God may haue his kingdome amongst men: so that this sentence is but a confirmation of that, which went before. But that we may more certainly vnderstand the meaning of Christ, it behooueth vs to remember that Analogy, which Matthew rehearsed before betweene the visible and spirituall graces of Christ. For whatsoeuer he did to our bodies, his will was it should be applyed to the soules, so that when he deliuered the corporal fences of men frō the tyranny of the deuill, hee declared that hee was sent from God, a champion that should ouerthrow his spirituall tyranny ouer soules. Now I returne to his wordes: he affirmeth that a strong and mighty tyrant cannot bee driuen out of his kingdome, vntill he be spoyled of his weapons: because that except an other mightier power be set against him, he will neuer willingly giue place. To what purpose is this spoken? First, we know that the deuill is called in diuers places, the prince of the world. And the tyrannous gouernment, which he holdeth is fortified on euery side with strong defences. For there are many snares to entrap men with, and he holdeth them that are now subiect vnto him in such bandes, so that they rather nourish that seruitude, wherein they are bound, rather then by any meanes aspyre to liberty. Also there are innumerable sorts of dangers, by the which he holdeth them miserably ouerwhelmed vnder his secte. To be short, there is nothing to the contrary, but that he may without resistance rule as a tyrant in the worlde, not that he can doe any thing without the will of the maker. but because that Adam by estranging himselfe from the power of God, brought himselfe and his posterity vnder this straunge and miserable seruitude. But though the deuill raigneth against nature, and that by the iust iudgement of GOD, menne are subiecte to his tyranny for their sinne: yet hee holdeth that kingdome in quiet possession: so that hee triumpheth ouer vs without resistance, vntill a stronger then hee shall arise. But there is not a stronger to bee found on earth: for ther is no power in men to help themselues: therefore a redeemer was promised from heauen. Now Christ sheweth that this manner of redemption is necessary, that hee should by strong hand wrest from the deuill that, which hee will neuer let goe, except hee bee enforced. By which wordes hee declareth, that menne do hope in vaine for deliuerance, vntill that Sathan bee brought vnder by violent assaultes, And though hee purposely reprocueth the ignoraunt folly of the Scribes, because they vnderstood not the beginniges of the kingdome of God: yet this reproofe toucheth almost all menne, sith they are ouerwhelmed almost with the same folly. There is no manne, which will not make a bragge in wordes, that he desires the kingdome of God: yet hee will not, as necessitie requireth, suffer Christe to fight valiantly, that hee may deliuer vs out of the hand of our tyrant: which is, as if a sicke manne should craue the helpe of a Physitian, and shoulde abhorre and abstaine from all remedies.

Now wee vnderstand for what purpose Christ brought this parable: namely, that he might shew that the Scribes were enemies to the kingdome dome of God, whose beginniges they so maliciously withstoode. Yet because wee are all subiect to the bondage of Satan, let vs learne, that God doth not begin his kingdome in vs otherwise: but when by the strong and mighty hand of Christ, he setteth vs at libery from that miserable and hard bondage.

30. He that is not with me. This place is expounded two wayes. Some so gather it, as that it should bee an argument of repugnancies: as if Christ should haue sayd, I cannot raigne, except the deuill be ouerthrowne: for all his endeouours are bent vpon this, to scatter whatsoever I gather. And certainly we see how the enimie doth too boldly apply himselfe to overthrow the kingdome of Christ. Yet I do rather yeeld to their opinion, which interpret the Scribes to be double enemies of the kingdom of God: because that of set purpose they hinder the proceedings of the same. The meaning thereof is this, it were your part to helpe me, and to set your hand to the buylding of the kingdom of God. For, whosoever doeth not helpe, setteth himselfe after a sorte against the same, or at least is worthy to be accounted amongst the enemies. Then what are you, that are carryed by a madde fury, openly to strue against the same? Also it appeareth plainly by their former dealinges, how truly Christ now speaketh this, whosoever gather not with him, scatter abroad: when as the readines of our nature to euill is such, so that there is no place for the righteousnes of God, but in the which doe earnestly apply them to the same. This doctrine also reacheth further: to wit, that they are vnworthy to be accounted of the flocke of Christ, which apply not their endeouours for the furtherance of the same: and it cometh to passe through their slouth, that the kingdom of God decayeth and falleth to ruine: for the buylding whereof we all are called.

31. Wherefore I say vnto you This conclusion may not bee restrayned to the last sentence, but it dependeth of the whole text before. For after Christ hath taught that the Scribes coulde not reprove him for casting out deuilles, but that they sette themselves against the kingdome of God, at length hee concludeth that it was no light saying, nor to be tolerated, but a hainous offence, that wittingly and willingly they blasphemed the spirit of God. For we said before that Christ spake not this of their bare wordes, but of their vngodly & wicked thoughtes.

Every sinne and blasphemie. Because the Lorde pronounceth blasphemy against the spirite to bee the most hainous of all sinnes, it is worth the labour to enquire what he meaneth by this saying. They which interprete it to be vnrepentaunce may easily be confuted: for vainely and fondly should Christ haue denied, that it could not be forgiuen in this world. Also the word blasphemie cannot generally be applied to all kindes of sins. But by the comparison, which Christ bringeth, the meaning shall the more easily appeare vnto vs. Why is he sayd to sinne more hainously, which speaketh blasphemy against the spirit, then against Christ? Is it, because the maiesty of the spirite is more excellent, that it should bee more sharply reuenged? Certainly, there is some other cause: for, when as the fulnesse of the God-head was in Christ, whosoever was reproachfull against Christ, ouerthrew and abolished the whole glory of God, as much as in him lay. Now, how shall Christe bee seperated from his spirite, so that they which are contumelious against the spirite, leaue not him vntouched and vnhurt. Here we begin to gather now the meaning, that blasphemie against the spirit exceedeth not other sinnes, because the spirit is aboue Christ-but because that whosoever doe kicke against the power of God reuealed, they are not to be excused vnder the pretence of ignorance.

Further, it is to be noted, that that, which is heere spoken of blasphemy, is not simply referred to the essence of the spirit, but to the grace wherewith we are endued. For they which haue not the light of the spirite, though they speak euill of the glory of the spirit, they are not yet guiltie of this sinne. Now wee perceiue that they blaspheme the spirit of God, which with a determinate malice oppose themselues against his grace and power: and further, that sacriledg is not committed, but that while the spirit dwelling in vs, we doe wittingly endeavour our selues to extinguish the same. And this is the reason why the spirite is sayd to be blasphemed, rather then either the Sonne, or the Father himselfe: because that by blaspheming the grace and power of God, we strike straight at the spirite, from whom proceedeth, and by whom the graces of God appeare in vs. If any that beleue not, blaspheme God, he is as if a blinde man should strike against a wall. But no man blasphemeth the spirit, but he, which being first lightened by the same, doth after against his owne knowledg, wittingly giue himselfe to wicked rebellion. Also that distinction is not in vaine, that all other blasphemies shall be forgien, except that one, which is against the holy Ghost. If any man simply blasphemeth God, there is hope of forgienesse for him: but it is sayd that God will neuer be mercifull to them, that speake blasphemie against the spirit: and why should this be so? But because they, which blaspheme against the spirit, doe against the knowiedge of their owne soule, they oppugne and slauder the giftes and power of the spirit. That also appertayneth to this purpose, which Marke sayeth: that Christe threatned the Pharifics so hardly, because they sayd, that he had an vncleane spirit: because that in so saying, they purposely, wittingly and maliciously, turned light into darknesse. And this is after the maner of Gyantes (as the prouerbe sayth) to bidde battle against God. Yet heere ariseth a question, whether men will breake out into such madnesse as that they will not doubt, but wittingly and willingly to strike at God: for this seemeth to be a strange monster, not to be beleued. I answere, this boldnesse proceedeth of a frantike blindenesse, wherein malice and poysonfull fury getteth the victory. And it is not without cause, that Paul sayth, 1. Tim. 1. 13. Though he was a blasphemier, yet he receiued mercy, because he did it ignorant ly through vnbelcife: for by these words he distinguisheth his sinne from wilfull blasphemie. Also in this place is confuted their errour, which imagine that euery wilfull sinne which is committed, the conscience withstanding it, to be vnardonable. But Paule doeth expressly tie that sinne to the first table of the lawe: and the Lorde doeth by the name of blasphemy poynt out one kinde of sinne, and hee also sheweth that it directly fighteth with the glory of God.

But of all these I gather, that they sinne & blaspheme against the holy Ghost, which turne the graces and giftes of God reuealed vnto them by the spirite (by the which they should set forth his glory) to the hinderance and slauder of the same.

And.

And with Sathan their captaine they are professed enemies to the glory of God Wherefore it is no maruaile if Christ cut away all hope of forgiuenes from such sacrifice : for they are past hope, which turne the onely medicine of their sauing health into deadly poyson. This seemeth to some to be too hard. & therefore they flye to a childith cauill, saying, that it is sayd to be vnpardonable : because the forgiuenes of the same is rare and hard to be obtayned. But Christe speaketh more expresly, so that his words cannot so childithly be shifted. They doe also reason too fondly, that God should be cruell, if hee shoulde neuer forgiue the sinne : and that his crueltie would make vs all amafed : but they do not consider how haynous the offence is, not onely to prophanethe holy name of God of set purpose, but also to spit in his face, while he shineth vpon them with his gracious and favourable countenance. The exception, which other take is as fond : namely, that the meaning should be, that no man should obtayne forgiuenes, without repentance. For, it is certaine, that blasphemy against the holy Ghost is a signe of reprobation : whereof it followeth, that all they that fall into the same, are giuen ouer into a reprobate sense. For, as we hold it to bee vnpoisible, that he that is truly regenerate by the spirit, should throw himselfe headlong into so horrible sinne : so againe is it to be holden, that they which fall into the same, can neuer rise againe : And that God in this sorte reuengeth the contempt of his grace, in that he hardeneth the heartes of the reprobate, that they can neuer attaine to repentance.

32. Neither in this life. Marke doeth briefly set downe the meaning of these wordes saying, that they which speake against the holy Ghost shall bee subiect to eternall damnation. We aske of God forgiuenes of sinnes dayly, and he reconcileth vs vnto himselfe : at length, all sinnes being abolished, in death hee sheweth himselfe mercifull vnto vs, and the fruite of this mercy shall shewe it selfe in the latter day. Therefore the sense is, that there is no hope, that they which blaspheme against the holy Ghost, should obtayne forgiuenes in this life or in the latter iudgement. The cauill, which the Papistes gather hereof, that sinnes may be forgiuen men after their death, is easily confuted. First, they are scolish in wresting the word, of the world to come to a middle time, when as it is euident to all men that it signifieth the last day : but herein also is their wickednes layd open. because that the cauill, which they pretend, is contrary to their owne doctrine. Their destination is known, that the sinnes are freely forgiuen in respect of the offence : but they are required in the satisfaction of the punishments. Now they grant that there is no hope of saluation, except the sins be forgiuen before the death. Therefore there remaineth to the dead onely forgiuenes of the punishment : but they dare not denie, but that this sentence is heere spoken of the sinne. Now, let them goe, and of this colde substance let them kindle their Purgatory fire, if flames can be gotten out of cold ice.

Matth. 12.

33. Eyther make the tree good, and his fruit good, or else make the tree euill, and his fruite euill : for the tree is knowne by his fruit.

34. O generation of Vipers, how can yee speake

Marke.

Luke.

good things, when yee are euill? For of the aboundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh.

35. A good man, out of the good treasure of his heart, bringeth forth good things: and an euill man out of an euill treasure, bringeth forth euill things.

36. But I saye vnto you, that of euery idle worde that men shall speake, they shall giue an account thereof at the day of iudgement.

37. For by thy wordes thou shalt be iustified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned.

33. Either make the tree good. It may seeme to bee absurd, that the choyce is giuen to men to be either good or euill. But if we consider what kinde of meene Christ speaketh to, it shall be easily answered. We know what opinion or estimation there was of the Pharisees: for the mindes of the comon people were so daseled with the fained shew of their holinesse, that no man durst call their lewd dealinges into question. Christe meaning to take away this visard, commandeth them to be either good or euill: as if he should haue saide, there is nothing more contrary to honesty then hypocrisie, and they do challenge to them selues the tytle of righteous in vaine, which are not syncere and vpright. So he putteth nothing in their choice, neither doth he giue them the bridle at libertie: but only admonisheth them that they shall profit nothing by their vaine disguisings, so long as they continue so double, for that it is necessary for men either to bee good or euill. That he sayth, Make the tree, some do gather fondly thereof, that it is in euery mans owne hand, to frame his owne life and maners. For it is an vnbrayding kinde of speech, wherewith Christ scattereth the hypocrisie of Scribes as smoake, calling them to a perfect and pure vprightnesse. After hee setteth downie the maner and the way, whereby they may shew themselues to be either good or euill trees: to witte, if they bring forth good or euill fruit. So now there is no ambiguitie in the sence. The life of the Scribes was infamous amongst men, through their grosse sins, & they bewrayed the poyson of pride, ambition, and enuy, thorow their ewne ouerthwart cauillings: but because the simple people saw not this, Christe brought this great mischiese out of the corners into the light. If any obiect that it cannot bee in this corruption of our nature, that any man should bee found perfecte in euery respect, and pure from all sin: the answer is ready, Christ requireth not an exact perfection, wherein is no want, but only a simple affection without dissimulation, from the which the Pharisees, to whome Christe spake were far wide. For as the scrij ture calleth them euill and wicked, which are wholly giuen to Sathan: so the syncere worshippers of God, though that through the infirmitie of their flesh, they be compassed about with many finnes: and do grone vnder the burden, are yet called good: and this is the free mercy of God, which vouchsaith so honourable a title to them, which aspire to goodnesse.

34. O generation of Vipers. In this place Christe applyeth the similitude of the tree and the fruite to this present speech, that hee might thereby discouer the inwarde and secrete malice of the Scribes, and this is the cause why he standeth so much in this one kinde of sinne. Therefore Christ in-weighed bitterly against them, because they bewrayed by their false flanders, that which was not so euident in the rest of their life. It is sayth he, no merueil, if you vomit out euill words, seeing that your heart is full of malice, let not any thinke the reproofe to be too hard, for truly he could not haue delt more mildly with them. Other sinnes deserue sharpe reprehensio, but where vnconstant men do deprauate that, which is right, or seeke to colour those things that are naught, this is a wickednesse, against the which the Lord of right should thunder more vehemently, then against other sinnes. But the purpose of Christe was as occasion serued, to condemne their wicked sophistrie, which turned light into darknesse. This place therefore teacheth how precious truth is to the Lord, whereof he is so sharpe a defender and reuenger. And I woulde wish that this were more diligently considered of them, which haue a wit too ready and prompt to defend all causes, and set their tongue on sale, to vtter all forged subtil shifts. But Christ especially inueigheth against them, whom either ambition or enuy, or other wicked desire enforceth to speake euil, and where there is nothing that their conscience misliketh. Christ also was after this maner sharper against the Pharises: because they were so bewiched with a false perswasion of righteoufnesse, that a milde admonition should haue profited but little. And certainly, except hypocrites bee sharply pricked, they doe disdainfully despise whatsoeuer is said. How can ye speake good things. I haue said before that prouerbiall sentences may not be alwayes drawne to a generall rule, because they only shew what cometh to passe for the most part, And sometimes it cometh to passe, that he which is cruell with swete alluring words shall deceiue the simple, & that the subtil shall circumuent vnder the cloake of simplicities, and that he, which imagineth most wickedly, shall in tongue pretend an angellike purity: yet the comon vse proueth that to be true, which Christ here saith, of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh. As also in an old prouerbe the tongue is called the Character of the minde. And certainly, though the heart of man hath secrete and hidden corners, and euery man dissembleth his faultes with wonderfull shifts: yet the Lorde wresteth out of all men some confession, so that they bewray with their tongue their desire and inward affections. Also it is to be noted to what ende Christe vseth these parables: for he vpbraideth the Pharises, for that they vtter in wordes the malice, which they had conceiued inwardly. Further, he knowing them to be sworne and obstinate enemies, hee tooke occasion of this one caull to lay open all their life, and to discredit them with the people: for their credit and authoritie was too great, to deceiue and to hurt. Also though good speeches doe not alwayes proceede from the inward affection of the heart, but onely grow (as men say) on the outside of the lips: yet this is alwayes true, euill wordes are witnessies of an euill heart.

36. Of euery idle worde they shall giue an account. The argument is from the lesse to the greater. For euery idle worde is to bee called to an accounte, howe shall GOD spare their open blasphemies and sacrilegious reproches, which they vtter against the glory of God? An idle worde is here taken for vnprofitable, which bringeth neither edifying nor fruite. This seemeth too harde to many: but if wee consider to what vse our tongues are made, we wil grant that they are worthily to be cōdemned, which rashly addit

and apply them to such friuolous trifles. Neyther is it any small offence to abuse the time in waisting it about vaine matters, which Paul cōmandeth vs, Col 4. 5. carefully to redeem. And sith ther is no mā so spare in speaking, that can so wisely moderate himselfe, but that he shall breake out into some idle speeches, so that if God shoulde deale with vs all according to the extremitie of the lawe, there remayned nothing for vs but despaire. But because the hope of our saluation is grounded vpon this, that God will not enter into iudgement with vs, & that of his free mercie hee will forget our sinnes, which deserue innumerable deaths: we doubt not but that he blotting out the guiltines of all our life, will also pardon the offence of vaine speach. For the scripture speaking of the iudgement of God, doth not ouerthrow the forgiuenes of sins: yet let no man flatter himselfe hereby: but let euery man diligently endeouour to bridle his tongue. First, that wee may speake of the holy misteries of God reuerently and soberly: then, that wee may abstaine from scurrilitie and vaine iestings, and especially from enuious euill speaking: & lastly we must giue our diligence that our speach may be seasoned with salt, Col. 4. 6.

37. By thy wordes thou shalt be iustified. He applyeth the common prouerbe to this present cause. For, I doubt not but that this saying was common in the mouthes of the people, that euery man should either be condemned or absolved by his owne confession. And Christ applyeth it to a sense somewhat differing: namely, that the wicked speach, as it is a shew of hidden mallice, so it sufficeth to condemne a man. And the obiection, which the Papistes gather, by wresting this to ouerthrow the righteousnes of faith, is a childish fancy. Man is iustified by his owne words, not that the speach is the cause of righteousnes: for by faith we obtaine the fauour of God, that hee should account vs for righteous: but the pure speach purgeth vs, from being found wicked in our tongue. Is it not foolishly inferred of this, that men should deserue a part of righteousnes before God? But this place rather strengtheneth our doctrine. For though Christ entreateth not of the cause of our righteousnes, yet the contrarietie betwene the two words declareth what this word, to iustifie signifieth. It seemeth absurd to the Papists, that we say that man is iustified by faith: for they expound it to be made and to be righteous in deede: and we vnderstand it to be accounted righteous, and to be cleared before the iudgement of God, as it plainly appeareth by many testimonies of the scripture. And doeth not Christ confirme the same, when he opposeth to iustifie and to condemne one against an other?

Math. 12.

Mark

Luke: 11.

43. Nowe when the vncleane spirite is gone out of a man, he walketh throughout dry places, seeking rest, and findeth none. 44. Then he saith, I will returne into mine house, from whence I came, and when hee is come, hee findeth it empty, swept and garnished. 45. Then hee goeth, and taketh vnto him seauen other spirites worse then himselfe, and they enter in and dwell ther and the end of that man is worse then the beginning. Euen so shall it be with this wicked generation.

24. When the vncleane spirite is gone out of a man, hee walketh through dry places, seeking rest, and when he findeth none, he saith, I will returne vnto mine house, whence I came out.

25. And when he cometh, he findeth it swept and garnished.

26. Then goeth hee, and taketh to him seuen other spirits worse then himselfe: and they enter in and dwell there, so the last state of that man is worse then the first.

43. When

43. When the vncleane spirit. Hee pronounceth against the Scribes and such hypocrites; which despise the grace of God, and conspire with the deuill, such a iudgement as their vnthankfulnes deserueth. Yet that the fruit of doctrine may more largely appeare, hee generally declareth what iudgement they procure to themselues, which by despising grace offered, doe againe open a dore to the deuill. But, because there is great waight almost in euery feuerall clause, some things must bee noted in order, before wee handle the summe of the parable. When Christ speaketh of the going out of the deuill, he commendeth vnto vs: the force and effect of the grace of God, so oft as it cometh vnto vs: but especially when God draweth neere vnto vs in the person of his sonne: the ende is, that we being deliuered from the tyranny of the deuill, hee might take vs to himselfe, and that did Christ plainly declare in the former miracle. Therefore, sith it his peculiar offic to driue away euill spirites, that they should not reigne any more in men, it is well sayd, that the deuill goeth out of those men, to whom Christ offereth himselfe a redeemer. And though the presence of Christ is not effectual to all, because the vnbeleuers make it to be of none effect to them: yet he woulde haue vs to note to what ende hee visiteth vs, what his coming auayleth of it selfe, and lastly what the euill spirites doe feele. For, hee neuer worketh in men, but that the deuils beeing brought into the conflicte, doe giue place vnto his power. Therefore it is to bee noted, that the deuill is cast out of vs so ofte as Christ shineth vpon vs, and sheweth by some testimony his fauour towards vs. Also, the miserable condition of all mankind is heere described vnto vs: for it followeth that the deuill hath a dwelling place in men: because hee is driuen out from thence by the sonne of GOD. And hee speaketh not of one or other particular man, but of all the offspring of Adam. This therefore is the glory of our nature, that the deuill hath his seate in vs: so that hee dwelleth as well in our body, as in our soule. Whereby wee also see a spectacle of the most excellent mercie of God, in that of filthy stables of the deuill, hee maketh vs temples for himselfe, and consecrateth vs for a dwelling place for his spirit. Thirdly, he painteth out vnto vs the practise of Sathan: to wit, that hee neuer ceaseth from endangering vs, but applyeth it dayly, and turneth himselfe euery way: and to bee short, hee bendeth all his endeouours to worke our destruction: but especially where he is vanquished, and put to flight by Christe, hee enrageth and desireth to hurt the more. For, before that Christ maketh vs partakers of his power, the enimie reigneth in vs, as it were in play and sport. But being driuen out, hee sorroweth the losse of his pray, he gathereth new forces, and stirreth all the powers hee hath, that hee may ouerthrow vs againe. Therefore it is sayd metaphorically, that hee walketh through drie places: for his banishment is greiuous to him, and his dwelling out of men is like to a filthy desert. In the same sense also hee sayeth, that hee seeketh rest so long as hee is out of men: because that then hee fretteth and tormenteth himselfe, and he ceaseth not to try euery way, vntill hee recouer that he hath lost. Wherefore let vs learne, as soone as Christe calleth vs, there is a hot and a sharpe combate prepared for vs. For though he attempteth to destroy all men, and that saying of Peter appertayneth to all, without exception, that he goeth about like a roaring Lyon, seeking whom hee may deuoure, 1. Pet. 5. 18. Yet we are plainly taught by these words of Christ, that he burneth with greater ter hatred, and is caried with more enuious force, against them which are taken out of his snares. But this admonition ought not to make vs a'rayd, but to stirre vs vp, to make vs diligent in keeping our watches, that being armed with spirituall armors, we may be strong to resist him.

44. Hee findeth it emptye. Christ without doubt meaneth them which being voyd of the spirit of God, are readie to receiue the deuill. For the faithfull in whom the spirit of God doth dwell perfectly, are so fenced on euery side, that there is no hole or ginne left open for Sathan. That he calleth it a house swept and garnished, is a similitude borrowed of the vie of men, which are delighted with cleanes and neatnesse in their lodgings. For deformitie is onely beautifull to Sathan, and nothing saoureth well to him, but stinck and filthinesse. But the meaning is, that Sathan can neuer haue a more conuenient place in vs, then when we bid Christ farewell, & admit him in for a guest. Therefore his greatest delights are in that emptinesse, which followeth after the neglect of the grace of God.

45. Hee taketh to him seuen other. The number of seuen is taken heere indefinitely, as it is oft in other places. Also Christ teacheth in these wordes, that if wee fall from his grace, we are double endangered to Sathan, so that he useth a greater libertie ouer vs then before, and this is a iust punishment of our slouthfulness. Wherefore let vs not thinke that the deuill is ouercome in one battell, when he is once throwne out of vs: let vs rather remember, sith he hath dwelt in vs of old, euer since we were borne, he hath found and by experience known all those wayes, by which he may enter into vs: if the common passage bee not open to him, he wanteth no subtiltie to creepe in secretly by priuy mines & secret ginnes. Therefore we must labour diligently, that Christ ruling and reigning in vs, may shut vp all passages against his enemie. For although the assaults of Sathan are sharpe and dangerous, there is no cause why they should weaken the children of God: for the inuincible power of the holy Ghost keepeth them in safetie. And wee know that this plague is onely pronounced against the despisers of the grace of God, which menne become profane by choaking vp the light of faith, and by suppressing the study of godlinesse.

L.V. 27. Blessed is the wombe. The meaning of the woman was in this order to set forth the excellencie of Christ: for she had no respect to Mary, whom peradventure she neuer saw. but this doth not a litle set forth the glory of Christ for: that he ennobled and made blessed the wombe wherein he was borne. And this blessing of God is no absurd nor strang matter, but is spoken after the manner of the scripture. for we know that the child, which is especially adorned with notable grace, is preferred aboue al other as a singular gift of God. And it cannot be denied, but that God chusing and appointing Mary to be the mother of his sonne, gaue her great honour thereby. Yet Christes answer yeldeth not so to the womans words, but is rather a sharp reproofe. Nay, saith he, blessed are they which heare the word of God. We see that Christ made almost no account of that, which the woman only extold. And certainly that which she thought had bene Marys greatest glory, was far inferiour to her gifts of grace: for it was much more dignitie to be regenerate by the spirit of Christ, then to conceiue the flesh of his Christ in her wombe: to haue Christ spiritually liuing in her then to giue him suck with her breasts. To be short, the holy virgins greatest felicitie & glory was in this, to be a member of her sonne, & that he accounted her amongst the new creatures of the heauenly father. Yet I think that the womans speech was reprobued for an other cause, and to an other end: namely, because men commonly neglect the gifts of God, which in a masse they wonder at, and sound with full mouthes. For this woman in praying Christ, omitted that, which was the chief, that in him there was saluation offered to all men. That therefore was but a cold commendation, wherein there was no mention of his grace & power, which extendeth vnto al men, Wherefore Christ doth rightly challenge vnto himselfe an other kind of praise, that his mother only shuld not be accounted blessed, & that in respect of the flesh: but because he bestoweth vpon vs al perfect & eternall blessednes. Therefore the dignitie of Christ is then esteemed of as it ought to be, when we consider to what end Christ was giuen vs of the father, & that we feele what benefits he hath brought vnto vs that we in him may be made blessed, which are in our felues miserable. But why speaketh he nothing of himselfe, and maketh mention only of the word of God? because that by this meanes he openeth vnto vs al his treasures, & he doth not any thing with vs, nor we againe with him without his worde. Such therefore he communicateth himselfe vnto vs by the word, rightly & properly he calleth vs to heare & keep the same, that he by faith may become ours. Now, we see what Christes

Christes answer differeth from the commendation of the woman: for hee offereth that blessednes liberally to all, which shee had after a sorte tyed to one house, also he teacheth that he must not be accounted of in a cōmon sort or order, because that he hath all the treasures of heauenly life, blessednes and glory hidden in him, which he dispenseth by his worde, that they which imbrace the worde, may by sayth be made partakers of the same. For the free adoption of God, which we learne out of his word is the key of the kingdō of heauen. And this ioyning them together is to be noted, that first we must heare, & then obserue & keepe: for faith cōmeth by hearing, Ro. 10 17. & here ariseth the fountaine and beginning of the spirituall life. But because that simple hearing is as a vaine looking into a glasse, as Iames declarcth, 1. 23. The keeping of the word is also added, which is as much as an effectuall receiuing, where it taketh liuely rootes in the hearts, that it may bring forth the fruit. So the vaine hearer, who hath onely his eares beaten with the outward doctrine getteth nothing. And whosoever boast that they are satisfied with a secrete inspiration, and vnder this pretence neglect the outward preaching, are excluded out of the heauenly life. Therefore those things, which the sonne of God hath ioyned, let no men of a sacrilegious rashnes put a sunder. The blockish folly of the papists is to be wondered at, that they would sing these wordes in the honour of Mary, which doe so plainly confute their superstition: but in their thanksgiuing, they cul out the womans words, omitting the woordes of Christe which reprocueth. But so it was meete that they should be by all meanes bewitched, which inducours thēselues to prophane the holy word of God after their owne pleasure.

L V. 19. Then came to him, There seemeth to be some difference betweene Luke & the other two Euangelists: for they in setting downe their history say, that the mother and kinstolkes of Christ came, when hee had spoken of the vn-cleane spirit: and Luke referreth it to an other time, and onely setteth downe the exclamation of the woman, which wee expounded euen now. But because it is well knowne that the Euangelistes were not very curious in obseruing the course of times, nor in prosecuting all perticular deeds & sayings, the answer is not so hard. For Luke setteth not downe what time Christes mother came: but that which the other two set before the parable of the sowing, hee setteth after. And that he saith, a certaine woman of the cōpany cryed, is somewhat like to this history: for it may be that of an vnaduised zeale she extolled that to the highest degree, which she thought Christ made too small account of: they do all agree in this, that Christes brethré & mother came while he was speaking in the middest of the cōpany: & without doubt it was either because they were carefull of him, or because they desired to learne: for they laboured not to come to him in vaine: neither is it likely ꝑ they were vnbeleeuers, which accompanied the holy mother. There is no colour that Ambrose & Chrysostō do imagine ꝑ Mary did it of ambition. For what need this imagination, whē as the spirit doth euery where testifie to her cōmendation of her great goodnes and modestie? It may bee that the greatnes of their carnal affectiō made thē more busie then needed: I deny not this: but I iudge that they came of a godly desire to ioyne thēselues to his cōpany. That Mat. reporteth that the message of their cōming was brought to him by one certaine man, and that Mar. and Lu. do attribute it to mo, hath no absurditie in it. But (as it commonly commeth to passe) the commandement, which the mother gaue of calling him foorth, was receiued, and so passed amongst many, vntill at length it was brought vnto himselfe.

MA T. 48. Who is my mother? It is not to be doubted, but that Maries importunitie is reproued in these words, and certainly she delt very preposterously to attempt to hinder the course of his doctrine. But yet this setting light by the kindred of flesh and bloud, doth deliuer a very profitable doctrine, while he receiueh all his disciples and faithfull ones into the same degree of honour, as if they had bene chiefe amonge his kinsfolkes. But this sentence dependeth of the office of Christ, for he declareth hereby that hee is not giuen to a certaine small number, but to all the godly, which by faith shoulde grow into one body with him. Then, that there is not a more excellent bond of kindred, then the spirituall: because he ought not to be accounted after the flesh, but of the power of his spirit, wherewith he was enriched by the father to renew men, that they which by nature were a filthy and cursed seede of Adam, should by grace begin to be holy and heauenly children of God. Therefore Paule, 2. Cor. 5. 16. saith, that Christ cannot be knowen truly a ter the flesh: because the new repaying of the world is rather to be considered, which exceedeth farre about mans power, while he reformeth vs by his spirit to the image of God. wherefore this is in summe the purpose, that we should learne to looke vpon Christe with the eyes of fayth: also wee must knowe, that euery one that is regenerated by the spirit, giueth himselfe wholly to God in true righteousness to be throughly ioynd to Christ, and so to be made one with him. Further, hee meaneth that they doe the will of the father, not which exactly fulfill all the righteousness of the law (for so this name of brother, which Christ giueth to his disciples shoulde agree to no man) but he especially commendeth faith, which is the fountaine & beginning of holy obedience: it also couereth the wantes and offences of the flesh, that they bee not imputed. For the saying of Christ is well knowen, this is the will of my father, that euery man, which seeth the sonne, and beleueth in him, should not perish, but haue euerlasting life, Ioh. 6. 40. And though christ seemeth here to haue no respect of bloud, yet we know that hee did indeed sanctifie mankind with worshippe, and performed the lawful dueties towards parents: but he teacheth vs that in respecte of the spirituall kindred, the kindred of the flesh is of none or of small estimation. Let therefore this comparison so far preuaile with vs, that we may pay that which is due to nature, but let vs not bee too much tyed to flesh and bloud. But sith Christe vouchsafeth that incomparable honour to the disciples of the Gospell, that he accounteth them for brethren: our vnthankfulnesse isto be detected, if we reiect not all the desires of the flesh, and bend all our endeouours hecher.

and three nightes in the whales belly: so shall the sonne of man be three daies and three nightes in the heart of the earth.

41. The men of Niniuie shall rise in iudgement with this generation, & condemne it: for they repented at the preaching of Ionas: & behold a greater then Ionas is here.

42. The Queene of the south shall rise in iudgement with this generation, and shall condemne it: for shee came from the vtmost partes of the earth, to heare the wisdom of Salomon: and behold, a greater then Salomon is here.

30. For as Ionas was a signe to the Ninuities, so shall the Sonne of man be to this generation.

31. The Queene of the south shall rise in iudgement with the men of this generation, and shall condemne them: for shee came from the vtmost partes of the earth, to heare the wisdom of Salomon, and behold, a greater then Salomon is here.

32. The men of Ninuie shall rise in iudgement with this generation, and shall condemne it: for they repented at the preaching of Ionas, and beholde a greater then Ionas is here.

38. Certaine of the Scribes. Matthew reporteth somewhat the like againe in the sixteene chapter, and Marke in the eight chapter. Whereby it appeareth that Christ was often questioned with of this matter: so that their wickednes hadde no end, which once were determined to resist the truth. It is euident that they demande a signe, that their vnbeliefe might haue some faire show: namely, that the calling of Christ was not lawfully confirmed. Neither were they so easie & apt to be taught, as that they would giue place to three or foure miracles, much lesse would one suffice them. But as I touched it euen now, they excused them selues by this colour that they beleued not the Gospell, because Christ shewed no seale of the same from heauen. Hee had now wrought miracles enough in number, and euident before their eyes: but as if they were of no force for the confirmation of the doctrine, they would haue some signe from heauen, wherein God after a sort should visibly appeare. They for manner sake doe salute him by the name of maister: because that then they so called all the Scribes and Interpreters of the law: but they do not acknowledg him to be a Prophet of God, vtill he doe bring some testimonie from heauen. The meaning therefore is, sith thou professest thy selfe to be a teacher and a maister, if thou wilt haue vs to be thy disciples, bring it to passe, that God from heauen may testifie, that he is the authour of thy maisterhip, and confirme thy calling by a miracle.

39. Euill generation. He doth not onely accuse the malice of that age, but hee accuseth the Jewes for a wicked nation or the Scribes and such like: signifying that this disease of obstinate stubbornnes came vnto them as it were by inheritance. For the word here vsed is somerime taken for one age, sometime for a country or nation. And he calleth them adulterous, for corrupt people, begotten in adultery, or bastardes, because they were degenerate from their holy fathers: as the Prophets doe also reprove the vnbeleeuers of their age, not to be the offspring of Abraham, but a prophane seede of Chanaan.

Now it is demaunded whether Christ did so sharpely reprove them, because they desired to haue a signe giuen them. For in the booke of Iudg. 6. 17. God sheweth that hee was not so much displeas'd with these thinges. Gedeon demaundeth a signe: G O D is not angry, but granteth his request, and though hee proceedeth importunately, yet God yeeldeth to his infirmitie, God offereth willingly a signe to Ezechiah, who demanded it not, Esay. 38. 22. And Achas was sharply reprov'd, because he refused to demaund a signe, as he was commaunded by the Prophet, Esay. 7. 11. Therefore Christ doth not simply reprove the Scribes, because they demand a signe: but for that they being vnthankfull to God, hauing maliciously refused so many of his graces and powers, take this as a shift, least they should obey his word. For I doe not onely say that it was their slouth, but their malice, which kept their eyes shut at so many miracles. Therefore they were troubled in vaine: for their deuise was to no other purpose but that they might freely reiect Christ. Paule condemneth the same fault in their posteritie, 1. Cor. 1. 22. When he sayth, that the Iewes seeke for signes.

No signes shall be giuen vnto it. They were after conuict by sundry myracies: and Christ ceased not to shewe his power amongst them, that he might thereby take all excuse from them. But he ouely meaneth that one signe, which should bee vnto them in steade of all: because they were vnworthy to haue their wicked desire satisfied. Let them be content, sayth he, with this signe, that as Ionas brought out of the bottome of the sea preached to the Ninuities, so they should heare the voyce of a Prophet rayed to life againe. I know that many haue interpreted this place more subtilly: but sith the similitude between Christ and Ionas hold not in all the particular pointes of the same, it is to bee seen how farre Christ compareth himselfe to Ionah. But I omitting the speculations of other men, doe thinke this one thing meete to be noted, which I touched euen now, that he should become a prophet vnto them after his resurrection: as if he should haue sayd, you contemne the sonne of G O D, which descended to you from heauen: Therefore it remaineth that I being dead shoulde rise from the graue, and being restored to life againe, I will speake vnto you, as Ionas came out of the bottome of the sea. Therefore the Lorde so cut away all occasions from their wicked desires, that he sayth, that after his resurrection hee would become a Prophet to them, seing they would not receiue him clothed in mortall flesh. In Luke he saith, that he would be a signe vnto the, as Ionas was vnto the Ninuities. The word signe is vnproperly vsed, not that it should foretheuwe any thing, but that it is remoued farre from the common order of nature: as the sending of Ionah was wonderfull, when he was brought out of the belly of the fish, as out of a graue, that he might call the Ninuities to repentance. In this phrase of three nights is a figuratiue speech, as it is well knowne. For because the night is a lioynd to the day, or because the day consisteth of two parts: light, and darkenes: of which two Christ noteth one day, & putteth one whole day for a halte.

41. The men of Nininie shall rise in iudgment. Because he had spoken of the Ninuities, christ tooke here of occasiō to shew that the scribes & others, which refuse his doctrine to bee much worse then they were. The prophane men, sayth he, which neuer heard word of the true God, repēted at the voice of this new and strang quest: this kingdom, which is the library of the heauely doctrine, will not heare the son of God and the promised redeemer. For in this similitude there is this Antithesis. It is known what the Ninuities were: namely, that they were not accustomed to haue Prophets, but were without true doctrine. Ionas came not amongst them.

thē with any glorious title, but a stranger might easily haue bene reiected. The Iewes boasted that the word of God had a seate & dwelling place amongst thē, if they had looked vpon Christ with cleare eies, they shuld not onely haue known that he was a teacher sent frō heauen, but also the Messias & authour of saluatiō promised them. But if the miserable wickednes of the people was therefore condemned, because they despised Christ speaking vpon earth: we excel the vnbelieuers of all times, if we obey not the holy and heavenly voyce of the sonne of God, now sitting in heauē. Furthermore, I wil not now entreat whether the Niuiuts were truly & perfectly cōuerted to god: because it suffiseth that they were so moued at the doctrine of Ionah: that they gaue their mind to repentance.

42. The Queene of the south. Because that Aethiopia lieth southward in respect of Iudea, I do easily assēt to Iosephus & others, which say that this was the queene of Aethiopia: & that she is called in the scriptures the queene of Saba, it may not be vnderstood of the country of Sabea, which lieth more eastward, but of a citie in the Ile of Meroes situated vpon Nilus, which was the chiefe city of the kingdome. Here also is it good to weigh the comparifons: a woman, which was neuer brought vp in Gods schoole, for a desire she had to learne, came out of a far country, to Salomon an earthly king. The Iewes students of the law of God, do refuse their chiefe and onely teacher, & prince of the prophets. Also the phrase of iudging is not here so much referred to the persons, as to the example of the thing it selfe.

Luke. 10.

23. And hee returned to his disciples, and saide secretly, blessed are the eyes, which see that yee see.

24. For I tel you that many prophets & kings haue desired to see those thinges which yee see: & haue not seene them: & to heare those thinges which yee heare, and haue not heard them.

These things which I haue here written downe out of Luke, doe peraduenture belong to some other time: but no reason seemeth to compell mee to separate those things which he hath ioyned together in one text. First he sayth that the 12. Apostles preached the kingdome of God with Christ. Whereof we gather, that though the ordinarie office of teaching was not as yet laid vpon them, yet they were continuall helpers to make the people attentiu hearers of their master. So though their estate was farre inferiour, yet they are accounted as helpers of Christ. Also he addeth that Christ had certaine women in his company, which were healed and deliuered from euill spirites. and other infirmities, as Marie Magdalene was, who had bene tormented of seuen deuills. The hauing of this company might seeme to be smal for his honour: for what was more vndecent for the Sonne of God, then to leade women about with him, noted with infamie? But by this we do the better perceiue that the sinnes wherewith we were loden before we beleued, are so farre from hindering the glory of Christ, that they doe rather amplifie & set forth the same. And it is not sayd that he found the Church which he chose, without spotte or wrinkle, but that he washed & clesned it with his blood, that he might make it pure and beautifull, Wherefore the miserable and shamefull estate of these women, after they were deliuered from the same, made greatly for the glory of Christe, for they were ensignes and tokens of his power and of his grace. Luke also commendeth their thankfulness, in that they despising the shame of the world, followed their deliuerer. It is not to bee doubted but that they were poynted at with the finger euery where, and the company and presence of Christ was vnto them as a Theatre to set them forth to the shew: but they refuse not to set their shamefastnesse openly a broach, rather then that the grace of Christ being suppressed, should be hid: but that the beholding of Christ might bee the more notable, they do willingly suffer themselues thus to be humbled. Also, singular and wonderfull was the shew of the great goodnesse of Christ towards Mary, in that she being a woman possessed by seuen deuils, and as a most vile bondslaue of Sathan, he did not only vouchsafe her the honour of a disciple, but tooke her also to his company. Luke addeth the surname of Magdalene, that he may make a difference betweene her and Marthas syster & other Marias, of whom there is mention in other places.

L V K E. 3. Ioanna the wife of Chusa. It is not knowne whether Luke would that that which he spake of Mary, should be vnderstood of these women also. In my opinion it seemeth probable, that she was first placed in order, in whom Christ had shewed his great power. And that Chusas wife & Susanna, honest matrons and of good name & fame, were added after, only because they were healed of some common diseases. And their godly endeouour deserueth so much the more praise, because that they being rich & noble matrons, ministred vnto Christ of their owne substance. And not content with this labour, they leauing all the affaires of their owne houses, had rather follow him with enuy and many discommodities, through strange and vncertaine lodging places, then to enjoy delicate quietnesse in their owne houses. And it may be that Chusa, Herodes stewarde, was too like his maister, and much contrary to his wifes minde: but the godly woman through feruencie of her zeale and stancie ouercame this let.

M A T. 2. Great multitudes resorted to him. It is not in vaine that the Euangelists doe speake of the great concourse of the people, because that Christ at the beholding of them, tooke occasion to compare his doctrine to seed. The multitude was come together out of many places, they stood doubtfull what to doe, they had all like greedy desire to heare, but they had not like affection to profit. This was the occasiō of the parable, to teach that the seed of the doctrine is not fruitfull euery where, though it be sowed far & wide. For it alwaies findeth not a fruitfull and well appointed earth. Christ therefore professeth himselfe in that, to be like to a Husband man, which goeth forth to sowe: but that many of his hearers are like to hard and drie earth: others like thorny grounde, so that both labour and seed are lost. But I will leaue of further entreating of the meaning of this Parable, vntill we come to the exposition which the Lord himselfe maketh a little after. Onely for this present the readers are to bee admonished of this, if they be found like to vnprofitable and barren earth, which out of farre places come as men starued to Christ: it is no maruell if the Gospell do not at this day bring forth fruite in many, wherof some are slacke and slow, other heare negligently, and others are scarce drawne to heare.

9. He that hat heares. Christ doth by these wordes declare, partly that all are not endued with true vnderstanding to conceiue that which he speaketh: and partly he stirreth vp his disciples, that they should more diligently consider that the doctrine is neither easie nor meete for euery man. And he so distinguisheth betweene hearers, as if some could heare, and others were deafe. Now if it be demanded whereof it cometh, that the former haue eares to heare: the scripture testifieth in Psal. 40. 6. that no man can make and frame himselfe eares of his owne industry, but that they are prepared of the Lord,

10. Then the disciples came, and said vnto him It appeareth by Matthewes wordes, that the disciples had not onely respecte of themselues, but had also a care and regard of others. When they perceiued not the meaning of the parable, they knewe that it was much harder to the people: therefore they complaine that Christe had spoken such wordes, as the hearers reaped no profit by. Also though similitudes do commonly make that matter plaine which is in hand, yet they which containe a continuall Metaphore, are very obscure & hard. Therefore Christ propounding this similitude, couered that vnder an Allegory, which he coulde haue spoken more plainly and fully with out a figure. But now where he expoundeth it, the figuratiue speech is more plaine and more pithy, then that which is simply spoken without a figure. that is, it is not onely more effectuall to moue the mindes, but also plainer. It is good therefore to consider, how and in what order euery thing is spoken.

11. It is giuen to you, to knowe the mysteries. By this answer of Christe we doe gather that G O D proposeth the doctrine of saluation to menne for diuers ends. For Christe declareth that he spake so darkely of purpose, that his wordes might seeme harde vnto many, and shoulde onely beate their eares with a confused and doubtfull sounde. If any manne shall obiecte to the contrary, that saying of Isaias, 45. 19. I haue not spoken in secrete, neyther ther in a darke corner: I sayd not in vaine to the seede of Iacob: seeke you me: or those commendations which Dauid doeth giue of the law, Psalme 119. 19. that it is a lantern to the feete, and giueth wise dome to the simple: the answer is ready and easie, the word by the owne nature is alwayes light, but the light of it is dimmed with the darkenesse of men. For though the lawe was couered as with a vaile, yet the tructh of God was euident to be seene in the same, if the eyes of many had not beene blind. Paule witnesseth truely of the Gospell, 2. Cor 4. 4. that it is not hid but from the reprobate, & them that are ordained to destruction, whose mindes Sathan hath blinded. Also this is to be knowne, that the force of lightning whereof Dauid maketh mention, & the familiar kind of teaching which Isai speaketh of is properly referred to the chosē people. Yet this alwayes remaineth certaine and sure that the word of God is not obscure, but as the world with her owne blindnesse darkenth it; but yet the Lorde referueth his mysteries, so that the reprobate cannot come to the vnderstanding of them. And he depriueth them of the light of his doctrine two waies, for some time he speaketh that in parables. which might haue beene spoken more plainly: sometime he opening his minde plainly without darke speeches and figures he dulleth their senses, and amaseth them, so that they cannot see in the midde day. To this purpose pertaine those horrible threats in Isai, 28. 11, where he threateneth that he would be a stranger to the people, & that he would speake with a straunge and vnknowne language: that the visions of the prophetes, should be to the learned as a booke shutte and sealed, wherein they could not read, Isa. 29. 11, and where the booke should be opened, they should be all as idyotes, and stay as menne amased that cannot reade. Now sith Christ so dispensed his doctrine of purpose, that it should profit onely a few, in whose minds it should bee thoroughly setled: and that it should hold other some in suspence and in doubt: it followeth that the doctrine of saluation was not deliuered by God to men for one end and purpose, but it is so ordered by his wonderfull counsell. that it should be to the reprobate a fauour of death to death, as to the elect a liuely fauour to life. And least any manne should be so bolde as to murmur against it. Paule answereth in these wordes whatsoeuer the effect of the Gospell be, yet the fauour of it, though it be deadly doeth alwayes smell sweetly before God. But that the meaning of this present place may be the better vnderstoode, it behoueth vs to sift more narrowly the purpose of Christ, for what cause and to what end he spake this. First, the comparifon vndoubtedly tendeth to this ende, that Christ might amplyfie & set forth the grace and fauour which he sheweth to his disciples: because that was specially giuen to them, which was not generally allowed to all. If any mane shoulde demaunde from whence the apostles had this dignitie and priuiledge: certainly the cause shall not be found in them; and Christe by sayinge that it was giuen them excludeth all merite and desert. Christe affirmeth them to bee appoynted and chosen menne, whome God hath especially vouchsafed this honour, that he should reueale his secretes vnto them, and that other shoulde be voide and without this grace. There is no other cause of this difference to be found, but that God callsth vnto him, them that he hath freely chosen.

2. For who soeuer hath. Christ prosecuteth that which I spake euen now: for he admonisheth his disciples, how liberally God dealeth with them, that they might make so much the more account of this grace, and acknowledge themselves the more bound, for that they had received a greater benefit then other. He rehearseth these same wordes in an other place, but in an other sense, for there hee speaketh of the lawfull vse of gi tes: but now he simply teacheth, that there is more bestowed vpon the Apostles, then vpon the common sort of men, because that the heauenly father woulde in this sort abundantly heape vp his bountifull kindnes towards them: for because that he neuer forsaketh the works of his owne hands, as it is sayd in the Psalme, 138. 8. whom hee once beginneth to make, he beautifieth dayly more and more, vntill at length he bringeth them into great perfection. For this cause doth there flow so manifolde graces from him to vs: hereof come so ioyfull proceedings, because the beholding the G O D of their deliuerance, prouoketh a continuall course of bountifullnesse. And as his riches are innumerable, so he is neuer weary of enriching his children. Therefore as oft as hee listeth vs vpp higher, wee ought to remember that what benefites soeuer we receiue dayly, they come out of that fountayne, that he would performe that worke of our saluation begon in vs. But on the contrary part, Christ affirmeth that the reprobate doe alwayes become worie, vntill they being altogether come to naught, doe faint in their owne weaknes. This seemeth to be a hard speech, that there should bee taken from the wicked, that which they haue not: but Luke mittigateth the hardnes, and taketh away the ambiguitie, by altering the words somewhat: saying, that those things shall be taken away, which they seeme to haue. And certainly, it falleth commonly out that the reprobate doe excell in many excellent giftes, and in shew are like to the children of God. But there is no soundnesse in them, because the minde is voide of godlinesse, and there appeareth onely a vaine shewe. Wherefore Mathew doth rightly say that they haue nothing, because it is accounted as nothing before God, and in their conscience it is vaine and vnfruitfull. Luke doth aptly declare that the giftes wherewith they were indued, were prophaned by them, so that they onely made a shew in the eyes of men, else they had nothing but a pompe and vaine-glorious brag. Hereby wee also learne to seeke profite euery day of our life, because that God hath of this condition giuen vs the taste of his heauenly doctrine, that we might dayly bee more abundantly fed with the same, vntill we come to a perfect fulnes. Marke setteth downe this sentence somewhat more confusedly: Take heed, sayth the Lord, what is said vnto you. Then if they haue profited well, hee putteth them in hope of greater grace, to you (sayth he) that heare, shall more be giuen. Then followeth a clause which agreeth with Mathews wordes, but in the midst is there a sentence which I expounded before in the 7. chap. of Mathew, because it is not likely to be placed here in his owne order. For the Euangelists (as it is sayd other where) were not curious in setting downe Christs sermons, but heaped oft diuers of his sentences together. But Luke setteth downe the same sentence in diuers places with other words which Christ spake, and also noteth the diuers causes why Christ so spake the same: namely, to make them attentiuē to his doctrine, least the word of life should passe forth in vaine, which ought to be receiued, and to take rootes in our mindes, as if he should haue sayd: Take heede least that bee taken from you, which was giuen you, if it fructifie not.

13. Therefore spake I to them in Parables. He sayth that he spake obscurely to the multitude, because they could not bee partakers of the true light. Yet when he saith, that there is a vaile drawne ouer the blind, that they might remaine in their blindnesse, hee ascribeth the fault of this to them: but thereby hee the more commendeth the grace giuen to the Apostles, which was not in such sorte giuen commonly to all. And other cause he assigneth none, but the secret counsell of God, the reason whereof, though it be hid from vs, yet is apparant to him, as wee shal hereafter more plainly appeare. And though parables haue an other ende, then to containe darke speeches, which God would not that they shoulde be plainly made knowne. yet wee sayd that this which we haue now in hand, was so propofed by Christ, that by the continuance of the Allegorie, it was as a doubtfull riddle.

14. So in them is fulfilled the Prophecie. He confirmeth & proueth out of the prophesie of Isai, that it is no new thing, if many profite nothing by the worde of God, because that in times past the old people were founde in such great blindnesse. But this place of the Prophet is diuersly cited in the new Testament. For Paule Actes 28. 26. vpbraiding the Iewes for their obstinate malice, saith that they were therefore blinded, that they coulde not see the light of the Gospell, because they were bitter and rebellious against God. So he set downe the nearest cause which was to bee seene openly in the men. But in the Epistle to the Rom. 11. 7. he setteth downe the cause out of a higher & a more secret fountaine: for he teacheth that the remnants should bee saued according to the grace of election: & that the rest were blinded, according as it is saide by Isaias, &c. the opposition there vsed is to be noted, for if the only free election of God saucth a remnant of the people: it followeth that all other do perish by the secret iudgement of God, but yet righteous. For vho are those other which Paul opposeth to the remnants which were chosen, but they whom God would not should be saued? There is the like reason also in Iohn 22. 38. For he saith that there were many which beleued not, because that no man beleueth, but they to whome the arme of the Lord is reuealed. And presely after, he addeth, that they could not beleue, because it is written againe, Isa. 6. 9. he hath blinded their eyes, and hardned their hearts. Christ also had regard vnto this, when he referreth it to the secret counsel of God, that the truth of the gospel was not generally reuealed to all, but set forth a farre off vnder dark speeches, so that nothing was poured into the peoples mindes but grosser blindnes. I doe alwayes graunt that whom soeuer God doth blind, they are found worthy of this plague: but because the next cause doth not appeare in the persons of the men, let this principle remaine alwayes certaine & sure, that they are lightned of God to saluation, and that by a singular gift, whō God hath freely chosen. but al the reprobate are deprived of the light of life, whether God withdraweth his word from them, or else holdeth their eyes and eares fast closed, that they should not heare nor see. Now we see how christ applyeth the prophesie of the prophet to the presēt cause Hearinge, yee shall heare. The woordes of the Prophet are not recited, neither was it needfull: for it was sufficient for Christe to shewe that it was no new nor strange example, if many be astonished at the word of God. The saying of the Prophet was this: Go blind their minds, and harden their hearts. Matthew referreth it to the hearens, that the fault of their blindness & hardnes might be laid vpon themselves: for the one of them cannot be separated from the other, because that as many as are cast off into a reprobate sence, do willingly and of a conceiued malice blind & harden themselves. Neither can it be otherwise, where as the spirit of God raigeth not, wherby the elect are only ruled. Wherefore let this which is added be noted, that all they are out of their mind, which God lighteneth not with the spirit of adoption: & therefore they are rather blinded by the word of God, & yet the fault remaineth in the, because they are willingly blinded. But the ministers of the word may by this comfort themselves, if they haue not alwayes such successe of their labours as they desire. yea, if that may be so far from profiting by their doctrine, that they rather become the wo se thereby. Namely, that the same thing befaileth vnto them, that the Prophet whom they do not excell had experice of. It were to be wished that all were brought to obey God, & it becōmeth them to apply and to labour to bring this to passe: yet let them not wonder, that the iudgement which was exercised in times past by the ministry of the Prophet, be also fulfilled at this day. But we must diligēly take heed, least the fruit of the gospel perish through our default.

MAR. 12. That they seeing, may not discern. It sufficeth to note here breisly, that which is more largely entreated of other where, that the doctrine is not properly, nor by it selfe, nor of the own nature the cause of the blindness, but by an accidentall meanes. For, as when the purblind come forth into the Sun, their eyes are more blinded, and that fault is not to be imputed to the Sunne, but to their eyes: so the word of God blindeth & hardneth the reprobate: because it cometh through their owne wickednesse it is proper and naturall to themselves, & accidentall to the word.

Least at any time they should turne. This clause sheweth what profit we should haue by hearing & vnderstanding: namely, that men being turned to God, may by him be receiued againe into grace, & by ioyning his mercy, they may liue well & happily. Therefore the Lord would that his word should be preached especially for this end, that by renewing the mindes & hearts of men, hee might reconcile them to himselfe. But on the contrary side, I sai here sayeth of the reprobate, that a stony hardnes remaineth in them, least they should obtaine mercy, & that the effecte of the worde was taken away from them, least their heartes should tourne to repentance. Vnder this word healing, Matthew comprehendeth the deliuerance from all euilles, as the Prophet also doth. for they do Metaphorically compare a people afflicted by the hand of God, to a sicke manne. And when the Lord rehearseth his punishments, they say that he healeth. But because this health dependeth vpon forgiveness of sins, Marke doth aptly & well set down the cause & fountaine. For whence proceedeth the imagination of punishments, but because the Lord being well pleased with vs, bestoweth his blessing vpon vs? And though that soon time after he hath forgien our sinne, he yet ceaseth not to punish vs, either that we may the more be humbled, or that we may be the more wary hereafter: yet because he sheweth some tokens of his fauour, he quickeneth and restoreth vs, then, because that for the moste part the punishments are taken away with the sin : the healing is rightly ioyned with forgiuenes. But it cannot be gathered of this, that repentance is the cause of forgiuenesse, as though God should receiue the repentant into fauour, because they deserued it : ( for euen the conuersion it selfe, is a token of the free mercy and fauour of God ) but it only noteth the order of things following the fauour of God : for God forgiueth sinnes onely in those men which are displeas'd with themselves.

M A T. 16. But blessed are your eyes. Luke seemeth to referre this saying to an other time, yet it is easily answered, for he heapeeth there many sentences together, not obseruing the course of the times. We will therefore follow the course which Mathewe holdeth who setteth downe more plainly the occasion why he spake it. For as of the singular grace bestowed vpon them, they were before admonished that the Lord exempting them from the common sort, did familiarly admit them to the mysteries of his kingdome: so now the same grace is extolled by another comparifon : to wit, that they are preferd before the old Prophets and the holy kings. And this is much more excellent then to be preferred before the vnbeleeuing multitude. Also Christ meaneth not euery hearing, nor simple seeing of the flesh : but he sayth that their eyes are blessed, because they see the glory due to the onely begotten sonne of God, so that they acknowledg him to be the redeemer, because the liuely image of God appeared to thē, wher by they should receiue saluation and perfect blessednesse. Then, because that which was said by the Prophets was fulfilled in them, that they should not learn euery man of his neighbour, but that they should be fully and perfectly taught of God. So is that objection also answered, which might be gathered of an other saying of Christ, Iohn 20. 29. where he called them blessed which saw not, & yet beleeued : for there is noted an other maner of seeing: namely, such a seeing as Thomas desired, to serue his grosse affection. But the speach wherof Christ now speaketh, is common with the Apostles to the faithfull of all ages. For we not seeing, and not hearing, doe heare and doe see Christ : because that in the Gospell, as Paul sayth, 2. Cor. 3. 18. he appeareth vnto vs face to face, that we might be changed into his image : and the perfection of wisdome, righteousnesse, and of life, which was once giuen in him, shineth therein dayly.

L V. 24. And kings haue desired to see. The present estate of the Church may well be accounted better, then the estate of the holy fathers which liued vnder the law to whom that was shewed, but vnder shadowes and cloudes, which now appeareth plainly in the open face of Christ, For the vaile of the temple being rent, we doe enter by faith into the heauenly Sanctuarie, and thereby we haue a free accesse to God. For though the fathers content with their lot, nourished a blessed peace in their minds, yet this hindered them: not, but that they were caried further in their desirs. So Abraham saw, Iohn 8. 56 the day of Christ a farre off, and he reioyced. yet he desired to haue a nearer sight, but he obtained not his desire. For Simeon spake according to the desire of them all, when he sayd. Luke. 2. 29. Now let thy seruāt depart in peace. And it could not otherwise be, when vnder the burden of the curse, whereby mankind was oppressed, they were all enflamed with a desire of the promised deliuerāce. Therefore we know that as famished people they hungred after Christe, and yet they had a stayed faith, faith, that they grudged not against God, but patiently suspended their desires vntill the full time of his reuealing.

Mathevv. 13.

18. Heare yee therefore the Parable of the sower.

19. Whoso euer a man heareth the word of the kingdom and vnderstandeth it not, the euill one cometh, and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart, and thus is hee which hath receiued the seede by the way side

20. And hee that receiued seede in a stony ground, is hee which heareth the word, and incontinently with ioy receiueth it.

21. Yet hath hee no roote in himselfe, and dureth but a season for as soone as tribulation or persecution cometh, because of the worde: by and by he is offended.

22. And he that receiueth the seed among thornes, is he that heareth the word, but the care of this worlde, and the deceitfulnesse of riches choake the word, & he is made vnfruitful

23. But he that receiueth the seede in the good ground, is he that heareth the worde, and vnderstandeth it, which also beareth fruit, and bringeth forth, some an hundred fold, some sixtie fold, and some thirtie fold.

Marke 4.

13. Againe hee sayd vnto them, perceiue yee not this parable? how then should ye vnderstand all other parables?

14. The sower soweth the word.

15. And these are they that receiue the seede by the way side, in whome the worde is sown: but when they haue heard it, Sathan cometh immediately and taketh away the worde, that was sown in their hearts.

16. And likewise they that receiue the seede in stony ground, are they which when they haue heard the worde, straightway receiue it with gladnesse.

17. Yet they haue no roote in themselues, & endure but a time: for when trouble and persecution ariseth for the word, immediately they be offended. 18. Also, they that receiue the seede among the thornes, are such as heare the word. 19. But the cares of this worlde, and the deceitfulnesse of riches, and the lustes of other things enter in, and choake the word, and it is vnfruitfull.

20. But they that haue receiued seede in good grounde, are they that heare the word, and receiue it, and bring forth fruit, one thirtie, another sixtie, and some an hundred.

Luke 8.

11. The parable is this the seede is the worde of God.

12. And they that are beside the way, are they that heare: after ward commeth the deuill, & taketh away the word out of their heartes, least they should beleue and be saued.

13. But they that are on the stones, are they which when they haue heard, receiue the word with ioy: but they haue no rootes, which for a while beleue, but in the time of temptation goe away.

14. And that which fell among thornes, are they which haue heard and after their departure are choaked with cares & with riches & voluptuous liuing, & bring forth no fruite

15. But that which fell in good grounde, are they which with an honest and good heart heare the worde and keep it, & bring forth fruite with patience.

M A T H and Luke doe set downe the exposition of the Parable, as if that Christ had simply expounded it to his disciples without reproofing them: but in Marke he doth sharply reprove their slacknes, because that they which should become teachers of others, did not profit more then others. But the sum is, that the doctrine of the gospell being scattered abroad as seede, doth not bring forth fruite euery where, because it doth not alwayes fall vpon fruitfull and good ground ground. Hee reheateth foure sortes of hearers, of which the first receiue no seede. The second sort seeme to receiue seede, but so, that it taketh no roote to liue by: in the third sort the corne is choaked: so there remaineth a fourth part which bringeth forth fruit. Not that of foure hearers one, or tenne of fortie, do embrace the doctrine, and bring forth fruit: fore it was not the purpose of Christe to appoynt a certaine definite number: nor to deuide them of whom he spake, into equall portions: but that there is not all waies one and the same increase of faith where the worde is sowed, but sometime in more abundance, sometime in lesse: he onely teacheth them that through diuers faultes the seed of life perisheth in many, in whome it either presently corrupteth or wythereth, or by little and little degenerateth. But that we may profite the better by this admonition, it is to be noted that he maketh no mention of the despisers, which do openly withstand the word: but they only are noted here, in whome there seemeth to be some aptnesse to be taught. But if the greater part of these doeth vanish away, what shall becom of the rest of the world, from whom the doctrine of saluation is openly debared? Now I will cōeto the particular points.

19. When soeuer a man heareth the word of the kingdom and vnderstandeth it not. First he maketh mention of barren and hard groundes, which receiue not the seede inwardly, because their heartes are not prepared. Such hee compareth to hard and dry earth, which is in the common hie way, which by continuall treading vppon, becommeth hard as pauement. I woulde wee had not so many of this sort at this day as wee haue, which though they offer themselues to heare, yet they stand as menne amazed, and feele no taste of it at all, and to speake in fewe woordes, they differ little from blockes or stones, wherefore it is no maruell if they vanishe altogether away. Christ sayeth that the worde was sowed in their heartes, which though it bee an improper speache, yet it is not without reason, for the sinne and wickednesse of menne taketh not away the nature from the worde, but it retaineth still the force of seede. And that is diligently to be noted, least wee shoulde thinke that the graces of God lost their forces, though they bee not effectuell in vs. For in respect of God, the worde is sowed in their heartes, but the heartes of all doe not receiue with meekenesse that which is grafted in them, as Iames exhorteth, 1.21. The Gospell therefore is alwayes in power a fruitfull seede, but not in deede. In Luke it is added, that the deuill taketh away the seede out of their heartes, least they beleeuing should be saued. Whereby we gather, that as hungry birdes behaue themselues in feedes time, so as soone as the doctrine is deliuered, this enemy of our saluation is present, & laboureth by violence to take the same away, before it can take moysture and bring forth fruit. This also is no small prayse of fayth, in that it is called the cause of our saluation.

20. Hee that receiueith seede in the stony ground. This sorte differeth from the former, for the temporall fayth, or faith for a season, as a conceiuing of seede, promiseth some fruit at the beginning: but their heartes are not so well and thoroughly brought in order, as may suffice to giue continuall nourishment to the same.

Of this sorte of menne also wee see too many at this day, which doe

greedely embrace the Gospel which shortly after doe waxe faint, because thei is no liuely affection in them to strengthen and continuethem in constancie. Wherefore let euery man examine himselfe throughly, least his hastinesse, which giueth a great shewe, speedily vanish (as men say) as a flame of stubble. For except the woorde doe throughly pearce the whole hearte, and take deepe rootes in the same the faith cannot haue continuall moysture to maintaine the same to continue. This readinesse is worthy to be praised, in that they receiue the word of God alloone as it is vttered, and that without delay and with ioy: yet we must know that it is to no purpose, vntil that faith shall gather a perfect strength, least it wither in the first springing. As for example, Christ sayeth: that they which are such, are offended with the trouble of persecution. And certainly, as the barrenesse of the ground, is tried by the heat of the sunne: so persecution and affliction discovereth their vanitie, whiche are lightly touched, I know not with what affection, and are not well endued with an earnest desire of godlynesse. Such are called by Matheue and Marke temporisers, not onely because they professing themselues to be Christes disciples for a time, and after fall away into temptation, but because they seeme also to themselues to haue a true faith, and therefore in Luke Christ sayeth that they beleue for a time. because that honour which they giue to the gospel, is like to faith. Yet notwithstanding it is to be noted that they are not truely regenerate with incorruptible seede, which neuer fadeth as Peter teacheth, 1. Pet. 1. 4 for that saying of Isai- as. 40. 8. The word of our God shall stand for euer, is fulfilled in the hearts of the faithfull, in whome the trueth of God once setled, neuer fadeth away, but flourisheth euen to the end. Yet they which do louingly and with some reuerence receiue the word of God, they doe beleue after a sort: because they differ from the vnbeleeuers, which either will not giue credite to God when he speaketh, or despiseth his worde. Onely let vs knowe that none are partakers of true faith, but they which being sealed with the spirit of adoption, do cal God father from their heart. Also, as that spirit is neuer extinguished: so it is impossible that the faith which it hath once engraued in the harts of the godly, should vanish away and perish.

22. Hee that receiueth the seede among thornes. In the third place he rehearseth them which were inwardly apt to nourish the seede sowaen, if they suffered not the same otherwise to be corrupted and spoyled. Christ compareth the pleasures of the world as euill desires, couetousnesse and other affections of the flesh to thornes. Though Matheue onely mentioneth the cares of the worlde with couetousnesse: but the meaning is all one, for vnder this word is comprehended the baies of pleasures (wherof Luke maketh mention) and all kinde of euill desire. For as thornes and other noysome weedes doe choake vpp the corne, which woulde otherwise prosper and growe vpp: so the wicked affections of the flesh preuayle in the hartes of menne, and ouergrow their faith, so that they ouerwhelme the force of the heauenly doctrine, which is not yet ripe. And though the euill desires doe possesse the heart of manne, beefore the worde of the Lorde make any shewe there, yet they seeme not to beare any rule at the first. But after the corne groweth, and promiseth to yeelde fruite, then growe they vp aloft. Therefore all men must diligently apply themselues, to roote vpp the thornes out of their hartes, least the worde of God be choaked: for there is no man which is not filled with great abundance of thornes, as with a thicke wood. And certainly we see very few come to ripeness, because scarce the tenth man applyeth himselfe to roote them vp, no, nor to loppe and cut them. And the great abundance which should moue menne to be more diligent, causeth many to be more carelesse. Christ vseth the phrase of deceitfulness of riches for couetousnesse. And he purposely calleth riches, beguilefull or deceitfull, that men might thereby learne the rather to take heed & to beware of their snares. But let vs remember that as many affections as there be of our flesh, the abundance and varietie whereof is innumerable, so many lettes and hindrances there are to corrupt the seed of life.

23. He that receiveth the seede in the good ground. Christ compareth them onely to good and fruitfull grounde in whom the woorde of God not onely taketh rootes, and those deepe and sound, but which doe also ouercome all lettes, least they should hinder the fruite of the same. If any man obiekt that there can not any be found, void and free from thornes, the answer is easie, Christ speaketh not here of perfection of fayth, but only sheweth in whome the word doth fructifie. Therefore though the fruite be but small, yet whosoever degenerateth not from the sincere worship of God is counted good and fruitfull grounde. It behooveth vs to be diligent in rooting vp of thornes, but because that wee shall neuer bring to passe, no not by our daily labour, but that some remnants will alwayes remaine, yet let every one of vs endeavour to mortifie & to kill them, least they hinder the fruite of the woorde. That which followeth next, where Christe teacheth that all bring not forth fruit in like measure, confirmeth this sentence. For though the fruitfulness of that ground which bringeth forth fruite in thirty folde, is but small in comparision of a hundred folde, yet we see that Christ ioyne all those groundes together, which doe not altogether deceiue the labour and hope of the husband man. And we are hereby taught not to despise them, which grow not to great excellencie, when the housholder himselfe, though he preferre some one about the rest in respect of his high estate, yet he vouchsafeth the common shew of his fauourable goodnesse, also towards the inferiours. But Hierome wresteth very fondly these three degrees to virgins, widows and wiues, as though the fruite which the Lord requireth of vs, were onely tyed to virginitic, and that the godlinesse of the married were not oft more plentifull in bringing foorth all fruite of righteousnesse. This is also to be noted by the way, that Christe speaketh not hyperbolically of encrease of a hundred fold, for there were diuers regions at that time so fruitfull, as it appeareth by many Historyographers, which were eye witnesses of the same.

Matthew 13.

Mark.

Luke.

24. An other parable pus he forth vnto them, saying: The kingdom of heauen is like vnto a man, which sowed good seede in his felde.

25. But while men slept, there came his enemy, and sowed Tares among the wheat, and went his way.

26. And

26. And when the blade was sprong vp, and brought forth fruite, then appeared the Tares also.

27. Then came the seruantes of the housholder, and sayde vnto him: maister, sowedst not thou good seede in thy field? from whence then hath it Tares? 28. And hee sayd vnto them. The enuious man hath done this. Then the seruante sayd vnto him: wilt thou that wee goe & gather them vp? 29. But he sayd: nay, least while yee goe about to gather the Tares, ye plucke vp also with the wheat. 30. Let both grow together vntil the harvest, & in time of harvest, I will say vnto the reapers: Gather ye first the Tares, and binde them in sheaues to burne them: but gather the wheat into my barne.

Somewhat after.

36. Then sent Iesus the multitude away, & went into the house. And his disciples came vnto him, saying: declare to vs the parable of the Tares of the field. 37. The answered he and sayd vnto them: he that soweth the good seede, is the sonne of manne. 38. And the field is the world, and the good seed they are the children of the kingdom, and the Tares are the children of the wicked. 39. And the enemy that soweth them, is the deuill, and the harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers be the Angels. 40. As then the Tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of the world. 41. The sonne of man shall send forth his Angels, & they shal gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity. 42. And shall cast them into a furnace of fire, there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. 43. Then shall the iust men shine as the sunne in the kingdom of their father. Hee that hath eares to heare, let him heare.

That we may profite by this parable, it is worth the labour to consider to what purpose Christ applyeth it. Some thinke, least the confused multitude should flatter themselues in the outward profession of the Gospel, that he sayd, that in his field there is often mixed bad seede with the good, but that a day shoulde come wherein Tares should be seperated from the wheat. And therefore they ioyne this parable with the last, as if they both had one cause and one end. But to mee it seemeth otherwise: for hee doth therefore make mention of the separation, least the mindes of the godly should waxe faint with wearines, in beholding the confused mixture of the good with the euill: for though christ hath cleansed his Church with his bloud, that it should be without wrinkle and spot: yet he suffereth many faultes to remaine.

I speake not of the remnantes of the infirmities of the fleshe, to which all the faithfull are subiecte, after they are regenerate by the spirite of God.

But

But assoone as Christe hath gathered a little flocke vnto himselfe, many hypocrites insinuate themselues, peruerse men creepe in, and many wicked men thrust themselues in: and so it commeth to passe, that the holy company which Christ had separated vnto himselfe, is polluted with many filthy pollutions. Also this seemeth to be very absurde vnto many, that either vngodly or prophane, or wicked men should be nourished in the bosome of the Church. Furthermore there are many which vnder pretence of zeale are more frowarde then neede, if all things be not ordered according to their desire: because there doeth not appeare an absolute puritie, they doe either tumultuously depart from the Church, or else they ouerthrow and destroy the same through their outragious rigour. Wherefore in my iudgement this is the simple meaning of the parable. So long as the Church wandreth in this world, there shall hypocrites and wicked men be mixt with the good & syncere in the same, that the children of God might arme themselues with patience, and hold theyr faith strong and sure, amongest the offences with which they might be troubled. And it is a most apte comparison whē the Lord calleth the Church his fiede, because the faithful are the seede of the same, And though that Christ doeth say afterward that the fiede is the worlde, yet without doubt he properly applied this name to his Church, whereof he began his speach. But because he was to drawe his plough through all the coastes of the world, and till fields for himselfe in the whole world, and sowe the seede of life in the same, he applied that by a figure to the worlde, which rather agreed to a part of the same. Now it is to be noted what is meant by wheat, and what by the Tares. This cannot be vnderstoode of the doctrine, as if he should haue sayde, where soeuer the Gospell is preached, it is presently corrupted and defiled with wicked inuētions: for Christ would neuer haue forbid them to labour strongly in purging such a corruption. Neither was it lawfull for them to deale in this, as in the manners of men, to tolerate those vices which they could not punish: for so it should be lawfull to beare with wicked erroures, which ouerthrowe the purity of faith. Then Christe taketh away the doubt, when hee doeth by name call the tares, the children of the wicked. Yet againe it is to be noted, that this cannot be simplye vnderstoode of the persones of men as if God in the creation had sowed good men, and the deuill euill men. Which thing I doe therefore giue warning of, because the Maniches haue abused this place, that they might cast a colour vppon their fained deuce of two beginnings. But we knowe that what soeuer corruption is in the deuill, or in menne, the same is nothinge else but a corruption of sounde and pure nature. Therefore as God maketh not his electe (whiche are infected with originall sinne) good seede by creation, but regenerateth them by the grace of the spirit: so the deuill createth not euil menne, but depraueth them that were created of God, and thrusteth into the fiede of the Lorde, to defile the pure seede.

36. Hee that soweth good seede. Hee had sayde before, that the kingdome of heauen was like to a sower, but vnproperly, Yet the sense is euident, that the same doeth ofte befall in the preaching of the Gospell, as in the sowing of the feldes, that the Tare ouer groweth the Wheate. But hee setteth downe one speciall thing: saying, that the fiede was sowed with Tares by the deceite of the enemy: that yee might knowe that this came not by chance nor naturally, that many wicked men should mixe themselves amongst the faithfull, as if they were all one corne: but lette vs learne to impute the faulte to this mischeife of the Deuill, not that the condemning of him shoulde deliuer meane from guiltinesse, but firste that wee lay no faulte vppon God for thys offence befalling to his Church: then that wee woonder not that Tares doe growe vpe in the Lordes field: sith Sathan doeth allwayes wathe to annoy it. Also, it is not without reason that Christe sayeth not that the Ministers of the woorde doe sowe, but himselve onely. Forthough it be not conuenient that this be restrained to his person, yet because he vseth our helpe, and applyeth vs as instruments in tilling of his field, so that hee alone worketh by vs and in vs, hee doth rightly challenge that to himselve, which after a sorte is common vnto his Ministers. Therefore let vs remember that the Gospell is not onely preached by the commandement of Christe, but by his directions and guiding, that wee should bee as his hands, and he as the onely authour of the worke.

39. The haruest is the ende of the worlde. This is a very troublesome estate, that the Church should be laden with the reprobate to the ende of the world: yet Christ doth therefore prescribe vs this time to prepare vs to patience, least we should feede our selues with vaine hope. It behooueth the pastours diligently to apply themselves to the purging of the Church, and in this behalfe al good men are to helpe them so farre as their calling will suffer. But when all menne haue generally put to their helping handes, yet they shall not profite so much as vtterly to purge away all filth from the Church. Therefore we must note that the purpose of Christ was nothing lesse, then by sufferance to nourish sinnes. His onely purpose is to exhorte the faithfull that they should not fainte because they are compelled to haue the wicked amongst them: Then it doth also serue to bridle and to moderate their zeale, which thinke it not lawfull to keepe companie but with pure Angels. The Anabaptistes also and such like, haue wickedly abused this Text, that they might driue away the vse of the sword from the Church. But the answer is easily made: for sith they themselves doe admitte excommunication, which rooteth out the wicked and reprobate for a time, why should not the godly Magistrates exercise the sword against the wicked, so oft as neede shall require? They take exception against this, saying: that in the one there is space giuen for repentance, which is not where the punishment of death is. As though the theefe found not comfort of saluation vpon the crosse. But let this answer suffice, Christ speaketh heere, neither of the office of Pastours nor of Magistrates: but hee applyeth himselve to take away the offence wherewith the weake are troubled, while they see the Church gathered, not onely of the elect, but of the filthy dregges of the wicked.

The reapers bee the Angelles. This worde may bee applied to this present purpose. The reapers in the fourth Chapter of Iohn, and the eighte and thirtie verse, are sayde to bee the Apostles, in respecte of the Prophetes, because they entered into their labours. And the commaundement is inioyned and giuen to all the Ministers of the woorde, that they shoulde bring forth fruite to the Lorde, which shoulde alwayes remaine, Iohn 15. 16. To the which that also appertayneth, that the corne waxeth white, Iohn

4. 35. and requireth the reapers : Also the harvest is great, but the labourers are fewe, Matthew 9. 37. But here is an other cause of this comparison: for they are sayde to bee planted in the field of the Lorde, which occupie a rounth in the Churche. Neither is that any Obiection, that Christe in the thirde Chapter of Matthewe, and the twelfth verse, is sayde (as soone as hee commeth fourth with his Gospell) to haue a Fanne in hande, wherewith hee woulde purge his floure. For there is described the beginning of the purging of the same, which hee sayeth cannot be brought to passe before the last day: for then it shall bee throughly performed in all poyntes. But though hee will then at last put his hand to purge the Church by Angelles, yet hee beginneth nowe to doe the same by godly teachers. Further more, hee attributeth these thinges to the Angelles, because they shall not stand idle at his tribunall seate, but they shall offer themselues to execute his commaundementes. They therefore which doe hasten preposterously to ouertourne whatsoeuer doth displease them, doe preuent the iudgement of Christe, as much as it lyeth in them, and by taking away the office from the Angelles they doe rashly vsurpe it themselues.

41. They shall gather out of his kingdome. That which followeth of all them which doe iniquitie, is not any thing diuers, but as an exposition of the former wordes, as if hee should haue sayde, that the time will then bee ripe and ready, wherein all thinges shall bee restored into their lawfull order, and so the wicked shall be taken away, which are now the offences. And they are so called because they doe not onely liue wickedly to themselues, but they weaken the faith of many, others they hinder from a right course, some they doe vterly overthrowe, others they cast downe headlong. By this we may take a profitable admonition, least we being compassed about with so many offences, should goe forward slouthfully and carelessly, but that we shoulde earnestly and diligently bend our selues to take heed. Their nicenesse is here also reprooued, which are so dainty, that they turne backe from their course, for euery small offence. It is hard for them I graunt, which are conuersant amongst many offences, not to stumble at the same, yea, and sometime to fall, but their mindes must bee strengthened and comforted with hope: because it is not to be doubted but that the Sonne of God, who commandeth his to goe through the middest of offences, will also giue strength to ouercome them all.

Hee also pronounceth a horrible iudgement against all hypocrites, & reprobate, which seeme now to be cheife Citizens in the Church, least they shoulde lay them downe in rest, in their vainglorious boasting. That Phrase of a fiery furnace, is a Metaphoricall speech. For as the excellency of the glory which is layd vp for the children of God, doeth exceede further beyond all our senses, then can bee expressed with any wordes: so the iudgement and punishment which remaineth for the reprobate, because it is incomprehensible, is set forth by a shadowe, according to the measure of our capacitie: the ignorance whereof, made the Sophister sturmoyle themselues in vaine, in disputations of noweight, as we haue already touched other where.

I knowe that some haue prosecuted more subtilly euery particular clause of the same: but because it is to be feared least such subtleties which are not of any sounde foundation, shoulde leade vs to follies, I had rather deale more sparingly in such things, being contente with the simple and plaine meaning. If they that are so much delighted with such curiositie, shoulde be demaunded how the deuill shoulde sowe Tares amongst the good seede, while Christ slepte & knew it not, they haue not any thing to answer to it: yet I haue endeouored my selfe to bee sparing in these matters, so that I woulde not omitte any thing worthy and profitable to be knowne.

43. Then shall the iust manne shine. A notable comfort, that the children of God which nowe lie either ouerwhelmed with filth, or are hidde as people of no reputation, or are assaulted with reproofes and slaunders, shall then (as in a cleare skie, when all cloudes are scattered away) once shine cleare and freshly to bee beholden. And the Aduerbe of time, Then is very forcible, for it contayneth a secret opposition of the present state, and of the last day, in hope whereof Christe comforteth all his faithfull ones. The meaning there of is, though many wicked ones doe now flourish alofte in the Church, yet we must certainly hope for that happy day wherein the Sonne of G O D will extoll his children, and will wipe away all filthe, wherewith their beauty is nowe ouerwhelmed. It is true that the glory to come is promised to none, but them in whome the Image of G O D now shineth, and which through continuall degrees of glory are transformed into the same: but because the life of the godly is nowe hidde, and their saluation is inuisible, because it consisteth in hope: Christe doeth woorthily call them backe into heauen, that the faithfull may enjoy the glory promised them. And it is not to bee doubted, but that hee had respecte vnto the place of Daniell, that hee might thereby the rather touch his hearers to the quicke. As if hee shoulde haue sayde, whereas the Prophet preacheth of the excellent brightnesse to come, hee noteth withall a temporall darkenesse: and therefore that this Prophecie may haue place, the mixture which wrappeth and encloseth the elect of God with the reprobate for a time must bee borne with patience. Hee maketh not an equalitie in comparing this glory of the Sunne to the light. For as Christ doeth now distribute his giftes diuersly amongst the faithfull, so will hee also crowne the same in the last day. But that must bee remembered, that I sayde, that the restoring or renewing which is deferde to the latter comming of Christe, is onely compared with the mistie and cloudie estate of the worlde. The kingdome of the father as the inheritance of the godly is opposed against the earth, that they might remember that they are pilgrimes in the same, and so that they might aspire to heauen. For though the kingdome of God is said otherwhere to bee in vs, yet wee shall not fully enjoy the same, vntill God bee all in all.

Matth. 13.

31. Another Parable hee put forth vnto them, saying: the kingdome of heauen is like vnto

Marke. 4.

26. Also he sayde, so is the kingdome of God, as if a man should cast seed in the ground
27. And

Lukē. 13.

18. Then sayd he, what is the kingdome of God like? or whereto shall I compare it?

19. Is

vnto a graine of mustard seede which a man taketh and soweth in his field.

32. Which indeede is the least of all seedes : but when it is growne, it is the greatest among hearbes, & it is a tree, so that the birdes of heauen come and buylde in the braunches thereof.

33. An other parable spake he to them, The kingdome of heauen is like to leauen, which a woman taketh, and hideth in three peckes of meale, till all bee leauened.

34. All these thinges spake Iesus vnto the multitude in parables, and without parables spake he not to them.

35. That it might be fulfilled, which was spoken by the Prophet, saying, I wil open my mouth in parables, and will utter the thinges, which haue bene kepte secreete from the foundation of the worldes.

27. And should sleepe, & rise vp night and day, & the seed should spring and grow vp, hee knoweth not howe.

28. For the earth bringeth forth fruit of her selfe: first, the blade, then the eares after that full corne in the eares.

29. And as soone as the fruite sheweth it selfe, anon he putteth in the sickle : because the harvest is come. 30. He said moreover, whereunto shall we liken the kingdome of God? or with what comparison shall we compare it?

31. It is like a graine of mustard seede, which when it is sowne in the earth, is as the least of all seedes that be in the earth.

32. But after that it is sowne it groweth vp, and is the greatest of all hearbes, and beareth great braunches: so that the fowles of the heauen may buylde vnder the shadow of it.

33. And with many such parables he preached the woorde vnto the, as they were able to heare it.

34. And without parables spake hee nothing vnto them, but hee expounded all thinges to his disciples apart.

19. It is like a graine of mustard seede, which a man tooke and sowed in his garde, & it grew & waxed a great tree, and the fowles of the heauen made nestes in the braunches thereof.

20. And againe hee said, whereunto shall I liken the kingdome of God? 21. It is like leauen, which a woman tooke and hid in three peckes of flour, till all was leauened.

22. And hee wente through all cities and townes, teaching and iourning towards Ierusalem.

By these parables Christe encourageth his Disciples, least they beeing offended with the small and base beginniges of the Gospell shoulde giue backe. We see how proudly prophane men doe despise and scorne the Gospell, because it is brought by meane and simple ministers : because it is not receiued with the lyking of the whole worlde, but hath a fewe disciples, and them for the most part men of no estimation nor reputation, euen of the common people. Whereby it commeth to passe, that the weake doe dispayre of successe, which they measure by the beginniges. But the Lorde beginneth his kingdome purposefully of meane and contemptible beginnings: so that the proceeding being such, as were not to be hoped for, doe the better set forth his power. Therefore the kingdome of God is to be compared to a graine of mustard seede, which is the least amongst seedes : yet it increaseth into such a height, that it becometh a tree, wherein birdes do build their nestes. It is also compared to leauen, which though it be but small, doth yet so spread the force of the same, so that a great heape of meale be leauened therewith. If therefore the shew of the kingdom of Christ be contemptible to the eyes of fleshe and bloud, let vs learne to lift vppe our mindes to the great and inestimable power of God, which as it once created all things of nothing, so it dooth daily rayse vppe those things, which are not about the measure of mans vnderstanding: and let vs let alone the proude men, with their doggish scornings, vntill the Lord amaze them before they looke for it. In the meane season let not vs bee faint harted, but let vs arise by sayth against the pride of the worlde, vntill the Lord shew foorth the wonderfull testimony of his power, wherof he speaketh here. The word leauen is sometime taken in the worst parte, as when Christe warneth to take heede of the leauen of the Scribes: in like maner, when Paule teacheth, 1. Cor. 5. 6. that a little leauen sowreth a whole lumpe. But here is simply to be noted the applying of it to the present cause. Of the kingdom of God, & of the kingdom of heauen wee haue spoken other where.

M A R. 26. So is the kingdom of God. Though this similitude tendeth to the same purpose, that the two former doe, yet Christe seemeth earnestly to apply his speech to the miniters of his word, least they shoulde waxe colde in their office: because the fruite of their labour doeth not presently appeare. Therefore he setteth before them the husband-menne to follow, which in hope of a time to reape, doe cast the seede into the earth, and are not vexed with greedinesse, which neuer is at quiet, but they goe to rest, and arise againe: that is, they doe ordinarily apply their daily labour, & refresh themselues with their nightly rest, vntill the corne waxe ripe at length in the due time. Therefore though the seede of the word lie hid for a time, as if it were choaked or drowned, yet christ commaundeth the Godly teachers to be of good comfort, least distrust shoulde abate their diligence.

M A T. 34. All these things spake he vnto them. Although Marke sayeth expressly that Christ spake vnto them, as they were able to heare: yet it seemeth probable to me, that he vsed not these continual parables so much for instruction sake, as to make the hearers attentiuie and more apt for an other time. For why did hee expound the same familiarly to his disciples apart from the people? Was it because they were more ignorant then the common people? Nay verily: for his will was familiarly to deliuer his meaning and his minde vnto them, but he left others in suspence, vntill they should become more apt & ripe for the same. For these were but onely certaine entraunces into the Gospell, the fuller and plainer shew and declaration of the same hee deferred vnto a time more fit for the same. But the shewe of repugnancie, which seemeth to bee betweene this saying of Matth. and the prophesie of Isaiah, which was alledged a little before, is easily answered. For though he kept backe the light of the doctrine from the reprobate, yet not withholding this, he so applied himselfe to their capacitie, that he thereby made them inexcusable. Therefore hee followed that kinde of teaching, which hee knew to be apt and agreeable for his hearers, whom hee knew to be not yet sufficiently prepared to learne.

35. That it might bee fulfilled. Mathewe meaneth not that the Psalmes which hee citeth, is a peculiar Prophecie of Christe: but as the maiestic of the spirit shone in the wordes of the Prophet: euen so was the force of the same set forth in the words of Christ. The Prophet beginning to speake there of the couenant of God, whereby he adopted the seede of Abraham, of his dayly benefites towards that people, and of the whole gouernement of the Church, he beginneth with great maiestie the Psalm 73. 2. I will open my mouth in parables: that is, I will not speake of light trifles, but I will speake wisely of most earnest matters. Hee meaneth the same also by hard sentences: for this repetition is commonly vsed in the Psalm. The word heere first vsed by the Hebrewes, signifieth comparisons or resemblances: then they referre this word to graue sentences, because that similitudes for the most parte do adorne and set forth the wordes: the seconde worde there vsed, they doe call sometimes riddles or hard speeches, sometimes apothegmes. And though Matthew seemeth to allude to that word parable, yet is it not to be doubted, but that he meaneth that Christ spake figuratiuely, that the phrase of his speech being more notable then the common speech of the common sorte, might giue some dignitie and weight to the same. And he sayth, that that was fulfilled, which was written in the Psalm: for hee sayth, that he entreated of the secret misteries of God in Allegories and figures, least the doctrine should waxe vile. Wee doe also gather hereby, that there is no absurditie, that Christ spake more darkely to the people for diuerse endes. For though his will was to conceale that, which hee spake from the reprobate, yet hee applyed so his speech, that his wordes were full of heauenly and diuine maiestie, that men astonished, might perceiue the same.

L V. 22. Journeying towards Hierusalem. It is doubtfull whether Luke spake of one only journey, or whether he meaneth, when Christ had walked through Iudea, and had gone through the coastes thereof teaching, that hee was wont at the feastes to goe vp to Hierusalem. And in the former part of the sentence hee seemeth to note what was the continuall trade of Christes life after that he entred into the office inioyned him by the father. Wherefore, that the later part may agree therewith, the meaning must be, that as oft as the feast dayes came, hee frequented the holy assemblies with others.

|--|---------------|

49. So shall it bee at the ende of the worlde, the Angells shall goe forth, and seuer the bad from amongst the iust.

50 And shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

51. Iesus sayd vnto them, vnderstand yee all these thinges? They saide vnto him, yea, Lord.

52. Then said he vnto them, therefore euery Scribe, which is taught vnto the kingdome of heauen, is like vnto an housholder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things both new and olde.

The two former similitudes tend to this end, to teach the faithfull to preferre the kingdome of heauen before the whole world, and therefore to renounce themselves and all the desires of the flesh, least they shuld be any way hindered from the obtaining of so great good. Also this admonition is very necessary for vs: for we are so enchanted with the deceitfull allurementes of the world, that the heauenly life is not remembered: and because that we are carnall, the spirituall graces of God are the lesse esteemed of vs. Therefore doth Christ rightly extoll so much the excellencie of the eternall life, that it should not grieue vs to leaue for that, whatsoeuer otherwise wee esteemed to bee most deare vnto vs. First hee sayeth, that the kingdome of heauen is like to a hidden treasure. For as for the most part wee sette much by these things, which are apparant: and so the new and spirituall life, which is proposed in the Gospel is not regarded: because it lyeth hidde shut vp vnder hope. This therefore is a most apt comparison of treasure, whose value decayeth not, though it lye vnder the earth hidde and whelmed from the eyes of menne. By which words wee are taught that the riches of the spirituall grace of God are not to be accounted of by the view of our flesh, or by the outward shew of the same: but as a treasure, though it be hidde, is yet to bee preferred aboue most gorgious riches. The other similitude doth likewise expresse the same. One pearle, though it bee but small, is yet so much esteemed, that a skilfull marchaunt doubreth not to sell his landes and houses, to buye the same. therefore though the wisedome of the fleshe apprehendeth not the excellencie of the heauenly life: yet we doe not consider of it, as the dignitie thereof requireth, except wee bee ready for that to deny those thinges, which shew gloriously before our eyes. Now, wee vnderstand the summe of both the parables: namely, that they are then apt to receiue the grace of the Gospell, which not regarding any other delightes, doe wholly addicte themselves and their studies to the obtraying of the same.

It is to bee noted that Christe sayeth, not that the hidden treasure or pearle is so much esteemed of all menne, that they would sell all that they haue for it: but that the price is sette of the treasure, after it is founde and knowne: and that the skilfull marchaunte hath this estimation of the Pearle. For in these woordes is the knowledge of the fayth noted: as if Christe shoulde haue sayde, the common sorte make no account of the kingdome of heauen: because they are men without vnderstanding, and cannot see sufficisufficiently how incomparable a treasure the Lord offereth in the gospel. Yet it is demanded whether it be necessary to renounce all other good things for the enjoying of eternall life. I answer briefly, this is the simple meaning of the wordes, the Gospel hath not the honour due to it, except we preferre it above all the riches, delights, honours and commodities of the world: & that we being so far satisfied with the spirituall graces, which it promiseth, that we should neglect what things so euer do withdraw vs from the same. For it behooueth them to be loosed from all hindrances, which aspire into heauen. Therefore Christ doth not exhort his faithfull ones, but to the deniall of those things, which are lets to pietie: yet he graunteth them so to vse and to enjoy the temporall benefits of God, as if we used them not.

46. And he bought it. Christ meaneth not by the word buying, that men should bring any recompence, whereby they might purchase to themselves the heauenly life: for we know vpon what condition the Lord calleth his faithful people in Isa. 55. 1. Come and buy without siluer, &c. But though the heauenly life, & whatsoever pertaine to the same be the free gift of god: yet we are said to buy the same, when we do willingly bridle the desires of the fleithe, that wee be not thereby hindered from the obtaining of the same, as Paul saith Philip. 3. 8. that all things were to him as losse and dongue, that he might winne Christ.

47. It is like vnto a draw net. Christ teacheth here no new thing, but confirmeth by an other similitude that which we had before, that the Church of God is mixed with good and euill, so long as it is conuersant vpon the earth. Yet it may be, that the ende of this parable is to an other purpose: to witte, that Christ not onely remedieth the offence, which troubleth many weakelings, because that puritie is not founde in the worlde, which were to be wished: but also that hee might keepe his disciples in feare and modestie, least they shoulde content themselves with a vaine title of fayth, or with a naked profession. I do willingly allowe both these endes, that Christ teacheth that the mixture of good and euil must bee patiently borne, vntill the ende of the worlde: because the true and perfecte restitution of the Church shall not bee before that time. Then that hee admonisheth that it sufficeth not, nay, it is to no purpose for vs to be gathered into the sheepfolde, except wee bee peculiar and chosen sheepe: to which purpose belongeth that saying of Paule. 2. Tim. 2. 19. The Lorde knoweth who are his: therefore let euery one that calleth on the name of the Lorde depart from iniquitie. Also he compareth the preaching of the Gospel very aptly to a nette drawne vnder the water, that we might know that the present state of the Church is a thing confused. For though our God, as he is the God of order, and not of confusion, commendeth discipline vnto vs: yet for a time hee graunteth the hypocrites a place amongst the faithfull, vntill hee at the last day doe bring his kingdome into perfecte order. Therefore as much as in vs lyeth, lette vs endeuour to correcte vices, and let filthinesse bee seuerely purged: yet shall not the Church be free from wrinckles and spots, before that Christ shall separate the lambes from the goates.

51. Vnderstand yee all these thinges? That must bee remembered, which wee sawe before, that all the Parables were expounded priuately to the disciples. But now after the Lorde hath familiarly and so louingly instru-

sted them, he also admonisheth them, that he hath not onely employed his labour in teaching thē, that they might onely be wise for themselues, but that they should impart vnto others that, which was committed to them. And by this meanes hee sharpeneth them and prouoketh them the more to endeouour to learne. Therefore he saith, that teachers are like to housholders, which are not onely carefull, for that they shall liue by themselues, but they haue also prouision layd vp in store for the nourishment of others. Then they liue not carelessly for a day: but they prouide for a much longer time to come. And the meaning is, that the teachers of the Church ought to bee instructed by long studie, that as neede shal require they may minister to the Church abundance of doctrine out of the worde of God, as out of a storehouse. That many of the old writers, by new and old doe vnderstand the law and the Gospell, seemeth in my iudgement to be wrested. I therefore doe take it more simply for the diuerse and manifold wayes of dispensing the mysteries, which they doe aptly & wisely apply to euery mans capacite.

38. And shee stode at his feete behind him, weeping, & beganne to wash his feete with teares. and did wipe them with the haire of her head, and kissed his feete, and annoynted them with the oyntment.

39. Nowe, when the Pharise, which bade him, saw it, hee spake within himselfe, saying, If this man were a Prophet, hee woulde surely haue knowne, who, and what manner of woman this is, which toucheth him: for she is a sinner.

41. There was a certaine lender, which had two debtors: the one ought fise hundred pence, and the other fiftie.

42. When they had nothing to pay, he forgauē them both. Which of them therefore, tell me, will loue him most?

43. Simon answered, and sayde, I suppose that hee, to whome he forgauē most. And he sayd vnto him, thou hast truly iudged.

44. Then hee turned to the woman, and sayde vnto Simon, Seest thou this woman? I entred into shine house, and thou gauest mee no water to my feete: but shee hath washed my feete with teares, and wiped them with the hayres of her head.

; 45. Thou

45. Thou gauest mee no kisse, but shee since th<sup>e</sup> time I came in, hath not ceased to kisse my feese.

46. Myne head with oyle thou didest not annoint: but shee hath annointed my feete with oyntement.

47. Wherefore I say vnto thee, many sinnes are forgiven her: for shee loued much. To whom a litle is forgiven the same doth loue a litle.

48. And he sayd vnto her, Thy sinnes are forgiven thee.

49. And they that sate at table with him, began to say within theselues, who is this that euen forgiveth sin<sup>n</sup>?

50. And he sayd to the woman, thy faith hath saved thee, goe thy way.

36. And one of the pharises desired him. This history declareth how overthrow all they are, which know not the office of Christ, in conceiuing, yea, & in seeking and taking offences. A Pharisee inuited Christ: whereby we gather that he was one, neither of the enuious and violent enemies of his doctrine, neither of the proud contemners. but though he was meeke, he was presently offended, when he sawe a woman gentlye admitted by Christ, who in his opinion should haue bene driuen from his company and speech: and therefore he denieth him to be a Prophet, because he knewe not the Mediatour, whose peculiar office it shoulde bee, to reduce miserable sinners into fauoure with God. This truely was somewhat to vouchsafe Christ the honour of a prophet. but he ought also to haue enquired to what end he should be sent, what he shuld bring and to be short, what was enioned him of the father, because he neglected the grace of reconciliation, whiche is speciallye to bee taken holde of in Christe hee thought him not to bee a Prophet. And certainly this womanne oughte to haue bene reiected, if shee had not by the grace of Christe her sinnes beinge abolyshed, obtained a new righteousness. Simone is deceiued onely in this, because not consideringe that Christe came to saue that was lost, he coniectureth rashlye that hee could not discern the worthy from the vnworthy Further, least any such disdainefullnes should ouerwhelme vs, let vs know first that Christ was giuen as a delyuerer of miserable and lost men, to restore them from death to life. Then let euery man examine himselfe and his life: so it shall come to passe that wee shall not wonder that others are receiued with vs: because no man shall be so bolde as to preferre himselfe aboute others. For hypocrisie onely puffeth men vp into securitie, so that they despise all others.

37. A woman in the cittie, which was a sinner. It is so worde for worde, as I haue translated it: Erasmus thought best to vse the preterpluperfect tense of the verbe, least any should thinke her then as yet to haue bene a sinner. But he leaue the verye meaninge of the wordes. Luke woulde note what the behaiour of the womanne was, and what all men thought of her. For though her sodeine change hadde made her an other womanne before G O D, then shee was before, yet the infamy of her former life was not as yet extinguished amongst men.

Therefore

Therefore by common iudgemente shee was a sinner, that is of a wicked and shamefull life. Whereuppon Simon doothe euill inferre that Christe had not the spirite of discretione, whoe knewe not that infamye so commonly knowne.

40. Iesus answered. Christe declareth by this aunswere how muche Simon was deceaued. For he reuealing and setting foorth his silente and secrete thoughte, proueth that hee hath some greater excellencie then the prophets, For, he answ. reth not his wordes, but he refuteth that, which he kept secrete within. And that not for Simons sake onely, but that wee all maye thereby learne that it is not to be feared, that hee shoulde reiecte any sinners from him who is readye no lesse lyberallye, as with outstretched armes to receiue all, then gentlye and louinglye to call them to him.

41. Two debtors. The summe of this parable is, that Simon erred in condemning the woman, whiche the heauenly Iudge hath cleared. And hee proueth that shee is righteous, not because she hath satisfied God: but because sinnes are forgiuen her: for otherewise the similitude should not agree, where Christ saith, the debtes were freely forgiuen the debtors because they were not able to pay. Therefore it is maruaile that so manye interpreters were so grossly deceaued, as though this woman should obtaine forgiuenesse by teares, annoynting and kissing of his feete. For the argument, whiche Christe vseth is not taken of the cause, but of the effecte: for this in order is first to receiue the benefit, then to giue thanks: and free forgiuenesse is here noted to be the cause of this mutuall loue. In summe, the argument, whereby Christ proueth that this woman is reconciled to God, is gathered of the fruities or the latter effectes

44. Hee turned to the Woman. The Lorde seemeth so to compare Simon with the woman that he maketh him bound onelye for small offences, But the manner of his graunting is, as if he should haue sayde, Simon imagine that thy guiltinesse were but sinall, from the which the Lorde hath deliuered thee: and that this woman was ouerwhelmed with many and most grieuous sinnes: yet thou seest that shee is forgiuen, and shee now doth testifie the same in deed For what meane these teares thus abundantly shedd? what the continual washing of my feete: what the precious oyntment, but that shee confeseth her selfe to haue beene ouerwhelmed with a wonderfull weighte of damnation? And now she embraceth the mercie of God so muche more earnestly, by how much shee acknowledgeth her selfe to haue greater neede of the same. Therefore by Christs words it can not be gathered, whether Simons debt was smal, and whether he was deliuered from the guiltines of the same. It is rather to be beleueed, that he was a blinde hypocrit, and then was yet drowned in the filthines of his sinnes. But Christ rested vpon this one thing, though shee had beene a wicked woman, yet the eare manifest signes of her rightousnesse, that to testifie her thankfullnes, she omitted no kind of dutie, and she declared by al meanes shee could how much she was bound to God: yet Christ admonisheth Simon that there is no cause why hee shoulde flatter himselfe, as though he were free from al fault. for he also had need of mercie. Then if he himselfe do not please God without forgiuenes, he ought by these signs of repentance and thankfulnes to consider, whatsoeuer this womã had sinned, was forgiue her. The words are to be noted noted wherein this woman is preferred aboue Simon: namely, that she washed Christes feete with her teares, and wiped them with her hayres, when hee had not commanded to giue him so much as common water: that shee ceased not to kisse his feete, when he had not vouchsafed to receiue Christ with a kisse of salutation for a guest: that shee had powred precious ointment vpon his feete, and hee had not annoynted his head with oyle. Also this was the cause why the Lord, who was a singular example of a sparing and moderate life, suffered the cost of this ointment to be bestowed vpon him: because the miserable sinner shoulde by this meane testifye that shee oughte all to him. For hee desired not delights, nor was allured with pleasant sauour, nor allowed glorious decking, but looked only for an earnest testimonie of repentance: which is also set forth by Luke, as an example to vs: for the teares are witnessers of her sorrow, which is the beginning of repentance. Shee came behind Christ, and there threwe her selfe downe at his feete, in which appeared her shamefastnes and humility: shee brought her oyntment, and offered her selfe and all shee had in sacrifice to Christ. All these things are for vs to follow: but the shedding of the oyntment was a particular action, which should be yll drawne into a generall rule.

47. Her finnes are forgiuen her. Some thinking the verbe to haue beene of the moode of exhorting, doe gather this sense, sith this woman sheweth by these notable deeds, that shee wholly burneth with the loue of Christ, it is not meete that the Church should be more sharpe or hard against her, but that she should rather be gently entreated, though shee had grieuouly offended. But the manner of placing of the Greeke word being well considered, that subtil expostion may bee reiected, which the text refuseth. For a litle after Christ speaking to the woman rehearseth the same, where the maner of exhorting coulde not agree. And the contrary clause followeth this sentence, lesse is forgiuen to him that loueth lesse. Though the verbe of the present tense may bee resolued into the preter tense. For sith shee endeouored to performe carefully all the duties of pietie, Christ hereof inferreth, that though shee was couered with many sins yet the mercy of God was greater then that shee should bee accounted a sinner any more. But this loue is not sayd to be the cause of forgiuenesse, but a signe following after, as I sayd before. For this is the meaning of the words. They which see so great desire of pietie in a woman are peruerse Iudges, except they iudge thereby that God hath already beene mercifull vnto her, so that free forgiuenes hath in order gone before. For christ doth not dispute by what price me should obtaine the grace of God, but hee proueth that God hath now forgiuen this miserable sinner, and that mortall man should not be so hard against her.

48. Thy finnes are forgiuen thee. It may bee demanded to what ende Christ promiseth her againe that forgiuenes, which shee had obtayned, and whereof shee was assured. Some say that this was spoken not so much for her sake, as for others. But in my iudgement he had especiall regarde of her: as shall more evidently appeare by those things, which follow.

It is no maruaile that shee shoulde againe bee absolued by Christes woordes, which hadde tasted his grace before: and who was perswaded that hee was the onely sanctuary of her saluation. So it is necessary that faith should alwayes goe before, when we aske of the Lord, that he would forgiue our sinnes. Neyther do we make this prayer in vaine, as a thing needlesse: but that the heavenly Iudge would more and more seale his mercy in our harts: and by this meanes quiet our consciences. Therefore though this woman had concealed faith by faith which shee had obtained, yet this promise was not superfluous: for it much auayled to the confirmation of that faith.

49. They which sate at the table with him began to say. Here we perceiue againe that men not knowing the office of Christ, doe thereof gather to themselves new offences. And this is the roote of euill, that no man searcheth his owne miseries, which without doubt would prouoke all men to seeke remedy. But it is no maruaile, if the hypocrites, which sleepe in their owne sinnes shoulde murmur at this, as at a strange and wonderfull matter, that Christ shoulde forgiue sinnes.

50. Thy fayth hath saved thee. Christ, to appease the murmurers, and withall to comfort the woman, prayseth her faith: as if he should haue sayd, how so euer these doe grudge, establish thou thy selfe constantly in that faith, which hath brought thee assured saluation. Yet Christ reserueth vnto himselfe that right giuen him of the father: for as the power of healing was in him, the faith is rightly directed to him. And it declareth that the woman was not lead by rashnes, or by ignorance to come vnto him, but by the direction of the spirit shee helde the right way of faith. Whereof it followeth, that wee cannot beleue in any other, then in the Sonne of God: but that we should make him the Iudge of life and death. For, if we ought to beleue in Christ, because the heavenly father hath giuen him power to forgiue sinnes, as soone as faith is applied to any other this his honour is of necessitie taken from him. By this saying also is their error confuted, which thinke that sinnes are redeemed by charitie: for Christe setteth here downe a farr other meanes, in that we embrace the mercy offered by fayth. In the last clause is noted the incomparable fruite of faith, which the scripture so oft commendeth, to witte, that it bringeth peace and ioy to the consciences, least through disquietnesse and trouble they should bee tossed hether and thither.

Luke. 10.

38. Now it came to passe as they went, that he entred into a certaine towne, and a certaine woman named Martha, receiued him into her house.

39. And shee had a sister called Mary, which also sate at Iesus feete, and heard his preaching.

40. But Martha was cumbered about much seruing, and came to him, and sayde, maister doest thou not care that my sister hath left me to serue alone? bid her therefore that shee helpe me.

41. And Iesus answered, and sayd vnto her, Martha, thou carest, & art troubled about many things.

42. But

42. But one thing is needfull, Mary hath chosen the better part, which shall not bee taken away from her.

38. That he entred. This history declareth that whether soeuer Christ went, hee was not giuen priuately to himselfe, nor to seeke his owne commodities or delights: but this was his onely desire, to profite others, and that hee might performe the office enioyned him of his father. For Luke declareth, that when he was friendly entertained of Martha, as soone as he was entred into the house, hee applyed himselfe to teaching and to exhorting. But because that this place is viley wrested to the praise of the life contemplatiue, as they call it, we must seeke out the naturall meaning, where by it shall appeare that the purpose of Christ was nothing lesse then to appoynt his disciples to liue in idlenesse and in colde speculations.

It is an olde error, that they which withdraw themselues from businesse, and apply themselues wholly to contemplations, do liue an Angelles life. And the Sorbonistes doe seeme to haue drawne their trifling about this matter out of Aristotle, who placeth his chiefst good thing, and the last end of mans life in contemplation, which, according to his iudgement, is the enioying of vertue. And when ambition hadde caried some to withdraw themselues frō the common trade of life, or that froward men had giuen themselues to solytaries & idlenesse, this pride also followed, that by doing nothing they imagined themselues to be like to Angels: for the traouelling life was so much disdaind of thē, as if it should withdraw vs from heauen. But wee know that men were created to this end, that they should labour, and no sacrifices do please God better, then that euery man should labour in his calling, and to apply himselfe to liue profitably for the common wealth. But how ignorantly they haue abused the words of Christ to proue their deuce, shall easily appeare out of the plaine sence.

Luke saith that Mary was at Iesus feete: doth he meane that she did nothing else all her life time? But the Lord rather commandeth that the times should so be deuided, that he which studieth to profit in God his schoole should not be an idle & a negligent hearer: but that he should put in practice that which he learned: for there is a time of hearing, & a time of labouring. Therefore the Monkes do very fondly wrest this place, as though Christ should compare the contemplatiue life with the labouring life: whē as Christ doth simply shew to what end and how he would be receiued. For though the hospitality of Martha is worthy of cōmendation, as it is praised: yet Christ noteth two faults in the same. The first is, that Martha exceeded measure in busiying her selfe. For christ had rather to be entertained sparingly, & with small charge, thē that the holy matron should take so much paine. The second fault was that Martha withdrawing her selfe, & being occupied in superfluous labors, made the cōming of christ vnprofitable for her. For Lu. noteth her excesse, in ḡ he mētioneth her much seruing, whē christ was content with a little. For this was as much as if a man receiuing a Prophet, should haue no regard to hear him, but should rather bury all ḡ doctrine with great & superfluous preparatiō. But the lawfull receiuing of the prophets is, when the profit is receiued ceiued, which God appoynteth and offereth to vs by them. Now, we see that the diligence of Martha worthy of commendation, yet was not without fault. Also it had this fault more, that Martha pleasing her selfe in these troublesome labours, despised the godly desire that her sister had to learne. By which example wee are warned to take heede alwayes, least any in well doing preferre themselves aboue others.

42. One is needefull. Some expound it too coldly, that one kinde of meat is sufficient. Others dispute more subtilly, but besides the purpose of an vnitie. But Christ bent himselfe an other way: namely, that whatsoeuer the faithfull should take in hand to doe, and whereto soeuer they apply themselves, yet there is one ende, to the which it is meete that all things should be referred. The sum therefore is that wee wander about in vaine, if wee direct not all our actions to a certaine end. Therefore the hospitalitie of Martha was faultie, because that the principall matter was neglected, and she was wholly caried away in taking care about her busines. Yet the meaning of Christe is not that all other things are nothing this onely excepted, but order must be wisely holden, least the accessary, as they call it be more esteemed then the principall. Mary hath chosen the good parte. Here is no comparifon, as foolish and absurd interpreters do dreame: but Christ onely sayeth, that Mary is occupied in a holy & profitable exercise, from which she ought not to be drawne: as if he should haue sayd, thou mightest well here haue reprooued thy sister, if she following idleneffe, or being occupied in vaine cares, or desiring any other thing not meete for her calling, shoulde haue laide the whole burden of prouiding for the house vpon thee. But now when shee applyeth her selfe well, and profitably to hearing, it were not well to draw her from it: for such oportunitie is not had alwayes. Though others doe take the latter part other wise, as if Christ had sayd that Mary had therefore chosen the better part, because the fruite of the heauenly doctrine neuer falleth away, the which iudgement, though I do not reiect, yet I haue followed that, which I thinke doeth most aptly agree to the meaning of Christe.

Luke. 12.

13. And one of the company sayd vnto him, maister, bid my brother deuide the inheritance with me.

14. And he said vnto him, man, who made mee a iudge, or a deuider ouer you?

15. Wherefore he said vnto them, take heede, and beware of couetousnes: for though a man haue abundance, yet his life standeth not in his riches.

16. And he put forth a parable vnto the, saying, The ground of a certaine rich man brought forth fruites plenteously.

17. Therefore hee thought with himselfe, sayinge, what shall I doe, because I haue no rounge, where I may lay vp my fruites?

18. And hee sayde, this will I doe, I will pull downe my barnes, and builde greater, and therein will I gather all my fruites and my goodes.

19. And

19. And I will say to my soule, soule, thou hast much goods laid vp for many yeeres: live at ease, eate, drinke, and take thy pastime.

20. But God sayd vnto him, O foole, this night will they fetch thy soule from thee: then whose shall those things be, which thou hast prouided?

21. So is hee, that gathereth riches to himselfe, and is not rich in God.

13. Bid my brother deuide. The Lord being required to giue iudgment for the deuision of inheritance, refused to doe it. Sith this made for the nourishment of brotherly concord, and the office of Christe was not onely to reconcile men to God, but to bring them to mutuall consent: it is demaunded what the cause should be, why he would not end the strife betweene two brethren. And it appeareth that there were two causes especially why hee abstained from the office of a Iudge. First, sith the Iewes imagined the kingdome of the Messiah to be earthly, his will was to take heede, least hee should by any example nourish that errour. for if they had seene him deuide the inheritances, the rumour of that deede should presently haue bene spread abroad. So many hoped for a carnall redemption, and gaped too greedily after the same: the wicked gloried that he should bring new matters to passe, & that hee should overthrow the state of the Romane empyre. Wherefore there could not a better answer be giuen then this, whereby all men might vnderstand that the kingdome of Christ was spirituall. Therefore let vs learne to gouerne our selues soberly, nor to attempt any thing, which may be drawne into the worst parte. Secondly, it was also the Lorders will to make a difference betweene the politique Empyre of this world, and the gouernment of his Church: for he was created Doctor by the father, who should be by the sword of the worde cut downe thoughts and affections, and should pearce into the soules of men: but he was not a magistrate to deuide inheritances. So the theft of the Pope & his priestes is here condemned, which pretending themselues to be Pastors of the Church yet are so bolde as to inuade the earthly and prophane iurisdiction, which nothing pertaineth to their office. For there is somewhat, which is of it selfe lawfull, which yet belongeth not to euery man. Also in my iudgement there is a third particular reason: that is, because Christ saw this man leauing the doctrine and prouiding for his own household commodities. And this disease is too common, so that many professing the gospel, doubt not to abuse the pretence of the same for the increasing of their wealth, and to pretend the authoritie of Christ for their owne gaines.

This may be readily gathered by the circumstance of the exhortation: for except that man had abused the title of the gospel to his own game, there had not bin occasion giuen to Christ to condemne his couetousnes. Therefore the text doth sufficiently declare that this man was but a fained disciple, whose minde was drowned in fields or money bagges. Furthermore, the Anabaptistes do too foolishly inferre of this answer, that it is not lawfull for a Christian man to deuide inheritances, to thrust himselfe in, to deale with worldly affayres, or to exeute any ciuill office. For Christe argueth not of the matter it selfe, but of his owne calling: because he was ordayned of his father to an other end, he sayth, that he is no iudge, because he hath no such commandement. Therefore let this rule be of force amongst vs, that euery man keepe himselfe within the bands of the calling, wherein the Lord hath set him.

15. Take heede and beware. First, he calleth his disciples backe from couetousnes, then, that he might purge the mindes throughly from this disease, he affirmeth that our life consisteth, not in abouндance: By which wordes is noted the fountaine and inward beginning, whence this mad desire of hauing ariseth. For the people doe commonly iudge, that the more a man possesseth, the happier his life is, and they imagine riches to bee the cause of a blessed life. Hence commeth that intemperate desire of hauing, which as a burning furnace sendeth out his heate, and yet ceaseth not to burne within. If that wee were perswaded that riches and all abouндance of goods, be helpe of this present life, which the Lord giueth vnto vs with his owne hand, and blesteth the vse thereof, this one thought would easily appease all wicked desires: and that do the faithfull finde true by their owne experience. For whereof commeth it to passe, that with stayed mindes they should depend of God alone: but because they binde not their life, nor make it subiect to abouндance of riches, but they rest in the prouidence of God, who onely both sustayneth vs by his power, & giueth vs as much as is meete?

16. He put forth a similitude. This similitude propofeth vnto vs, as in a glasse a liuely shew of that sentence, that men liue not by the abundance of their riches. For sith the richest doe also lose their life in a moment, what helpeth it to gather vp great heape of riches? All men grant this to be true, so that Christ speaketh nothing, but that which is vsuall and common, & which is in all mens tongues: but in the meane season how doth euery man apply and giue his mind Doe not all men rather so frame their liues, and so mixe their counsels & their reasons, that they may depart furthest of from God, placing their life in the present abouндance of their riches? Therefore all menne haue neede to waken themselues, leatt they imagining themselues to bee blessed by reason of their riches, should entangle themselues in the snares of couetousnesse. Also in this parable is set forth vnto vs the vncertaine shortnes of this life. Further, how riches doe profit nothing for the lengthening of this life. There is a third thing to bee added, which is not expressed, but may easily bee gathered out of the former, that this is a notable helpe to the faithfull, that seeking their dayly bread from the Lord whether they bee rich or poore, their onely rest is in his prouidence.

17. What shall I doe? The wicked are therefore doubtfull in their counsels, because they know not the lawfull vse of their riches: then because they being drunken in their peruerse hope, doe forget themselues. So this rich man setting the hope of his life in his great abouндance, shaketh the remembrance of death farre away. And yet is distrust annexed to this pride: for couetousnes, which neuer is filled, doeth yet neuerthelessse vex these rich men, as this rich man enlargeth his barnes, as though his belly being stuffed with his former barnes, had not yet inough. Yet Christ doth not expressly condemne this, that he doth the parte of a diligent and carefull housholder in laying vpp prouision:

but:

but because as a bottomlesse deepe hee woulde swallowe vp and deuour many barnes in his greedy couetounesse wherof it followeth that hee knewe not the true vse of plentifull promise. Now, when hee exhorteth himselfe to eating and to drinking, he remembereth himselfe no longer to be a manne, but becometh proud in his abundance. And wee doe daily see euident examples of this insolencie in prophane menne, which sette the heape of their riches, as brazen fortresses aganist death. When he sayth, my soule, eate and be mery: in this speach there is great force after the phrased of the Hebrewes: for he so speaketh vnto himselfe, that yet hee would declare that he hath abundance to fill the desire of his minde and all his senses.

20. O foole, this night will they fetch away thy soule from thee. There is an allusion in this worde soule. The rich man spake first to his soule, as the seat of all his affections: but now it is spoken of the life it selfe, or of the vitall spirite. The verbe they will fetch, though it bee the plurall number, yet, because it is indefinite, it signifieth nothing else, then that the life is in the power of an other, which the rich man accounted to be in his owne hande: which I doe therefore giue warning of, because that some do without cause imagine this to be spoken of the Angelles. And in this is the rich man reprooued of folly, that he knew not that his life depended of an other.

21. So is he that gathereth riches to himselfe. Sith it appeareth that there is here a comparison, the exposition of one parte of the sentence must be gathered out of the other. Let vs therefore define what the meaning of this is, to bee rich in God, or toward God, or in respect of God. They which are but meanely exercised in the Scripture doe know that the Greekes do vse oft one of these prepositions for an another. But it is no matter, which of the two wayes locuer be taken: for this is the summe, they are rich toward God, which trust not in earthly thinges, but depend of his only providence. Neyther is it of any waight, whether they haue abundance, or bee in wante: so that both sorts doe sincerely aske their daily bread from the Lord. For that which is opposed aganist it, to gather riches to himselfe, signifieth as much, as to neglecte the blessing of God, and carefully to heape vp great abundance, as if their hope were shutte vpe in their barnes. Of this may the end of the parable be gathered, that vaine are their counselles, and ridiculous are their labours, which trusting to the abundance of their riches, doe not repose themselues in God alone, nor are not content with his measure ready to beare both estates, and at length they shall beare the iudgement of their owne vanitie.

Luke. 13.

1. There were certaine menne present at the same season that shewed him of the Galileans, whose blood Pilate had mingled with their owne sacrifices.
2. And Iesus answered and sayde vnto them, suppose yee, that these Galileans were greater sinners then all the other Galileans, because they haue suffered such things?

3. I tell you nay: but except yee amend your liues, yee shall all likewise perish.
4. Or thinke you that those eighteene, vppon whom the tower in Siloam fell, and slew them, were sinners above all men that dwelt in Hierusalem?
5. I tell you nay: but except you amend your liues, yee all shall likewise perish.
6. He spake also this parable, A certaine manne had a figtree planted in his vineyarde, and hee came and sought fruite thereon, and found none.
7. Then sayde he to the dresser of his vineyard, behold, this three yeares I haue come and sought fruite of this figtree, and finde none, cutte it downe: why keepeth it also the ground barrent?
8. And he answered, & said vnto him, Lord, let it alone this yeare also, till I digge round about it, & doing it,
9. And if it beare fruite, well: if not, then after shalt thou cutte it downe.

2. Suppose yee that these. This place is very profitable euen for this cause, for that this disease is engrafted almost in vs all, that being too sharpe & seueri iudges against others wee flatter our selues in our own sinnes. So it falleth out, that we do not onely exaggerate the sinnes of our brethren more sharply then is meete, but also if any aduersitie come vnto them, wee condemne them as wicked men and reprobates. In the meane while, whosoeuer is not touched with the hand of God, sleepech carelesly in his owne sinnes, as if hee had God fauourable and mercifull: wherein there is a double fault. For as oft as God chastiseth any man in our sight he admoniseth vs of his iudgements, that euery one should learne to examine then: selues, and to consider what they haue deserued. And that he spareth vs for a time, it is of his benignity and mercy, wherby he calleth vs to repentance, & it ought to be far from vs from taking occasion thereby of sluggishnes. That Christ therefore might correct that wicked iudgemēt, wherciu we become enemies to them that are in miseries & in afflictions, and that hee might withall shake away those pleasures, wherin euery man flattereth himselfe: first, he teacheth that they are not the worst, which are hardest handled of all others: because God so executeth his iudgements in that order and maner as hee shall thinke good, so that some are presently punished, others doe rest long in idleness & pleasures. Then he saith, that as many calamities as befall in the world, are so many testimonies of the wrath of God. Whereby we gather what destruction there remaineth for vs, except we amend. The there ariseth occasion of exhortation of this, that some brought woorde that Pilate mingled mans bloud with sacrifices: to witte, that sacrifices by such an haynous deed might come into detestation. And because it is likely that this reproach was done to the Samaritanes, which were fallen from the pure worship of the lawe, it was an easie and a ready matter for the Iewes by condemning the Samaritanes to iustifie themselves. but the Lord turneth them an other way.

And

And because the wickednesse of the whole nation was odious & infamous vnto them, hee demaundeth of them whether they thinke that those wretches which were slaine by Pilate, were worse then all others : as if he should haue sayde, it is not knowne vnto you, that that land is full of wicked menne, and that there remaineth many yet aliue, which were worthy of the same punishment. A blinde therefore and a wicked iudge is hee, which measureth the finnes of menne by the present punishments. For the worst manne is not first punished : but out of many the Lorde chuseth a fewe to bee punished, in whose person hee teacheth the rest that hee is an auenger, that all might feare him. But after hee hadde spoken of the Samaritanes, hee came nere to the Iewes themselues : For in those dayes when eightene menn were slaine with fall of a tower of Hierusalem, hee affirmeth that they were not the wickedest, but in the destruction of them, hee sayeth that there was an example of teriour sette foorth vnto all menne : for if God hath shewed a token of his iudgement vpon them, others shall nothing the rather escape his hand, though they bee borne with for a time. And Christ forbiddeth not, but that the faithfull should be diligent in considering the iudgements of God : but he appointeth this order to be holden, that they should begin at their owne finnes. For hereof shall great profit come, so that they shal with voluntary repentance preuent the iudgement of God. To the which purpose that exhortation of Paule doeth also pertain, Ephes. 5.6. Let no man deceiue you with vaine wordes, for from these things cometh the wrath of God vpon the children of disobedience.

6. Hee spake also this Parable. The summe tendeth to this purpose, that many which are worthy of destruction, are tollerated for a time : yet they shall gaine nothing by the delay, if they goe forward in their obstinacy. For hence cometh a wicked flattery, wherein the hypocrites doe harden themselues, & become more obstinate, because they consider not their owne miseries, except they bee forced : and therefore so long as the Lorde winketh, and suspendeth his corrections, they imagine with themselues that they are well agreed with him. So they nourish vppe themselues in securitie, as if they had made a covenant with death, and with the graue, as Isaias sayeth, 28. 15. Therefore doeth Paule inuey against them so vehemently to the Romanes, 2. 5. because they heape vppe for themselues, the wrath of God against the later day. And wee knowe that the trees are sometimes preserued, not because they are alwayes profitable and fruitfull to their owners : but because the carefull and wise husbandmen attempteth and tryeth euery way before he will stocke vppe his fiede or his vineyarde. But we are hereby taught, that the Lorde hath great reason of his forbearing, when he doeth not presently reuenge himselfe vpon the wicked, but deferreth their punishments. Whereby mans rashnes is put to silence : least any shoulde be so bolde as to murmure against the chiefe iudge of all men, if he doe not alwayes execute his iudgements in like sorte. But the comparison is here made betweene the Lord and the steward, not because the ministers of God do exceede him in mercy and meekenesse, but because the Lorde doth not only prolong the life of sinners, but he also husbandeth them diuers waies, that he might gather better fruite.

Luke 13.

10. And hee taught in one of the Synagogues on the Sabbath day.
11. And behold, there was a woman which had a spirit of infirmity 18. yeares, and was bowed together, & could not lift vp her selfe in any wise.
12. When Iesus saw her, he called her to him, and saide to her, woman, thou art loosed from thy disease.
13. And hee layd his handes on her, and immediatly she was made straight againe, and glorified God.
14. And the ruler of the Synagogue answered with indignation, because that Iesus healed on the Sabbath day, and sayd vnto the people: There are sixe dayes in which men ought to worke: in them therefore come and be healed, and not on the Sabbath day.
15. The answered him the Lord, and said: Hypocrite, doth not each one of you on the Sabbath day, lose his ox or his asse from the stall, & leade him away to the waters?
16. And ought not this daughter of Abraham, whō Sathan had bound, loe 18. yeares, be loosed from this bond on the Sabbath day?
17. And when hee had sayd these thinges, all his aduersaries were ashamed: but all the people reioyced at all the excellent thinges that were done by him.

I haue determined to gather together into this one place, those things which are red in diuers places, set down by Luke alone, without expresse noting of the time, as we haue sayd elsewhere, that the Euangelistes were nothing curious in this behalfe. Our returne shall after be the better to the common Harmony. Here is report made of a myracle in healing of a woman, & the Iewes maliciously conceiued an offence, because the Lord healed her on the Sabbath day. Luke sayth that the woman was holdē with a spirit of infirmitie, so that the bodie was shrunke vp with the shrinking of the synewes. But because he doth not otherwise describe what kind of disease it was, it seemeth not to be any cōmon disease, nor any such as the phisitions knew: therefore he calleth it a spirit of infirmitie. For we know that the deuill applyeth himselfe to plague men with strange & vnwonted diseases. Wherin the diuine power of Christ shewed it selfe more euidently in triumphing ouer sathan: not that sathā ruleth our men at his owne pleasure, but as he hath power giuē him of the Lord to hurt. But as the Lord being the only authour of all good things, yet he doth chiefly shew his glory in especiall & extraordinary benefits: so also he would haue the power & tyrannie of sathan especially knowne in extraordinary scourges, though hee also vse his hand in light chastisements, with which he doth daily chastise vs.

11. Woman thou art loosed. Christe in this myracle as in others, giueth a testimony both of his power and of his grace. For hee sayeth that he came for that cause that hee might helpe them in misery. The power is expressed in these words: woman thou art loosed: for of his authoritie he saith that he had the deliucdeliuerance in his hand. Yet he addeth an outward signe, of the vse, whereof wee haue entreated oher where. That the people glorifieth God, it testifieth to vs that this heavenly benefit was euident. For it was no obscure worke which might by disputation be applyed cyther way, but it was such as gaue great and certaine occasion of praysing God. Whereby the wickednesse of the maister of the synagoge is reuealed.

14. There are fixe daies. This controller dareth not condemne Christ openly, but he turneth the poyson of his frowardnes an other way, condemning Christ ouerthwartly in the person of the common people. And he was growen in malice to a madnes without reason he warneth thé that there are 6. daies appointed for labour: but how wickedly and foolishly defineth he that labor which is not permitted but for those 6. daies? Why doth he not also forbid them entring into the synagoge, least they should breake the Sabboth? Why doeth hee not commaund them to abstaine fró the exercises of godlines? If that men are only restrained fró their own works on the sabboth day, how wicked is it then to tie or restrain the spirit of God? He commádeth thé to come to be healed on other daies: as though the power of God should lie & sleep on the sabboth, and shuld not rather that day more exercise the same for the saluatió of his people. For to what purpose are the holy assemblies, but that the faithfull should seeke & craue the ayd and helpe of God? Therefore this wicked hypocrite speaketh, as if the lawfull obseruation of the sabboth, should hinder the course of Gods benefites should exclude men fró calling vpon him, & should depriue them of his grace.

15. Each one of you on the sabboth day. When it was an easie matter to refell so grosse malice with diuers arguments, Christ was content with this one: if it be lawfull to shew kindnes on the sabboth day to beastes, they saine a very preposterous worship, if on that day the children of God should not be helpé. But there is a double cõparison in the wordes of Christ: of the beast with the daughter of Abraham, and of the halter wherewith the asse or oxe is tied to the manger, with the bandes of sathan wherin he holdeth men bound to their destruction, You (sayth he) which are so scrupulous obseruers of the sabboth, dare lose your oxen and asses, that they may be led to the water, why shall it not then be lawfull for me to performe the like dutie to the elect people of God, especially where greater necessitie requireth it? namely, when any man is to be deliuered from the snares of Sathan? And though this wicked reprehender held his peace for shame, yet we see that Christ wrought not any miracle so notable which the wicked did not cauill at. Neither is it any maruaile if Sathan applyed all his studie and endeouour to this purpose, that he might peruert the glory of Christ, who ceaseth not dayly to scatter his cloudes, that he might by them obscure the holy workes of the faithfull. It is to be noted that Christ calleth her the daughter of Abraham, whose body had beene 18. yeeres in thrall to sathan: and hee called her so, not onely in respect of the stocke, as all the Iewes generally were proud of this title, but because she was one of the true and naturall members of the church. Wherein we do also behold that which Paule teacheth, 1. Cor. 5. 5 that some are deliuered to sathan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit might be saued in the day of the Lorde. And the continuance of that time teacheth vs not to despaire though the Lord doth not presétly heale our miseries.

Luke 13.

31. The same day there came certaine Pharises, and sayd vnto him: Depart and goe hence: for Herod seeketh to kill thee.
32. Then sayde he vnto them: Goe yee and tell that Foxe: Behold I cast out deuils, & I will heale still to day and to morow, and the third day I shall be perfited.
33. Neuerthelesse, I must walke to day, and to morowe, and the day followinge: for it cannot be, that a Prophet should perish out of Ierusalem.

Also it cannot be certainly coniectured when this befell, but that it is euident that Christ was then in Galile, as in all the course of his trauaile, hee was more then other where. For they which would seeme to bee his freindes, perswade him to be out of Herodes iurisdiction, if that he would be safe. Now, it is vnknowne howe they were affected which gaue this counsell: but I rather coniecture, when they saw the most part of the people there giuen to Christ, so that the doctrine of the Gospell was euery where receiued, they assayed to driue him to some other place. It is to be noted who these warners were. Luke sayth that they were some of the Pharisies, but we know that secte was not so mercifull to Christ, that it should be probable that they were carefull of his life. What then? certainly their purpose was by casting a feare before him, to driue him away into some corners: for so they hoped that it shoulde come to passe, that in short time his authoritie shoulde decay, and his whole doctrine shoulde vanish away. But yet wee must consider the purpose of Sathan, the cheife master and framer of this deuise: for as by fearing the sonne of G O D, he sought then to hinder the course of the Gospell, so he now inuenceth and frameth new terrours, wherewith he might discourage the ministers of Christ, and enforce them to leaue their course.

32. Tell that Foxe: behold I cast out deuils. It is certaine that hee speaketh of Herod Antipas. And though he had the maners of a Foxe, and a disposition no lesse seruile then crafty, yet I doe not thinke that hee comprehendeth the subtiltie of his whole life vnder this name Foxe: but his secreete deceites where hee attempted to vndermine the doctrine of the Gospell, when with open warre hee durst not set vpon it. For Christ declareth, though hee was crafty, that yet hee shoulde preuayle nothing by his deuices. I sayth he, what guiles soeuer hee deuifeth, will to day and to morowe, doe the office layde vpon me of God: and when I come to the ende of the race, then shall I bee offered vppe in sacrifice. Yet, that the meaning of the wordes may bee more plainly set downe vnto vs, in the first parte of the sentence Christe graunteth, that the third day after, that is, shortly after, he should die: and thus hee declareth that he can by no feare of death be driuen frō doing his duty, to the which with a settled purpose of the minde hee goeth without feare. Then hee addeth that it is a vaine sheve of feare which is obiected by those false fained warners, because there is no danger of death other where, then at Ierusalem. But in the second part hee reprooueth the Pharisies sharply, doe you, who I see shall be my butchers, warne me to take heed of Herode? Though the vpbraidenge goeth further: for he not only sayeth, that he is ready to die at Ierusalem, but it is also a denne of the Iewes, where almost all the Prophets were slaine. It is true that many were slaine other where, and especially at that time, when the cruell rage of Iesabell was hotte against them: but because that continually the prophets were not in any other place more cruelly delt w.th: Christ layeth worthily this reproofe vpon the wicked inhabitants of the holy Citie. And for the most part it befell the Prophets to bee slayne there: for sith the wickednesse came from thence, wherewith Iudea was filled, that also was the felde wherein God exercised his prophets. For we know that the more the doctrine of the Gospell shi- neth, and the nearer it commeth to the wicked, the madder they become. Yet this is a horrible example, that the place which was chosen to be the sanctuary of the worship of God, and to bee the house of the law, & of the heauenly wise- dome, should be defiled not with one or two murders, but with the ordinary slaughter of the Prophets. And hereby it appeareth how obstinate the vnthank- fulnes of the world was in refusing sound doctrine. Though the exclamation which followeth presently after in Luke, seemeth so to bee ioyned to this, as if Christe hereof taking occasion, did then enuy against Ierusalem: yet I rather thinke, when Luke hadde sayd before that Ierusalem was embrewed with the Prophets blood, yea, and that it was by continual course of many ages the cruel and sacrilegious slaughter house, occupied in murdering the Prophets, pre- sently according to his manner hee addeth a sentence which agreed with that speach. For wee see in diuers places before, that it was no vnwonted thing in him, to gather into one place, sayings of Christ vttered at sundry times.

Matth.	Marke.	Luke 11.
		37. And as he spake, a certaine Pharise he sought him to dine with him: & he went in and sate downe at the table.
		38. And when the Pharise saw it, he marueiled that he had not first washed before dinner.
		39. And the Lord sayd vnto him, in deede ye Pharises make cleane the out side of the cuppe, & of the platter: but the inward part is full of rauening and wickednesse.
		40. Yee fooles, did not he which made that which is with- out, make that which is within also?
		41. Therefore giue almes of those things which are with- in, and behold al things shall be cleane vnto you.

This heere sette downe, agreeth in parte, but not wholly with that doctrine in the fifteene Chapter of Mattheu, that Christe of purpose neglected those outwarde rites inuented by menne, (in obseruing whereof, the Iewes were to too carefull) that hee might correcte the superstition of the people, and especially of the Scribes. GOD hadde commaunded some certaine washings in his lawe, in the which hee profitably exercised his people in the meditation of true puritie. The Iewes not beeing content with this mediocritie, mediocritie, added many other washings, specially that no man should eate, except he had washed, as Matke declareth more plainely in the 7. chapter, and also appeareth in the 2. of Iohn. Also to this faulte was added a wicked confidence, because they hauing no regard of the spirituall worship of God, thought they had well discharged themselues, if they had set vp a figure in the place of God. And Christ not being ignorāt that the contempt of this ceremony would be offensively taken, yet omitted the same, that he might shew that God made small account of the outward cleanesse of the flesh, but required the spirituall righteousness of the heart.

39. In deed eye Pharises. Christ doth not reprove the pharises in this place, as he doth in Matth. & Mar. because they preposterously worshipped God with mens inuentions, & brake the lawe of God through their owne traditions: but he only toucheth their grosse hypocrisie, because they desired puritie but in the eyes of men, as if they had nothing to do with God. And this reproofe lighteth vpō all hypocrites, which establish a righteoulnes in the ceremonies cōmanded by God. And therefore Christ concludeth more then if he should haue saide that God is worshipped in vaine with the cōmandements of men: for he generally condemneth that error, that God should bee worshipped with ceremonies & not with faith and pure affection of the heart. And though the Prophets alwayes had a great controuersie about this matter with the Iewes: yet the dispositiōs of men are so prone to hypocrisie, that proud error preuailed, that God shuld be pleased with outward worshippings void of faith. But chiefly they were so astonied in Christes time, that religiō then only stood in meere trifles. Therefore hee inueigheth against the Pharises, which are busily occupied in washing the cuppes, & nourish inwardly in their hearts most filthy spots of rauening and wickednes. And he cōdemneth their folly by this reason, that God which created the inward soule of man, as well as the body, could not be pleased only with an outward shew. For this chiefly deceiueth men, that either they do not consider that they haue to doe with God: or else they transforme him according to the vanity of their imaginatiō, as though he differed nothing frō a mortall man.

41. But of those things which are within. Christe after his manner calleth the Pharises backe from ceremonies to charitie, affirming that men, as well as meats, are not clesed with water but with loue. Yet he would not in those words lessen the grace of God, nor reiect the rites of the law as vaine and vnprofitable: for hee directeth his speach against them, which carelessly mocke at God with naked signes: as if he should haue said, it is only the lawfull vse which sanctifieth the meates. And they only do vse the meates rightly and iustly, which helpe the want of the poore with their aboudance. Therefore it were better to giue almes of that aboudance which we haue, then by scrupulous washing of hands and cuppes, to neglect the poore. That which the Papistes doe gather hereof, that almes are satisfactions by the which we are purged from sinnes, is so sonde, that it needeth no long confutation. For Christ disputeth not here, with what price it behooueth vs to obtaine forgiuenesse of sinnes: but that they doe eate their bread rightly, which bestow part vppon the poore. For I doe take the Greeke woorde here vsed, signifieth that which is presently had, and not as the olde interpreter and Erasmus doe translate it, for that which remaineth, neth. It is best to reserue those reproofes which do presently follow for an other place. For I doe not thinke that Christ then presently at the table did so inuey against the Scribes and the Pharisies: but Luke set that downe here which was spoken at an other time: as wee haue often sayd that the Euangelistes regarded not the order of the time,

Luke 14.

1. And it came to passe, that when he was entred into the house of one of the cheife Pharisies, on the sabboth day, to ease bread, they watched him.
2. And behold, there was a certaine man before him, which had the dropsie.
3. Then Iesus answering, spake vnto the expounders of the lawe, and Pharisies, saying: Is it lawfull to heale on the Sabbosh day?
4. And they held their peace. Then he tooke him, and healed him, and let him goe.
5. And answered them, saying: which of you shall haue an Asse, or an Oxe falne into a pit, and will not straighe way pull him out on the Sabbosh day?
6. And they could not answer him to those thinges.

This historie containeth nothing else but a miracle wrought by Christ, wher by he reproveth the superstitious obseruation of the Sabboth. Neyther was his purpose as some imagine, simply to abrogate the Sabboth: but onely to shewe that neither the worke of God, nor the dueties of charitie doe violate the holy rest which is commanded in the law. Also it is vncertaine whether the manne which had the dropsie was purposely brought thither by their appointment: for certainly he could not come to the table by aduenture, nor enter into a private house without the leaue and will of the Lord of the same. Wherefore it is likely that he was brought thither craftely to tempt Christ, which yet was no lesse foolishly then wickedly done of them: because they had experience before what Christ was accustomed to doe, as oft as like occasion was offered.

5. Is it lawfull to heale on the Sabbosh day? The meaning of the question is this, whether the healing of a manne ought to bee accounted amongst those vorkes which doe breake the Sabboth. If they should haue sayd that the obseruation of the Sabboth should be broken by this meanes, there was an exception ready, that it is the worke of God. And the law of the Sabboth containeth nothing else, but that men should rest from their owne labours. And Christ first asketh the question of them, that hee might thereby preuent the offence. Therefor the cause was not in him that they were not pleased, but in their obstinate malice. Not that he alwayes bound himselfe to this condition (for oft times not regarding the offence, he performed that which was inioyned him of his father): but his will was to teach by this example, that he wrought not his miracles on the Sabboth dayes rashly, but that he was ready to giue an account of what he did. But they do declare by their silence, that they had rather tak occasion to reprehend him, then to be moued by the study of the law. Therefore christ hath not to regarde, what they iudge of his doing, because it is euident that they would willingly take occasion of offence.

5. Which of you shall haue an Ass. Though they were vnworthy that Christ should endeour to mitigate their displeasures: yet he declareth that hee hath done nothing against the obseruation of the Sabbath. All be it he doth this not so much of purpose to teach them, as that he might thereby deliuer himselfe frō their slaunders, for he knew that they shewed themselues rather to bee blinded with poysonfull hatred, then to yeelde themselues to be taught by reason: but his will was not to triumph ouer their malice, while he enforced the for shame to hold their peace. For if it bee lawfull to helpe brute beastes on the Sabbath day, it were too vile a thing, not to doe the same dutie to man framed and made after the image of God.

Luke. 14.

7. He spake also a Parable to the guesstes, when he marked how they chose out the cheife roumes, and sayd vnto them.

8. When thou shalt be bidden of any man to a wedding, set not thy selfe downe in the chiefest place, least a more honorable man then thou, bee bidden of him.

9. And hee that bidde both him and thee: come, and say to thee: Give this man roume, and thou then begin with shame to take the lowest roume.

10. But when thou art bidden, goe and sit downe in the lowest roume, that when he that had thee commeth, hee may say vnto thee: Freind, sit vp higher, then shalt thou haue worship in the presence of them that sit at table with thee.

11. For whosoever exalteth himselfe, shall bee brought low, and he that humbleth himselfe, shall be exalted.

12. Then said he also to him that had bidden him, when thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor the rich neighbours, least they also bid thee againe, and a recompence be made thee.

13. But when thou makest a feast, call the poore, the maimed, the lame, and the blinde.

14. And thou shalt be blessed, because they can not recompence thee: for thou shalt bee recompenced at the resurrection of the iust.

7. Hee spake to the guesstes. Wee knowe howe greatly ambition raigned in all the Pharisees and the Scribes. That as they proudly desired to raigne ouer all men, there was also a contention mutually amongst themselues, which should be the chiefest. For men desirous of vaine glory haue this affection, that euery one of them doeth enuie each other, while euery one of them desireth to drawe that to himselfe, which others thinke to bee due to them. So the Pharisees and Scribes, when they challenge that the people people should giue vnto thē the title of the holy order, now they strue amongst themselves for the degree of honour, because euery of them chaleng to himselfe the cheife place. Christ aptly derideth this their ambition with a fit similitude. For if any man occupy the cheife rounge at an other mans stable, and then bee enforced to giue place to a better, he shall be set lower by the maister of the feast, not without shame and ignominie. And it is necessary that the same should befall to all them that proudly lift vp themselves to rule ouer others, for God shall cast them downe with shame. For it is to be noted, that Christ preacheth not heere of the outward and ciuill modestie: for we see the proudest men, oft times excell in this behalfe, and for ciuilitie, as they say, they pretende the greatest modestie. But by a similitude taken from the vse of men, hee teacheth vs what wee should bee inwardly before God: as if hee shoulde say: If it befall vnto a guest, which foolishly chose the highest rounge, to bee thrust downe into the lowest, and with shame he desire that hee had neuer climed thither: therefore, least God put the same thing in practise amongst you, so that your arrogancy be stained with extreame ignominie, willingly submit your selues to humilitie and modestie.

II. Whosoever exalteth himselfe. This clause declareth that Christ spake of ambition: for he sheweth not what vscth to befall in the common life of men: but heere he maketh God our iudge, who resisteth the proud, and pulleth down their proude looks, but giueth grace to the humble. The scripture is full of such places, that God will be enemy to all them, which desire to lift vp themselves, so that of necessitie they must haue battell with God, which doe arrogate any thing to themselves. For this is the pride, so to glory in the giftes of God, as if there were any worthinesse in vs, which of our owne deseruing should extoll vs: as againe, onely a fained casting downe, ought not to be accounted humility, but the true humbling, that is, when we rightly acknowledg in our owne selues our owne infirmitie, not listing vp our selues, knowing that wee excel by the onely grace of God.

12. When thou makest a dinner. They which thinke that those feasts are here simply condēned, which kinsfolkes & freinds do make amongst themselves, doe take away that part of humanity from amongst men. For this were rather barbarous then austere, to shut thy kinsfolkes from thy table, & onely to giue place to strangers. Neither was it the purpose of Christ to driue vs from all neighbourhood, but onely to shew that charitie was little vsed in the ordinary dealinges of the world: for as it is no liberality to bestow any thing vpon the rich men in hope of gaine, from whom we hope to receiue the like, but a kinde of vsurie: so those works for reward are not accounted of before God, nor are woorthy of the name of charitie. If I bid my kinsfolkes or rich friendes to supper, it is humanitie not of it selfe to be condemned, but it smally auayleth to prooue charitie: for oft times wee see them which are wholly addicted to themselves, to bestow great charges in receiuing their friends most delicately, What then? thou mayest furnish thy table with rich men, so that in the meane season thou neglectest not the poore: so it is lawfull to feast with thy freindes and kinsfolkes, so that thou reiectest not strangers, if that they be poore, and thou hast habilie to helpe their neede. The summe is, they which are liberall to their kinsfolkes and freindes, but are hard to the poore, are worthy of no prayse: because they exercise no charitie, but prouide onely for their owne gaine and ambition. But Christ speaketh to his hoast by name, whom hee saw was giuen too much to sumptuousnesse and to dainties, and so to get prayse and fauour of rich men, so that he smally regarded the poore. So vnder the perfon of this one man, are all they reprobud, which ambitiously spend those things they haue, either for their owne glory, or to get like recompence: and yet they will bestow nothing vpon the poore, as if they were afraid, that what soeuer they bestowed freely, were lost. Therefore Christ sayth that they are blessed, which are liberall with out hope of earthly rewarde: for it is euident that they haue regard to God. But there is no cause why they set theregard of profit before their eyes, or which desire the prayse of the people, should looke for any reward from God.

  4. Again, he sent forth other seruants, saying, tel the which are bidden: behold I haue prepared my dinner, mine oxen and my fatlings are killed, & all things are ready: come vnto the marriage.
  5. But they made light of it, and went their wayes, one to his Farme, and another about his marchandise.
  6. And the remnant tooke his seruants and intreated them sharply, and slew them.
  7. But when the king heard it, he was wroth, and sent forth his warriours, & destroyed those murtherers, and burnt vp their citie.
  8. Then said he to his seruants. Truly the wedding is prepared: but they which were bidden, were not worthy.
  9. Goe yee therefore out into the high wayes, and as many as yee finde, bid them to the marriage.
  10. So those seruants went out into the high wayes and gathered together all that euer they found, both good & bad so the wedding was furnished with guests

Luke 14.

15. Now, when one of them that sate at table, heard those things, he said vnto him: Blessed is hee that eateth bread in the kingdom of god
16. Then sayd he to him: a certaineman made a greate supper, and bade many.
17. And sent his seruant at supper time to say to them that were bidden, Come: for all thinges are now readie.
18. But they all with one consens began to make excuse: The first sayd vnto him, I haue bought a Farme, and I must goe out and see it: I pray thee haue me excused.
19. And another sayd, I haue bought five yooke of oxen, and I goe to prooue them, I pray thee haue me excused.
20. And another sayde, I haue married a wife, and therefore I can not come.
21. So that seruant returned, & shewed his master these things. Then was the good manne of the house angrie, and sayde to his seruant: Goe out quickly into the places and streetes of the citie, and bring in hither the poore and the maimed, and the halfe, and the blinde.

- 11. Then the king came in, to see the guests, and saw there a man, which had not on a wedding garment.
- 12. And he said vnto him: friend, how camest thou in hither, & hast not on a wedding garment? And he was speechlesse.
- 13. Then said the king to the seruants: Binde him hand and foote: take him away, and cast him into utter darkenes: there shall bee weeping and gnashing of teeth.
- 14. For many are called, but few are chosen.

- 22. And the seruant said: Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is roume.
- 23. Then the maister sayd to the seruant: Goe out into the high wayes and hedges, and compell them to come in, that my house may bee filled.
- 24. For I say vnto you, that none of those men which were bidden, shall tast of my supper.

1. Then Iesus answered. Though Matthew rehearse this parable amongst other Sermons made by Christe about the last Passeouer: yet because hee appoynteth no time, and that Luke expressly affirmeth that he spake this when he sat at the Pharises table, it seemeth best to follow this order. Also, because the purpose of Matthew was to shewe for what cause the Scribes were kindled with extreme madnesse amongst other his odious Sermons he set downe this also, and brought it into that course, neglecting the order of the time. This history set downe by Luke, is to bee noted, that when one of the guesstes hadde sayde, that they are blessed which eate bread in the kingdome of God, Christ tooke occasion therby to reprove the vnthankfulness of the Iewes. And though it bee scarce credible that the Pharises guest and friend should breake out into these wordes, of an earnest affection of godlinesse: yet it seemeth not to me to be spoken in scorne or iest: but as men touched with a small faith, & not openly wicked, doe without regarde speake amongst their cuppes, of eternall life: so I thinke that this man cast out this speach of the blessednesse to come, that he againe might gather somewhat from Christ. And his words do declare that he as yet faouered nothing, but that which was grosse and earthly. For he vseth not the phrase, to eate bread Metaphorically, for the enioying of the eternall glory: but he seemeth to dream I know not of what state replenished with prosperous abundance of all things. Yet the meaning is, that they are happy which eate the bread of God, after he hath gathered his children into his kingdome.

2. The kingdome of heauen is like. As that Spartane sayd in times past, that the Athenians knew what things were right, but would not doe them: so Christe here reprooueth the Iewes, that they coulde speake many notable wordes of the kingdome of God: but when God calleth them louingly and gently vnto him, they contemptuously refuse his grace. And it is not to bee doubted but that hee pincheth the Iewes by name, as shall better appeare somewhat after. But Mathew differeth from Luke in this, that he setteth downe many circumstances, when the other doth summarily only propose the matter it selfe. So Mat. sayth that a king prepared a mariage supper for his sonne. Luke doth simply make mention of a feast. He maketh mention of many seruants, this speaketh not but of one. He noteth many sendings, this but onely one. He sayth that some of the seruantes were beaten or slaine, this speaketh onely of the contempt.

Lastly, hee reporteth that hee was cast out, which came into the feast without his marriage garment, of whome there is no mention in Luke. But wee haue other where noted also the like difference, when as Matthew hath bene more plentifull and large in entreating the same matter. But in the summe they agree very well, that when God had vouchsafed a peculiar honour to the Iewes, preparing as it were a banquetting boarde for them, they despised the honour offered them. That many interpreters doe apply the marriage of the kings sonne to this, that Christe was the end of the lawe, and that God had not regard to any other purpose, in his couenant, then that hee might set him ouer his people, and might ioyne his Church to him in a holy band of spirituall mariage, I doe willingly embrace and allow. And that hee sayeth that his seruants were sent out to call them that were bidden, in these words he noteth a double grace of God: to witte that hee preferred the Iewes before other nations, then that hee reuealed vnto them their adoption by the Prophets. For hee alludeth to the vsuall manner of menne, which making mariage feastes, doe write downe a catalogue of them, whom they woulde haue for their guesstes: then they bid them by their seruants. So God chose the Iewes before all others, as though they should be his familiar friendes: then he calleth them by his Prophets, that they might be partakers of the promised redemption, which was to bee feasted at the mariage. And though they which were first called, liued not vnto the comming of Christe: yet we know that the saluation was proposed in cōmon to all, wherof they were deprivied by their vnthankfulnesse and malice: for that people wickedly despised the calling of God from the beginning.

4. Again hee sent forth others. Hee speaketh so, as if they were the same menne, because it was one body of the people. But the meaning is, when that happy and ioyfull day of redemption drewe neare, they were warned that they might be ready in time: for the time was appointed them long before. And now Christ sayeth that they were called at the very poynt of the time, that they might hast to come. For the first calling whereof he maketh mention, comprehendeth all the former Prophesies to the preaching of the Gospell. And though that people hadde ragged against the Prophets, yet hee accuseth the olde people onely of pride and contempt, because their fury increaseth with the time, which at length was powred with all violence vpon Christ and the Apostles. But hee sayth that the seruants which were sent last, euen at supper time, were sharply entreated and slaine: so when as outrageous crueltie was ioyned to the proude reiecting of the grace, that people brake out into the extreamest sinnes. Yet he layeth not this offence vpon them all together: for in the last calling which was by the Gospell, the grace of God was partly reiected by carelesse contemners, & partly reiected furiously by hypocrits. And so commeth commonly to passe, that the more God calleth the wicked to saluation, the more they brake out against him. Now that part of doctrine is to be entreated which is both in Matthew and Luke: to wit, that one went to his farme, another to his husbandrie: or as Luke reporteth, one excused himselfe that he had married a wife, an other hadde bought a Farme, an other had bought five yoake of oxen. By these words Christ declareth that the Iewes were so giuen to the worlde and earthly things, that none of them had leasure to come to God. As while the cares of the world doe doe hold vs bound, they are so many allurements to withdraw vs from the kingdome of heauen. But it is a vile and a shamefull matter, that men created for the heauenly life, should as beastes be caried to transitory things. but this disease is spread euery where, so that one scarce of a hundred, preferreth the kingdome of God before vaine riches, or other commodities, And though all haue not the same disease, yet euery one is caried by his owne couetousnes into a contrary course: so it commeth to passe that men run out of order hither and thither. Furthermore, it is to be noted that prophane men make shew of honest pretences, for the refusing of the grace of God, as though their sloth were to be excused, which applying themselves to the affaires of this present life, doe little esteeme the heauenly inheritance. But we see that Christ, that hee might draw vs from such delights, teacheth that no man should thinke with himselfe that hee hath profited any thing, while they entangle themselves with these earthly hinderances. Nay, the fault of men is doubled, while they hinder themselves with things which are otherwise lawfull, by the which they ought rather to be holpen. For to what ende doth God grant vs the commodities of this present life, but that he might allure vs vnto him? but euery man is so farre from being holpe so by the benefits of God, that he should aspire to heauen, that the holy mariages, the fields, and the other riches, are so many snares which do hold men bound to the earth.

7. But when the king heard it Mathew only maketh mention of this punishment. For in Luke there is no word spoken of iniurie done to the seruants. They both say this, that they were excluded & deprived from the honor of the feast, which came not at the time appointed. And this doctrine is also common to vs, for the same destruction which Christ pronounceth against the Iewes, remaineth for all those wicked ones, which doe violently rise against the ministers of the Gospell. And they which are withdrawn with earthly cares, so that they regard not the calling of God, al these as famished men, shal at length miserably waite away for want. Therefore so oft as he calleth vs, let vs be ready and glad to follow.

9 Goe ye therefore out into the high wayes. After he hath shewed them to bee vnworthy of the grace of God, which doe proudly refuse the same offered vnto them, now he sayth others shall be placed in their roome, and euen the most base and contemptible of the common people. And heere is the calling of the Gentiles described, which should prouoke the Iewes to iea'ousie, as it is sayd in the song of Moses, Deut. 32. 21. They haue moued mee to iea'ousie with those which are no Gods: and I againe will moue them to iea'ousie, with those which are no people, I will prouoke them to anger wth a foolish nation. Because they were first cholen, they imagined that his grace was so tied to them as if God coule not be without them, and it is knowne how proudly they despised all others. Therefore vpon a graunt hee compareth the Gentiles to beggers, blinde and lame. And hee sayth they are called out of the hedges and high wayes as forenners and strangers: and yet hee affirmeth that they should be placed in the roome despised by the friendes and neighbours. So that which was more darkely forespoken of by the Prophets, of erecting a new Church, he setteth downe more plainly. And certainly this reproofe was the heape of the vengeance of God, Romanes 11. 17. that God cutting them off, hath grafted the wilde branches into the roote of the Oliue, & by casting the out, he receiue the polluted and filthy Gentiles into his owne house. If that hee spared not the naturall branches then, the same vengeance shall fall on vs now, if wee answere not our calling. And the supper shall not bee lost, which was prepared for vs, but God will procure himselfe other gueses.

L V K. 23. Compell them to come in. This is as much as if the housholder should command to bring in the beggers with hard words, & to leaue out none of the worst of the. In which words Christ delareth, that God will rather gather together all the offscourings of the world, then that he would admit those vthankfull men to his table. Yet he seemeth to allude to the maner of the calling of the gospel, because the grace of God is not simply proposed vnto vs, but to the doctrine, there are also added spurres of exhortations, in which the wonderfull goodnes of God is seene, who when hee seeth vs that are called to him, to bee slouthfull, he solliciteth vs importunately from slouthfulnesse: and he doth not onely stirre vs with exhortations, but also he compelleth vs by threatnes to come to him. Yet I doe not disallow that Augustine vsed this testimonie very often against the Donatists, that hee might proue that the disobedient and rebellious might be lawfully compelled by the Edictes of godly princes, to the worship of the true God, and to the vnitie of faith: for though faith is voluntary, yet we see their stubbernesse may well be tamed by these meanes, which obey not except they be compelled.

M A T. 11. Then the king came to see the gueses. Nowe Christ doth not heere reprove the Iewes, for despising wickedly the grace and calling of God: but hee forewarneth them betime, which were to bee placed in their roume, least when God should vouchsafe to make them partakers of his owne table, they should defile the holy mariages with their filthines. Therefore he hath taught hitherto that the Iewes for their wicked contempt, should bee deprived of that speciall priuledge of honor: and that he would call of the prophane & reiected Gentiles, which should succede in their place. And now he declareth that of this number also they shall bee cast out, which doe defile the church: for when God calleth all men generally by the gospel, many vnclane & filthy men thrust in, which though they occupy a place for a time amongst others, when God ouerseeeth his gueses, they are cast out of doores, and throwne to punishment. The summe is. Not all they which shall once enter into the church, shall bee partakers of the heavenly life, but they which shall be found attired fit for the heavenly palace. Also there is a contention in vain about the mariage garmēt, whether it should be faith, or a holy and godly life: for neither faith can be seperated from good works, & good works do not proceede but from faith. But this only was the meaning of Christ, that we are called of the Lord, of this condition, that we might be renewed in spirit according to his image, & that we should therefore alwaies remaine at his house, that the old man with his pollutions should be put off, & that we should meditate a new life, that the apparell might answere to so holy a calling. But it is demanded how it should agree that the begger should be punished with so seuer a punishmēt, because he brought not a mariage garmēt: as though it were a new thing for those wretches which seeke their liuing in the high waies to be torne and deformed? I answere, heere is not declared whence that garment should haue bin had: for whomsoeuer the Lord calleth, he also apparelleth, leth, & fulfilleth all things in vs, as is saide by Ezechiel, 16. 7. when God founde nothing in vs, but miserable nakednesse, & filthy spots, he hath cloathed vs with excellent ornaments. We know also that the image of God is not otherwise repayed in vs, but whē we put on Christ. Therefore christ doth not say, that those poore men shall be cast out, which bring not a precious garment fetched out of their owne chest, but they which are found in their sins, when God shall come to examine his guests. And the conclusion doth shew the ende of the parable, there are few chosen, though many are called. Whereby we gather that all the particular clauses of the same are not to be searched subtilly: for Christ said not before, that the greater part should be cast out, but only maketh mentiō of one: but here we heare, that of a great nūber few are retained. And certainly, though at this day more are gathered into the church by the voyce of the Gospell, then were in times past by the law, yet very few approue their faith by newnes of life. Wherefore let vs not flatter our selues with a vaine title of faith, but let euery mā diligētly examine himselfe, that in the last choise, he may be accounted amongst the lawful guests. For as Paul admonisheth, 2. Tim. 2. 19. 20. the vessels in the house of the Lord, are not all of one sort, therefore let euery one that calleth on the name of the Lord depart frō iniquity. I do not here dispute further of the eternall election of God, because the words of Christ tend not to any other purpose, then that the outward profession of faith sufficeth not, that God should acknowledge for his, whofoeuer seeme to haue giuen their name to his calling.

Luke. 16.

1. And he said also vnto his disciples: There was a certaine rich manne, which had a steward, and hee was accused vnto him, that he wasted his goods.
2. And he called him, and said thus vnto him: How is it that I heare this of thee? Giue an account of thy stewardship, for thou maiest be no longer steward.
3. Then the steward sayde within himselfe: what shall I do: for my maister will take from me the stewardship? I cannot dig, & to beg I am ashamed. 4. I know what I will do, that whē I am put out of the stewardship, they may receiue me into their houses. 5. Then cald he euery one of his masters debtors, and said vnto the first. How much owest thou vnto my master? 6. And he said, an 100. measures of oyle. & he said to him: take thy writing, & sit down quickly, & write 50. 7. Then saide hee to another. How much owest thou? And he said an 100. measures of wheat. Then he said to him. Take thy writing, & write foure score.
8. And the Lord commended the vnjust steward, because hee had done wisely: wherefore the children of this world, are in their generatiō, wiser thē the childrē of light.
9. And I say vnto you, make you friendes of the riches of iniquity, that when yee shall want, they may receiue you into euerlasting habitations.
10. Hee that is faithfull in the least, hee is also faith-full in much: and he that is vniust in the least, is vniust also in much.

11. If then ye haue not beene faithfull in wicked riches, who will trust you in the true treasure?

12. And if yee haue not beene faithfull in an other mans goods, who will giue you that which is yours?

Somewhat after.

14. All these things heard the Pharises also which were couetous, and they mocked him.

15. Then he sayd vnto them, yee are they which iustifie your selues before men: but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly esteemed among men, is abomination in the sight of God.

The summe of this Parable is, that wee should deale louingly & kindly with our neighbours, that when we shall come to the tribunall seat of God, the fruite of our liberalitie may returne vpon vs. And though the similitude seeme to be hard and far fetched: Yet the end sheweth that christ had no other purpose in it. And hereby we perceiue that they apply themselves too fondly, which in parables do scrupulously sift out all periculer poyntes. For Christe comāndeth not here by liberall gifts to redeeme, deceits, thefts, prodigall spending & other offences of an euill stewardship: but when as God hath made vs stewards to bestow all those goodes which he giueth vnto vs: here is a meane prescribed vnto vs, which in time when the count day shall come, shall ease some from extreme rigor. For they which imagin that almes shall make a recōpence for a luxurious & dissolute life, do not sufficiētly cōsider, that this is first enioynd to vs, that we should liue soberly & temperately: then that waters should flow vnto vs out of a pure fountaine. It is certaine that no man is so thrifty, which shall not sometime lose the goods laid vp with him: & therefore euen they which apply themselves to the greatest sparing, are not altozether free from euill bestowing. Adde also, that there are manifolde abuses of the gifts of God, so that some comit offence an other way, & I deny not, but as we finde our selues guiltye of euil bestowing: so this should the rather stirre vs vp to the duties of charity. But we ought to see an other end before vs, then that wee should by paying the price of redemption escape the iudgemēt of God. to wit, that liberality being wel & holily bestowed, should only bridle and correct superfluous expences: then, that our kindnes towards the brethren, might prouoke the mercy of God towards vs. Wherefore the Lord doth not here shew his disciples a way to escape, whereby they might deliuei themselves from guiltines, when the heauenly iudge shall aske an account of the, but he warneth them to take heed betime, least they beare the punishmēt of their cruelty, if they be taken wastfully spoyling the blessings of God, no way applying them to good vse. For this is alwayes to be holden: What measure any man meateh to others, it shall be measured to him againe, Matth. 7. 2.

8. The Lord commended. It is here also euen to see that he shall do very fondly, that shall stand vpon each particular poyntes. For sith, that to giue of an other mans goods, is nothing praye worthy, who would beare it with a patient mind to be spoyled by a wicked varlet, that at his pleasure should releasē his debtes?

This

This certainly were a token of too grosse blockishnesse, that any manne should see part of his substance spoyled, and to allow that the rest shoulde bee stolne from him, and giuen to others. But this was the only purpose of Christ, which he addeth presently after, that men prophane and giuen to the worlde are wiser and wariier in looking to the accountes of this transitory life, then the children of God are carefull of the heauenly and eternall life, or bent to the studie and meditation of the same. For, by this comparison he vpbraydeth vs of our slouthfulnesse beyond all reason, that at least we haue not like care to provide for that to come, which prophane men haue in providing for themselves in this world. For how vile a thing is it, that the children of light, in whom God shineth by his spirit and his word, should slow and neglect the hope of eternall blessednes offered them, when as worldly men are so greedily caried to their commodities, and are so prouident and wise about the same? Hereby we gather that the wisdom of the spirite and of the flesh are not compared together (which could not be without the reproofe of God himselfe) but that the faithfull are onely stirred vpe more willingly to consider those things, which appertaine to the life to come, and that they should not shut their eyes at the light of the Gospell, when they see blinde menne to see better in the darke then they. And truly it behooueth them to bee the more affected, when they see the children of the world to see longe before for this life, which is transitory, and which passeth away in a moment.

9. Make you friends. As Christe commaunded not heretofore to offer sacrifices to God of things stolne: so now hee meaneth not, that eyther excusers or patrons shoulde bee sought for, which should hide and defend vs vnder their defence: but he teacheth that by bestowing louingly, that the fauour of God is obtained, who promiseth that he likewise will be mercifull to them that are mercifull and kinde. But very fondly and absurdly doe they reason, which doe gather of this, that we are holpen by the prayers and suites of them that are dead: for, so whatsoeuer is bestowed vpon the vnworthy, should be lost. But the wickednesse of the men hinder not, but that the Lord writeth vpe in his tables whatsoeuer we bestow vpon the poore. Therefore the Lord hath not regard to the persons, but to the worke it selfe, so that our louing kindnesse shall answere vs before God, yea, though it fall vpon vnthankfull men. But so it seemeth to signifie, that eternall life is giuen as a recompence to our deserts. I answer, it appeareth plainly enough by the text, that hee speaketh after the manner of men, to wit, as hee which is exalted by fauour and riches, if hee get himselfe friendes in his prosperous estate, he hath when he falleth into aduersitic, by whom he shall bee sustained: so our kindnes shall bee to vs a conuenient refuge: because whatsoeuer any man shall bestow liberally vpon his neighbours, the Lord acknowledgeth the same, as bestowed vpon himselfe.

When yee shall want. By this woorde hee noteth the time of death, and hee warneth vs that the time of our stewardshippe shall bee but thorte. For whereof cometh it to passe, that the greater parte sleepe in their riches, many waste that they haue in prodigall expences, others by hoarding it doe maliciously defraude themselves and others, but because they being deceiued with a false imagination of along life, doe flatter themselves.

in securitie? Hee calleth them the riches of iniquitie, that hee might make vs to suspecte riches, because that for the most part they entangle their owners in iniquitie. For though they are not euill of themselves: yet because they are seldome gotten without deceite or violence, or other vnlawfull meanes, & are also rarely possessed and kept without pride or luxuriousnesse, or some other wicked affection, Christe causeth vs worthily to suspecte them, as in an other place he also calleth them thornes. Matth. 13. 22. Yet here seemeth to bee vnderstood an opposition, as if he should haue sayd, riches which otherwise defile the owners through the wicked abuse, and are almost the snares of sinnes, must be turned to a contrary end, that they might get vs fauour. Furthermore, that must be remembred, which I sayd before, that God desireth not a sacrifice of a pray vniustly gotten, as if he should be a companion of theeues: and therefore it is rather an admonition to the faithfull, that they should preserue themselves free from iniquitie.

10. Hee that is faithfull in the least. They are prouerbiall sentences gathered of the common vse and experience: and therefore it sufficeth that they bee true for the most part. For it shall befall sometimes, that the deceiuer not accounting of a small gaine, shall shew forth his wickednes in a great matter: yea, & many in small matters vnder pretence of simplicitie do hunt after great gaine: as Leui saith, fraud getteth credit in small matters, that when it is worthy the labour, it may deceiue for a greater reward. Yet not withstanding the saying of Christ is not false: because in prouerbes, as I sayd, we follow that which is most commonly vsed. Christ therefore exhorteth his disciples, that by dealing faithfully in small matters, they might accustome themselves to bee faithfull in the greatest matters. Then he applyeth this doctrine to the right dispensing of spirituall graces, which though the world esteeme not according to the value: yet it is certaine that they farre excell the transitory riches of the world. And hee teacheth that they are vnmeete, that God should commit the incomparable treasure of his Gospell, and of like gifts to them, which deale naughtily and vnfaithfully in matters of lesse value, as are the fleeting riches of the world. Therefore there is included in these wordes a secret threatning, that it is to be feared, least for the abuse of the earthly stewardshippe, wee should bee depriued of the heauenly giftes. In which sence the heauenly blessednesse is opposed against riches, but as a perfectte and perpetuall good thing against a shadow and transitory matter.

11. If yce be not faithfull in an other mans goods. Hee calleth that an other mans, which is without man: for God doth not giue vs riches of this condition, that we should be tyed vnto them: but so hee made vs stewardes of them, least they should hold vs bound in their bandes. And it cannot be, that mindes free and at liberty should dwell in heaven, except they account what soeuer is in the world to belong to others. And hee maketh the spirituall riches, which belong to the life to come to be ours: because the enjoying of them is eternall. But now hee vseth an other similitude, it is not to bee hoped that wee should vse our owne goodes well and moderately, if we deale yll and vnfaithfully with other mens. For menne vse more carelesly to abuse their owne, and they graunt themselves more liberty in loosing them: because they are not affrayde that any man should reprove them. But they are more wary and more fearefull of that, which is layd vp with them, or committed to thē or lent to them, of which things there must an account be giuen againe. Therefore we vnderstand the meaning of Christ, that they will be but euill keepers of spirituall giftes, which doe dispose the earthly goods euill. After there is a sentence set downe, that no man can serue God and riches, which I haue expounded in the sixt chapter of Mat. And let the readers see there what this word Mammon significth.

14. All these things heard the Pharisees, They which thinke that the Pharisees scorned Christ, because he taught in common and rude speech, and gloried not in swelling words, do not sufficiently consider Lukes wordes. I grant that the doctrine of the Gospell seemeth very contemptible to proude and disdainfull men. But Luke expressly declareth that Christ was therefore scorned of them, because they were couetous. For they being thoroughly perswaded and settled in this, that they were blessed, which were rich, and therefore that there was not a better thing, then to increase their substance by any meanes, and couetously to hold those gotten goods. whatsoeuer Christ should say to the contrary, they reiected as absurd paradoxes. And certainly, whosoeuer speaketh of despising riches or giuing to the poore, seemeth to the couetous to meane deceit. That saying of Horace is well known, the people hisseth me, but I reioyce to my selfe. If that they which are condemned in the iudgement of all men, doe yet please themselues, how much more shall they scorn as at a fable, this wisdom of Christ which is so farre from the minde of the common sort? Yet this I doubt not but that the Pharisees pretended some other colour, that they might merily icst at his doctrine against their sinne. Yet it is to be noted what moued them to it: for this disease raigned almost alwayes in the world, that the greater part of mē apply themselues to scorne that which agreeth not to their manners. Heereof commeth it, that the word of God is in danger of so many reprooves, taunts, & furious scornes: because euery man striueth for the defence of their owne sins, and they thinke with their owne iesting speeches, as with a cloud to couer and hide their owne offence.

15. Yee are they which iustifie your selues. Wee see that Christ giueth no place to their pride, but constantly defendeth the authoritie of his doctrine against their scornes: which all ministers of the Gospell must also do, by setting the terrible iudgement of God against wicked contemners. And hee affirmeth that the coloured deceit, wherewith they deceiue the eyes of men, shal not profite them any thing in the iudgement of God: they would not bee thought in their scornings, that they defended their couetousnes: but Christ teacheth that this venome brake out of their hidden lyle. As if any man should say to the horned Bishops at this day, that they are not such enemies to the Gospel, because their odious dealings are too sharply pricked. And he sayth, that they think it inough if they appeare honest to men, and that they may set themselues out with a feigned holines: but from God, who is the searcher of the hearts, they cannot hide those sinnes, which they hide from the world. Where is also to bee noted the difference betweene the iudgments of God and of men: for where men are pleased with outward shewes, nothing is approoued at the iudgement seate of God, but a sincere heart.

There

There followeth a notable sentence, what soeuer is rightly esteemed among men, is abhominatio in the sight of God: not that God refuseth the vertues, whose praise he hath imprinted in the hearts of men: but because God abhorreth whatsoeuer man is tolleth of his owne iudgement, whereby it appeareth how much all fained worshippings are to be accounted of, which the worlde hath framed of her owne deuce. For though they please the iauenters, Christ sayth, they are not onely vaine, and not to bee accounted of before God, but also abhominable.

Luke. 16.

19. There was a certaine rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared well and delicately euery day.
20. Also there was a certaine begger, named LAZARUS, which was layd at his gate full of sores.
21. And desired to bee refreshed with the crumms that fell from the rich mans table: yea, and the dogs came & licked his sores.
22. And it was so, that the begger died, and was carried by the Angels into Abrahams bosome. The rich man also dyed, and was buried:
23. And being in hell in torments, he lift vp his eyes, and saw Abraham a far off, and LAZARUS in his bosome.
24. Then hee cryed, and sayd, Father Abraham, haue mercy on me, and send LAZARUS, that hee may dippe the tip of his finger in water, and coole my tongue: for I am tormented in this flame.
25. But Abraham sayde, Sonne, remember that thou in thy life time receiuedst thy pleasures, and likewise LAZARUS paines: now therefore is hee comforted, and thou art tormented.
26. Besides all this, betweene you and vs there is a great gulfe set, so that they which would goe from hence to you cannot, neither can they come from thence to vs.
27. Then hee sayd, I pray thee therefore father, that thou wouldest send him to my fathers house.
28. (For I haue five brethren) that he may testifie vnto them, least they also come vnto this place of torment.
29. Abraham sayd vnto him, they haue Moses and the Prophets: let them heare them.
30. And he sayd, nay, father Abraham: but if one come from the dead, they would amend their liues.
31. Then he sayd vnto him, if they heare not Moses & the Prophets, neither will they be perswaded, though one should rise from the dead againe.

Though

Though Luke hath set downe some other things betweene, yet it is not to be doubted, but that he confirmeth the former sermon by this example. For he sheweth what portion remaineth for the, which hauing no regard of the poore, do wholly wast themselues in dainty delicacies: which being giuen to surfeitings and pleasures, doe suffer their neighbours to be in miserable hunger: yea, they famish them cruelly, whom they hauing abilitie ought to helpe. And though it seeme to some to be but a simple parable: yet, because the name of Lazarus is set downe, I rather thinke it to be the report of a matter done. But in that matter there is small importance, so that the readers do hold the summe of the doctrine. First, the rich man is brought in, cladde with purple and fine linnen, and filling himselfe with pleasant deinties euery day. In which wordes is noted the delicate life, filled with pleasure and with pompes. Not that all finenes & gorgeousnes of apparell of it selfe displeaseth God, or that all delicacie of meates were damnable: but because it seldome falleth out, that temperance is kept in these things. For he wich desireth gorgeousnes in newe garments, shall as with prouocations encrease lust: & it can scarcely be otherwise, but that he shuld throw himselfe into intemperancy, which delighteth in deinties, & in tables delicately filled. Yet his cruelty is especially condemned, in that hee suffered Lazarus poore, and full of sores to lie without at the gate. For Christ set together these contraries, an ongt themselues. that the rich manne giuen to belly cheare and pompes, as a gulfe not to be filled, shoulde deuour within great heapes: but hee was not touched with the want and miseries of Lazarus, but wittingly and willingly suffered him to starue with hunger, colde, and stinch of sores. And in this maner doth Ezech. 16, 49. accuse Sodom, that in fulnes of bread & wine, she stretched not forth her hand to the poore. It is well knowne that the inhabitants of the East were woont to vse most fine linen for gorgeousnes & pompe: which maner the sacrificing Papistes counterfeted in their garmentes, which they call surpluses.

21. And the dogges came. The hard and yron cruelty of the rich man was sufficiently condemned before, in that so miserable a spectacle could not moue him to compassion. For, if there hadde beene any droppe of humanitie in him, he should haue commaunded at the leaste, that some of the fragments of his kitchen should haue beene giuen to the manne in that misery. But here was a heape of wicked and more then beastly cruelty, now not to learne mercy of the dogges. Neither is there any doubt, but that these dogges were directed by the secrete counsell of God, to condemne him by their example. And Christ heere alleadgeth them as a testimonie to reprove the cursed hardnesse of the manne. For, what is more woonderfull, then that dogges shoulde haue care of a manne, which is neglected by his neighbour? nay, hee woulde not giue the crummes of his bread to this hungry manne, to whome the dogs lent their tongues to helpe to heale him. Therefore as oft as either strangers or bruit beasts doe take our rourmes, and doe that which wee shoulde rather haue done, lette vs know that there are so many witnesses and iudges appoynted by God against vs, which shall the more discouer our faulte.

22. And it was so that the begger died. Christe declareth heere how much the estate of them both was chaunged by death. Death was common to them

them both: but for the dead to be caried by the angels into Abrahams bosome, is a felicitie more to be desired then all kingdomes. And to bee condemned to eternall torment, is a horrible thing, & to be redeemed with a hundred lues, if it were possible. And in the person of Lazarus there is a notable instruction giuen vs, that wee should not thinke them to be cursed before God, which doe painefully leade a life filled with troubles through continuall sorrowes. For the grace of God was so hid in him, and oppressed with the deformity of the crosse, and reprobues, that the wisdome of the flesh coulede apprehend nothing but the curse: but we see howe precious a soule lay hidde in a filthy and rotten body, which is caryed by the Angelles into a blessed life. Wherefore it hurt him nothing: as one forsaken and despyed to be without all helpe & comfort of man, vppon whome departing out of the prison of the fleshe, the heauenly spirites vouchsafed to bee ready present to helpe. Againe, in the rich manne is seene, as in a notable glasse, howe that temporall felicitie, which endeth with eternall destruction is not to be desired. Yet it is to be noted that Christ maketh expresse mention of the buriell of the rich manne, what became of Lazarus he concealeth: not that his body lay in the open fieldes, as cast out to wilde beafts: but because it was without regarde and honour cast into a pitte (for this may easily bee gathered by the rest, that they woulde bestow no more labour about him being dead, then they did cost of him being aliue) on the other part the rich manne was sumptuously buried according to his riches, hee hath yet a remnant of his former pride. For in this behalfe wee see prophane menne struing after a sorte against nature, in that in the glory of their buryall and funerall solemnities, they desire to haue shewes remaining of their estate: but howe foolish and ridiculous this their ambition is, their soules in hell can witnesse. That hee sayeth Lazarus was caryed, it is a figuratiue speech: for because the soule is the better part of manne, it doeth well challenge to it selfe the name of the whole. And Christe assigneth this office to the Angels not in vaine, which we know are giuen as ministers to the faithfull, to employ their studies and labours for their saluation.

Into Abrahams bosome. To reporte howe diuersly many interpreters of the Scripture haue defined of the bosome of Abraham, it is not needfull, nor in my iudgement profitable. It shall suffice to hold that which the readers well exercised in the scriptures doe acknowledge to bee the naturall meaning. For, as Abraham is therefore called the father of the faithfull: because the couenant of eternall life was first laide vppe with him, that being kept in faithfull custody, hee shoulde deliuer it first to his sonnes, then by hande to all the Gentiles, and whosoeuer are heires of the same promise, are called the sonnes of Abraham: so after death they are saide to be gathered into his bosome: because they receiue the fruit of the same faith with him.

It is a Metaphor taken of a Father, into whose bosome, as it were, the children doe come together, when they come home at the eueing from their daily labours. Therefore, sith the children of GOD doe trauayle as Pylgrimes scattered in the woorld, as in this present race they followe the sayth of Abraham their Father, so departing they goe into that blessed rest, wherein he looketh for them. Neither is it necessary to imagine any certaine place: but that gathering of the Saints together is only noted, that the faithfull might knowe indeede that they warre not in vaine vnder the conduct of the faith of Abraham: for they inioy the same place in heauen.

If it be demaunded whether the godly at this day doe after death inioy the same estate, or whether Christ by his resurrection shoulde open his owne bosome, wherein aswell Abraham himselte, as all the other godly shoulde rest: I answere breifly, as the grace of G O D shonemore clearely vnto vs by the Gospell, and Christ the very Sonne of righteoufnesse by his comming brought vs saluation, which was granted to the fathers in times past, to behold a faire off vnder darke shadowes: so it is not to bee doubted, but that the dead came neerer to the full fruition of the heauenly life. Yet it is to bee noted, that the glory of immortalitie is deferred vnto the last day of the resurrection. In respect of the name, that quiet hauen, which receiueth the faithfull out of the nauigation of this present life, may bee called aswell the bosome of Abraham, as of Christ. But because wee are growne higher then the father vnder the lawe, this distinction is the aptlier noted: if wee the members of Christe should bee sayd to bee gathered to their head: and as the light of the sunne at his rising darkeneth all the starres, so the metaphor of Abrahams bosome should then cease. Yet by this phrase of speech, which Christ vseth, it may bee gathered, that the fathers vnder the lawe embraced by faith (while they liued) the inheritance of the heauenly life whercinto they were receiued at their death.

23. And being in hell in tormentes, he list vpp his eyes. Although Christ telleth a hystorie, yet he describeth spirituall things by figures, which heeknew to bee fit for our capacitie. For soules neither haue fingers nor eyes, neither are thirsty neyther haue they mutuall speach amongst themselues, as is here described betweene Abraham and the glutton. But the Lorde heere paynteth out a table, which representeth the estate of the life to come, according to the measure of our vnderstanding. But the summe is, that the soules of the faithfull, when they doe goe out of the body, doe lead a ioyfull and a blessed life out of the worlde: and that there are horrible tormentes prepared for the reprobate, which can no more be conceaued in our mindes, then can the great glory of the heauens. For as we onely in very small measure, to wit, as wee are lightened by the spirite of God, do taste by hope the glory promised to vs, which farre exceedeth all our senses: so let it suffice that the incomprehensible vengeance of God, which remaineth for the wicked, be knowne darkely of vs: euen so as it is meete to strik a terror into vs. So the words of Christ doe giue a taste and a small knowledg of these things, and yet such as may suffice to bridle curiositie: to wit, that the wicked are cruelly tormented with the feeling of their owne misery, that they should desire some refreshing, yet all hope being taken away, they feele double torment: yea, and they are the more tormented, while they are inforced to remember their owne sinnes, and to compare the present blessednes of the faithfull with their owne miserable and damnable estate.

This was the purpose and ende of the description of this talke, as if this shoulde haue passed betweenthem, which haue no fellowship betweent themselves. In that also that the rich man calleth Abraham father, there is expressed an other torment of his, that now too late hee feeleth himselfe reiect&ed out of the number of the children of Abraham.

25 Sonne, remember. The name of sonne seemeth to be set downe in derision that it might bee a sharpe reproofe for to pinch the rich man, who gloried falsly in his life, that hee was one of the children of Abraham. For his mind is wounded as with the blow of a burning hot yron, while his hypocrisie and deceitfull trust is obiect&ed to him, and set before his eyes. And that he is sayd to be tormented in hell, because he receiued his pleasure in this world, may not so be taken, as if eternall destruction remayned for all them, which liue well and prosperously in the world: nay, as Augustine noted very wisely, the poore Lazarus is therefore caried into the bosome of rich Abraham, that we might know that riches shut the gate of the kingdome of heauen against no man: but that it is generally open to all men, which doe either vse their riches soberly, or doe beare their wants patiently. The onely meaning is, because hee being drunke with the inticements of this life, drowned himselfe in earthly delightes, and despised God and his kingdome, he now suffereth the punishmentes of his careles dealing. Therefore the pronounne thy, is very forcible: as if Abraham should haue sayd, when thou wert created to immortall life, and the law of God should haue list thee vp to meditate the heauenly life, thou being forgetfull of so excellent a lot, hadst rather be like a swine or a dogge: therefore thou receiuest iust reward for thy brutish pleasures. Againe, when it is sayd of Lazarus, that he receiued comfort, because he bore many miseries in the world, he should do very fondly, that should draw this to all men in misery, which haue receiued so litle profit by afflictions, that they shall rather end in extreame punishment: but the bearing of the crosse is praysed in Lazarus, which alwayes commeth of fayth, and of a sincere feare of God. For he which obstinately resisteth euils, and continueth as one vntamed in his wildnesse, deserueth not any prayse of patience, so that God shoulde recompence any comfort to him for his affliction. The summe therefore tendeth to this purpose, they which patiently beare the burden of affliction layd vpon them, and doe not stubbornly striue against the yoke and scourges of God, but through continuall troubles shall aspire to the hope of a better life, for them there is a quiet ioy layd vpin heauen after the time of their warfare is expired: but on the other side, for prophane despisers of God which gorge themselves in the pleasures of the flesh, and doe choake vp all studie of godlines with a certaine surfeiting of the minde, tormentes are prepared presently after death for them, which may shake away their vaine delightes. Further, it is to be remembered, that this comfort, which the children of God inioy, standeth in that, that beholding the crowne of glory prepared for them, they rest in a ioyfull waiting for the same. As againe the feeling of the iudgement to come, which they see readie for them, tormenteth the wicked.

26. Besides all this. In these wordes is noted a perpetuitie in the state of the life to come: as if it should haue beene sayd, the bondes, which distinguish the reprobate from the electe, can neuer bee broken. And so wee are warned to returne speedily into the way, while it is time, least we runne headlong into that deepe gulfe, whence wee cannot rise.

is spoken vnproperly, that the passage is shut, if any man woulde descend from heauen to hell: for it is certain that such desire neuer cometh in any of the godly

27. I pray thee therefore father. That hee might the better apply the history to our vse, hee proposeth the desire of the rich man, that Lazarus might goe warne his brethren yet aliuē. The Papists doe reason heere very fondly, while they would proue hence that the dead haue care of the liuing: then the which cauill nothing is more absurde. For by the same colour I will gather that the soules of the faithfull not content with their estate, haue a desire to goe to hell, if the great space hindered them not. If no man receiueth this mad fancie, there is no cause why the Papists should please themselues very much in that other deuise. Neither is it yet my purpose contentiously to dispute this matter either this way or that way: but I thought to note by the way with what vaine arguments they are lead, to imagine the dead to be intercessors to God for vs. Nowe I returne to the simple and plaine meaning of this place: Christe vnder the persons of the rich man and Abraham, admonisheth vs, that where there is a certaine rule deliuered vs to liue by, not to waite and looke when the dead shoulde arise to teach and to warne vs. For Moses and the Prophetes, when they yet liued, were so perfect teachers to the men of their age, that out of their writings, the same fruite may come to the posterities. When it was Gods will to teach vs by this meanes to liue well, there is no cause why the dead shoulde bee sent to bee witnesses of the rewardes or of the punishmentes of the life to come. Neyther shall their negligence bee excused, which flatter themselues vnder this pretence: because they knowe not what is done out of this worlde. Wee knowe that this wicked speach, or rather hoggish grunting doeth passe amongst prophane men, that they are fooles, which vexe themselues with a double care: because no messenger returned at any time from hell. Christe minding to take away such bewitchings of Sathan, calleth vs backe to the lawe and the Prophetes: according to that testimonie of Moses, Deut. 30. 12. Thou shalt not say after this, who shall ascende into heauen? or who shall descend into the deepe? or, who shall passe ouer the sea? The word is neere vnto thee, in thy mouth, and in thine hearte. They therefore which doe deride as fables those things, which the scripture testifieth of the iudgment to come, shall in time to come feele howe intollerable their wickednesse is, to discredit the holy Oracles of God. But Christe wakeneth his from this slouthfull disease, least they being deceiued with hope to escape punishment, shoulde let escape the time of repentance. And to this tendeth Abrahams answere: because God had sufficiently and thoroughly deliuered to his people the doctrine of saluation by Moses and the Prophetes, there wanteth not any thing else, but that all men should rest in the same. The wisedome of man is altogether infected with the wicked disease of curiositie: so the greater parte alwayes gapeth after reuelations. Nowe, because that nothing more displeaseth God, then that men should so desirously wander beyond their boundes to seeke the truth of Magicians and Southsayers, and to seeke after feigned Oracles after the manner of the Gentiles, which is forbidden, for the staying of which ytching, hee also promiseth to giue vnto them Prophets, of whom the people shoulde learne whatsoeuer shoulde bee profitable for their

their saluation, Deut. 18. 10. 18. If that the Prophets are sent to this ende, that God might keepe the people vnder the bridle of the worde. Hee which is not satisfied with this reason of doctrine, hath no desire to learne, but is moued with a wicked wantonnes: and therefore God complaineth that he is iniured when he alone is not heard from the liuing to the dead, Isa. 8. 19. This diuision which Abraham maketh of the word into the law and the Prophets, is referred to the time of the olde Testament. Now, when there is added a more full interpretation of the Gospell, if wee bee caried hither and thither with loathing of that doctrine, and briefly, if we suffer not our selues to be ruled by the word, our impietie is not to be borne with. Hereof it may be also gathered what assurance there is of Purgatory, and of such trifles of the Papistes, which hath no other ground but vpon dreames and visions.

30. Nay, father Abrahams. This is Profopopæia, as we haue said, which is rather set downe for the vnderstanding of them that liue, than for the care of the dead. For the doctrine of the law waxeth cold in the worlde, the propheties lye not regarded, and no man abideth to heare God speake after his owne order. Some desire that Angels should descend from heauen, others that the dead should come out of their graues: others would haue whatsoever they heare sanctified with newe miracles, others would haue voyces speake out of the ayre. But if God should yeelde to all their preposterous desires, they would profit nothing thereby: for God setteth down in his word whatsoever is profitable for vs to knowe, and the authoritie of this worde is testified and confirmed vnto vs by lawfull signes. Then faith dependeth not vpon miracles, nor vpon all sorts of miracles: but it is the peculiar gift of the spirit, and is grounded of the word of God. To conclude, it is the proper gift of God to draw vs vnto him, whose will it is to worke effectually by his word. Wherefore there is no hope that those meanes should profit vs, which do draw vs from the obedience of the word. I grant that flesh is not apter nor readier to any thing, then to hearken to vaine reuelations: and we see how they, which doe loath the scripture, do earnestly throw themselues into the snares of Sathan. Hereof sprang Necromancy and such like deceits, which the world doth not onely receiue with greedinesse: but also with a mad violence shee draweth the same vnto her. But Christ onely declareth heere, that they which are deafe & obstinate at the doctrine of the law, cannot be amended or brought to a better mind by the dead.

Luke. 16.

7. Who is it also of you that hauing a seruaunt, plo wing or feeding cattell, would say vnto him by & by, when he were come from the field, Goe, and sitte downe at table?

8. And would not rather say to him, dresse wherewith I may suppe, and girde thy selfe, and serue me till I haue eaten and drenke, & afterward eat thou and drinke thou.

2. Doth

9. Doth hee thanke that seruaunt, because hee did that which was commaunded vnto him? I trow not.

10. So likewise yee, when yee haue done all those thinges, which are commaunded you, say, we are vprofitable seruaunts: we haue done that which was our duty to doe.

The end of this parable is this, when as God challengeth all that wee haue to himselfe, as his owne proper right, and holdeth vs in bondage and seruice, whatsoeuer labour wee endeouour to employ in his seruice, yet he is not bound to vs by any desert: for sith wee are his, hee cannot owe vs any thing againe. Therefore hee proposeth the similitude of a seruaunte, who, after hee hath passed ouer the whole day in diligent and painefull labour, returning home in the euening, continueth his labours vntill hee hath done his duetie according to the pleasure of his maister. But Christ doeth not speake of hyred seruaunts, which serue vs at this day, but of those olde bound menne, whose estate and condition of life was such, that they should get nothing for themselves, but should be giuen to their maisters with all their labour, study, and endeouour euen vnto bloud. Christ teacheth that wee are bound and tyed to God with noe lesse bond of seruice: wherby he gathereth that he is no way bouid vnto vs. And the argument is from the lesse to the greater. For if that mortall man hath such power graunted him ouer manne, so that he may driue them night and day to continuall obedience, and yet can craue no meanes of mutuall recompence, as if he should be his debter: how much more shall it be lawful for God to require all the duties of our life, so farre as our power can reach, so that yet hee shall owe vs nothing at all? Therefore we see all them condemned of wicked arrogancy, which feigne themselves to deserue any thing at Gods handes, so that they should binde him to them: for there is no man, which would not willingly call God to accounte. Whereof the imagination of merites preuailed almost in all ages. But the saying of Christe is to bee noted, that we yeeld nothing to God of free will: for we are subiect to his power of this condition, that whatsoeuer is in vs, should be due to him. And there are two thinges to bee noted in this sentence, that our life, to the end of the race of the same, is wholly bounde to God: so that if any man shoulde employ a parte of the same in the seruice of God, it is not lawfull for him to couenant to liue idly the rest of his time: as many after the seruice of tenne yeare woulde gladly bee set free. Then followeth that other, which we touched euen now, that God is bound by no werks of ours to pay vs any rewarde. Therefore lette euery manne remember that hee is therefore created that hee shoulde labour, and shoulde exercise himselfe diligently in his office and calling: and that not for a certaine time, but to death it selfe, so that hee shoulde no lesse die then liue to God. But in respect of the merite, that knor, which stayeth and hindreth many must bee looted. For the scripture oft promising rewarde for werkes, seemeth to attribute some merite to them. The answer is easie, that the rewarde not due as a debt, is not otherwise promised thē of the meere good wil of god. For they are far deceiued, which do cople a rewarde with desert in mutuall relatiō together: for God is moued to giue them rewardes not by the dignitie of their workes, but of his free mercy. I graunt that in the couenant of the law God is bound vnto men, if they perfectly perſourmed all that is required of them: but becauſe this band is voluntary, this remaineth ſure, that man can demaund nothing of God, as if hee had deſerued any thing. So therefore the arrogancy of the fleſhe falleth downe: for, if any manne ſhould fulfill the law, yet hee can beſtow nothing of God: becauſe hee onely rendreth that which hee was indebted. And in this ſence hee calleth vs vnprofitable ſeruants, becauſe that God receiueth of vs nothing more then due: but onely gathereth the due and lawfull fruits of his ſoueraigne Lordſhip. Therefore theſe two things are to be noted, that God naturally oweth vs nothing, neither doe any of our workes deſerue or merite the worth of a hayre: Then by the couenant of the lawe, workes haue a rewarde promiſed not for the dignitie of the ſame, but that God might be a free debtor. And this vnthankfulnes is not to be borne, if any manne ſhall vnder this pretence proudly liſt vp himſelfe. For the more liberally that God doeth deal with vs, ſo much the more he maketh vs bound vnto him: ſo that he is farre from giuing vs liberty to liſt vp our ſelues in a vaine confidence. As oft therefore as wee ſee or remember this word merite, let vs know that this is the abundance of the goodnes of God towards vs, that when he hath vs wholly in his debt, doth yet deſcend to make a couenant with vs. Wherefore the deuice of the Sophiſters is ſo much the more deſeſtable, which dare bee ſo bolde as to frame a merit worthily deſeruing. Nowe, the worde merit is of it ſelfe prophane, and ſtraunge from the rule of pietie: but this is farre worſe to make men drunke with a diuclish pride, as if they ſhould deſerue any thing of their worthines.

10. We haue done that, which was our duty to doe. That is, we haue brought nothing of our own, but we haue only done the works due to the law. Chriſt ſpeaketh here of the perfect obſeruatiõ of the lawe, which is not found any where: for he which is the perfectest of all, is yet farre from the righteouſneſſe, which the law requireth. That queſtion then is not entreated here, whether wee be iuſtified by works, but whether the obſeruatiõ of the law deſerueth any reward with God. This latter is denied: becauſe God hath vs bound to himſelfe, ſo that whatſoever can proceed from vs, he accounteth as his own by right. But though that were true, that the reward were due in reſpect of deſert to the obſeruatiõ of the law: yet it ſhall not follow thereof, that any man ſhall be iuſtified by deſerts of workes: for we fall all, and our obedience is not onely maymed, but no part of it doth exactly anſwere to the iudgement of God.

Luke. 18.

1. And he ſpake alſo a parable vnto them, to this end, that they ought alwayes to pray, and not to wax ſaine.
2. Saying, There was a iudge in a certaine citie, which feared not God, neither reuerenced man.
3. And there was a widow in the citie, which came vnto him, ſaying, doe me iuſtice againſt mine aduerſary.

4. And

4. And he would not for a time: but afterward he said with himselfe, though I feare not God, nor reuerēce man:
5. Yet because this widow troubleth me, I will doe her right, least at the last she make me weary.
6. And the Lord sayde, heare what the vnrightheous iudge sayth.
7. Now shall not God auenge his elect, which cry day and night vnto him, yea, though he suffer long for them?
8. I tell you hee will auenge them quickly: but when the Sonne of man commeth, shall hee find faith on the earth?

Wee know how rare and hard a vertue, diligence in prayer is: and in this our infidelitie bewrayeth it selfe, that except he grant our first requestes, presently together with our exercise wee cast away also our hope. But this is a notable tryall of our fayth, if any man receiue not his desire, hee doe not yet distrust, nor yet cast away his hope. Wherefore Christ doeth not newe without cause commendē perseuerance in prayer to his disciples. Also, though hee vseth a hard similitude in shew, yet most apt, while hee teacheth his disciples earnestly to attend vpon God the father, vntill they obtayne at length as it were by force, that which otheiwise hee seemeth not to giue willingly. Not that God being overcome with our prayers, doeth hardly yeelde to mercy: but because hee doeth not presently testifie indeede that hee giueth care to our prayers. And that Christ proposeth vnto vs a parable of a widow, which obtayned that which shee would of the vnrightheous and cruell Iudge, because shee ceased not to sollicite the cause dayly: the summe is this, God doeth not helpe his presently, because hee would bee called vpon with prayers. But though they, which pray vnto him are miserable and despised: yet if they faint not frō the continuall course of praying, hee will at length looke vpon them, so that hee will helpe their necessities. Hee compareth not equals together, for ther is great difference betweene a wicked and a cruell man, and God, who bendeth himselfe to mercy. But Christ would teach the faithfull not to feare, least they should not by dayly prayer intreate the father of mercy, when as through their importunitie they compell men giuen to crueltie. The wicked and cruell iudge could not beare the suites of the widow. therefore how shoulde the prayer of the faithfull be without fruite, so that they be continuall. Therefore if we waxe weary, if wee stay when wee haue prayed a while, or that our zeale to prayer waxeth colde, because God seemeth to bee deafe: yet let vs account that wee shall certainly receiue profit by it, though it doth not yet appeare. And with this perswasion let vs striue with our impatience, so that a longer delay may not hinder the course of prayer.

7. Shall not God auenge his electe. That Iudge, which Christ describeth to vs to bee altogether without mercy, as one which hadde not onely hardened himselfe in the sight of GOD: but hauing cast of all shame, hadde no care of his fame, opened his eyes at length to the miseries of the widow: it is not to bee doubted but that the faithfull shall feele at the least the same commodity, so that they cease not to be instant with God. But it is to be noted, while Christ applyeth the similitude to his purpose, he maketh not God like to the wicked and unkinde iudge, but he noteth a farre diuerse cause, why he deferreth his faithfull ones, and delaieth them for a long season, and doeth not indeede reach his hand presently vnto them: to wit, because he is long suffering. Wherefore if God winketh at our iniuries longer then hee would, let vs know that he doth it of his fatherly wisdom, that he might exercise vs to patience: and a delaying of punishment for a time, is not a setting of sinnes free for euer. And that he promitteth that God will auenge quickly, ought to be referred to his prouidence: for, as we are too rash hastie, so he commeth not time inough to helpe, as our flesh imagineth. But if it were lawfull to enter into his counsell, wee should know that his helpe is ready at hand as neede requireth, & that it slacketh not the space of a moment, but is ready at all seasons. Yet it is demanded, how Christ should instruct his Disciples to pray for vengeance, who otherwhere teacheth his Disciples to blesse and to pray for their persecutours? I answer, Christ speaketh heere of vengeance, as he derogateth nothing from his doctrine. God sayth, that he will be the auenger of the faithfull, not that he would giue the raines at liberty to the affections of the flesh, but that hee might perswade them, that their saluation is deare and pretious vnto him: also by this meanes he biddeth them to trust in his defence. If without hatred, and free and cleare from wicked desire of reuenge, they with a right ordred motion of the spirit craue the helpe of God, their prayer shall be holy and lawfull, and shall be heard of God himselfe. But, because nothing is more hard then to cast off wicked affections, the Lord is to be required, that he would direct and gouerne our hearts by his spirit, that we may so conceiue pure and right praiers, so it shall come to passe, that we may rightly call vpon God the auenger, and hee being prayd vnto, will answer vs.

8. When the sonne of manne commeth. Christe in this sentence declareth that it is no maruaile if manne doe consume away in their euils: to wit, because they neglect the true remedie. But his will was to meete with an offence, which wee doe dayly conceaue of the vile confounding of all thinges. Unfaithfulnesse, crueltie, deceites, fraudes, violence, no regarde of equitie, shamelesnesse doe abounde euery where, the oppressed poore doe sigh, the innocents are proudly and despitefully vexed: yet GOD seemeth to sleepe in the meane season in heauen: heereof it commeth to passe, that flesh imagineth a blinde gouernement of fortune. But Christe heere declareth that men of iniustice are left destitute of the heauenly helpe, in confidence whereof they neither knowe nor will repose themselues. For it is not meete they should be holpe of GOD, which grudging inwardly, haue no regarde of his prouidence. But Christe doeth expressly foretell, that there should be vnbelieuers euery where from his ascention into heauen vnto his returne againe: by these wordes declaring that if the Redeemer shoulde not appeare so speedily, manne shoulde feele the wante: because no manne almost woulde looke or haue regarde to him. And I woulde to God the effecte of this prophesie were not too euident: but experience teacheth, though the world should be ouerwhelmed and oppressed with a great heape of euiles ; yet there canne scarce bee founde a little sparke of fayth in a fewe . Others doe take the woorde fayth for integritie , but the former sence dooth better agree with the text.

Matth.

Mark.

Luke. 18.

9. Hee spake this Parable vnto certaine, which trusted in themselues, that they were iust and despised others.

10. Two men went vp into the Temple to pray: the one a Pharisee, the other a Publican.

11. The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himselfe, O God, I thanke thee that I am not as other men, excommunicers, vniust, adulterers, or as this Publican.

12. I fast twise a weeke : I giue tycth of all that eue I possesse.

13. But the Publican standing a farre off, would not lift vp so much as his eyes to heauen, but smote his brest, saying, O God, be mercifull vnto mee a sinner.

14. I tel you, this man departed to his house iustified, rather then the other : for euery manne that exalteth himselfe, shall bee brought low, and he that humbleth himselfe, shall be exalted.

Christe nowe giueth commaundement of an other vertue, which is necessary in true prayer : that the faythfull come not into the presence of God, except they doe humbly and simply submitte themselues . There is not a more deadly disease then arrogancy, which yet is so throughly fastened and settled into the bones and marow of vs all , that it canne scarce bee driuen away and rooted out by any remedies . And it is wonder that menne are so deceiued, that they dare set vppe themselues agaynst God, and boast of their merits with him . For though ambition bewitcheth vs amongst menne, yet when wee come before God, it becommeth vs to forget all our vaine confidence : but euery manne thinketh that hee hath humbled himselfe sufficiently, if onely in hypocrisie hee hath prayed for forgiveness . Heereby wee learne how necessary this admonition of the Lord is. Furthermore, Christ reproveth two vices, which hee purposed to condemne, wicked trust in our selues, and pride in condemning our brethren, which do spring one of another : for whosoeuer deceiueth himselfe with vaine confidence, it cannot bee but that hee should lift vppe himselfe aboue the brethren : neither is it any meruaile : for how should it bee, that hee should not despise his equals, which in his pride listeth vp him selfe against God ? And whosoeuer is puffed vp with a trust of himselfe, purposely maketh battaile against God, who is reconciled to vs only by denying our selues, while we being, without all hope of our owne power, vertue and righteousness, doe repose our selues in his only mercy.

10. Two menne. Christe compareth two men together, which doe both pretend the exercise of religion in praying, yet they two seeme too much vnlike. For the Pharise hauing an outward holinesse, comming to God, commendeth his life, and commeth to offer the sacrifice of prayse, as it were in his owne right: But the Publican as a manne reiected, because hee knoweth himselfe vnworthy to come before God, doth insinuate himselfe fearefully, by confessing his owne vnworthinesse in his prayers: and Christe reiecting the Pharise, sayth, that the prayers of the Publican were acceptable before God, Agayne, there are also noted two causes, why the Pharise was reiected: to wit, because his trusting in his owne righteousness, extold him selfe with condemning others. Yet hee is not reprehended, because he lifted vp himselfe in the forces of free will: but because hee trusted that hee had reconciled God to him by the deserts of his workes. For this giuing of thanks, which he vseth, testifieth that he glorieth not in his own strength, as if he should obtaine righteousness of himselfe, or shoulde deserue any thing by his owne industrie: but he rather ascribeth it to the grace of God, that hee is righteous. But though he giuing thanks to God, confesseth that what good workes soeuer he hath to be the meere benefit of God: yet because he putteth his trust in works, and preferreth himselfe before others, he with his prayer is reiected: whereby wee gather, that menne are not rightly and perfectly humbled (though they account that they canne doe nothing of themselues) except they also distrusting the merites of their workes, doe learne to place their saluation in the free goodnes of God, so that their whole trust and confidence be grounded there. A notable place: for to some it seemeth sufficient, if they take from man the glory of good workes, because they are the giftes of the holy Ghost, and so they interpret it, that wee are iustified freely: because God founde no righteousness in vs, but that which hee brought. But Christe goeth further, not onely assigninge the power of well doing to the grace of the spirite: but hee taketh from vs all trust in workes. For the pharise is not therefore reprooued, because he challengeth that to himselfe, which was proper to God: but because hee trusteth in his owne merites, so that hee woulde haue God mercifull vnto him, because hee hadde so deserued it. Therefore let vs knowe, though any manne ascribe the prayse of good woorkes to God: yet if hee imagine the righteousness of them to bee the cause of his saluation, or trusteth in the same, hee is condemned of peruerse arrogancy. And note, here is not reprooued the vaine ambition, wherein menne otherwise ginitie with themselues doe glory amongst menne, but the secreete hypocrisie: for it is not sayd that he was a setter forth of his owne prayses, but that he prayed freely with him selfe. But though hee set not forth the fame of his owne righteousness with a lowd voyce, yet the inward pride was abhominable to God.

His glorying was in two things: for, first hee freeth himselfe from the common guiltines of men: then hee setteth forth his owne prayses. He sayeth that he is not as one of the common sorte, because hee is free from the sinnes, which raigne euery where in the world. And that he boasteth that he fasted twise euery weeke, and gaue tythes of all his goodes, is as much, as if hee shoulde haue sayd, that he performed more then the law required.

Euen as the Monkes in Poperie, doe preach the workes of supererogation: as though it were a small thing for them to fulfill the law of God. But though euery man for the measure of the vertues which God hath bestowed vpon him, is more bound to giue thanks to the authour, & this is a godly meditatio to consider how much euery man hath receiued, least hee ouerwhelme the blessings of God in vnthankfulness, yet two things are to be obserued, least wee be lifted vp in any confidence, as if we had satisfied God: then, that we become not insolent with despising the brethren. The pharise sinneth in both: for he falsly challenging a righteousness to himselfe, leaueeth nothing to the mercy of Gods: then, he despiseth all others in respect of himselfe. And Christ would not haue reprobued this thanksgiuing, if it had not bene polluted with these two sinnes: but because the proude hypocrite winking at his owne sinnes, opposed the imagination of his sound and perfect righteousness before the iudgement of God, it was necessary that he should fall with his wicked and sacrilegious bouldnes. For the onely hope of the godly, so long as they labour vnder the infirmitie of the flesh, is, when they acknowledge the good things they haue, to flee to the mercy of God, and to set their saluation in the obtaining of forgiveness. But it is demaunded how hee shoulde haue so great holinesse, who was blinded with such wicked pride: for so great perfection cannot come any other way, but from the spirite of God, which wee are assured doth not raigne in hypocrites. I answer, he trusted onely in an outward shew, as if the secreete and inward vncleanness of the heart shoulde not come to account. Wherefore, though he was full within of wicked concupiscences: yet he pretendeth an innocency, because hee carelesly iudgeth onely by the outward shew. The Lord reprobueth him not of vanitie, because hee falsly challengeth that to himselfe which he had not: yet it is to be noted, that no man is free from rapine, vnrighteousnes, lust, and other vices, except he be governed by the spirite of God. Hee vseth this worde Sabbath in this place, as oft times otherwhere, for a weeke: But God doth not commaund any where in the lawe, that his seruants shoulde fast euery weeke, wherefore this fasting and tenthes, were voluntary exercises without the prescript commaundement of the law.

13. The Publican standing a farre off. Christ deliuereth not here a generall rule, as if it should be necessary to looke to the ground as oft as we pray: but he onely noteth the signes of humilitie, which he commendeth to his disciples. Further, humilitie is placed in this, if they spare not their own sins, but by condemning themselves, they do preuent the iudgements of God: & they do simply confesse their owne guiltines, that they might be reconciled to god. And hether belongeth that shame, which is alwaies companie with repentance: for the Lord certainly doth especially stand vpon this, that the Publican earnestly acknowledging his owne misery & wretched estate, only fleeth to the mercy of God: for though he was a sinner, yet by obtaining free forgiveness, he hopeth that God wil become favorable vnto him. In sum, y he might obtain fauor, he confesseth himselfe to be vnworthy of the same. And certainly, sith forgiveness of sins doth only reconcile vs to God, it is necessary that we should begin there, if we desire to haue our prayers acceptable to him. Further, hee which before confesseth himselfe guilty and conuict, yet desireth to be pardoned, banisheth himselfe fro al confidence in works and that was the purpose of Christ, to shew that God would not bee entreated of any, but of them which do fearefully flie to his onely mercy.

14. This man departed iustified. This is an improper comparison: for they were not both iustified, Christ onely preferreth the publican in some degree, but hee meaneth that he was acceptable to God, when as the Pharisee was altogether reiected. And this place doth teach vs euidently what this word to be iustified, doth properly signifie: namely, to stand before God as if wee were righteous. Neither was the Publican therefore said to be iustified, because he had sodainly gotten a new qualitie: but because his guiltinesse being pardoned, and his sinns abolished, hee obtained fauour, whereof it followeth, that righteousnesse consisteth in forgiveness of sinnes. Therefore as wicked confidence defiled and polluted the vertues of the Pharisee, so that this life which was laudable before the worlde, was not accounted of with God: so the Publican not holpe with any merits or deserts of works, obtained righteousnesse only by praying for forgiveness: because that hee trusted not in any other thing, then the mercy of God. But it seemeth to absurde, that all men should be brought into order, sith there are Sainctes much holier then the Publican was. I answer, howe much soeuer any man hath profited in the worship of God and true holinesse: yet, if he consider how much hee wanteth of perfection, hee cannot otherwise pray rightly, except he begin at confession of his owne guiltinesse. For though some are more, some les, yet all are generally faulty. Wherefore it is not to be doubted but that Christ precribeth here a law to all men: as if he should haue said, then is God pleased with vs, when distrusting in our works, we seeke to be reconciled freely by his grace. And the Papists are enforced in part to grant this: but presently they corrupt the doctrine with a wicked comment. They grant that all haue need of forgiveness, because no man is perfect: but first they make miserable menne drunken in a vaine hope of a partiall righteousnesse (as they call it) then they adde satisfactions, whereby they shoulde wipe away their guiltinesse. But this ought to bee the onely stay of our fayth, that wee are accepted of God, not that we, haue so deserued it, but because he imputeth not sinnes.

Luke 17.

11. And so it was, when he went to Ierusalem, that hee passed through the midst of Samaria & Galile. 12. And as he entred into a certaine towne, there met him ten men that were lepers, which stood a far off. 13. And they lift vp their voyces, and said: Iesus, maister, haue mercy on vs. 14. And when he saw them, hee sayd vnto them: Go shew your selues vnto the Priests. And it came to passe, as they went, they were cleansed.

15. Then one of them, when he saw that he was healed, turned backe, and with a loud voyce praised God.

16. And fell downe on his face at his feete, and gaue him thanks: and he was a Samaritan,

17. And Iesus answered, and saide: are there not tenne cleansed? but where are the nine?

18. There are none found that returned to giue God praise 19. And

19. And he sayde vnto him: Arise, goe thy way, thy faith hath made thee whole.

20. And when he was demanded of the Pharises when the kingdome of God should come, he answered them, and sayd: the kingdome of God commeth not with obseruation

21. Neither shall men say: Loe here, or loe there: for beholde the kingdome of God is among you.

As Mathew before in the eight chapter, and the other two Euangelists declared that Christ healed one Leper, so Luke reporteth that the like miracle was shewed in healing of 10 Lepers. But there is another purpose in this hystory: for here is described the vile and incredible vnthankfulnesse of the Iewish nation, least it should seeme a wonder to any man, that so many benefits of Christ were suppressed, and so many miracles buried. The circumstance is also added, which infameth their offence the more: for when the Lorde had healed nine Iewes, not one of them gaue thanks, but that their disease might be forgotten they escape away by stealth. One onely Samaritane professeth what hee oweth to Christe. Therefore of the one parte heere is shewed the diuine power of Christ. againe, the wickednes of the Iewes is reprobud, whereby it came to passe, that almost no honour was giuen to so notable a miracle.

13. Iesus, maister. It appeareth that they all had some faith, because they do not only craue the ayd of Christ, but they giue him the title of maister. Also, it may bee gathered by their readie obedience, that they spake so from their heart and not fainedly. for although they yet saw the filthy scab vpon their fleshe, yet as soone as they are commanded to shewe themselues to the priestes, they obey without delay. Adde also: that they would neuer haue gone to the priestes, but by the perswasion of faith: for it shoulde haue bene a scorne for them to offer themselues before the iudges of Leprosie to witness their cleansing, if the promise of Christ had not bene more forcible to them, then the present beholding of their disease. They cary the visible leprosie in their flesh, yet trusting in the onely word of Christ, they doubt not to professe themselues cleane, therefore it cannot be denied but y<sup>e</sup> there was some seed of faith plâted in their hearts. And though it is certaine that they were not regenerate by the spirit of adoption, yet there is no absurditie in it, that they helde some beginnings of pietie. So much the more it is to be feared, least it befall vnto vs, that the sparkes of faith shining in vs, be extinguished, for though the liuely faith neuer dieth, which hath his rootcs fastned in the spirit of regeneration: yet we see other where, that many haue conceived a faith for a time, which doth presently vanish away. And this disease is too common, that necessitie enforceth vs, and that thereby our minds are caried to seeke God, yea, and the Lord himselve by the secret instinct of his spirit solliciteth vs thereto: but after we haue obtained our desires, howe doth vnthankfull forgetfulnesse swallow vp that sense, & feeling of pietie? So want and hunger ingendereth faith, which fulnesse killeth.

14. Go, shew your selues to the priestes. This answer is as much, as if hee should haue said that they were clensted: for we know that the iudgment of the leprosie was in the law commanded to the priestes, that they should discern the cleane from the vncleane: so Christe leauech them their right without diminishing it, and

and he maketh them witnesses and allowers of his myracle. Therefore we sayd that these men esteemed holily and reuerently of Christ, which being yet diseased, of his onely word they presently shoulde conceiue hope of health. But the Papists doe very fondly gather their auricular confession from hence. The Leprous men are sent I grant by Christe to the Priests, not to vomite their sinnes in their eares: but they are rather sent to offer the sacrifice according to the com mandement of the law. Neither, are they sent to purge themselues, as the Popish confession (by their saying) bringeth cleanness: but that they being now cleane before, should shew themselues to the priests. But they are double fooles, not considering what a filthy blot of infamie, they cast vpon their confession. They haue behaued themselues well, if of all the multitude of them which haue gone to the Priests, the tenth part onely returneth to Christ, and all the rest are wickedly alienated away. For they cannot pretend this as a title of their confession, but that it shall be lawfull to returne againe this fruit of the same vpon the that none returned from the Priests to giue glory to God. But these trifles being let passe, we vnderstand to what end there was mention made of the Priestes.

It came to passe as they went. Heere appeared the diuine power of Christe and of his wordes, and heere also was an instruction giuen, howe much obedience of faith shoulde please God: for heereof came their sodaine health, that they being of good hope, doubted not to take their iourney at Christ his commaundement. If that that vanishing faith wanting a liuely roote, onely brought out the herbe, was yet adorned of God with a wonderfull effect, how much more excellent a rewarde remayneth for our faith, if it bee settled sincerely and perfectly in God: For though the health of the body profited not the 9. Lepers to saluation, but for their fleeting and frayle faith they onely obtained a temporall gift: yet vnder this figure it is shewed vs, how effectuell a true faith shall be.

15. Then one of them. It is vncertaine whether he returned in the midst of the iourney, and Lukes words seeme to signifie the same. yet it seemeth more probable to me, that he came not to giue thanks vntill he had heard the iudgment of the Priestes. For it behoued him to be restored by the Priestes to the common societie, neither was it lawfull for neglecting the com mandement of Christ to defraude the temple of God of the sacrifice: except that other coniecture shal rather like you, alsoone as he saw himselfe cleansed, before he desired the testimony of the Priests, being caried with a holy and godly zeale came to the author, that he might begin his sacrifice at thankesgiuing. But in Christs wordes there is an vpbraiding of the whole nation: for he doth odiously compare one stranger with many Iewes: because it was a common thing amongst them to deuour the benefits of God without any sense of godlines. And heereof it cometh to passe, that by so many and so notable miracles, Christe had almost no name amongst them. Yet let vs know that wee are generally condemned all by this complaint, except we become thankfull to God for his benefites.

19. Thy faith hath saued thee. Some interpreters doe restrain this worde sauiug, to the cleansing of the fleshe: but if it bee so, sith Christ commendeth the liuely faith in this Samaritane, it may be demanded how the other nine were saued, for they had all generally like health. Thus therefore it is to bee noted, that Christ heere iudged otherwise of the grace of God, then prophane men doe: namely, as a comfortable token and pledge of the loue of the father. The other nine Leapers were healed: but because they do wickedly blotte out the grace of God, their vnthankfulnesse hindereth and polluteth the health it selfe, so that they take not that profit by the same which they ought. Therefore onely fayth sanctifieth the giftes of God, that they may bee pure to vs, and being ioyned with a lawfull vse, they may bee to our saluation. To be short, Christ declareth by this worde how wee should vse the benefites of God rightly. Whereby we gather that the eternal saluation of the soule is ioyned together with this temporall gift. The Samaritane is saued by his fayth. How? Certainly not so that he was healed of his leaprofie: (for this was comon with the rest) but because he is accepted into the number of the children of God, in that he receiued a token of a fatherly loue at his hand.

20. And when he was demaunded of the Pharisies. This question vndoubtedly was moued in scorne. For when as Christ had spoken daily of the being of the kingdome of God at hand, and that there was no change of the outward state amongst the Iewes, the wicked and malicious men thought this to be a plausible colour to vex and trouble him by. Therefore as if he should speake in vaine & trifle of the kingdome of God, they doe aske him iestingly, when at length the kingdom shall come. Yet if any shall thinke that they rather asked this question of grosse ignorance, then to scorne at, I do not strue against it

The kingdom of God commeth not. Christ in my iudgemēt neglecting those dogs, applyeth this answer to his disciples: as being after prouoked by the wicked, he tooke thereby occasion to teach them. And so their malice being laughed to scorne by the Lord, while the truth is defēded frō their cauils, it sheweth it selfe the more. Christ here vseth this word obseruation for great glory as if he should deny the kingdōe of God to come loftily, as in a pomp. For hee declareth that they are much deceiued which seeke the kingdom of God, which is not carnall or earthly, with fleshly eies, when it is nothing else but an inward & spiritual renewing of the soule: for he teacheth them that they do peruerfly against the nature of that kingdō, which looke about hither or thither, & they might obserue some visible notes: as if he should haue said, the restitution of the Church which God hath promised, must be sought inwardly: for he giuing to his electe a heauenly newnes of life, setteth vp his kingdom in them. And so he doth outwardly reprove the slouthfulnesse of the pharisses, because they aspire to nothing, but that which is earthly and transitory. Yet it is to bee noted that Christ onely spake of the beginnings of the kingdome of God: because that we begin now to be reformed by the spirit according to the image of God, that then a perfect renewing of vs and of the world, might follow in his time.

ny that heard him, were astonied, and sayd: fro whence hath he these things? & what wisdom is this that is giuen vnto him, that euen such great workes are done by his hands.

3. Is not this the carpenter, Maries sonne, the brother of Iames and Ioses, and of Iuda and Simon? & are not his sisters here with vs? And they were offended in him.

4. Then Iesus sayde vnto them a Prophet is not without honour, but in his owne country, and among his owne kinned, and in his owne house.

6. And he meruailed at their vnbeliefe, and went about by the Townes on euery side, teaching.

53. When Iesus had ended. Matthew meaneth not that Christ came presently after the ende of those Sermons into his owne country: for by Marke it appeareth that there was some distance of time. But the meaning is, when he had taught sometime in Iudea, he returned againe to the Galileans, of whom he was receiued, but with small kindnes. Luke rehearseth almost the like history in the 4. chap. yet not the same. Neither is it any wonder that his country men were now offended at the beginnings of Christ, accounting his base house, his obscure and meane manner of bringing vp, so that they murmured against his doctrine: and they persisted after in the same malice, so that they ceased not to flander him, as oft as he would execute the office of a Prophet amongst them. Therefore this second reiecting of Christ declareth that the citizens of Nazareth were not amended by this time that he was away, but the same contempt was alwayes a lette vnto them from hearing Christ.

54.- So that they were astonied. They are astonied, being mooued at the newnes of the matter, that Christ which had not beene brought vp in learning, but had beene occupied euen from his youth vnto his mans estate, in an handy-craft, should be such a Doctor, and should vter diuine wisdom. When they ought to haue beholden the hand of God in this miracle, their vnthankfulnesse made them, that they spread darknesse vpon themselves. They are enforced to wonder, will they, nill they: yet they despise him. What is this else, then to cast away a Prophet taught of God, because he came not out of the schoole of men? And they ouerthrow themselves in their own confession, when as they giue so notable a testimony to the doctrine of Christ, which findeth yet no place in the, because it hath not the vsuall originall from the earth. Why doe they not rather lift vppe their eyes into heauen, that they might learne, that that came from God, which excelleth mans reason? Furthermore, the miracles ioyned to the doctrine, ought to touch them deeper, or at least to waken them from sleeping in too much securitie, that they might giue the glory to GOD: for certain-certainly, while God dealeth by vnwonted meanes, he doth so much the more evidently shew the power of his hand, yet this was the very cause why the Nazarites so maliciously drew a vaile ouer their eyes. Therefore we see that simple ignorance did not hurt the men: but they willingly tooke offences to the selues, least they should follow whether God calleth them. It behoueth vs rather to reason on the contrary parte, where humane meanes doe want, the power of god doth evidently shew it selfe, that he might haue the whole praise to himselfe.

55. Is not this the carpenters sonne? Wee know that it was by the wonderfull counsell of God, that Christ kept himselfe in a priuate life, vntill he was thirtie yceres old. Hereof the Nazarites wickedly and vniustly tooke an offence, when they ought rather reuerently to embrace him, as one sodainly falne from heauē. They see God working in Christ: thereof of set purpose they turne their eyes to Ioseph and Mary, and al his kinsfolkes, whose estate was meane and base, to be as a vaile drawne betweene them and the manifest light. Wee haue sayd other where before, that all kinsfolkes are called brethren after the maner of the Hebrewes. Wherefore Heluidius imagined too fondly, that Mary had moe sonnes because there is mention made so oft of the brethren of Christ.

57. A Prophet is not without honour. I haue expounded this sentence more largely in the 4. chap. after John. It may be this was a generall Prouerbe, that they which excell in excellent giftes, are no where lesse esteemed, then in their owne country: wherein the vnthankfulness of these menne bewraieith it selfe, which the more familiarly God offreth himselfe, so much the more boldly they refuse him in the gifts of his spirit: yet I do willingly subscribe to Chrysostome who thinketh that the Iewes were specially reprehended by this saying. But that which was wont to bee spoken against the whole nation, Christ doth properly apply to his country men the Galileans: for he was neuer lesse esteemed in any place, then where he was borne. Wherefore he reproveth them worthily, that when they ought to haue bene the first that should haue imbraced the grace offered them, they reiect it farre from them: for it is too absurd, that a Prophet of God should be despised in that place where he was borne, to whom others, as out of a strange place, doe come with great desire.

58. Hee did not many great workes there. Marke speaketh more Emphatically, that he could not doe any great worke there. Yet in the substance of the matter they agree very well: the way was shut vp against Christ by the wickednesse of his owne citizens, that he should not worke many miracles amongst them. He had giuen them some tast: they do willingly amase themselves, least they should vnderstand any thing. Therefore Augustine doth aptly compare faith to the open mouth of a vessel: but he sayth that infidelitie is like to a couer, wherewith the vessel is couered, least it should receiue the liquour poured in of God. And truly the matter is euen so: for whē the Lord seeth that we receiue not his power, at length he withdraweth the same: and yct in the meane while wee complaine that we want his helpe, which our incredulitie driueth and renoueth far from vs. Marke, by saying that Christ could not, amplifieth the offence of them from whom his goodness was staid: for certainly, the vnbeleeuers do as much as in them lieth, hold backe the hand of God by their obstinacy, not that God is ouercome as an inferiour, but because they permit him not to shew his power.

That

That yet is to be noted which Marke addeth, that notwithstanding there were some sicke folke healed. For hereby we gather that the goodnes of Christ did striue with their malice, that it might goe beyond the hinderances. Wee doe finde the same in God dayly: for though that necessarily and iustly he with holdeth his power, because the way for him to vs is not open: yet we see that he maketh himselfe a way through places impassable, ceaseth not to do vs good. A wonderfull contention, that when we do by al meanes endeuour to ouerwhelm the grace of God, least it should come vnto vs, yet that, as conquerour, breaketh out, and as it were in despite of vs it becommeth effectuell.

Math. 14

1. At that time Herod the tetrarch heard of the same of Iesus:
2. And said vnto his seruantes: This is Iohn Baptist: He is risen againe frō the dead and therefore great works are wrought by him.

Marke 6.

14. Then king Herode heard of him, (for his name was spread a broade,) and sayd: Iohn Baptist is risen againe from the dead, and therefore great works are wrought by him.
15. Other sayd, it is Elias: and some sayde, It is a Prophet, or as one of the Prophets.
16. So when Herod heard it, he said: It is Iohn whom I beheaded: he is risen from the dead.

Luke 9.

7. Nowe Herode the Tetrarche heard of all that was done by him and hee doubted, because that it was sayd of some, that Iohn was risen againe from the dead.
8. And of some, that Elias had appeared: & of some, that one of the old Prophets was risen againe.
9. Then Herod sayd: Iohn haue I beheaded. Who then is this, of whom I heare such thinges? and hee desired to see him.

The Euangelists do therefore report this, that we might know that the name of Christ was much spoken of euery where, so that ignorance might not excuse the Iewes. For otherwise this doubt might haue crept into the minds of many men: how should it come to passe, that Christ liuing vpon the earth, should rest quietly in Iudea, as if hee were thrust vp into a corner, and had reuealed his diuine power to none. Therefore the Euangelists do now witnesse that the fame of him was spread euery where, so that it came euen into Herodes court.

2. Hee sayd vnto his seruantes. It is gathered by the wordes of Luke, that Herod had not this in mind of himselfe, but this suspicion was thrust into him by the common rumour of the people. Neither doe I doubt but that the hatred of the Tyrant, and the detestation of the cruell slaughter should giue occasion of speeches, as it commonly cometh to passe. This superstition did sticke in the minds of men euery where, that the dead returned into life vnder an other person, as it is sayd other where. Now they take that which was next, that Herod by killing cruellly that holy man, obtained not that which he hoped for, because that he being raised frō the dead by the wonderfull power of God should become a more sharpe enemy, and auenger of his finnes. Yet Marke and Luke doe declare that men spake diuersly: namely, that some thought him to be Elias, others, some one of the Prophetes, or which was equall to the Prophetes in excellencie of the spirite. Why they shoulde imagine it of Elias rather then of any other, we haue spoken other where. Because God had promised by Malachie 4. 5. that Elias shoulde come who should gather together the Church dispersed, they fondly drew the Prophecie to the person of the man: when as the simple comparison should be in this meaning, least the coming of the Messiah should be obscure and hid, and least the grace of redemption should be kept vnknowne from the people, a certaine Elias shall goe before him, such a one as he was in times past, which restored the ruinous estates & ouerthrown worship of God. Therefore he shall goe before in singular power of the spirit, that hee might make manifest that great day. The Iewes as they were grosse interpreters had drawne this to Elias the Thesbite, as if that he should execute the office of a Prophet againe. Yet others doe imagine that eyther some one of the olde Prophets was risen, or that hee should be some great man and excellent as they were: Also it is wonderfull, when they were of diuers opinions yet the truth came in none of their mindes. especially, when as the reckoning of the time it selfe should direct them to Christ. God had promised them a redeemer, which should bring helpe to the miserable and the lost. The extreame necessitie whereinto they were cast, did then especially require helpe of God. The Redeemer is present, as is partly witnessed by the crying of Iohn, and partly hee himselfe testifieth of his owne office. They are inforced to acknowledg some diuine power in him, yet falling to their owne deuises, they change him into an other person. So truely the world, through wicked vnthankfulness vseth to extinguish the graces of God offered them. In respect of Herod himselfe as I touched a little before, he conceiued the opinion that Iohn was raised, not with any ioy: but as euill consciences doe quake fearefully, and doe bend at eueery blast, so he easily conceiueth that which he feared. And God often scourgeth the vngodly with these blind terrours: so though they harden themselues of purpose, neither are vexed by any other, yet they obtaine no rest from that inward slaughterman, but that he sharply scourgeth them.

Therefore great workes are wrought by him. It is wonder by what reason they were ledde to bring these thinges in. Iohn in all the course of his preaching, wrought no signe: therefore it seemeth to bee without all colour, that they seeing a man notable through miracles, should imagine him to be Iohn: but they thinke that these miracles were now wrought at the first, by them to proue his resurrection, and which should testifie that the holy Prophet of God was wickedly slaine by Herod: and now came forth as a man hallowed, not to be touched but with reuerence, least any durst be so bold as to violate him any more. Therefore to worke workes by him: that is, they thought them to be wrought that hee might get the more authoritie thereby, and that it might be euident that the Lord was with him.

Matthew 14.

3. For Herod had taken Iohn, and bound him, and put him in pryson for Herodias sake, his brother Philips wife.

4. For Iohn sayd vnto him: It is not lawfull for thee to haue her.

5. And

Marke 6.

17. For Herod himselfe had sent forth and had taken Iohn, and bound him in prison for Herodias sake, which was his brother Philips wife, because hee had married her.

18. For Iohn said vnto Herod: It is not lawfull for thee to haue thy brothers wife.

19. There-

Luke

5. And when he would haue put him to death, he feared the multitude because they counted him as a Prophet.

6. But when Herodes birth day was kept, the daughter of Herodias daunced before them, and pleased Herod.

7. Wherefore he promised with an oath, that he would giue her what soeuer shee would aske.

8. And she being before instructed of her mother said: Giue me here Iohn Baptists head in a platter. 9. And the king was sorry: neuerthelesse, because of the oath, and she that sat with him at the table, he commaunded it to be giuen her.

10. And he sent & beheaded Iohn in the prison.

11. And his head was brought in a platter & giuen to the maid, and she brought it vnto her mother.

12. And his Disciples came, and tooke vp his body and buried it, and went and told Iesus.

19. Therefore Herodias had a quarrell against him, and would haue killed him, but she could not:

20. For Herod feared Iohn, knowing that he was a iust man, and an holy, and reuerenced him, and when he had heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly,

21. But the time being conuenient, when Herod on his birth day made a banquet to his princes and captaines and chiefe estates of Galile.

22. And the daughter of the same Herodias came in and daunced, and pleased Herode and them that sat at table together, the king sayd vnto the maid: Aske of me what thou wilt, & I will giue it thee.

23. And he sware vnto her: whatsoeuer thou shalt aske of mee, I will giue it thee, euen vnto the halfe of my kingdome.

24. So she went forth, and sayd to her mother, what shall I aske? And she sayd, Iohn Baptists head.

25. Then shee came in straight way with hast vnto the king, and asked: saying, I would that thou shouldest giue mee euen nowe in a charger, the head of Iohn Baptiste.

26. Then the king was very sorry: yet for his oathes sake, and for their sakes which sat at table with him, he would not refuse her,

27. And immediately the king sent the hangman, and gaue charge that his head should be brought. So hee went and beheaded him in the prison. 28. And brought his head in a charger, and gaue it to the maide, and the maide gaue it to her mother. 29. And when his disciples heard it, they came and tooke vpe his body, and put it in a tombe.

The rehearfall of this history is nowe omitted by Luke, because hee had see down the same in an other place. I also will be the thorter in this place least by writing one thing twise, I should be troublesome to the readers. The Euangelists do say, & Iohn was taken, because he had condēned openly the stealing of Herodias, & the incestuous mariag with her. Iosephus assigneth an other cause namely, that Herod fearing some newe stirs against him, suspected Iohn, which may be, that the tyrāt vnder this pretēce wold haue excused his owne wickednes or els, that rumour was spread, as vniult violence & cruelty is full of many false accusations, ons. But the Euangelists do declare the cause to be, that Herode was angry with the holy man, because he was reprov'd by him. Also Iosephus is deceiv'd, who thinketh that Herodias was not taken away frō his brother Philip, but from his vncle Herode, the king of Chalcis. For at what time the Euangelistes wrytte, the memory of this offence was not onely freshe & new, but was also apparant before the eyes of all men. And that Iosephus in an other place sayth that Philip was of a milde disposition, I thinke it was a spur to make Herode the bolder, for that he might the freelier be reproachfull & iniurious against a quiet and softe manne, not apt to make warre. There is also an other probable coniecture, that Herodias was rather given in mariage to her vncle Philippe, then to her great vncle her graundfathers brother being now a weake worne olde manne. But Herode Antipas, of whom mention is here made, and Philippe were not brethren of one mother, but the first was borne of Marthaca, the third wife of Herode the Greate, and the other was borne of Cleopatra. Now to returne to the Euangelistes: they say that Iohn was cast into bandes, because he had more freely reprov'd the wickednesse of Herode, then the cruelty of the Tyrant woulde beare. Now, the hainousnesse of the offence was odious and infamous enough of it selfe, that he did not onely fetch an other mans wife from her lawfull bedde, and kept her at his owne house: but that hee did this iniury to his germane brother. When Iohn had freely reprov'd him, Herode feared not in vaine, least any sedition shoulde be rayted sodenly. Lust did not suffer him to amende his sinne: but hee promiseth him selfe a false and quiet liberty by casting the Prophet of God into bands. The ignorance of the history caused many to thrust in a vaine disputation, whether it were lawfull for me to take to wife, her which firste was married to my brother. For though naturall shame abhorreth from such a mariage, yet Iohn rather condemneth the taking of her away from her husband rather then the incest: because Herode by force or by deceit, had robbed his brother of his lawfull wife. And otherwise it was lesse lawfull for him to take his Neece, then the wife of his dead brother in her widow-hood. And it is not to be doubted but that so hainous an offence was spoken against euery where: but others reprov'd Herode with their euill speeches in his absence: onely Iohn commeth into his presence, and reproveth him freely to his face, if it might be that he might by any meanes be brought to repentance. Whereby we learne with what constant courage it behooueth the children of God to be furnished, which haue to doe with Princes. For hypocrisie and seruile flattery raigneth almost in all Courtes, so the eares of Princes, accustomed to pleasaunt speeches, can abide no words, which shall more sharply reprove their sinnes. But because the sinne was so vile, the Prophet of God might not dissemble, Iohn commeth to him, though hee should neither haue reward nor thanks, yet least hee should neglect his duty, hee doubteth not to incurre the displeasure of the Tyrant: especially, when hee knew that he being caught in the snares of a harlot, could scarce be remooued from his purpose.

5. When hee woulde haue put him to death. There seemeth to be some difference in Matthew and Markes wordes, in that the first sayeth that Herode was desirous of this cruell murder, but that hee was stayd for feare of the people: but the other chargeth only Herodias with this cruelty. But the asyer is easy that Herode would not in the beginning haue slaine the holy man, except some great perswasion had compelled him so to do: because he reuerenced him, and truly a reuerend feare staid him frō raging so cruelly against the Prophet of God: but Herodias by pricking him daily forward, caused him to shake off all feare of God from him. But when he was caried forth in rage by that fury, that he desired that the holy man were dead, yet was he staid with a new let, because he feared the mouing of the people against him. And Markes words are here to be noted, Herodias (sayth he) laid waite for him: namely, because Herode was not so forward, or willing to the murder, she tried either to circumuēt him by synister deuices, or to worke some secret destruction vpon that holy mā. The first opinion pleaseth me best, that shee sought to entrap the minde of her husband by subtilties, but in vaine, so long as Herodes conscience withstood it, she could not destroy that holy man. Then followed another feare, least any tumult should arise through the hainous crueltie of his death. But Marke toucheth only what staid Herode, from giuing present place to the harlots requelts: for Herodias desired that Iohn hadde bene secretly put to death as soone as he was cast into prison. But Herod reuerenced the holy man, so that he would willingly haue obeyed his counsell. Also the feare here mentionned, was not a feare conceiued of the estimation of another, as wee feare thē which get some authoritie & credit, though wee esteeme them vnworthy the honour: but this feare was a willing reuerence, because Herode durst not dispise him, whom he was perswaded to be a holy man, and a faithfull minister of God. And this is worthy to be noted: for though Iohn had experience, that it was profitable for him many wayes to be in some credit with the Tetrarche, yet he feared not to displeasē him, when hee could not otherwise keepe his fauour, then by winking treacherously at his notorious & infamous wickednes. He might haue said that he regarded not his owne priuate cōmodities, neither had any other respect thē of the cōmon profit. For it is certaine that he sought nothing ambitiously, but Herode was obedient to him in holy cōsels, which appertained to the lawfull administration of the kingdome. But because he saw that this kinde of recompence was not lawfull, that he might by betraying the truth, get some shewes & likings, he chuseth of a friend, rather to make him his enemy, then by flattery or silence to nourish the same which hee is enforced seuerely to reprehend. Iohn therefore by his example, prescribeth a certaine rule to godly teachers, that they should not dissemble nor winke at vices of Princes, though they should of that price buy their fauour profitable for the cōmon estate. But the spirit of god doth shew vnto vs in Herode as in a glasse, that it befalleth oft times, that they which worship not God sincerely, are yet ready in some poynt to obey his commaundements, so that they may haue some liberty graunted to them by release. But when they are more straightly dealt with, they become not only obstinate, but by casting off the yoake, also mad. There is therefore no cause, why they should please themselues, which yeelde obedience to many good counsels, vntill they haue learned to yeeld and submit themselues wholly to God.

6. When Herodes birth day was kepte. The Euangelistes doe nowe beginne to declare by what fraude Herodias brought the destruction of Iohn to passe at length, which shee hadde long time practised, and occasion was

giuen her by a solemne feast kept when Herod celebrated his birth day. For it can scarcely be, but that those great banquets, should besides luxury, pride, vnbrideled mirth, and other wickednesses, also draw many other mischeifes with it. Not that it is euill of it selfe to make a rich banker. but such is the readinesse of mans wit to wantonnes, that the raines being let loose, they do easily run out of course. That ancient custome cannot be disallowed for solemnizing a birth day euery yeere, for that day as oft as it commeth, admonisheth euery one of vs to giue thanks to God, by whom he was brought into this life, and hath nowe by his blessing passed ouer many yeares: then that he should remember howe ill and vnprofitably hee hath suffered the time to perish, which was graunted of God: Lastly, that he should commend himselfe the rest of his life to the protection of the same God. But there is nothing so pure, which the worlde will not corrupt with her sinnes: for the most parte prophaneth with filthy corruptions the birth day, which ought to be holy: and almost no sumptuous banquet is free from dissolute wantonnes: first there is too much drunke: then is a doore opened to filthie and vnmodest speaches: lastly, no temperance is holden at all. This moued holy Iob (his sonnes banketting together by course) to offer sacrifice, because that he thought that men could neuer moderate themselues so wel, when companions do intuite each other to be merry, but that offēce should grow many wayes. So it came to passe that Herode meaning to entertayne his guests sumptuously, suffred his wifes daughter to dāce. Hereby it also appeareth what the discipline of that court was: for though many gaue themselues liberty then to dance, yet it was a vile note of whorish wantonnes for a damsell marriageable to dance. But filthy Herodias had so framed her daughter Salome after her own maners, least she should shame her. And what followed then? namely the vngodly slaughter of the godly Prophet: for the heat of wine in Herode so flamed, that he forgetting grauity & wisdom, promised that he would giue to a dauncing damsell euen to the one halfe of his kingdome. Truly a shamefull example, that a drunken king doth not only abide to look vpō with fauourable eyes so shamefull a shew of his houshold, but also promiseth so great a rewarde. Wherefore let vs learn carefully to resist the deuill, lest he intrap vs in such snares

M A R. 24. So shee went forth, and sayde to her mother. It is no maruayle that Herodias should make so great account of the death of Iohn. That many doe coniecture that shee was kindled with desire of reuenge, is voyd of reason: for the feare of diuorcement rather troubled and vexed her: as for the most parte where whomasters begin to loath, they are ashamed of their owne lust. But shee hoped by this offence to haue Herod the more bound vnto her: if the couenant of the adulterous bedde were confirmed and sealed by the bloud of the Prophet, as with a sacrifice. Therefore that shee might rule hereafter without care, shee would haue him put to death, whom shee found to be her alone enemy. Whereby wee are also taught, what miserable greife alwaye tormenteth an euill conscience. Iohn was kept in bandes: the imperious and cruell woman might haue forbidden all people from speaking with him, and coming to him, yet shee resteth not, but is vexed with care and feare, vntill the Prophet should bee made away. This also much auayleth to the shewing forth of the efficacy of the word of God, that the voyce of the holy man, though shut vp in prison, doeth so vex the minde of the kings wife, as a most grieuous torment.

26. The king was very sorie. Religion was vanished out of his heart, as wee sayd: but because he foresaith how odious the crime would be, hee feareth the infamie and also the danger: heereof it commeth to passe that he repented him of his owne lightnes. Yet he dare not deny the dauncer, least he should be accounted inconstant, as though it were worse to retract that which he rashly and fondly promised, then to be constant in a most detestable offence. But because he will not in respect of the perfect vanitie of kings haue his word broken which he had giuen, he presently commaundeth that the Prophet should be slaine. And we gather that Herod supped that night in Macherontis tower, wherein Iosephus sayth that Iohn was imprisoned. And it is worth the labour to note, that the Eangelists doe say: for his oath and the guests that were present: wherof we gather, if he had sworne a hundred times, no manne being present, to witnesse it, yet he would not haue perfouraed his promise. Therefore religion of conscience bounde not Herode, but meere ambition caried him headlong because he accounted it no honestie for him not to performe the faith which he had giuen. So it commeth to passe, that wicked men neglect their dutie, because they haue no respect to God: but they are onely bent to this, that they bee not euill spoken of by men. Furthermore, if onely the religion of the oath had bene regarded of Herod, and not the shame of men, he yet sinned more grieuouly in performing that which he had foolishly promised, then if hee had broken his oath. First, this was an vnaduised rashnesse in swearing, in that he confirmeth the promise of a doubtfull matter with an oath: then when it appeared that he coude not bee set free from the faith which he had giuen, but that hee should plunge himselfe in a hainous offence, it was not lawfull for him to wrap vp the holy name in such an offence. For what is more against GOD, then that he should be the cheife in so vngodly a murther. If the question be moued of his priuate losse and disrepute, let him which swore rashly, beare the punishment of his foolishnes. But this must be taken heede of, where any man hath taken the name of God in vaine, least by pretence of the same hee be abused to the committing of some offence, and so should commit double sacriledge. Heereof it followeth that Monkith vowes, to which, manifest wickednesse is adioyned, doe binde the conscience no more then magicall exorcismes: because God wil not haue his sacred name enforced to the confirmation of sinne. Yet this place doth teach vs to take heede that no man do vnaduisedly promise any thing: then that he ioyne not obstinacie to his lightnesse.

28. And he gaue it to the maid. This also increaseth the cruelty of the offence, & the holy mans head was after his death brought foorth to bee scorned: but the Lord doth sometimes so submit his children to the pride of the wicked, vntill he will shew at length that the blood of his children is pretious in his eyes. Herodias ioyeth that she hath obtained her desire, & cruelly triumpheth ouer her reproacher: but afterwards she being put from her riches, & deprived not only of the honor of the kingdom, but also of her natie coutry, & of all helps, when shee a poore woman painfully led a miserable life in banishment, shewed a ioyfull sight:

the Angels, & to all good men. That the guesstes are enforced to defile their eies with the beholding of that abhominable pompe, we do hereby learne, that they which sit at princes tables, are oft entrapped in many sins. For though no bloody offence should defile the table, yet all things are so filled with all kind of wickednes, that whosoever do come thither, it behooueth them at the least to be giuē to pranks of baudry. 29. His disciples came. This remained also to the cruelty of the woman, that the corpes of the holy man remained vnburied, for it is probable by this, that his disciples performed this duty, that his body was thrown forth by the tyrants officers. And though the honour of burial profiteth not the dead, yet the Lord would that this ceremony should be reuerenced by vs, that it might be a witness vnto vs of the last resurrection. Wherefore this endeouour was acceptable vnto God, that Johns disciples should come & bury their maisters body. Further, this was a testimonie of their piety: for by this meanes they professed that the doctrine of the dead man yet liued & flourished in their hearts. Therefore this confession was prayse worthy, especially whē it was not without danger: because they could not honour this man flaine by the tormentor, but that they should prouoke the rage of the tyrant against them.

18. And he said, bring them hither to me.

19. And he commaunded the multitude to sit downe on the grasse, and tooke the 5. loaves and the 2. fishes, and looked vp to heauen, & blessed, and brake, and gave the loaves to his disciples, & the disciples to the multitude.

20. And they did all
eate, & were sufficed, and they tooke vpp of the fragments that remained, 12. baskets ful.

21. And they which had eaten, were about five thousande menne, beside women and little children.

saide vnto him: Shall we goe and buy two hundreth peny woorth of bread, & giue them to eate?

38. Then hee sayd vnto them: How many loaves haue yee? goe and looke
And when they knewe it, they sayde:
fue, and two fishes.

39. So hee cammanded them, to make them all sit downe by companies vppon the greene grasse.

40. Then they sate downe by rowes, by hundreth, and by fifties.

41. And hee tooke the five loaves and the two fishes, and looked vp to heauen, and gaue thank, and brake the loaves, and gaue them to his disciples to set before them, and the two fishes he deuided among them all.

42. So they did al eate & were satisfied

43. And they tooke vp twelue baskets full of the fragments, and of the fishes.

44. And they that had eaten, were about five thousand men.

saide to his disciples, cause them to sit downe
by fifties in a company.

15. And they did so, & caused all to sit downe.

16. Then he tooke the five loaves, and the two fishes, & looked vpp to heauen, and blessed thē, and brake, and gaue to the disciples, to set before the people.

17. So they did al eate, and were satisfied: and there was taken vpp of that remained to thē 12 baskets full of broken meate.

13. When Iesus heard it. Iohn reporting the same history, mentioneth not for what cause Iesus went ouer to the further shoar. Marke also & Luke do some-what differ from Matthew: for they reach that the cause of this iourney was, that he might giue some rest to his disciples, after they were returned frō their ambassage. But there is no discord in that: because it may be, that he would haue his disciples aparte into a desert place, that there he might the better frame thē to greater matters, & that at the same time a new occasion befell by the death of Iohn. For the death of Iohn might terrific weake munes, for that sorrowfull euent of that great Prophet, did nowe giue warning, what condition remained for them all. Certainly, as it is declared before, Iohn being taken, Christe went out of Herodes iurisdiction, that hee might turne away from the present fury: so it may be gathered, that Christ now withdrew his disciples being yet fearefull from the fire, and went into a desert place. Also it is vncertaine howe much time the Apostles spent in their firste ambassage: for the course of tymes was either neglected by the Euangelistes, or not strictly obserued (as we haue sayd other where.) But it is rather probable to me, that they were not sent forth once onely to declare the message of the kingdome of Christ, but as occasion serued, they did either iterate the same in some places, or after some time they went forth into diuers places. Therefore I take that they were now gathered together, that hereafter they might be daily followers of him: as if it had bene said, they did not so goe from their maister, as if euery one had a continuall ordinary office of teaching, but to preach for a time, thē to returne to schoole againe, that they might profit better.

The multitude followed him . Though it was not knowne to Christe, ( who knew all things before ) what would come to passe, yet his will was as a man to prouide for his disciples, that he might in deed declare, that hee had a care of them. And by that great concourse it appeareth, how famous his name was euery where. that the Iewes might be inexcusable, which through their owne slouthfulnesse were deprived of the benefit of saluation offered them. And yet of this great multitude, which were enflamed with a sodaine heate to followe Christ, there was but a very small number, which gaue themselves to his doctrine truly and constantly, as it appeareth by Iohn.

14. Hee was moued with compassion . The other two doe expresse more plainly, and especially Marke, why Christe tooke this compassion : to wit, because hee saw hungry soules caried by their hot and zealous desire from their owne dwelling places into the desert. And that want of doctrine was a token of a miserabe dissipation : therefore Marke sayeth, that Christe hadde compassion on them ; because they were as sheepe wanting shepheards, not that hee acknowledged them all for sheepe after the spirite of the God-head, but as hee was manne hee gaue iudgement of the present sight of them . For this was no small token of piety, to leaue their owne houses, and to come in flockes to the Prophet of God, though hee of set purpose auoyded out of their sight . Then it is good to note, that Christe was mindefull of that person, which hee sustayned : he hadde the office of a doctour layde vpon him : therefore hee ought for a time to account all the Iewes of the flocke and Church of God, vntill they shoulde estrange themselves . But this mercifull affection so preuayled in Christe, that being wearied with his disciples, and almost ouerwhelmed with continuall trouble, woulde not yet spare himselfe . Hee hadde sought some time of refreshing, and that not so much for himselfe as for his disciples : yet, because the necessitie of his office called him to a new labour: hee willingly leaueeth that priuate respecte ; and employeth himselfe in teaching the multitudes . And though hee hath now put off all those affections, which doe fall into a mortall man, yet it is no doubt but that he looketh downe from heauen vpon those miserable sheepe, which want a shepherd, so that they seeke remedy for their want. Marke sayeth that hee taught them many things: that is, that hee preached long, that they might cary away some sound profite. Luke sayeth, that he spake of the kingdome of God, which is the same in effect. Matthew maketh no mention but of the myracles : because that there was no oft weight in the to get Christ a name. But it is easily gathered, that he omitted not the doctrine, which was the chiefe.

15. When euen was come. Now the disciples were frustrate of their hope, now they see christe busied in teaching, also the people were so desirous to be taught, that they thought not of returning. therefore they admonish christe, that in regard of their bodies he should send them away into the next townes. And he purposely had deferred the myracle which he thought to worke vnto that time. First, that his disciples being stirred somewhat vp to the consideration of the same, might the better profit thereby: then, that the circumstance of the time it selfe shoulde teach, though hee preuent not their necessities, neither helpeth them at the last, that he yet doth neuer cast a way the care of them, but hath alwayes helpe ready in his hand, which he will bestow in the very moment.

16. Giue yee to them to eate. Because this myracle is fullyer expounded in the 6. chapter of Iohn, least the repetition should be troublesome to the readers, I had rather it should be sought there: yet least nothing should be spoken here, I will briefly set downe the summe. Christ as yet had employed his labour to feed the soules, now he also extendeth his pastorly office euen to the care also of the bodies. Wherein he also confirmeth that saying of his, that to them that seeke the kingdom of God and the righteousnes thereof, all other things shall then be giuen, Matth. 6 23. It is not to be hoped, that Christ will alwayes in this maner giue foode to them that want and be hungry: yet it is certaine that he will neuer suffer that his should want such thinges, as shoulde maintaine life, but that hee would reach his hand from heauen, when hee shall so see it meete for the helpe of their necessities. But they, which desire that Christe should nourish them, must also learne not to desire exquisite deinties, but to be content with barley bread. That Christ cōmandeth the people to sit downe by companies, was first for this purpose, that they being so disposed into companies, the myracle might be the more eident: Then that the men might be the easlyer nūbred, & when some should looke vpon others, they might themselues be witnessles of this heauenly grace. Thirdly, because he saw the disciples so carefull he would try their obedience by cōmanding them that, which seemed in shew to be as a iest. For it was wonder to what end christ hauing no cates, would make a shew of a banquet. To the same purpose also belong those thinges which followe: the loaves were giuen to the disciples, so that the wonderful plenty should grow betweene their hands, and so they should be the ministers of the diuine power of Christ. For, as if it were a small matter for them to be eye witnessles, Christ would that they should feele and handle his power. Two hundreth peeces of money here spokē of by Budeus account, amounteth aboute the value of thirty foure French poundes. So they esteeme a little bread for euery man at a French souse. But when they had made account of so much bread, which shoulde suffice to feede the people but meanely, their obedience deserueth no small prayse, while they simply obeying the commandement of Christe, doe commit the successe to his will and pleasure.

19. Hee blessed. Blessing is taken in this place, as it is oft tymes o-ther where, for giuing of thankes. But Christ teacheth vs by his example, that wee cannot otherwise eate meates holily and purely, except wee doe shew our thankfulness to God, out of whose hand they come vnto vs. Therefore Paul saith, 1. Tim. 4. 5. Whatsoeuer meates God doth giue to vs, they are sanctified by the word of God and prayer. Wherin he declareth that those as beastly men (which neither account of the blessing of God faithfully, nor doe prayse the same in giuing of thankes) doe defile and pollute with the filthy pollutions of their owne infidelitie, whatsoeuer was by the owne nature pure: and againe, the meate which they do deuour, is polluted and defiled: Christ therefore prescribed to his a manner of eating, least they shoulde with wicked sacriledge prophane themselues and the benefites of GOD. The lifting vp of the eyes into heauen, doe declare an earnest and a vehement affection of prayers. Not that this gesture should be alwayes necessary when wee do pray: but because that the sonne of God woulde not neglect those ceremonies profitable for mans infirmitie. Also the lifting vpp of our eies is a fit spurre to stirre vp our sluggishnes, for that our mindes are too much bent downeward to the earth.

20. They tooke vp of the fragments, that remained. When as the fragmets which were left, after that so great a number of men were filled, were twelue times more then was set downe at the first, this gaue no small light to the miracle. For all men vnderstood thereby, that Christ by his power did not only create meates for them of nothing, which should suffice for the present vse, but if need should be, he could also prouide for the necessitie to come. Lastly, the miracle, being wrought, Christ would that this should be gathered againe to be a notable testimony of the same, that they which were filled with meate should now at leasure behold the same. But though Christ doth not dayly multiply loaues, neyther feedeth men without their handy labour, or tyllage of the fieldes; yet the fruite of this history extendeth euen to vs. For our slouthfulnes and vnthankfulnes is the onely hinderance why we doe not see the aboundance of corne, whereby we should liue, increased by the blessing of God dayly vpon vs: Also, that besides the refreshing & nourishing of vs there also remaineth seed for the ground of one yeares increase, euery one of vs should thinke with himselfe, that it is not without heavenly increase, if that the same wickednes hindred not, which blindeth aswell the eies of the minde, as of the flesh, least they should beholde the manifest worke of God. Also Christe declareth, that as all things are giuen of the father to him and into his hande, so the meates with which wee are fed doe flow and come to vs from his grace.

Luke

22. And straightway Iesus compelled his disciples to enter into a ship and to goe ouer before him, while hee sent the multitude away.

45. And straightway hee caused his disciples to go into the ship and to goe before on the other side vnto Bethsaida, while hee sent away the people.

23 And assoone as he had sent the multitude away, hee went vp into a mountain alone to pray: & when the euening was come, he was there alone

46. Then assoone as he had sent them away, hee departed into a mountaine to pray.

24 And the ship was now in the midst of the sea, and was tossed with waues: for it was a contrary wind.

47. And when euen was come the shippe was in the midst of the sea, and he alone on the land.

25. And in the fourth watch of the night, Iesus went vnto them, walking on the sea.

48. And hee sawe them troubled in rowing (for the wind was contrary to them), and about the fourth watch of the night he came vpon them, walking vpon the sea, and would haue passed by them.

26. And when his Disciples sawe him walking on the sea, they were troubled, saying, it is a spirit, & cryed out for feare.

49. And when they sawe him walking vpon the sea, they supposed it had been a spirit, and cryed out.

27. But straightway Iesus spake vnto them, saying, be of good comfort, It is I, be not afraid.

28. Then

50. For

28. Then Peter answered him, and sayde, Maister, if it be thou bid me come vnto thee on the water.

29. And he sayd come, And when Peter was come downe out of the ship, he walked on the water, to goe to Iesus.

30. But when hee saw a mightie wind, hee was afraid: and as he began to sinke, he cryed, saying, maister, saue mee.

31. So immediately Iesus stretched forth his hand, and caught him, and said, to him, O thou of litle faith, wherfore didst thou doubt?

32. And assoone as they were come into the ship, the wind ceased.

33. Then they that were in the ship came and worshipped him, saying, of a truth thou art the sonne of God.

50. For they all saw him, and were sore afraid: but anon hee talked with them, and sayd vnto them, bee of good comfort: it is I, be not asfrayd.

51. Then he went vp vnto them into the shippe, and the wind ceased, and they were sore amased in themselves beyond measure, and maruailed.

52. For they had not considered the matter of the leaues, because their hearts were hardened.

22. Iesus compelled his disciples. It behooued him to compell them, because to leaue him, they would not haue passed ouer to an other place, but against their willes. Also they doe herein declare how much they obey him, while against their owne minde, they giue place and obey his commandement. And certainly in shew it seemed very absurd, that he would remaine alone in a desert place, when night approached. Therefore their aptnes to be taught deserued so much the more praise, for that the authoritie of the heauenly maister was more regarded and esteemed by them, then that which might seeme probable on the contrary part. And wee doe not rightly and perfectly obey God, except wee doe simply follow whatsoeuer he commadeth, how much soeuer our sense repugne against the same. Certainly God alwayes hath the best reason and ground of his counsell and commandement, but he often hideth the same from vs, that we might learne not to bee selfewise, but wholly to depend vpon his will. Thus Christ compelde his disciples to passe ouer, that hee might frame them to that rule of obedience, which I spake of. Neyther is there any doubt, but that hee would make himselfe a way to the miracle which next followeth.

23. Hee went vp into a mountaine alone. It is likely that the sonne of GOD, from whom the tempest to come could not be hid, did not neglect in his prayers the preservation of his disciples: yet it is maruaile why hee doeth not rather preuent the perill, then apply himselfe to prayer. But that hee might fulfill the partes of a mediatur, hee sheweth himselfe to bee both God and manne, and gaue testimonies of both natures, as farre as the matter required. When he had all things at his owne will, hee shewed himselfe to bee a man by praying, neyther did hee that fainedly, but hee shewed a sincere affection of humane loue towards vs. In this matter the diuine maicstie withdrew it selfe after a sorte, which yet shewed it selfe at length in his order. But in going vp into the mountaine, he sought oportunitie, that he might the freclier pray farre from all noyse. Wee know how easily the ardent zeale in prayer, through the least disturbanees either falleth away, or else waxeth colde. And though Christe had not this imperfection, yet his will was: to teach vs by his example, diligently to vse all helpes, which may deliuer our mindes from all the snares of the world, that we being free, may bee wholly bent into heauen. And solitarinesse much auaieth in this, that they which prepare themselves to prayer, should be the more diligent, hauing God alone for witness, powring out their heart into his bosome, they should the more diligently examine themselves: lastly, considering with themselves that they haue to doe with God, let them lift vp themselves about themselves. Yet it is to be noted that he setteth not downe a lawe, as if it were not lawfull to pray any other where but in secrete: for Paule also commandeth vs to lift vp pure hands euery where, 1. Tim. 2. 8. And Christe himselfe sometime prayed before menne: and hee also taught his disciples, that they being gathered together, should conceiue prayers openly amongst themselves. But that liberty of praying in all places hindereth not, but that they should also vse priuate prayers in time conuenient.

23. The ship was now in the midst of the sea. The readers shal find this history expounded by me vpon the sixt chapter of Iohn, & therefore I will be the shorter here. Christ suffered his disciples to be tossed with a troublesome tempest, and with some danger for a time, to that ende that they might with reader mindes receiue helpe when it should bee brought them: for the contrary wind rose about midnight, or a little before. And then at the fourth watch Christ appeared, that is, three houres full before day: so their faith was as hardly shakē with terrours, as their armes were toyled with rowing. But when necessitie it selfe most vrged them to desire their maisters presence, they were two grosse and blockish to be feared at his sight, as if he had beene a spirit. For this cause Marke sayeth that their hearts were blinded, & vnderstood not the matter of the loaves. For by that myracle they were sufficiently taught, that Christe wanted not diuine powre to helpe his: & that he doth carefully prouide for them, when necessitie so requireth. Therefore their sluggishnes now is worthily condemned: because they do not presently call to mind that heauenly power, a notable token whereof being shewed but late, ought to be present before their eyes. But through the fault of their sluggishnes they were afraid, because they had not profited by the former myracles so rightly as became them: but their blindnes is especially reprov'd, because they had forgotten that, which they saw so late, or rather that they applyed not their mindes to consider the Godhead, whereof the multiplying of the loaves was testimony euident enough. Yet Marke setteth downe two things in his wordes, that they considered not throughly the glory of Christ, which was shewed in multiplying the loaves: then hee declareth the cause, for that their hearts were hardned. And that seemeth to bee added not onely for the aggrauating of the greatnes of the fault: but also to admonish vs of the firmite of our minde, that we should aske new eyes of the Lorde. Certainly, it was, as I sayde euen now, too beastly ignoraunce not to vnderstande, as it were, the palpable power of God. Yet, because all mankinde is sicke of the same disease, Marke doth of purpose make mention of the blindnesse, that wee might knowe that it is no newe matter, if menne cannot see into the manyfoll works of God, until they be lighned from aboue: as Moses also said, Duet. : 24-

Yet the Lorde hath not giuen you an hearte to vnderstand . And though the woorde heart doeth often signifie the will or the seate of affections , yet heere in this place, as also in the place of Moses, which I cited, it is taken for the minde.

27. Straight way Iesus spake vnto them. Because Christe is not knowne to bee the deliuerer, while he offereth himselfe in deede, hee calleth his disciples by his worde to the knowledge of him. Also the comfort, which he exhorteth them vnto, is in his owne presence: as if he should haue said, After they vnderstand that hee is present with them, they haue assured cause to be of good comfort. But because that feare had possessed their mindes, hee reprooueth it, least it shoulde hinder him, and delay their comforte. Not that they could be ioyfull and comforted without all feare: but because it was necessary that the feare, which hadde preuailed should be appeased, least it shoulde ouerwhelme their comforte . And though the voyce of the Sonne of God is to the reprobate deadly, and his presence terrible , yet heere is described to vs farre contrary effectes of the same to the faithfull: to witte, that inward peace, and comfortable boldnes, obtaineth the victory in our hearts, least we should giue place to fleshly feares. But then blinde and inconsiderate tumults do trouble vs: because that we being vnthankfull and malicious, do not hold out the innumerable benefites of God, as bucklers, which being rightly considered, should be sufficient to stay vs vp. And though it was high time to haue helpe, when Christe appeared, yet the tēpest doth not presently cease, vntill the disciples were better stirred vpe both to desire, and also to hope for his grace. And that is to be noted, that he might know, that the Lord doth not without cause oft times defer that deliuerance, which he hath in his hand.

28. Then Peter answered him. The exception which he maketh declareth that his fayth was not yet ripe. If it be thou (sayth he) command me to come. But he had heard Christ speake: therefore why doeth he doubtingly and vncertainly thus wauer yet in himselfe? but in that so small and weake fayth there breaketh out a heate of inconsiderat zeale: for hee ought to haue mette himselfe by his owne measure, & rather to pray to Christ for encrease of fayth, that by the guiding & direction of the same, he might at length passe ouer seas and mountaines: but he now desireth rashly to flye without the wings of faith: & whereas the worde of Christ was not firmly nor rightly setled in his heart, hee desireth that the waters should be firme vnder his feete. Yet it is not to be doubted, but that this affectiō sprang of a good beginning: but, because it degenerateth into a corrupt extremitie, it looeth the praise of goodnes . And of this it commeth to passe, that Peter presently tasteth the punishment of his rashnesse . Wherefore lette the faithfull be taught by this example to take heede of rash hastinesse . Whether soeuer the Lord calleth wee must runne diligently, but hee which passeth further shall feele at length by his vnhappy successe, what it is to passe beyonde his owne boundes: Yet it may bee demaunded, why Christ shoulde graunt Peters requeste: For hee seemeth so to allow it. But the answeare is readie, GOD for the most parte prouideth best for vs by denying those things, which wee desire: and sometimes hee graunteth our requestes, that hee may the better conuince vs by experience of our owne foolishnesse. So, when hee daily granteth to his faithfull ones more then is meete, hee instructeth them in sobrietie, and modestie against the time to come. Furthermore, this was profitable for Peter and the rest, and is also profitable for vs at this day. The power of Christ shewed it selfe more euidently in the person of Peter, whē he tookē him as a companion with him: then, if hee had walked a'one vpon the waters. Yet Peter knoweth, and others doe plainly behold that he began to sinke, because he rested not in a perfect faith, nor reposed himselfe in the word of G O D by trusting the secret power of God, which did before make the waters strong: yet Christ dealeth louingly with him, because he suffered him not altogether to be swallowed vp. Both these things befall to vs. For as Peter asleone as hee was afraid, began to sinke, so the fraile and vaine cogitations of the fleische doe to worke in vs, that we sinke in the midst of the course of our affaires, yet the Lord pardoneth our infirmitie, and reacheth out his hande, least the waters shoulde drowne vs altogether. It is also to be noted that Peter seeing that his rashnesse had but euill and badde successe, committeth himselfe to the mercy of Christe.

 Wherefore though we be worthily punished, it behoueth vs yet to flye to him, that he hauing mercy vpon vs, may giue vs that helpe, whereof we are vnworthy

31. O thou of little faith. Christ doth louingly preserue Peter, yet so that hee doth not nourish nor flatter his fault. This is the ende and purpose of this reprofe, wherein the weakenesse of his faith is condemned: yet it is demanded whether euery feare doth argue a want of faith: for so the words of Christ doe seeme to note, there ought to bee no doubting where faith doth raigne. I an-swere, Christ doth heere reprove a doubting, which was directly contrary to faith. It may so be that a man may doubt without offence, as where the word of God hath not yet made vs certaine and sure. But the estate of Peter was otherwise, who being instructed by the commandement of Christ, and now hauing experience of his power, yet fell to a vaine & peruerse feare from that double stay and strength he had.

33. They that were in the ship. I iudge that this was not onely spoken of the disciples, but of the mariners and other passengers. They therefore which had not yet professed to account him as a maister, do now sodainly confesse him to be the sonne of God, in which word they giue him the honour of the Messiah.
 For though that high mistery was not yet cōmonly known, how God should be manifested in flesh: yet, because they had learned out of the Prophetes, that hee which should be the redeemer, should be called the sonne of God, they which set forth the glory of Christ, with this title, do declare that they belecue in that Christ.

34 And when they were come ouer, they came into the land of Gennesaret. 35 And when the men of that place knew him, they sent out into all that country round aboute, and brought vnto him all that were sicke:
 36. And besought him that they might touch

53. And they came ouer ~~or~~ went into the land of Gennesaret, and arriued.
 54 So when they were come out of the ship, straightway they knew him:
 55. And ran about through all that region round about, and began to cary hither and thither in beds al that were sicke, where they heard that he was.
 56. And touch the hemme of his garment onely: and as many as touched it, were made whole.

56. And whither soeuer hee entred into townes, or cities, or villages, they laid their sick in their streets, & praid him that they might touch at least the edge of his garment. And as many as touched him were made whole.

34. They came into the land of Gennezareth. The Euangelists do meane that region, which was so called of the name of the lake, though it is vncertain whether the lake was so called, after the name of the lande: but in that there is no matter of waight. It behoueth vs especially to bende our eies thither, whither the Euangelistes do leade vs, that the glory of Christ was shewed not by one or two miraclis, but that coast of Iudea was replenished with innumerable testimonies of him, the same whereof might easily spread to Ierusalem and into other cities euery way. Whereby we gather how vile and wicked the vnthankfulness of that nation was, which maliciously shut their eies at the present brightness of the glory of God: nay, they endeouored as much as lay in them to extinguishe the same. But now it is our ducty in this so great a heap of myracles, to learne to know to what end Christ came: namely, that he might shew himselfe a Philition in healyng all diseases. For it behooueth vs to call to remembraunce that, which Mathew alleaged before out of the Prophet Isaias, that he by healing the diseases of the body, figured, as in a shadow, some greater thing: to wit, that he should restore our soules to health, and that his peculyar office should be to take away spiritual diseases. And though at this day he is not conuerfaunt vpon the earth, yet it is certaine that now in heauen he excelleth in exercising the same graces, whereof hee then gaue a visible testimony. And because wee all are diseased with all kinde of diseases vntill he heale: let euery one of vs not onely offer himselfe vnto him, but let him also endeouour to bring others, which are in neede of the like remedy.

36. That they might touch the hemme. It is to be supposed that they were somewhat superstitious, when as they tied the grace of Christ to the touching of his garment: at least they defrauded him of part of his honor, when they hoped for no pover by his simple word. But, least he should quech the smoaking flaxe, he applyeth himselfe to their simplicitie: yet here is no cause why they should flatter themselves, which seeke the grace of God in wood, or nayles, or garments, when as the scripture sayth expressly, that it is abominable to conceiue any thing of Christ, but according to the worthinesse of his spirituall and heauenly glory. Their infirmitie was borne with for a time, which not knowing that Christ was God, desired to come neerer to him. Now, sith hee filleth heauen and carth with the sauour of his grace, it behooueth vs to apprehend by faith the saluation, which he offereth vs from heauen, and not with handes or eyes.

1. Then gathered vnto him the Pharises, and certaine of the Scribes, which came rusalem, saying.

 2. Why do thy disciples transgresse the traditiō of the Elders? for they wash not their handes when they eate bread.
 3. But he answered & said vnto them, why do yee also transgresse the commandments of God by your traditions?
 4. For God hath cōmanded saying, Honour thy father & mother: & he that curseth father or mother, let him die the death.
 5. But ye, say, whosoever shall say to father or mother, by the gifte that is offered by mee, thou maist haue profit:
 6. Though he honour not his father or his mother, shall bee free. Thus haue yee made the commaundement of God of no authority by your traditions.
 7. O hypocrites, Esayas prophesied well of you, saying. 8. This people draweth neere vnto me with their mouth, and honoureth mee with their lippes: but their heart is farre from me.
 9. But in vaine they worshipp mee, teaching for doctriens the precepts of men.

came from Ierusalem.
 2. And when they sawe some of his Disciples eate meate with common handes (that is to say vnwashed) they complained.
 3. (For the Pharisees and all the Iewes, except they wash their hands oft, eate not, holding the traditions of the Elders.
 4. And when they come from the market, except they wash, they eate not: and many other things there be, which they haue taken vpon them to obserue, as the washing of pots, and of brasen vessels, and of tables.)
 5. Then asked him the Pharisees and Scribes why walke not thy disciples according to the tradition of the Elders, but eate meat with vnwashten hands?
 6. Then he answered and said vnto the, Surely Esay hath prophesied well of you, hypocrites, as it is written, This people honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far away from me
 7. But they worship me in vaine, teaching for doctriens the precepts of men.
 8. For ye lay the commandementes of God apart, and obserue the tradition of men, as the washing of pots and cups, and many other such like thinges yee doe.
 9. And he sayd vnto them, well, yee reiect the commaundement of God, that ye may obserue your owne tradition.
 10. For Moses sayd, Honour thy father and thy mother: and whosoever shall curse father or mother, let him die the death.
 11. But yee say, If a man say to father or mother, Corban, that is, by the gifte that is offered by mee, thou maist haue profit, hee shall bee free.
 12. So ye suffer him no more to do any thing for his father or his mother:
 13. Making the word of God of no authority, by your tradition, which yee haue ordayned: and doe many suchlike things.

1. Then came to Iesus. This is a place most worthy to be noted: because that heere is reprooued an offence no lesse daungerous then common. Wee see what frowardnesse there is in menne, both in the way and meanes of worshipping of GOD, for they doe dayly deuise newe kindes of worshipping, and the wiser any man would seeme to be, the more hee bendeth to thev his wit that way. I speake not of strangers, but of them which are of the household of the church, whom God hath peculiarly enriched with this honour, that they should holde that as the rule of pietie, which he hath spoken with his own mouth. God hath prescribed in what maner we should worship him, and in his law he hath comprehended a perfect holines. The most part as if it were a light and a vaine matter to obey God, and to obserue that which he hath commaunded, doe of themselves gather out of sundry places many additions to the same. They which are in authoritie doe wrest their owne deuises to this end. as if they had somewhat in their heades perfecter then the word of God. Then crept in tyranny: for when men once take to themselves that liberty to command, they doe seuerely exact the obseruation of their owne lawes, and doe not abide that the least title of the same should be omitted either in contempt or els by negligence. Also though the world cannot abide the lawfull gouernement, and is most rebellious in bearing the Lords yoake, yet it doth easily & willingly yeeld to the snares of vaine traditions. yea, and many seeme to desire such a seruitude. But the worship of God is defiled, which ought chiefly and principally to be obeyed, and the authoritie of men is preferred before his imperiall dignitie. And so the common people is hardly and tyrannously enforced to apply their whole indeuour vpon trifles. But this place teacheth vs that all fained worshippings doe displease God: because that he alone would be heard, that hee might order and frame vs to true pietie after his owne pleasure. Then they loose their labour which as people not satisfied with the onely law of God, do weare themselves in obseruing the traditions of men. Thirdly, God is injured when as the deuises of men are extold so high, that the maiestie of his law should fall away, or the ruerence of the same at least should waxe colde.

The Scribes and Pharises, which were of Ierusalem. It is not declared for what purpose these Scribes came to Iesus: yet, to mee it seemeth probable, that they beeing moued with his fame, should come with a desire to learne, for as much as hee seemed to be a fit master: though it may be that they were sent as spies. Howe soeuer the matter was, because they brought their owne selfe liking with them, the least offence might easily exasperate them to bite or gnaw at Christe. Whereby wee see howe harde it is for them to be drawne to sound doctrine, which are possessed with ambition and desire of raigne: especially they which are addicted to ceremonies which haue bene long accustomed, doe admit no newe thing, but doe obstinately condemne whatsoeuer is not accustomed. To be short, there cannot be a people more Lordly nor more frowarde then these men were. Both the Euangelistes doe make mention both of the Scribes and of the Pharises. Yet Matthew speaketh of them in the entrance into the hystory, and Marke placeth them after. But the meaning is all one: for they meane, that of other sectes the Scribes came, but the Pharises were the cheife, as they which then were most honoured, and the gouernment then was in their hands. And it is no maruaile that they were soonest offended with the contempt of the lawes, which they themselves had made. For, as we sayde before, when as they boasted themselves to be the interpreters of the lawe, and therefore had their name giuen them, they had corrupted the puritie of the word with their owne deuises: and so what traditions soeuer the Iewes then hadde, came out of their shoppe: wherefore they became the hotter, and shewed themselues the sharper defenders of them.

2. Why doe thy disciples. When the controuersie is of mans traditions, this question is not of politike lawes, the vse and end whereof doe tende to another purpose, then to prescribe how God should be worshipped: but, because there is a diuersitie of mans traditions, there must be some distinction vsed. For there are some, which are manifest wicked, because they do institute wicked maner of worshippings, and such as are full contrary to the worde of God. Others, mixing the worship of God with prophane trifles, doe defile the puritie of the same. Others, which haue some more colour, not being infected with any notable fault, are yet for this cause condemned: for that they are imagined to be necessary for the worship of God, and so God is not meereley obeyed, and the consciences are caught as in a snare. It is euident that the treatie here is of this latter sort. For the washing of hands, which the Pharisees vrged, could not of it selfe be condemned of wicked superstition: for else Christ would not haue suffered the water pots to haue been placed at the mariage, except the ceremonie had beene lawfull: but the fault was in this, that they thought that God could not bee otherwise rightly worshipped. That ceremonie of washing was not brought in at the first without som goodly pretence. We know how seuerely the law of God required outward cleanes, not that the Lorde would haue his seruants to be stayd in the same, but that they should the more carefully take heede of all spirituall vncleannes. But the law held a meane in these washings, & then came these doctors vpon it, which thought not themselues wise enough, except they added somwhat to the word of God: & hercof came those washings, whereof there is no mention in the law. The lawgiuers themselues would not bragge that they had giuen any new law, but onely that they had added certaine cautions, which should be meanes and helpes for the obseruing of the law of God. And presently corruption followed, whē as the ceremonies brought in by man beganne to be accounted as part of the worshippe of God: and also when there was a necessitie layd vpon free and voluntary actions. For, God (as it is saide before) would alwayes bee worshipped by the prescript rule of his own word: and therefore no adition to his lawe is tollerable. For as hee permitteth the faithfull to haue certaine outward rites, wherein they might exercise themselues to godlynesse: so he suffered them not to be mixed with his woorde, as if religion were in them. They wash not their handes. The cause of the offence is set forth more at large by Marke: but this is the summe, there were many customes amongst the Scribes, which they tooke vpon them to obserue of their owne will: those were secundary lawes inuented by curious heades, as if the onely commaundement of God were not sufficient. This pertained to cups, vessels, garments and other things pertaining to household, that they should not touch any vncleane or defiled thing. But to deuise new washings was a vaine and idle device. This was not without a colourable cloake, as Paul sayth Col. 2.23. The inuentions of men haue a shew of wisdom: but if they had stayd themselues in the onely law of God, their modestie should haue bene more approued, then their scrupulous doubtfulnes.

Their wil was to prouide that no vncleane person should rashly & without consideration eate meat: but it was sufficient for the Lorde to purge the apparant spots. Also these deuises had neither any end nor measure: for they could scarce moue a finger, but some newe blot would arise: but this corruption was much the worse, because it was cast as a religion vpon the consciences, that he should bee guilty of vncleanness, which did not often wash his body with water. It may be they would haue borne with the contempt of this ceremony in meane men. but, because they had conceiued a greater & more excellent estimation of Christ & his disciples, it seemeth to be an hainous offence, that the rites appointed by the Elders, which were religiously vsed by the Scribes, should not be obserued by the disciples of that maister, who professed a better matter, then the present estate deliuered. Also they are much deceiued, which do compare the sprinckling of their coniuered water, which the Papistes call holy water, with the Iewish washings. For the Papistes doe blot out as much as lyeth in them, that one Baptisme by the iterating of the same so oft. Then it is applyed to exorcismes, & that toyish sprinckling is supposed to be of force, to wash away sinnes. If that it were a thing lawfull of it selfe, and were free from such corruptions, yet that necessitie, which they vrge, is alwayes to be condemned.

3. Why doe yee also transgresse the commaundements of God? Christe maketh heere a double answer: the first is to the person (as they say) the other containeth the definition of the matter and cause. The order is otherwise set downe in Marke, who first bringeth in that which Christe spake of the whole matter: then he addeth the reproofe, wherein he inuicigheth against hypocrites: we will follow the course obserued by Matth. Againe, when as the Lord demaundeth of the Scribes, why they defile the law of God, through their owne traditions, he doth not yet plainly deliuer his disciples from the fault objected against them: but he onely sheweth them how wicked, preposterous and froward they were. They take it grieuously that the preceptes of menne are not exactly obserued: howe much more grieuous a matter is it, that the law of God being neglected, they shoulde employ their whole endeouour in the obseruing of these traditions? Therefore it appeareth that they were moued rather with ambition, then with a true and right zeale, while they so preferre menne before God. Also it doth easily appeare by the text, in what sence hee sayeth that the commaundements of God are transgressed. They did not openly, or professedly abolish the law of God, as to affirme that to be lawfull, which the law had forbidden: but they did indirectly transgresse the same, when as the exercises enioyned by the Lorde were suffered by them carelessly to bee omitted. The example which Christe bringeth is plaine and familiar, God hath commaunded that children should honour their parents. Yet because the offrings made for the gaine of the priests, the gathering of them was so narrowly looked to, that they imagined that he sinned more grieuously that offered nothing, then he that iobd his parents of the honor due to them. Also that which according to the law of God was left as a thing voluntary was of more importance in the iudgement of the Scribes, then one of the chiefe cōmandements of God. Therefore as oft as we are so bēe to keepe the lawes of men, so ſh we inploy lesse diligence & care, for the keeping of the law of god, we are accounted to transgresse the same. A little after he saith ſh the cōmandemēt of god is made of no authority, by the traditiōs of mē: because the

the Scribes doe hold the people so bound to their deuises, that there could no time or leasure be left to the word of God: also, because they thought, that they had done their dutie very well, that had waited of them at an ynch, and hereof arose a libertie to sinne. For it is thought that the lawe of God may bee freely broken, sith that holinesse is rather put in the obseruation of other things then of it. Now, let every man consider with himselfe whether this fault aboundeth not more at this day amongst the Papistes, then in times past amongst the Iewes. The Pope with the whole dunghill of his cleargie denieth not but that GOD ought to be obeyed: but when they come to the purpose, where as they detest the talking of a little flesh, as a deadly sinne, and theft and whoredome but as a venial sinne, they overthrow the law of God for their owne traditions: and it is no way to be suffered, that the obseruation of mans deuises shoulde diminish any of that obedience, which is due to God alone. Further, the honour which God commandeth to yeelde to the parents, is extended to all the duties of godlines. The last clause that Christ addeth, that hee is worthy of death, which curseth his father or his mother, tendeth to this, that wee shoulde knowe that the commandement of honoring the parents, is not small or of light importãce sith that the breach of the same is so sharply punished. And this doth not a little amplifie the sinne of the Scribes, that so seuer a threatning terrifieth not them from letting the bridle loose to contemners of parents.

5. Eui. ye say. This sentence wanteth that, which is more fully set downe in Marke, where it is added, you suffer him no more to doe anything for his father and mother. And the meaning is that the Scribes doe wickedly in absolving them, which withdraw their soulds from doing their duties to their parents, so that they supply that want with a voluntary sacrifice, which might have bene omitted without any offence to God. Neyther may the words of Christ be so taken as if the Scribes should haue restrained men from all right obedience: but they did so earnestly apply themselues to get their pray, that children in the meane space did not their dutie to their parents.

7. Esayas prophesied well of you. Nowe the Lord proceedeth further. For hee speaketh of the cause it selfe, which hee denideth into two partes. The first is, that they being onely bent to outward rites, esteemed nothing of true holines, which consisteth in the sincere integritie of the heart: the other, that they peruerfely worshipped God, after their owne will. And though hee seemeth to reprove the men, when he speaketh against counterfeit and feigned holines, yet he comprehendeth the summe of doctrine, which is fully defined thus. The worship of God is spirituall, and consisteth not in sprinkling of water, or in any other ceremony. Al o there is no other reasonable seruice of God, then that which is framed after his worde. And though Esayas prophesied not only of the time to come, but had respect to the men of his age, yet Christe sayeth that this prophesie belongeth to the Scribes and Pharisees: because they were like to those old hypocrites, with whom the Prophet had to doe, Christ rehearseth it not after the word that is there set downe. yet the Prophet doth expressly mention these two faultes, wherewith the Iewes had prouoked the vengeance of God against themselues: that they fained a holinesse onely with the lippes and outward profession: further, that they declined to fained worshippings.

First therefore it is wicked hypocricie, when men doe not honour God, but in outward shew for it were not euil of it self to draw neere to god with thy mouth & lips, so that the heart went before. This therefore is the sum, because the worship of god is spiritual, & nothing pleaseth him, except the inward sincerity of h̄ hart be ioyned with it, they are hypocrits, which put holines in outward pomps

9. They worship in vaine. The Prophet speaketh word for word thus. Their feare was taught by the precept of men. But Christ doth faithfully and aptly yeelde the sense thus, God is worshipped in vaine, where the will of men is thrust in for doctrine. Also by these words all voluntary religions, as Paul calleth them, Col. 2. 23. are euidently condemned. For, as we sayd, sith that God will bee worshipped after his owne will, onely he alloweth no new fashions of worshipping him to be imagined. Therefore when as man beginneth to wander out of the cōpasse of the word of God, the more earnestly & curiously he applyeth himselfe to worship him, the greater iudgment he pulleth downe vpon himselfe: because religion is prophaned by such inuentiōs. The appositio consisteth in these words, teaching doctrines the precepts of men. For Christ affirmeth that they go astray, which in place of doctrin do thrust in the cōmandemens of mē: or which worship god after h̄ rule. Therefore, sith obedience before God is better accepted then sacrifice, let this be holden as certaine, h̄ all fained worshippinges are vaine before him, yea, as the Prophet testifieth, they are accursed & detestable

10. Then he called the multitude vnto him, and said to them, heare and vnderstand. 11. That which goeth into the mouth defileth not the man but that which commeth out of the mouth defileth the man. 12. Then came his disciples, & said to him, perceiuest thou not that the Pharisees are offended in hearing this saying? 13. But he answered & said, euery plant which mine heavenly father hath not planted, shall be rooted vp. 14. Let them alone: they be the blind leaders of the blind, and if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch. 15. Then answered Peter & said to h̄, declare to vs this parable. 16. Then said Iesus, are ye yet without vnderstanding? 17. Perceiue ye not yet, that what soeuer entreth into the mouth, goeth into the belly, & is cast into the draught. 18. But those things which procede out of the mouth, come from the heart & they defile the man. 19. For out of the heart come euill thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications,

14. Then he called the whole multitude vnto him, & said vnto them, heare ye me all to mee and vnderstand. 15. There is nothing without a man that can defile him, when it entreth into him but the things which proceed out of him are they which defile the man. 16. If any haue eares to heare, let him heare. 17. And when he came into an house away from the people, his disciples asked him concerning the parable. 18. And he said vnto them, what are ye without vnderstanding also? Doe ye not knowe that what soeuer thing from without entreth into a man, cannot defile him, 19. Because it entreth not into his heart, but into the belly, and goeth into the draught, which is the purging of all meates? 20. Then hee said that which commeth out of man, that defileth man. 21. For from within, euen out of the heart of men proceed euill thoughts, adulteries, fornications and murders. 22. Theftes, couetousnes, wickednes, deceit, vncleannes, a wicked eye, bawling, pride, foolishnes.

39. And he spake a parable vnto them can the blind lead the blind shall they not both fall into the ditch?

Wons, thefts, false testimonies, slanders. 20. These are the things, which defile the man: but to eat with vnwashed hands, defileth not the man.	23. All these euill things come from within, and defile a man.

10. He called the multitude vnto him. Here Christe turning himselfe to such as were willing to be taught, doth more at large expound that which hee had touched before, that the kingdom of God consisteth not in meate & drink, as Paul also teacheth. Ro. 14. 17. For when as outward things by nature are cleane, the vse of them is also free & cleane. Neither commeth the vncleannes of the good creatures of God. Therefore this is a generall iudgement, that vncleannes commeth not into man from without, but that the fountaine is hid in himselfe. But by Synecdoche hee saieti, that out of the mouth of man commeth all those euils, which euery man bringeth forth of him. For he alludeth to the present matter, as if he should haue said, we do not draw in at our mouth vncleannes together with meat and drinke: but all kind of filthines floweth out from vs.

12. Perceiuest thou that the Pharises. Because the Scribes were very froward & vnframeable, Christ bestowed not much labour in appeasing them, but had enough to do to reprove their hipocrisie & pride. So the offence which they had first conceiued is doubled, where they see their washings not carelesly, but as it were professedly despised of Christ as trifles. Now, in that christ doubted not to set their malicious & poysoned mindes more on fire by pricking the so sharply, let vs learne by his exāple not greatly to regard whether our doings and sayings please all men: yet the disciples (as it is the maner of rude & vnlearned men) do gather by the hard successe, that Christ answered dangerously & ill. For to this purpose tended their admonitiō, that christ by correcting his ouer sharp speech, should endeour to pacific their offended minds. This is almost a thing common to the weake, to iudge euil of that doctrine, which they see received with vnrighteous & eniuous eares. And certainly it were to bee wished that the same might quietly & without offence haue the allowance of all men: but sith Sathan blindeth many mēes minds, & enflameth their hearts euē with madnes, and holdeth many soules ouerwhelmed with a beastly blockishnes, it cānot be that the true doctrine of saluation should fauor with all men: but especially it is no maruaile to see them exasperated, which nourish within them the poyson of malice and vntowardnesse. We must endenour our selues so farre as lawfully we may, that no offence may arise of our maner of teaching. But it were a poynt of extreme madnes for vs to moderate as it were with great wisdom the doctrine which we are taught of the heauenly maister. But we see how of his speech wicked & lewde men tooke occasion of offence: yea, wee see how that shew of offence which was maliciously taken, was handled on either side.

13. Euery plant. Because that the weake minds were wounded with that the doctrine had no better successe, Christ would remedy that mischief. And he applyeth this remedy, there is no cause why good men should be troubled, or shuld the lesse honorably esteeme of the doctrine, though it light vpon many to their destructiō. This place is ignorantly expoued of some, that al the inuentions of men, & whatsoever proceedeth not out of the mouth of God, must bee rooted vp, and perish: For Christ hath respecte rather vnto menne, and the meaning is, that it is no meruaile if the doctrine of saluation become deadly to the reprobate For they are alwayes caied headlong to destruction, that are appointed to the same. Vnder stand therefore those that are planted with the hand of God, to be them, which by his free adoption are grafted into the tree of life: as Iſaiaſ also 60. 21. calleth the Church renewed by the grace of Christ, a graft planted by the Lord. Further, for that saluation commeth only of Gods election, it is necessary that the reprobate doe perishe, by what meanes soeuer it be donne: not that God will destroy the innocent, and them that are without fault, but because they of their owne malice do turne to their owne destruction what-soeuer is offered them, though it be wholeſome. So it commeth to passe, that the Gospell to them that willingly perishe, is a fauour of death to death, as Paul witnesseth. 2. Cor. 2. 16. For though it be proposed vnto all men for saluation, yet it bringeth not forth this fruite but in the elect. Also it is the part of a faithfull and good teacher, so to temper whatſoeuer he bringeth forth, that it may profit all menne: but how oft soeuer it falleth out otherwise, let vs comfort our selues with this answer of Christe. And the similitude doeth notably expresse the cause of the destruction not to be in the doctrine, but the reprobate, which haue no roote in God, hauing the doctrine set before them, doe vomit out their hidden poyson, that they might bring with hast that death vpon themselves, to the which they were before appointed. Note that Christ specially meaneth the hypocrits, which for a time seeme to be planted as the good trees: for the Epicures, which are notorious for their grosse and infamous contempt of God, are not properly said to be like to trees: but they, in whom some vaine shew of godlinesse shineth. Such were the Scribes, which were a leſt in the Church of God, no otherwise then the Cedars in Libanon: so that their falling away might seeme the more absurd. Further, where Christe might haue sayde, that they doe worthily perishe, which downworthily refuse their saluation, he goeth deeper, and denyeth that any manne can alwayes stand, except his saluation be established in Gods election. In which words he plainly sheweth that the first beginning of our saluation commeth of that grace, wherein God chose vs vnto himselfe for his children before we were created.

14. Let them alone. He sayeth that they are vnworthy, that there should any account behadde of them: therefore, that there is no cause why their offence should much trouble vs. From hence was gathered that olde distinction of auoyding offences, which must be regarded, least offence be giuē to the weak: but, if any stubborne or malicious wicked person should take offence, that it is not to be regarded: for, if we would satisfie the frowardnes of all menne, it were necessary that Christ, who is the rocke of offence, should be buried. Therefore it is conuenient to know the difference betweene the weak, which being offended by ignorance, do presently apply themselves to be cured, & the proud and froward which take offences, least the weak be troubled through our fault. But whereas the wicked will frowardly be troubled, let vs without regard go through the midst of offences. For he that sparreth not the weak brethren, treadeth them as it were vnder his feete, to whome we are commaunded to reach our hand: but it were not conuenient to regard others, into whose offences it is necessary to fall, if wee desire to hold a right course. Further, where vnder pretence of offence it commeth to passe to those menne to be alienated, and to fall away frō Christ, they must be let alone, least they draw vs away with the. They

They are blinde leaders of the blinde. Christ declareth that they shall miserably perish, whosoeuer will bend the selues hither and thither after their pleasure: for when they will stumble in the plaine way, it doth hereby appeare that they are willingly blinde. Now, to what purpose should any man suffer himselfe to be gouerned by the, except that he would fall into the same pit. And christ, which sunne of righteouines shineth vs, by the light of the Gospel not only sheweth vs the way, but will haue the same preferred vs, not without cause calleth his disciples backe from that slouthfulness, least for the fauour of blinde men, they should wander as it were in darkenesse. Hereof we doe also gather that they all are inexcusable, which vnder pretence of simplicitie or modestie doe deliuer themselves to be deceiued and to be snared in errors. Luke in rehearsing this sentence, noteth no circumstance, but generally sayth that Christ vsed this similitude, as he mentioning many sayings of Christ, sheweth not to what purpose they were spokē. And it might also haue beene, that Christ spake this same thing oftner: yet I thought good to set it down in this place, because that other wher there is not an apter place, & Lu. declareth not the time whē it was spokē.

15. Peter answereth. Because the disciples doe bewray ouermuch rudenes, Christ doeth correct and reprove them, and worthily: for that they were as yet without vnderstanding, yet hee ceaseth not to be their teacher. That which Matthew by name doth attribute to Peter, Marke reporteth that it was in the same sence demanded of all of them, & that is euident by the answer of Christ, where not only the ignorance of Peter, but of them all together is reprooued. And the summe of it is, that men are not filled with meates, but they haue the filthinesse of sinnes shut vp within them, which doe openly breake foorth into deedes and workes. If any man do obiekt the intemperancie of feeding to be an vncleanesse, it is easily answered: for Christe spake not but of the natiue and lawfull vse of those thinges which God hath made subiect vnto vs. To eate and to drinke, is of it selfe a thing free and indifferent: if any corruption falleth out in the same, it springeth from man himselfe, and ought therefore to be accounted as an inward thing, and not an outward.

19. For out of the heart come euill thoughtes. Hereby wee gather that which I gaue warning of before, that the woorde mouth, was first vsed here of Christe, by reason of the circumstance of the present place, but now there is no mention of the mouth: but it is only said, that from the heart of man proceedeth whatsoeuer is vncleane, and it doth defile with the filthines of the same. Marke differeth in this from Matthew, in that he reckoneth vpp many sinnes, as euill thoughtes, wicked desires, which some translate couetousnesse, I had rather take the same generally. In like manner deceite and intemperancie, and those which doe thereafter followe: but though the manner of speach is improper, it is sufficient to holde the meaning of Christ, that all vices doe proceed out of the euill and corrupt affections of the heart. It is vnproperly sayd, that the euill eye proceedeth of the heart, yet in the matter it selfe, there is nothing that is either absurde or doubtfull: for that the vncleane heart defileth the eyes, so as they become the seruauntes or instruments of euill lusts. Neither yet doth Christe retrain euey thing that is euill in manne to manifest sinnes: but that hee might more euidently shewe the heart of manne to be the seat of all euilles, he sayeth that the testimonies and fruits are apparant in the sinnes themselves. For the word Defiling or making vncleane, in Greeke is said to make Common: as a little before Marke sayd common hands, for vncleane. And it is an Hebrew phrase: for becaute the Lord had separated the Iewes on this condition, that they might be seuered from all the vncleannes of the Gentiles, what soeuer differed from this holinesse, they called common or as prophane.

Matth. 15.

21. And Iesus went thence, & departed into the coastes of Tyrus and Sidon.

22. And beholde, a woman a Canaanite, came out of the same coastes, & cried, saying vnto him, haue mercy on me, O Lorde, the sonne of Dauid: my daughter is miserably vexed with a deuill. 23. But he answered her not a worde. Then came to him his disciples, and besought him saying: send her away, for shee cryeth after vs. 24. But he answered and sayd, I am not sent, but vnto the lost sheepe of the house of Israell.

25. Yet shee came and worshipped him, saying: Lorde helpe me.

26. And he answered and said: It is not good to take the childrēs bread and to cast it to whelpes.

27. But she said: truth Lorde: yet indeed the whelpes eat of the crums, which fall from their masters table.

28. The Iesus answered & said vnto her O woman great is thy faith: be it so thee, as thou desirest: and her daughter was made whole at that houre.

Marke 7.

24. And from thence hee arose, and went into the borders of Tyrus and Sydon, and entred into an house, and would that no man should haue knowne, but hee coulde not be hid. 25 For a certaine womā, whose little daughter hadde an vn-cleane spirit, heard of him, & came and fell at his feete.

26. (And the womā was a Greeke, a Syrophenisian by nation) and she besought him that he would cast out the deuill out of her daughter.

27. But Iesus sayde vnto her: let the children firste bee fedde: for it is not good to take the childrēs bread and to cast it vnto whelpes.

28. Then she answered, and sayd vnto him: truethe Lorde: yet in deepe the whelpes eat vnder the table, of the childrens crummes.

29. Then hee sayd vnto her: for this saying, go thy way: the deuill is gone out of thy daughter.

30. And when she was come home to her house, shee founde the deuill departed and her daughter lying on the bed.

Luke.

In this myracle we are taught how the grace of christ begā to spread amongst the Gentiles. For though the full time was not yet come, wherein Christ thuld make himselfe known to the whole world, yet it pleased him to giue some tastes of his common mercy, which at length was bestowed generally both to the Iewes and Gentiles after his resurrection. Also in the woman is described a notable image of faith, that by making cōparison, we might know that the promised redemption was worthily taken from the Iewes, whose vngodliness was so blockish. The woman which Matthew calleth a cananite, is of Marke sayde to haue bene a Grecian, and by nation a Syrophenisian, wherein there is no difference: for we know that it was the common manner of speach amongst the Iewes, to call al foraine nations Grecians: and therefore that

Antithesis betweene the Grecians and the Iewes is often found in Paul. Also when shee was borne in the coasts of Tyre and Sydon, it is no matuaile that she is called a Syrophenissian: when as the region had the name of Syria, and was apart of Phœnicia, and the Iewes very odiously called all the inhabitantes of that land Cananites. And it is to be supposed that the most part of them came of the people of Canaan, who being banished out of their countrie, tooke the next place of refuge in their banishment. They doe both agree in this that the woman came of a prophane nation, not brought vp in the doctrine of the lawe, that shee came of her owne accord to Christ in all humilitie to seeke aid of him. The circumstance is also to be noted, which is set downe by Marke, that Christ came not thither with banner displaid, but as a priuate man, that he might hide himselfe in that corner for a time. But Marke speaketh after the common sense of flesh: for though Christ foresaw by his diuine spirit what should come to passe yet in as much as he was the seruant and ambassadour of the father, hee kept himselfe after the maner of man within the bounds of the calling laid vpon him therefore it is sayd that hee could not doe that, which as a man hee would haue done. In the meane while this circumstance hath great waight for the condemnation of the Iewes, that when Christ in open place did set before them the promised redemption with a loud voice and miracles annexed to the same, they remained blinde and deafe, when yet they boasted themselues to bee heires of the couenant of the Lord, his peculiar people, and a priestly kingdome: & this woman which had none of these priuiledges with the children of Abraham, vnto whom the couenant in shew appertayned not, nor being called either with word or signe, commeth running of her owne free will.

22. Haue mercy on me, O Lord. Though this woman was a stranger from the Lords flock, yet she had gotten some tast of godlines: for without some knowledge of the promises, shee could not haue called Christ the sonne of Dauid. For although the Iewes were almost falne away from the pure and sincere doctrine of the law, or at the least were turned farre aside from the same, yet the renowned fame of the promised redemption flourished. And when as the restitution of the church rested vpon the kingdome of Dauid, when as there was any speach of the Messias, the name of the sonne of Dauid was common among them, and this confession was in the mouth of all men. But when as true faith was worne out amongst them by the wonderfull & incredible goodnes of God it came to passe that the fauour of the promises came to the nations that dwelt by them. Therefore, though this woman had not beene familiarly taught by any maister, neyther yet had framed a faith in Christ vnaduisedly to her selfe, but shee conceiued it out of the law and the Prophets. Wherefore that dog Scructus no lesse foolishly then wickedly abused this example, that hee might strip faith bare and naked of the promises. After this sense, I deny not but that sometimes there may be a faith conceiued, which alwayes hath not an expresse & distinct knowledge of sound doctrine: so that we hold this, that faith doth alwaies spring out of the word of God, & hath his beginning of the true principles, so that it may alwayes be annexed to some light of true knowledge.

33. But hee answered her not. The Euangelistes doe diuers waies commend the fayth of this womanne, as now of her inuincible constancie. For when the silence of Christe was a kinde of repulse, it is maruaile that shee was not ouerthrowne with this temptation: but her diligence in praying, was a witnesse of her perseuerance. Yet this seemeth to be contrary to the nature of faith and inuocation, as Paul doth describe it to the Romanes, chap. 10. 14. namely that no man can pray rightly, except he haue heard the word of God before. Who therefore will say that this womanne is indewed with faith, who when Christ held his peace, of her o. v. a. mo. i. s. breatheth forth her hope? But when as Christ speaketh and holdeth his peace two wayes, it is to be noted though hee then suppressed the words of his mouth, yet he speaketh inwardly in the minde of the woman: and so this inward assistance was vnto her in steade of outward preaching. Note also, that when her prayer arose of the hearing of faith, though Christ doeth not presently answer, yet the doctrine which shee once learned, doth alwayes rebound in her, that Christ the Redeemer should come. So the Lord often speaketh to his faithful ones, and will not holdeth his peace for they trusting to the testimonies of the Scripture, where they heare him speaking, they doubt not but that he will be mercifull vnto them: and yet he doth not presently answer to their requests and petitions: but rather dissembleth his hearing of them. Therefore we see what the purpose of Christ was in holding his peace, not that hee woulde quench the faith of the woman, but rather that hee might sharpen her indouour, and kinde her seruencie: that so little seede of doctrine brought forth so greate fruite in this woman of Canaan, nothing is more vnscemely, then that wee should fall away, if at any time he hold vs in suspence, and doth not yeelde vs presently a kinde answer.

Send her away. The disciples doe aske nothing in her fauour: but because her importunity is troublesome vnto them, they desire that shee may bee sent away by any meanes. But it was a very childish deuice, that the Papists vnder this pretence inducured to bring in the Saintes that are dead to be our patrons for if wee should grant that this woman intreated the disciples eyther to speake for her, or to fauour her (which yet cannot bee gathered of the text) yet there is another reason or state of them that are dead, & of them that are aliue. Note further, that the disciples doe heare her disdainfully: and if they had the mind to helpe her with their patronage, yet they obtaine nothing.

24. I am not sent. Hee rendreth a reason vnto his Apostles, why hee heareth not the Cananite, because hee woulde employ himselfe wholly vpon the Iewes, to whom onely hee was sent a minister of the grace of God. Therefore of his calling and commandement of the father, hee argueth that no helpe is to bee yeilded vnto strangers, not that the power of Christ should bee alwayes inclosed in so narrow boundes, but because the circumstance of the time did so require, that hee beginning at the Iewes, should then especially apply himselfe to them. As it was sayd, Mat. 10. 5. And the partition wall was not broken downe before the resurrection, that Christ might preach peace to the Gentiles which were strangers from the kingdome of God. Ephes. 2. 14. Therefore hee then forbade the Apostles to go any other where before they did sowe the first seed of the gospel in Iudea. Therefore it is true that he said in this place, that he is not sent but to the Iewes onely, vntill at length the Gentiles should succede in their order. Further, he calleth not only the elect & the sheep of the house of Israel, but who soeuer came of the stock of the holy fathers: because the Lord com-

prehended all in the couenant, and the redeemer was generally promised vnto all, as also without exception hee reuealed and offered himselfe vnto all. This also is worthy to be noted, that hee sayeth hee was sent to the lost sheepe: As in another place he sayth, that he came to saue that which was lost. Matthew 18. 11. and Luke 19. 10. Now sith at this day his grace is common to vs with the Iewes, we doe gather what our condition is, vntill he appeare vnto vs a Sauiour.

25. Shee came and worshipped him. This woman seemeth to strue with a stout obstinacie, so as she would wrest somewhat from him against his will: but it is not to be doubted but that the faith which she had conceiued of the goodnesse of the Messias so encouraged her. And that precise deniall of Christ to be any part of his office, which repugnancie terrified not her, nor withdrew her from her purpose, which came of this, that shee being wholly settled in the former feeling of faith which I spake of, admitted nothing contrary to her hope. And this is a true triall of faith, when by no meanes we suffer the generall principle of our saluation, which is grounded vpon the word of God, to be shaken in vs.

26. It is not good to take the childrens bread. Christ now with a sharper answer then the former, seemeth to take away all hope: for he doth not onely teach, that what grace soeuer he receiued of the father, belongeth to the Iewes, and must be employed vpon them, except they should be defrauded of their peculiar right: but very reprochfully he compareth the woman her selfe to a dogge, signifying that she was vnworthy to be made partaker of his grace. But that the meaning may be made plaine vnto vs, it must be known that he calleth not here the childrens bread, all the giftes of God, but onely those which peculiarly belong to Abraham & to his posteritie. For, from the beginning of the world Gods goodnes was so spread abroad in euery place, that it filled the heauen & the earth, so that all mortall men felt him for their father: but because hee vouchsafed to bestow greater honour vpon the children of Abraham, then vpon the rest of mankinde, that is called the childrens bread, whatsoever properly pertaineth to that adoption, whereby the Iewes onely were chosen to be the children. The Gentiles do enioy in common the light of the Sunne, the breath of life, the nourishments of the earth, together with the Iewes: but the blessing which was hoped for in Christ, rested only in the house of Abraham. Wherefore, to cast that forth in common without difference, which God with a singular priuiledge appoynted for one nation, was nothing else but an abolishing of the couenant of God. for by this meanes the Gentiles should be made equall with the Iewes, who should excell the as it was meete. Therefore Christ vseth the word Casting, signifying that that is not well placed, which is taken from the Church of God, and made common for prophane men. But this ought to be restrained to that time, when God was onely called vpon in Iudea. For since the Gentiles are taken into the fellowship of the same saluation (which is done where christ shineth euery where by the Gospell) that difference is taken away, so that they which were dogges before, are now accounted amongst the children. But here the pride of the flesh must of necessitie be ouerthrowne, when wee heare that from the beginning wee are dogges. The excellency of mannes nature was greater from the beginning, in the which the image of God did shine, the that so reprochfull

a name shoulde light vpon all the Gentiles, yea euen vpon kings, whom God adorned with his owne title: but the sinne and falling away of Adam brought it to passe, that the Lord should worthily cast into the dunghill with dogs, them that are degenerated by the offence of the firste father: Especially, where the comparison is made betwene the Iewes which are exempted from the common sorte, and the Gentiles which are banished from the kingdome of God. The purpose of Christe is more euidently declared by Marke, where it is sayde: Let the children first be fed. For he admonisheth the Cananite that shee doth importunately, for that shee as it were slieth to the table at the middest of supper. But though hee respectilly regarded the examining of the womans sayth, yet he also teacheth how horrible a vengeance remaineth for the Iewes, which refused so incomparable a good thing freely offered vnto them, which hee denied to others earnestly and feruently desiring the same.

27. Truth Lorde. The answer of the woman declareth that shee was not caried with a blinde or blunt violence, so that shee woulde directly stumble at the saying of Christ. For whereas God preferreth the Iewes before others, shee also leaueth that honour of adoption vnto them, and sayeth that she will not hinder, but that Christ according to the order prescribed by God, should sanctifie them: only she desireth that a fewe crummes, falling as it were vnawares, may come to the dogs. And certainly God did neuer so shut vpp his grace amongst the Iewes, but that hee scattered a little taste at the least of the same amongst the Gentiles. Therefore nothing could be more aptly or better spoken to expresse the grace of God, which then sprang amongst them.

28. Great is thy faith. First hee prayeth the sayth of the woman, then hee sayeth, that he graunted her prayers for her faith sake. Further, the greatnesse of her sayth especially shewed it selfe in that, that it being guided only with a little sparke of doctrine, shee not only knew the proper office of Christ, and attributed vnto him a celestiall power, but constantly shee went forward though hard lets, suffered her selfe to be set at naught, so that she might hold that which she hoped for, that shee should not be without the ayd of Christ. To be short, shee so seasoned her confidence with humilitie, that shee woulde not arrogate any thing rashly vnto her selfe: neither yet with the feeling of her owne vauourthinnesse would shee that the fountaine of the grace of Christe out from her. But by the commendation of this prophane woman, is the vnthankfulnesse of this people condemned, who boasted that they were dedicated to God. But how this woman might be saide to beleue rightly, who was not only destitute of the promise of Christ, but is beaten away with his word cleane contrary, I haue shewed before. For though that sharply in shew hee refuseth her prayers, yet being perswaded of the saluation promised of God through the Messias, shee ceaseth not to hope well: and therefore shee thinketh that the gate is shut against her, not that shee should altogether be driuen away, but that shee should more earnestly endeour with her faith to peirce through the chinkes of the same. The last clause containeth profitable doctrine, that faith obtaineth any thing of the Lord, because that hee so much esteemeth the same, that hee is alwayes ready to graunt our requestes so farre as it is expedient.

Math. 15

Marke 7.

29. So Iesus went away from thence, and came neare vnto the sea of Galile, and went vp into a Mountaine, and sate downe there.

30. And great multitudes came vnto him, hauing with them, halte, blinde, dumbe, maimed, and many other, and cast them down at Iesus feete and he healed them.

31. In so much that the multitude wondred, to see the dumbe speake, the maimed whole, the halt to goe, and the blinde to see, and they glorified the God of Israell.

32. Then Iesus called his disciples vnto him and sayde: I haue compassiõ on this multitude, because they haue continued with me already 3. daies and haue nothing to eate, and I will not let them depart fasting, lest they faint in the way

33. And his Disciples sayd vnto him: Whence should wee ges so much bread in the wilderness, as shoulde suffice so great a multitude?

34. And Iesus sayde vnto them: How many loaves haue yee? And they sayd, seuen, & a few little fishes,

35. Then he commanded the multitude to sit downe on the ground.

36. And tooke the seuen loaves and the fishes and gaue thanks, and brake them, and gaue to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude.

37. And they did all eat, and were sufficed, and they tooke vp of the fragmentes that remained, seuen baskets full.

38. And

31. And hee departed againe from the coastes of Tyrus and Sidon, & came vnto the sea of Galile, through the midst of the coastes of Decapolis.

32. And they brought vnto him, one that was deafe, and stampered in his speach, & prayed him to put his hand vpon him

33. Then hee tooke him a side from the multitude, & put his fingers in his eares and did spit, and touched his tongue.

34. And looking vp to heauen, he sighed & said vnto him: Ephata, that is: Be opened

35. And straightway his eares were opened, and the string of his tongue was loosed, and he spake plaine.

36. And he commanded them that they shoulde tell no man: but how much soeuer he forbad the more a great deale they published it.

37. And were beyond measure astonied saying: He hath done all things well: he maketh both the deafe to heare, and the dumbe to speake.

Marke 8.

1. In those dayes, when there was a very great multitude, and had nothing to eate. Iesus called his disciples to him and said vnto them.

2. I haue compassion on the multitude, because they haue nowe continued with mee 3. dayes, and haue nothing to eate.

3. And If I send them a way fasting to their owne houses, they would faint by the way: for some of the came from farre.

4. Then his Disciples answered him, howe can a man satisfie these with bread heere in the wilderness.

5. And he asked them: how many loaves haue yee: And they sayd, seuen.

6. Then hee commanded the multitude to sit downe on the ground: and he tooke the seuen loaves and gaue thanks, brake them, and gaue to his disciples to set before them, and they did set them before the people.

7. They had also a few small fishes: and when he had giuen thanks, he commanded them also to be set before them.

So they did eate and were sufficed, &amp; tooke vpp of the broken meate, that was left, seuen baskets full. 9. (And they that had eaten, were about 4. thousand) so he sent them away. 10. And anon he entred into a ship with his Disciples, and came into the partes of Dalmanutha
---	--

29. So Iesus departed away from thence. Though Mathewe and Marke doe without doubt speake of one and the same returne of Christ out of the partes of Sidon, yet in soe things they doe much differ. This is a small matter that one of them sayth, that he came into the partes of Magdala, and the other into the partes of Dalmanutha. for when as they were cities standing neare together, situated vpon the lake Genesareth towards mount Thabor, it is no maruayle that the countrie lying betweene them, be called by both their names. And Decapolis was so called of tenne cities, and because it was the region lying betweene Phœnice and the sea coast of Galile, which way Christe was to passe when he returned from Phœnicia into Galile of Iuda. There seemeth to be greater difference, in that Mathew sayth that he healed many diseased with diuers kindes of sicknesse. and Marke maketh mention onely of one deafe man. Yet this knot also is easly dissolued: for Marke chose that miracle to set downe which was done by the way, the same whereof being spread, moued the inhabitants of that countrie euery where, to bring forth moe vnto Christ to be healed. For we know that the Euangelists doe not curiously set downe all things: but they are so spare in reporting of the miracles, that they touch onely a fewe things for an example. Also it was sufficient for Marke to shewe one example, wherein the power of Christ was manifested, euen as hee doeth in others such like, which follow a little after.

MAR. 32. They brought vnto him a deafe man. To what purpose they prayed him to lay his hand on him, may be gathered by the former places: for the laying on of hands was a solemne signe of blessing, whereby the gifts of the holy ghost were also giuen. And without doubt Christ often vsed this rite, so that these men demanded nothing but that they knew he had vsed heretofore. But Christ vseth other signes: for hee toucheth the tongue of the dumbe man with his spittle, and putteth his finger into his eares. The only laying on of his hands had bin effectually enough: yea, though he had not moued his finger hee could haue done this only with a becke: but it appeareth that hee vsed signes frankly as was most for the profit of men: as nowe, putting spittle to his tongue, hee would declare that the gift of speaking commeth from him alone: thrusting his finger into his eares, hee taught that it was a gifte proper to him, as it were to boare open the deafe eares, for it is needelesse to run to allegories: and we see, they that haue most subtilly dalied in that course, are so far from bringing forth any thing that is sound, that they rather make the scripture to become a iesting stocke. Therefore let this one thing satisfie discrete readers, that we obtaine of Christ both speach and hearing by prayer, in so much as he infuseth his force to our tongues, and pearceth into our eares with his fingers.

That

That he remoueth the deafe man from the multitude, hee doeth it partly of that purpose, that he would not shew the glory of his Godhead to the rude, and such as were not yet fit witnesses, but that they should beholde the same a farre off: partly, that he might the more freely powre foorth his seruent prayer. For that hee looked vp to heauen, and sighed, was a signe of a vehement affection: whereby is perceiued how great his loue was towards men, whose misery he so bewailed. Neither is it to be doubted, but by the taking of spittle out of his owne mouth, to put into his mouth, and by putting his fingers, his will was to testifie and shew the same kinde and louing affection. Yet he declareth that hee hath great power in curing all diseases, and in giuing health, when as hee simply commaunderth the tongue and eare, to be opened, Neyther was it without consideration, that Marke setteth downe that Chalde worde, but that it might testifie the diuine power of Christ. Amongst other trifles where with foolish men defiled baptisme, heere they hadde one Apish iesting toye. By the which example wee are admonished, that there is no ende of licentiousnesse, when men begin to dally with the mysteries of God at their owne pleasure.

36. Hee commaunded them, that they should tell no man. Though there are many interpreters which wrest these commandements into an other sense, as if Christ had purposely prouoked them to spread the fame of the miracle: yet that seemeth to be the more simple meaning, which I alleaged other wher, that his purpose onely was to deferre it to an other time more conuenient and fitte. Wherefore I thinke not otherwise, but that their zeale was vnaduised, while they being commaunded to hold their peace, doe haue to speake. Yet it is not to bee wondered at, that men not accustomed to the doctrine of Christ, should be caried with so great a zeale, when it was not conuenient. Yet Christ turneth that to his owne glory, which was vnaduisedly attempted by them: because both the miracle was knowne, and that whole region despising the authour of heauenly giftes, was made inexcusable.

37. Hee hath done all things well. After that Mathewe had gathered many miracles together, hee addeth at the length this clause, the multitude wondered and gaue the glory to the God of Israell: namely, because that God shewing his power by vnwonted meanes, renewed the remembrance of his couenant. But in Markes words, the figure Antithesis may be vnderstoode: for whereas the rumour of Christ was very diuers, the multitude gaue testimonie that they were wicked and malicious people, whose euer would speake euill of his deedes when as all his workes rather deserued high prayse, then so to be quarelled at. And wee know that the sense of nature teacheth that nothing is more vnrighteous, then to draw good workes into blame and hatred.

Mat. 3 2 I haue compassion on this multitude. Here is a miracle set downe not vnlike the other, which we expounded a litle before: this is the only difference, that where before Christ fed fise thousand men with fise loaves and two fishes: now foure thousand are fed with seuen loaves and a few fishes. Also, when 12. baskets were filled with fragments then, now of greater aboundance fewer broken meates remaine. Heereby we learne that the power of God is not tied to means or helps, neither is it any matter before him, whether it be great or litle:

as Jonathan sayd, speaking of his small army, and of the huge multitude of his enemies, 1. Sa. 14. 6. And as the blessing of God satisfied as well with one loafe as with 20. is inough to feede a great multitude: so it that be wanting, a hundred loaves shall not suffice to feede ten men: for where the stiffe of bread shall be broken, though the meale be yeilded by waight from the mill, and the breade from the ouen, yet shall it not auaille to stufte the belly by deuouring it. The 3. daies fasting whereof Christ speaketh, must be vnderstood, not that they abide three dayes without meate, but because there was no great prouision in those desert places, so that of necessitie there wanted ordinary food. Also, that in those hot regions, there is lesse stomacke to eate, then vnder our grosse and cold aire wherefore it is no maruaile, if they abstained the longer from meate.

33. Where should we get so much bread in the wildernesse. The Disciples doe bewray too beastly a blockishnes, that then at the least they call not to minde, that which they had learned of the power & grace of Christ, which they might haue applyed to this present vse. but as if they had neuer seene any such thinge, they forget to seeke for remedy of him. And because the like sluggishnes doth daily creepe vpon vs, so much more heede must be taken, least at any time our mindes be withdrawne from considering the benefits of God: that the experience of the times past may teach vs hereafter, to hope for the same that G O D hath now once or oftner bestowed vpon vs.

Mathew 16.

Luke 12.

1. Then came the Pharises and Sadduces, and did tempt him, desiring him to shew them a signe from heauen. 2. But hee answered and sayd vnto them: when is it euening yee say faire weather: for the skie is red. 3. And in the morning ye say, To day shall be a tempest: for the skie is red and lowering: O hypocrites: yee can discern the face of the skie, and can ye not discern the signes of the times. 4. The wicked generation and adulterous seeketh a signe, and there shall no signe bee giuen it: but the signe of the Prophete Ionas: so hee left them, and departed.

11. And the Pharises came forth, and began to dispute with him, seeking of him a signe from heauen, and tempting him. 12. Then hee sighed deeply in his spirit, and sayd: why doth this generation seeke a signe? Verily I say vnto you, a signe shall not bee giuen vnto this generation. 13. So hee left them, and went into the ship againe and departed to the other side.

54. Then said hee to the people, when ye see a cloud rise out of the west, straight way ye say a shower cometh, and so it is.

55. And when ye see the South winde blow, ye say that it will be hot, and it cometh to passe.

56. Hypocrites, yee can discern the face of the earth, and of the skie: but why discern ye not this time?

57. Yea, and why iudge ye not of your selues what is right?

1. Then came the Pharises. Marke sayeth that they beganne to dispute: whereof may bee gathered, that when they were overcome with reasons: this this was their last refuge, as obstinate men so oft as they are driuen to extremities, yet least they should be enforced to subscribe to the truth, they commonly vse to pretend somewhat besides the cause. And though the manner of their disputation is not expresse, yet it seemeth likely to me that they brabled about the calling of Christ, why he durst innouate any thing, why hee lifted vp and bare himselfe so high, as if that by his comming the kingdom of God should bee restored to the estate of the same. When there remained nothing that they might object against his doctrine, they desired to haue a signe giuen them from heauen. But it is certaine that they woulde not haue yeelded more to a hundred signes, then they did to the testimonie of the scripture. Note also that the power of Christ was manifested to their sight already by many myracles, and might as it were be handled with their hands. They despise the signes whereby Christ reuealed himselfe familiarly vnto them, therefore howe much lesse woulde they profit by an obscure signe fetched from farre. So the Papissts at this day, as if the doctrine of the Gospell had neuer bene established, doe desire to haue it confirmed vnto them by new myracles. It is also to bee noted that when the Pharisees had great contention with the Sadduces, neither was it only a bitter hatred, but there were daily hotte strifes betweene them: yet now they doe mutually ioyne together against Christ: so when the wicked are at debate, yet their deadly discords hinder them not, but that they will conspire against God, and as it were by making leagues, they doe ioyne handes together to ouerthrowe the truth. By the worde Tempting, the Euangelistes doe signifie that they came not with sincere mindes, nor with a desire to learne: but to take him by deceit, for that they thought should be denied them, or at the least that Christe could not doe it, as they imagined. For because they accounted no better of him but vildely and basely, they had no other purpose, then by shewing his base estate, to ouerthrow that estimation which he had heretofore gotten amongst the people. So the vnbeleeuers are saide to tempt God, as oft as they not obtaining what fouer their pleasure desireth, do fall to murmuring, and doe charge God with want of power.

2. When it is enening. In these woordes Christe declareth that his power is sufficiently declared, so that they might know the time of their visitation, if they did not see the open light, by the shutting of their eyes of their owne accorde. And hee vseth a notable similitude and very fitte for the purpose: though the course of the ayre be changeable, so that now of a sodaine a tempest riseth, now vnlooked for it waxeth cleare: yet nature directing them, menne by signes doe prognosticate before, whether the day will be faire or foule. Therefore Christ demaundeth why they doe not know the kingdome of God, being reuealed by as euident signes as the other: for hereby it certainly appeared that they were too much giuen to earthly and transitory commodities, contemning what soeuer pertained to the heauenly and spirituall life: and they were not thus blind so much by ignorance, as of wilfull malice.

Therefor hee calleth them also hypocrites, because they fained to seekethat, which being shewed them, they woulde not see. Further, the same reproofe dooth almoste appertaine to the whole worlde: for because that menne doe bende their wtte, and apply their senses to the present vse, there is almost no manne who is not wise enough in this behalfe, or at the least hauing obtained some meane knowledge, followeth that which is expedient. Then whereof commeth it, that wee vnderstand not those signes wherby God calleth vs vnto him, but because that euery man giueth him selfe to a wilfull sluggishnes? The calling of Christ and the present offering of eternall saluation was manifested to the Scribes as well by the law & the Prophets, as by his owne doctrine which was confirmed by myracles. There are very many such at this day, which do pretend that in doubtful matters they haue iust cause to suspend their iudgement, because that a resolute determinatiō must be waighted for: Nay, they think this a point of great wisdom, of purpose to auoyd all inquiry after the truth. As though it were not a point of great foolishnes to neglect the eternall saluation of soules, when as they so dilligently provide for those things which are of the flesh and of the earth, and in the meane season to pretende vaine excuses of grosse and deepe ignorance. But certain vnlearned men do gather too much absurdly out of this place, that it is not lawfull by looking into the skie to iudge either of temperature or of stormes: For christ rather of the right course of nature argueth that they shuld iustly perish for their vnthankfulnesse, which are so quicke witted in things pertaining to this present life and do wittingly & willingly ouerwhelme the heauēly light with their owne blockishnesse.

Marke addeth, that Christe sighed in spirite, in which wordes hee declareth that he tooke it grieuouly and bitterly, when he saw these vnthankfull menne so stubbornly to resist against God. And certainly, it becōmerh all them that are studious of the glory of God, and carefull of mans saluation, that nothinge wounde them deeper with sorrowe, then when they see the vnbeleeuers of sette purpose stoppe vppe from themselves the means whereby they shoulde belecue, and to apply all the witte they haue to that purpose, that they might darken the light of the woorde and workes of God with their mistes. I thinke that the word Spirite is put heere Emphatically, that wee might knowe that this sigh came of the deepe affection of the hearte, least any Sophister shoulde say that Christe made but an outwarde shewe of sorrowe, which he fealt not inwardly. For it coulde not be otherwise but that holy soule which was gouerned by the spirite of zeale, should bee altogether grieued at such vngodly frowardnesse.

27. Why iudge you not of your selues. Heere Christe openeth the fountaine from whence the mischiefe sprange, and toucheth the bile it selfe, as it were with a lance: namely, for that they descended not into their owne consciences, nor made there any search with themselves before God what is right. For hereof commeth it, that the hypocrites are so proude in there quarelling, & that they cast soorth such arrogant speches into the ayre without regard: they gather not their fences together, neither do they sethēselues before the iudgement seate of God, that truth being once knowne, might haue the victorie. Further, that which Luke sayeth was spoken to the multitude, differreth not from that which Mattheue and Marke reporte: because that it is probable that Christe did generally bende his speach againste the followers and disciples of the Scribes, and other suchlike contemners of God, whom he few to be too many : so that this complaint or rebuke lighted vpon the whole cōpany of these lewd ones.

Mat. 4. This wicked generation. This place was expounded in the 12. chapter. And the summe is that the Iewes were satisfied with no signes, but that their wicked desire did still prouoke them to tempt God. Neither doth he simply cal them an adulterous generation, because they desire any signe, which God some time granteth to his children: but because they of purpose prouoke God, therefore he sayth that he shalbe restored to them againe aliue, as Ionas was. So Mat reporteth. Marke maketh no mention of Ionas, yet hath the same sense. For this neither could serue for a signe vnto them, that Christ being raised from the dead, would send forth the sounding voyce of his gosple into all places.

5. And when his Disciples were come to the other side, they had forgotten to take bread with them.
 6. Then Iesus said vnto them: Take heede and beware of the leauen of the Phariseses and Sadduces.
 7. And they thought in themselves saying: It is because wee haue brought no bread.
 8. But Iesus knowing it, sayd vnto them: O yee of little faith, why thinke yee thus in your selues, because ye haue brought no bread?
 9. Do yee not yet perceiue, neyther remeber the five loaves, when there were five thousand men, and howe many baskets tooke ye vp?
 10. Neither the seuen loaves, when there were 4000. men, and howe many baskets tooke yee vp?
 11. Why perceiue ye not, that I sayd not vnto you concerning breade, that ye should beware of the leauen of the Phariseses and Sadduces?
 12. Then vnderstoode they that hee had not sayd that they shoulde beware of the leauen of bread, but of the doctrine of the Phariseses and Sadduces.

14. And they had forgotten to take bread, neither had they in the shipp with them but one loafe.
 15. And he charged them, saying Take heede, and beware of the leauen of the Phariseses, and of the leauen of Herod.
 16. And they thought among themselves, saying: It is because we haue no bread.
 17. And when Iesus knewe it, hee sayde vnto them: Why reason yee thus, because ye haue no bread: perceiue ye not yet, neither vnderstand haue ye your hearts yet hardened?
 18. Haue ye eyes and see not? and haue ye eares and heare not? and do you not remember?
 19. When I brake the five loaves among the five thousand, howe many baskets full of broken meate tooke ye vp? they sayd vnto him, twelue.
 20. And when I brake seuen among foure thousand, howe many baskets of the leauings tooke ye vpp? and they sayd, seuen,
 21. Then he sayd vnto them: how is it that yee vnderstand not?

11. In the meantime, there-gathered together an innumerable multitude of people so that they trode one another: and he began to say to his disciples: firste, take heede to your selues of the leauen of the Phariseses, which is hypocrisse.

5. When the disciples were come. Heere Christ of the former matter taketh occasion to exhort his Disciples, to keepe themselves from all corruptions which might hinder sincere godlinesse. The Phariseses had bene there a little before, who hadde giuen testimonie of a poysoned frowardnesse: The Sadduces had kept them companie: of the other side Herod a most vile aduersary and corrupter of sound doctrine. The disciples being a noystr these dangers it was necessary that they should be warned to looke to themselves: for when as the wisdom of man doth incline of itselfe to vanitie & errors, when lewd deuices, false doctrines and such other mischiefes doe compass us about, there is nothing more easie for vs then to fall away from the true and naturall puritie of the word of God. If it come to passe that wee be insnared, it can neuer be, that true Religion should haue full possession of vs. But that the matter may more evidently appeare, let vs consider Christes wordes.

6. Take heed of the leauen of the Pharisees. Matthew syneth the Sadduces with the Pharisees. Marke putteth Herode in those secondes name. Luke maketh mention onely of the Pharisees. Though it is incertaine whether Luke rehearse the same speech of Christ: and denieth the leauen to be hypocricie, and also doth hereby set downe this sentence, as if there were no doubtfullnesse in the wordes. And though the Metaphore of leauen which is here applyed to false doctrine, might otherwise be transferred to hypocricie of life and behauiour, or else that the same word spoken twice, yet there is no abundance if wee say that those sayings, which the other two according to the course of the historie, doe set forth more largely, by Luke are to be held for somewhat otherwise, as not in the same place, or order, so that yet there be no doubtfullnesse in the matter. If it be lawfull to follow this connection, hypocricie shall signifie for somewhat else then a counterfeit and fained shew of vaine pompe, namely the fault and it selfe and matter of vaine pompe, which boasting of some great thing of our men, is of no estimation before God. For as the cies of the Lord, is for our witnesseth 1. 3. behold the truth: so by his word he directeth the faithful in perfect holines, that with a perfect and sincere heart they may cleaue vnto righteouseife, according to that saying, Deut. 10. 12. And now O Israel what doth the Lord require of thee, that thou shouldst cleaue vnto him with all thy heart, and with all thy soule? But on the contrary side, the spirituall worship being neglected, they do bring in the traditions of men fading colours, as if god could be caught with such baits. For although the outward ceremonies serue to make a shewe, yet before God they are but childish trifles, further then wee be exercised by them in the holines. Now we vnderstand why Luke put hypocricie in the place of fained doctrine, and vnder this name he comprehendeth the faultes of men, which doe onely puffe vp with a vaine shew, and before God haue no foundnes in them: nay, they draw the mindes of men from the right studie of godlinesse to vaine things not to be esteemed. But because that Mathewe his exposition is plainer it shall be best to rest vpon that. When the Lord had reprooued the Disciples, they at the length vnderstoode, that they were commaunded to take heed of the doctrine, it is certaine that this was the meaning of Christ, to arme them against the present corruptions, with the which they were compassed on euery side. And therefore hee speaketh expressly of the Pharisees and Sadduces, because those two sectes tyrannously reigned at that time in the Church, and with their corrupt doctrines they ouerwhelmed the doctrine of the Lawe and of the Prophets, so that there remained almost nothing sound or perfect? Further, it is demaunded wherefore Marke putteth Herode amongst the number of false teachers, who professed no such thing : I answer when as hee was halfe a Iewe degenerate and vnfaithfull, hee endeouored by all the subtleties hee could to drawe the people after him . For this is the manner of all Apostates to aade some nuxture, that a newe Religion may spring, which may abolishe the former . Therefore, because that he endeouored craftily to ouerthrow the principles of the true and auncient religion, that that Religion might at the length flourish, which should bee most agreeable to his tyranny : and because he endeouored to bring in a newe kinde of Iudaisme , the Lorde doeth not without cause commaunde also to beware of his leauen. For as the Scribes scattered their errors out of the temple of God : so Herodes court was an other shoppe of Sathan, for the forging of other errors. As we see the like in Poperie at this day, Antichrist doeth not vomite his subtleties onely out of the Churches and deennes of Sophisters and Monkes : but hee also proppeth vp his kingdom with the helpe of courtly diuinitie, so as he wil omitte no craft. And as Christe then mette with these present eu'les, and gaue his warning to beware of that which was most noyosome : wee being warned by this example, let vs learne wisely to weigh what corruptions may annoy vs. A man may sooner mixe fire and water togeth'r, then make the iauentions of the Pope to agree with the Gospell. Therefore who so euer desireth with good fayth to be come Christes disciple, lette him studie to keepe his soule pure from those leauens. If he be now already infected with the same, let him labour so much the more in cleansing himselfe, vntill no more drugges nor filthinesse sticke in him. And now, because that on the other part troublesome men doe attempt diuers wayes to corrupt sound doctrine, the faithfull must watch diligently for the auoyding of such subtilties, so as they may celebrate a continuall Passouer with the sweete bread of truth. And because that vile wickednesse, noyсом leauen, and most deadly poyson ouerwhelmeth now euery place, let men employ all their senses to this warning most necessary of all.

8. Why thinke you thus in your selues. The disciples do againe declare how euill they haue thought both by their maisters doctrine, & also by his woderful works For that which he had sayde of taking heede of leauen, they so tooke as if christ would onely draw them from the outward fellowship. For because that it was a custome receiued amongst the Iewes, that they shoulde not eat meate together with prophane menne, the disciples thought that the Pharisies were of the same sort and number. And this ignorance was to be tollerated in some sorte : but because they forgate so late a benefite, they thinke not that the remedy is in Christes hande, that they shoulde not be compelled to defile themselves with meate and drinke : hee rebuketh them more sharply, as they were well worthy, and certainly this vathankfulnesse was too grosse, when as they hadde so lately seene bread created of nothing for the satisfying of many thousands of menne, and that being wise done, now to take care for bread, as if the same power were not remaining in the master still. By the which wordes wee do gather that all they are condemned of infidelitic, which hauing once or twice tryed the power of God, doe afterward distrust . For as sayth nourisheth the remembrance of the gifts of God in our hearts, so except the same faith be ouerwhelmed they wil neuer be forgotten.

12. They vnderstood that he had spoken of the doctrine. It is not hard to be vnderstood, but that Christ opposeth this word leauen against the simple & pure word of God. Christ taketh the same be ore in the good parte, when he sayde that the Gospell was like to leauen: but the scripture for the most parte doth hereby signifie any thing that is added, whereby the natural purity of any thing is hindered. But in this place these two contraries doe without doubt answere the one to the other: the simple truth of God and the iuentions, which men deuise out of the rowne brayne. Neither is there any cause why any Sophyster should seeke to slip away, denying this to be vnderstoode of euery doctrine. because there can no other doctrine be found, which beareth the name of pure & sweete doctrine, then that which proceeded from God. Whereof it followeth that what nature soeuer commeth from any other, is called leauen. As Paule 2. Cor 11 3. also teacheth that the faith is corrupted alioone as we are drawne from the simplicitie that is in Christ. Now is it to be seene, whose doctrine the Lord would haue them to beware of. Then certainly was the ordinary power of the Church in the hands of the Scribes and priests, amongst whom the Pharisees were chiefe. When as Christ by name warneth his from their doctrine, it followeth that they all must be refused which mixe their owne iuentions with the word of God, or which trust in any straunge thing, what degree of honour soeuer they are placed in, or what proud title soeuer they beare. Wherefore accursed and corrupt is their subiection which submit themselues to the traditions and lawes of the Pope.

Matth.

Marke. 8.

Luke.

22. And hee came to Bethsaida, and they brought a blind man vnto him, and desired him to touch him.
 23. Then he tooke the blinde by the hand and lead him out of the towne, and spit in his eyes, and put his handes vpon him, and asked him if he saw ought.
 24. And he looked vp, and sayd, I see men: for I see them walking like trees.
 25. After that, he put his hands againe vpon his eyes, and made him looke againe. And he was restored to his sight, & saw euery man a farre off, clearely.
 26. And he sent him home to his house, saying: neither goe into the towne, nor tell it to any in the towne.

This miracle, the declaration whereof is omitted by others, seemeth to be reported by Marke, especially for this circumstance, that Christ did not at once, as he was often wont to doe, but by little & little restored the blinde man his sight: the which it is likely that he did it to this end, that he might in this maner set an example of his free dispensation, that he is not bound to any certaine rule, but that he may shew his power either this way or that. Therefore he doth not open the eyes of the blind so presētly, that he may see cleare with thē: but he instilleth a darke and a confuse sight into them: then by putting his hands vpon them againe, he giueth thē a perfect sight: so the grace of Christ, which before was suddenly powred vpon others, commeth as it were drop by drop into this man.

24. I seemen. The blind man was asked this question for the disciples, that they might know that somewhat was now giuen him: but yet that there was but a little beginning only, & not fully healed. Therefore he answereth that he seeth men, because he seeth some walking, which are straight like vnto trees. By which words he confesseth, that his sight is not so cleare, as to discern men frō trees: but yet that he can see now a little: because that by their motiō he gesseth them to be men whom he seeth to be of a straight stature: in which fence hee also sayeth, that they are like vnto trees. Wherefore we see that onely by coniecture he sayeth that he seeth men.

26. He sent him home to his house. That christ suffered him not to returne to Bethsaida, where many might haue bin witnesses of the myracle, some thinke that it was done, because that Christ would punish the inhabitants of that place by depriving them of the vse of his fauor. Whatsoeuer the cause was, it is certain that he wrought not this myracle to that end that it should alwaies be buried, but he would haue this with many others kept secret, vntill that the sinnes of the world being washed away by his death, he should ascend into the glory of the father.

Matth. 16.

13. Now, when Iesus came into the coastes of Casarea Philippi, hee asked his disciples, saying, whome doe menne say that I the sonne of manne am?
 14. And they sayd, some say, Iohn Baptist: and some Elias: and others Ieremias, or one of the Prophets.
 15. He sayd vnto them, but whome say ye that I am?
 16. Then Simon Peter answered, and sayd, Thou art the Christ the son of the liuing God.
 17. And Iesus answered, and sayde to him, Blessed art thou Simon, the sonne of Ionas: for fleshe and blood hath not reuealed it vnto thee, but my father, which is in heauen.
 18. And I say also vnto thee, that thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke I will build my Church: and the gates of hell shall not ouercome it.
 19. And I will giue vnto thee the keyes of the kingdome of heauen, and what soeuer thou shalt binde vpon earth, shall be bounde in heauen: and what soeuer thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heauen.

Marke 8.

27. And Iesus went out, and his disciples into the townes of Casarea Philippi. And by the way he asked his disciples, saying vnto them, whom do men say that I am?
 28. And they answered, some say, Iohn baptist: and some, Elias, and some one of the prophets.
 29. And hee saide vnto them, but whom saye yee that I am? Then Peter answered and said vnto him, thou art the Christ.

Luke 9.

18. And it came to passe as he was alone praying, his Disciples were with him, & he asked them, saying, who say the people that I am?
 19. They answered and sayd, Iohn Baptist: and others saye, Elias, and some say that one of the olde Prophets is risen againe.
 20. And he sayd vnto them, but whom say yee that I am? Peter answered and sayd the Christ of God.

13. Into the coastes of Caesarea Philippi. Marke sayeth that this communication was had by the way: and Luke, when he had prayed, and had none with him but his disciples: Matthew doth not so exactly note the time: yet it is certaine that the three doe report the same history: & it may be that Christ in that journey, after hee had made some stay and prayed, demanded this of his disciples: Also because there were two Caesareas: that was ancient and more famous, which was situate the tower of Straton: and this was situated at the foote of Mount Libanus, not farre from Jordan, the epithite is added for difference sake. For though some thinke that it was built in the same place, where the towne Danitiona tiens past: yet, because it was lately built by Philippe the Tetrach, it was called Thimippy. Whome doe men say that I am? This may seeme to be the meaning, what should be the common name of the Redeemer, who was become the sonne of man: Yet the question is otherwise: namely, what opinion men had of Iesus the ion of Ma y: And after this manner he calleth himselfe the sonne of man, as if he should haue said, whilst I am now clothed with flesh, & am conuentant vpon earth, as one of the sonnes of men, what iudgement is there of me? But the purpose of Christ was thoroughly to firen then his disciples in an assured faith, that amongst sundry opinions they should not wauer, as we shall presently see.

14. Some say Iohn. There is nothing spoken heere of her of the professed enemies of Christ, neither of the prophane contentions, but of them more sound and sincere part of the people, and as of the chiefe flower of the Church. For the disciples doe only mention out of them, which shall be generally of heart: and yet when the truth was proposed vnto them, som intended to that scope, but all men vanished away in their owne delights. Whereby wee see how weak the wit of man is, which not onely conceaith nothing of itselfe, that is right and true, but euen gathereth errors of true principles.

Adde this also, that when Christe was the onely signe of concord and of peace, wher-by God would gather the whole worlde vnto him, the greater parte doe hereby take the occasion of more dissention. And euen amongst the Jewes, the vnty of faith was: oother where fertied then in Christe, and yet they which seeme before to haue some agreement amongst themselves, are now seuered into sundry opinions. Also, wee see how one error engendreth another: for because this opinion was leiled in the minds of the common people, that the soules went into diuers bodies, hereof it came that they were the rather bent to this false imagination. But though at the coming of Christe the Jewes were in this manner deuided, yet this varietie of opinions should not haue hindered the gospel, but that they should haue desired the right knowledge of him. For if any manne yett that preter, concerning himselfe to sluggishnes, hadde neglected to seeke Christ, euen in our iudgement hee should be excusable. Much lesse shall he escape the iudgement of God, if any manne by reason of diuisions shall shonne Christe, or of the false opinions of men shall take occasion of loathing, so that he will not vouchsafe to apply himselfe vnto Christ.

15. But whome say ye that I am? Heere Christ severeth his disciples from the rest of the people, whereby it might the better appeare to be an absurd thing for vs to be drawne from the vinitie of faith, though others doe disagree. For who soeuer doe simply addesthemselves to Christ, and doe not strue to adde any thing of their owne head to the Gospell, the true light shall neuer fayle them. But here is great diligence required, that while the whole world flydeth after their owne inventions, they should take fast and sure holde of Christe. Because that Sathan could not take away from the Iewes the persuasion they had out of the lawe and the Prophetes of Christ to come, hee diuinely transfiguring him, hee deuided him as it were into partes: then hee thrust amongst them many false Christs, that the true Reddeemer should not be esteemed. He left not the same subtilities aſteward, either to roote Christe utterly out, or to thrust an other person in his rounde. Wherefore amongst the confused & contrary speeches of the world, let this voyce of Christ sound alwayes in our eares, whereby hee seperateth vs from wandring and vnconstant men, that we should not follow the multitude, neither that our faith should wauer amongst the contrary ſhouldes of opinions.

16. Thou art Christ. A short confession, but which containeth in it the whole summe of our saluation, For vnder the title of Christ is comprehended the eternall kingdom and priesthood, that he would reconcile God vnto vs, and that sinnes being washed away by his owne sacrifice, hee would obtayne a perfect righteousnesse. Then that he would prescribe vs being receiued into his faith and custody, and would adorne and enrich vs with all kinde of blessings. Marke onely hath, Thou art Christ, and Luke hath, the Christ of God, but in the same sence. For in times past they called the kings, which were annoyned of God, the Christs of God.

And Luke vsed this phrase before, where he sayd that Simcon had answered giuen him from heauen, that he should not die before he should see the Christ of the Lord. For surely it was a diuine redemption, which god gaue by the hand of his son. Therefore it was necessary that hee that should bee the redeemer, should come a noted person from heauen with the annoyntment of God. Mat. thew expresseth it more plainly, that hee is the Sonne of the liuing God. For though it may see that Peter did not as yet so expressly vnderstand how Christ was begotten of God: yet hee beleued that hee was so excellent a person, that hee had his beginning from God, not as other men, but that the liuely and true godhead dwelt in his flesh. When the epithite liuing is giuen to God, it is a note to make a difference betweene him and dead Idols, which are nothing.

17. Blessed art thou Simon. When as this is life eternall, to knowe one God and whome he sent Iesus Christ, it is not without cause that Christe pronounceth him blessed, who confessed this from his heart. But hee spake not this particularly to Peter alone, but his will was to shewe where the onely felicitie of the whole worlde is placed. And that all men may aspire to the same with greater desire: first, it must bee holden that all men are miserable and cursed by nature, vntill they finde remedy by Christ. Then must bee added, who soeuer obtayneth Christ, waiteth nothing at all of a perfect

blesſednes, ſeeing wee can deſire nothing that is better then the eternall glory of God into the poſſeſſion whereof Chriſt doth bring vs. Fleſh and bloud. Vnder the perſon of this one man, Chriſt admoniſteth all men that faith muſt bee asked of his father, and that the prayſe of the ſame muſt bee attributed to his grace: for the peculiar lightening of God is heere oppoſed to fleſh and bloude. Whereby we gather that mens mindes are voyde of vnderſtanding to perceiue the miſteries of the heauenly wiſedome hidden in Chriſt: nay, all humane ſenſes doe in this behalfe fayle, vntill God open our eyes to ſee his glory in Chriſt. Therefore let no man truſting in his owne wit, liſt vp himſelfe in pride: but humbly let vs ſuffer our ſelues to be taught inwardly of the father of lightes, that his onely ſpirit may lighten our darkneſſe. And now they which are indewed with faith, acknowledging their owne blindnes, let them learne to yeelde that to God, which to him is due.

18. But I ſay vnto thee. Chriſt by theſe wordes declareth howe much Peters confeſſion pleaſeth him, in that he beſtoweth ſo great a reward vpon it. For though he had giuen to Simon his diſciple the name of Peter, & had freely appointed him to be his Apoſtle, yet theſe which were free giſtes, he aſcribeth as it were in ſteede of a reward to faith, which is a thinge not ſtrange in the ſcripture. Further, Peter is adorned with a double honour: for the firſt of them doth belong to his owne priuate ſaluation, and the laſt to his Apoſtolicall function. When he ſayth, Thou art Peter, he confirmeth that he gaue not this name before to him in vaine, becauſe he ſhould be ſtedfaſt, as a liuing ſtone in the Temple of God. Though this extendeth to all the faithfull, Ephe. 2. 21. Euery one of who are the Temples of God, and by faith being compact amongſt themſelues, doe together make one temple: yet this excellency of Peter is noted amongſt the reſt, euen as euery man receiueth more or leſſe in his order, according to the meaſure of the giſt of Chriſt. Vpon this rocke. Hereby it appeareth howe the name of Peter agreeth, as with the name of Simon, ſo alſo with the reſt of the faithfull: becauſe that they being grounded vpon the faith of Chriſt, are with a holy conſent built vp together into a ſpirituall building, that God may dwell in the miſt of them. For Chriſt declared that this ſhould be the common foundatiō of all his Church, he would gather vnto Peter what company of the faithfull ſo euer ſhould be in the world: as if hee ſhoulde haue ſayd, you are nowe a ſmall number of men, and therefore this your confeſſiō is of ſmall eſtimation at this preſent: but the time ſhall ſhortly come, when it ſhall ſhew it ſelfe magnifically and ſhall ſpread it ſelfe more at large. And thus did not a litle preuaile for the encouraging of the diſciples to bee conſtant: for that though their faith was yet obſcure and bale, yet they were choſen of the Lord as the firſt fruites, that at the length of that contemptible beginning, a newe Church ſhoulde ariſe, which ſhould ſtand as a conqueror againſt all the aſſaults of the infernall powers. For though the pronome It, may bee referred either to the faith, or to the Church, yet the latter ſenſe doth better agree, for that the ſtrength of the Church ſhall ſtand vnuanquiſhed againſt all the power of Sathan. namely, becauſe the truth of God ſhall alwaies continue vnſhaken, wher vpon the faith of the ſame is ſtaid. And that ſaying of Ioh. 1 ep. 5. 4. anſwereth to this ſentence. This is the victory, which ouercōmeth the world, euen your faith. A promiſe worthy to be noted, that that who soeuer are vnited in Christe, acknowledging Christ, and him to bee a mediatour, shall continue to the ende safe from all annoyauce. For that which is spoken of the body of the Church appertaineth to the petticular members of the same, so farre forth as they are one in Christ. Yet hereby we are admonished, that so long as the Church shall bee a Pilgrim vpon earth, it shall not bee quiet, but subiect to many troubles. For therefore is Sathan denyed the superiority: because he would daily be against it. Therefore that we may vse this saying of Christe, let vs without feare glory against Sathan, and by fayth let vs triumph ouer all his bandes: so againe let vs knowe, that we haue as it were an allarme sounded vnto vs, that we might be alwayes ready and prepared to the battaile. It is euident that by the name of gates is noted euery kind of power and strong holde.

19. And to thee will I giue the keyes. Christ now beginneth to speake heere of the publike office: that is of the Apostleshippe, whose dignitie is adorned with a double title. For Christ sayth, that the ministers of the Gospell are as porters of the kingdom of heauen, because they beare the keyes of the same: secondly hee addeth that they haue power to binde and to lose, which in effectuall to the heauens. The similitude of keyes is aptly applyed to the office of teaching, as Christ sayth in Luke, 11. 52. That the Scribes and the Pharisees, because they were interpreters of the law, had likewise the key of the the kingdome of heauen. For we know that the gate of life is not otherwise opened vnto vs, then by the word of God. Whereof it followeth that it is deliuered vnto the ministers, as a key into their hand. They which thinke that keyes in the plurall number is therefore sayd: because the Apostles hadde not onely commaundement giuen them to open, but also to shut, doe not speake without some probable likelihood: yet, if any man will take it otherwise, let him vse his owne sence. It is demaunded why the Lord should promise to giue that to Peter, which he seemed to haue giuen before by creating him an Apostle. But this question was answered in the tenth chapter, where I sayd that those twelue at the first were sent forth Preachers but for a time: so they returning to Christe ended the course of that their calling. And after that Christe rose againe from the dead, then beganne they to be appoynted ordinary teachers of the Church, this honour is giuen them in respect of the time to come.

What soeuer thou shalt binde. The second Metaphor or similitude properly belongeth to note the forgiuenesse of sinnes. For Christe by his Gospell deliuering vs from the guiltinesse of eternall death, loseth the snares of the curse wherein we were holden bound. Therefore he testifieth that the doctrine of the Gospell was ordained for the losing of our bandes, that wee being losed by the voice and testimony of men here vpon earth, should also in deed be losed in heauen. But because that very many doe not onely wickedly refuse the deliuerance offered, but also by their frowardnes do procure a heauier iudgement for themselves: therefore the power, yea and commaundement to binde, is also giuen to the ministers of the Gospell. Yet this is to bee noted, that this is accidentall to the Gospell, and as it were, against the nature of the same. As Paul, 2. Cor. 10. 6. teacheth, when he speaking of vengeance, which he sayth he hath ready against all vnbeleeuers and disobedient, presently after he addeth, when your obedience is fulfilled. For, if the reprobate did not through their own fault turne life into death, the Gospell shoulde bee the power of God to saluation to all menne. Yet, because that when the same is hearde, the vngodlinesse of many openly breaking out, doth prouoke the wrath of God the more, to such it is necessary that the saour thereof shoulde bee deadly. This is the summe, that Christ would assure his of the saluation profered vnto them in the Gospell, that they might assuredly looke for the same, as if hee himselue should descend from heauen, as a witnesse of it: and againe to strike a feare into the contemners, least they shoulde thinke that they might freely scorne at the ministers of the worde, both which were very necessary. For because that incomparable treasure of life is proposed vnto vs in earthly vesselles, 2. Cor. 4.7. If the authority of the outward doctrine were not thus sanctified vnto vs, the credit of the same woulde decay almost euery moment. Againe, the vngodly doe so boldly sette against it, because they thinke they haue to doe with men. Theretore Christ declareth that by the preaching of the Gospell is revealed vpon earth, what the iudgement of God shall bee in heauen, and the assurance of life and death cannot be had from otherwhere. This is a great honour, that wee are Gods interpreters to witnesse to the world his saluation. The great maiestie of the Gospell, which is called the ambassage of the mutuall reconciliation betweene God and men. To be short, it is a wonderfull comfort to godly mindes, when they know that the message of their saluation brought by a man of no repute and mortall, is ratified before God. In the meane season let the vngodly raue as they please at the doctrine, which is preached by the commaundment of God: they shall feele at the length how truly and earnestly God hath threatned them by the mouth of men. Further, the godly teachers being furnished with this hope, may without feare testifie vnto themselues and others the grace of God, which giueth life, and with no lesse courage may they thunder against the obstinate contemners of their doctrine. Thus farre haue I plainly expounded the naturall sence of the words, so that nothing remaineth to be added, except the Roman Antichrist desiring to colour his tyranny, dare bee so bolde as no lesse wickedly then vnfaithfully to peruert this whole place. And though the light of the true interpretation, which I haue shewed, seemeth to bee sufficient to chase away his darknes: yet, least he should any thing hinder the Godly readers, I wil briefly answer his corrupt quarrels. First, he imagineth Peter to be called the foundation of the Church. But who seeth no. that hee transferreth that to the person of the man, which was spoken of Peters faith? I grant that Peter and a rocke with the Grecians doe signifie one thing, but that the first is spoken after the phrase of the Athenians, & the other of the common language: but this diuerfitie is not rashly set down by Math but the gender is rather changed of purpose, that he might expresse some diuerse thing: & I doubt not but that Christe noted such a difference in his speech. Therefore Augustine doth wisely admonish, that it is not called a rock of Peter, but he is so called Peter of a rock, as we are all christians of Christ. Further, that I be not tedious, when that saying of Paul, 1. Cor. 3. 11. must be holden amongst vs for certaine & sure, that the church can haue no other foundation then in Christ alone, the Pope can not devise another foundation without sacrilegious blasphemy. And certainly how much we ought to detest this tyranny of the Pope euen in this one thing, it cannot be sufficiently expressed in any words, that for his sake the foundatiō of the church should be taken away, that the open gulfe of hell should swallow vp miserable soules. Adde further that this clause (as I touched before) doth not yet belong to the publike office of Peter, but onely amongst the holy stones of the temple, one place is giuen to him amongst the cheife. The titles that follow doe belong to the Apostolicall function. Whereof it followeth that nothing is spoken to Peter, which doth not belong also to the rest of his fellowes: for, if the dignitie of the Apostleship is cōmon amongst them, then whatsoeuer is annexed vnto the same, must also be common. But Christ speaketh vnto Peter only by name: for as one in the name of all had confessed Christ to be the sonne of God, so againe the speach is directed to one, which yet alik belōgeth to the other. Neither is that reason to be despised, which is alleaged by Cyprian and others,  $\text{y}$  Christ in the person of one spake vnto all, that hee might commend the vnity of the Church. They except that he to whom this was peculiarly giuen, is to be preferred aboue all the rest. And this is as much, as if they should contend to haue him to be an Apostle rather then his fellowes. For the power of binding and loosing cannot bee taken away from the office of teaching and the Apostleship, rather then heate or light from the sunne. But if we yeeld that somewhat more was granted vnto Peter then to the rest, that hee should excell amongst the Apostles: yet the Papists do foolishly infer, that a primacy was giuen him, that he should be the viuer fall head of all the Church. For there is both a difference betweene dignitie and power, & also there is a difference of being in a higher degree of honor amongst a few, then to gather the whol world vnder his elbowed. And truly Christ laid not a greater burden vpon him then he was able to beare. He is commanded to be a porter of the kingdome of heauen, he is commanded by bidding and losing to dispence the grace of God, & to execute his iudgment vpon the earth. namely, so farre as the power of a mortall man doeth reach. Therefore whatsoeuer is giuen, must bee restrained to the measure of grace, wherewith hee is indued for the edifying of the Church: So that huge empyre which the Papists arrogate vnto him, falleth downe. But if there were no controuersie nor strife but that Peter had it: yet this maketh nothing for the tyranny of the Pope. For the principle, which the papistes hold, no man in his right mind will grant them, that here it was giuen to Peter, that he should passe it ouer as it were by right of inheritance to the  $\text{y}$  should come after him. Wherefore the Papists do make him liberall of an other mans. Further if there should be a continuall succession, yet the Pope getteth nothing thereby, vntill hee be proued to be the lawfull successor of Peter. And how proueth he this: Because Peter died at Rome. As though Rome by the horrible murder of the Apostle gat her selfe the supremacy. But they pretend that hee was also Bishoppe there. How vaine that is I haue sufficiently shewed in my institution, from whence I had rather haue the whole tractation of this argument to be fetched, then heere with the trouble and wearines of the readers to vnfolde it againe. Yet, let this short clause be added: Although the Bishop of Rome were by law the successour of Peter, yet when by his owne falshood he shal depriue himselfe of so great an honour, whatsoeuer Christ gane to the successours of Peter, shall profite him nothing nothing It is too well knowne that the Popes court is at Rome : but they can shew no marke of a Church there. And hee as such abhorreth the office of a Pastor, as he couetously striveth for his authoritie. And if Christ omitted nothing for the extolling of Peters heyres, yet hee was not so prodigall, as to bestow that honour vpon Apostates.

Mathew. 16.

20. Then he charged his disciples that they should tel no mā that he was Iesus the Christ.

21. From that time forth Iesus begā to shew vnto his disciples that he must go vnto Ierusalē, and suffer many thinges of the Elders, and of the high Priests & of the Scribes, & be slaine, and rise againe the third day.

22. Then Peter tooke him aside & began to rebuke him, saying maister pity thy selfe: this shall not be vnto thee. 23. Then he turned back, & said vnto Peter, get thee behind me Sathan show art an offence vnto me: be cause thou vnderstandest not the things that are of God, but the things that are of men.

24. Iesus the said to his disciples of any man will follow me, let him forsake himself, & take vp his crosse, & follow me. 25. For whofoeuer wil saue his life, shall loose it: & whofoeuer shall lose his life for my sake shall find it. 26. For what shall it profit a mā though he should win the whole world, if he lose his owne soule? or what shall a man giue for recompence of his soule? 27. For the son of mā shall come in the glory of his father with his angels and then shall hee giue to euery man according to his deedes.

28. Verily I say vnto you, ther be some of them that stand here which shall not taste of death, till they haue seene the son of man come in his kingdome.

Marke 8.

30. And sharply he charged them, that concerning him they should tell no man. 31. Then hee began to teach them, that the soune of man must suffer many things, and should be re-proved of the Elders, & of the high Priests, & of the Scribes, and be slaine, & within three dayes rise againe. 32. And he spake that thing plainly. Then Peter tooke him aside, and began to rebuke him. 33. Then he turned backe, & looked on his disciples, and rebuked Peter, saying, get thee behind me, Sathan: for thou vnderstandest not the things that are of God, but the things that are of men.

34. And hee called the people vnto him with his disciples, & sayd vnto them, whofoeuer wil follow me, let him forsake himself, and take vp his crosse, & follow me. 35. For whofoeuer will saue his life, shall loose it: but whofoeuer shall lose his life for my sake, & the gospels, he shall saue it. 36. For what shall it profit a man, though he should win the whole world, if he loose his soule? 37. Or what shall a man giue for recompence of his soule? 38. For whofoeuer shall be ashamed of me, & of my words amōg this adulterous & sinfull generation, of him shall the son of man be ashamed also when he cometh in the glory of his father with his holy an-gels.

Marke 9

Luke 9.

21. And he warned & commanded them, that they should tell that to no man: 22. Saying, the sonne of man must suffer many thinges and be re-proved of the Elders, and of the high Priests, and Scribes, & be slain and the thirde day rise againe. 23. And he said to them all, if any man will come after mee: let him denie himselfe, and take vp his crosse dayly, and follow me. 24. For whofoeuer will saue his life, shall loose it: and whofoeuer shall loose his life for my sake, the same shall saue it.

25. For what aduantage geth it a man, if he win the whole world, & destroy himselfe or loose himselfe. 26. For whofoeuer shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, of him shall the sonne of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his glory and in the glory of the father, and of the holy Angels.

27. And I tell you of a surety, there bee some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they haue seene the kingdome of God.

Marke 9.

1. And he sayd vnto them, verily I say vnto you, that there bee some of them that stand heere, which shall not tast of death, till they haue scene the kingdome of God come with power.

Christ (after he had made a shewe of his glory to come) admonisheth his disciples what they shoulde suffer, that they also might prepare themselues to beare the crosse: for the time of tryall was at hande: for the which hee knewe them farre vnmeet, except they should be furnished with a new force. But Christ bent himselfe chiefly to shew this, that his kingdome shoulde begin not with royall pompe, nor with great riches, nor with the pleasant allowance of the world, but with a reproachfull death. But there was nothing more difficult then to ouercome such an offence, especially if we consider how thoroughly they were now perswaded of their maister. for they imagined that hee should procure them an earthly felicitie. Therefore they were caried away with a vaine hope, earnestly gaping for that time, when Christ should sodenly reueale the glory of his kingdome. They had so little mind of the ignominie of the crosse, so that they thought it not likely that any thing shoulde befall vnto him to the contrary. This circumstance also was very hard, that he should be reiected of the Elders and the Scribes, who had the gouernement of the Church in their handes. Whereof it is easie to gather, how necessary this admonition was. But, because it could not be, but that the only mention of the crosse would greiuously trouble their weake mindes, presently he healeth the wound, and sayth that the third day hee shall rise againe from death. And certainly, when as in his crosse there only appeared the infirmitie of the flesh, our faith shall find nothing wherein it shall rest or comfort it selfe, vntill it shall come to the resurrection, wherein the power of the spirit shineth forth. Therefore this course must be wisely holden by the ministers of the word, which desire to teach with profite, that they alwayes ioyne the glory of the resurrection, with the ignominie of death. But it is maruaile why Christ would not haue his Apostles to testifie of him, to whom hee had appointed that office before. For to what ende were they sent but that they should be preachers of the redemption, which depended vpon the comming of Christ? The answer is easie, if we reméber those things which I then set downe: namely, that they were not created doctours, to declare the certaine and full testimonie of Christ: but onely that they might prepare schollers for a maister: that is, to make thē which were ouerwhelmed with drowynings, apt to be taught and attentiuē. Further, that the commaundement was to last but for a time, and the preaching of Christ put an ende to the same. Now, because the time of his death drew neere, and they were not as yet ready to witnesse their faith: yea, their confesion shoulde haue beene had in dirision for the weakenes of their faith: therefore the Lord commaundeth them silence vntill that others know that he is the conquerour of death, and that he indue thē with more constancy.

22. Peter beganne to rebuke him: It is a signe of immoderate heate, that Peter vseth his maister thus: yet he seemeth to beare some reuerence towards towards him, that he tooke him aside, and durst not reprove him before witnesses: yet his intemperancy is great, in that he warneth him, as if he were not well in his wittes, that he should spare himselfe. But rash zeale driueth men, yea and casteth them downe headlong so farre, that they doubt not to make God subiect to their pleasure. Peter iudgeth it to bee an absurd thing, that the Elders should crucifie the sonne of God, who should be the redeemer of the people, & that hee should be put to death, who was the authour of life. Therefore hee endeouoreth to drawe Christ backe, that hee should not deliuer himselfe ouer to death. It is a fayre colour, but it is necessary that more credit bee giuen to the iudgement of Christ, then to Peters zeale, by what pretence soeuer it bee excusable. And heere wee are taught what those intentes, which are supposed to be good, are auailable before God. There is so great pride in men, that they thinke that they haue iniurie, and they complaine if that, which they thinke to be right, be not also accepted of God. So we see with what frowardnes the Papistes doe maintaine their deuotions, but while they so boldly allowe of themselves: God doth not onely reiect that which they thinke to be worthy of great prayse, but he also doth sharply condemne it of vngodly madnes. If truly the sence and iudgement of man should preuaile, Peters intent was godly, or at the least allowable. But Christ could not more sharply nor more contumeliously reiect him. What meaneth, I beseech you, his so sharpe an answer? who euer where behaued himselfe so meekely, that hee woulde not breake the brused reede, Esay 42. 3. How thundreth he now so vehemently against his chosen disciple? The reason is apparant, that in the person of one man he would restraine all men from flattering their owne affected zeale. For though it is harde to keepe vnder the pleasures of the flesh, for that they are like to wilde beastes: yet there is no beast so furious, as the wisdom of the flesh. Therefore Christ doth so sharply inueigh against the same, and beateth it downe as it were with an yron mallet, that wee might onely learne to bee wise out of the worde of God.

23. Get thee behinde mee Sathan. Some doe reason very fondly of this word behinde, as if Peter were commanded to follow, and not to goe before. For Luke before in the fourth Chapter declareth that the deuill was repulsed from the Lorde with the same wordes. And the worde Hypage signifieth to leaue off, from whence that latine word Apoge, i. auoyde, is deriued. Christ therefore reiecteth his disciple far off, because that with his preposterous zeale he plaid Sathans pranckes. Neither doth he simply call him aduersary, but he calleth him deuill, in token of greate detestation. The reason is to bee noted, which is presently added, Thou art an offence vnto mee, because thou understandest the things that are of men, and not the things that are of God. Peter was an offence to Christ, while hee opposed himselfe against his calling. Whereof it also appeareth howe men are madde in their peruerse zeale. For while Peter endeouored to stoppe his maisters course, hee was not aduised of himselfe, but that hee would haue defrauded himselfe and all mankind of eternall saluation.

Therefore in one woorde wee are taught, with what diligence that must be auoyded, whatsoeuer it bee that draweth vs from the obedience of

of God. And Christ openeth the fountaine of all this mischiefe, when he saith, that Peter saouureth the thinges which are of menne. Therefore least the heauenly iudge cast off vs and our endeouours to the deuill, let vs learne not to be tyed to our owne iudgement, but obediently to imbrace that which the Lorde alloweth. Now let the Papistes goe, and extoll their owne deuices vppe to the skie : they shall feele at length, when they shall come before the celestiaall tribunall seate, what that boasting shall preuaile, which Christe pronounceth to be deuillish. And for vs, let vs not desire otherwise to be wise then from the mouth of God, except wee would willingly shute the way of saluation against our selues with deadly barres.

24. Iesus then sayde to his disciples . Because that Christe saue Peter abhorre the Crosse, and knew that all others had the same affection, hee doeth generally entreate of bearing the Crosse, : neither teacheth hee the twelue alone, but layeth the same lawe vppon all the godly . Wee hadde almost the like sentence in matthew 10. 28. But there the Apostles onely were admonished of the persecution, which remained for them alsoone as they shoulde beginne to discharge their function : but here he teacheth the common exercise of all younglinges, and as it were entreteth into the firste principles, all them that will professe the Gospell. And sayeth expressly, If any manne will follow me, that hee mighte refell Peters imagination . For hee proposing himselfe an example of denyall of himselfe and of patience to euery manne, hee declareth that hee must suffer, that which Peter thought vnmete for his person . Furthermore, hee inuitheth all the members of his body to followe him . For so ought the woordes to be vnderstoode, If any manne will be my disciple, let him forsake himselfe, take vppe his Crosse, and follow mee, or let him frame himselfe after my example. And the meaning is, that none canne be accounted for Christes disciples, but they which are true followers of him, and are ready to runne in the same race.

Further, he prescribeth a short rule of imitation, that we might know in what thing hee especially requireth that we should be like vnto him : and that consisteth in two poyntes, in denyall of our selues, and in willinge bearing of the crosse. This denyall reacheth farre : namely, that we denying our owne wisdom, and forsaking all the affections of the flesh, might be ready to be brought to nothing, so that God might liue and raigne in vs . Wee knowe how naturally menne are ouerwhelmed with a blinde loue of themselues, how much they are giuen to themselues, and how much they account of themselues. But if wee desire to enter into Christes schoole, it behoueth to beginne at that foolishnesse whereunto Paule exhorteth vs. 1. Corinthians 3. 18. Then to go forwarde to tame and to bring vnder all affections. Therefore hee preacheth of taking vppe of the Crosse : for though generally the life of all menne is subiecte to common miseries: yet, because that God doeth peculiarly exercise his seruants, that hee might make them like vnto the image of his owne sonne, it is no meruaile that this law is sayd to be giuen to them. Also though God loadeth with the crosse aswell the wicked as the good, yet none are sayde to beare the crosse, but they which doe willingly lay their shoulders vnder it : for though a seirce & vntamed horse beareth a rider, yet hee taketh him not vp.

Therefore this is the patience of the faithfull, with a willing minde to beare the crosse. Luke addeth this woorde daily, which hath great force in it. for Christe declareth that there is no ende of our warfare, vntill wee shall depart out of this world. Therefore let this bee the daily meditation of the godly, when as they haue borne many troubles, to prepare themselues to beare new.

25. For who soeuer will saue his life. A most apt consolation, that they truly shall finde life, which doe willingly suffer death for Christ: for Marke doth expressly prescribe vnto the faithfull this cause of death: and therefore it is to bee vnderstood in Matthew his words. For oftentimes it cometh to passe, that ambition or desperation driueth prophane men to contemne life, so that courageously they haste to death, but yet they profit not therby. Also the opposed threatening auanceth much to the shaking off of the drowisie sluggishnes of the fleshe, when as he forewarneth thē that are desirous of this present life, that they onely preuaile thus farre, that they shall lose the same. There is a contrariety betwene this temporall life and the eternal, as we taught before vpon the tenth chapter, from whence the readers may seeke for the rest.

26. For what shall it profit a man, &c. if he lose his owne soule? The worde soule is heere taken properly: for Christe admonisheth that the soule of man is not therefore created to enjoy the worlde onely for a few dayes: but that at length it may attaine to that immortality in heauen as if he should haue said, how great is this sluggishnesse, & how beauly blockishnes is it, that the worlde so holdeth men bound vnto it, and overwhelmeth them, that they consider not to what end they were borne, and haue an immortall soule giuen vnto them, that the race of this earthly life being finished, they should liue for euer in heauen? And all men truly doe confesse that the soule is more worth then all the riches and pleasures of the world: but in the meane season the sence of the flesh doth so blind them, that wittingly and willingly they cast their soules into destruction. Therefore, least the world should enchaunt vs with her baytes, let vs consider in our minde the excellency of our soule: which if it be earnestly considered, doth easily dispearse the vaine imaginations of an earthly felicitie.

27. For the sonne of man shall come. That the former doctrine may the better sinke into our minds, christ fettereth before their eyes the iudgement to come: for that this transitory life may become vile vnto vs, it is necessary for vs to bee touched with an earnest feeling of the heauenly: The slownesse and sluggishnes of our minde hath need to bee holpe and stirred vp to looke vp into heauen. Therefore Christ catcheth the faithfull to his trybunall, that they might continually thinke that they liue for no other cause, but to aspyre to that blessed life, which shall be reucaled at that day. And the warning tendeth to this purpose, that we might know that they strue not in vaine, to whome the confession of their faith is more deare and precious then their life. as if Christe should haue sayd, Cast your liues into my hand and keeping without feare: for I will shew my selfe at length the auenger, who will at length restore you againe perfectly, though you seeme for a time to perith.

Hee mentioneth the glory of the father and the Angelles, least his disciples should iudge of the kingdome after his present face or shewe, for as yet hee was base and despised, being hid vnder the habite and shape of a seruant. Therefore he promiseth to be farre otherwise, when hee shall come to be the Iudge of the world. Further, those wordes which Marke and Luke haue more, the readers shall finde expounded in the tenth Chapter of Mathew: Also I haue spoken sufficiently otherwhere of the reward of workes. This is the sum of it: as oft as there is a rewarde promised to good workes, it doth not oppose the merite of them against the free righteousness of faith, neyther doth it shew the cause of saluation, but onely encourage the faithfull to the study of wel-doing while they are certaine that they labour not in vaine. Wherefore these two do very well agree, we are iustified freely, because we are accepted of God besides our desert: and yet that he of his owne free wil and pleasure bestoweth a reward not due vnto our workes.

28. Verily I say vnto you. Because the Disciples might yet doubt amongst themselves, when that day should be, the Lord stirreth them vp with a neerer hope: namely, that he will shortly giue a shewe or token of his glory to come. Wee know how true the common prouerbe is, in that which is desired hast it selfe seemeth to make delay: but it is found most true, especially amongst vs, while our saluation is deferred to the comming of Christ. The Lord therefore that hee might in the meane season refresh his disciples, hee proposeth vnto them for their confirmation a time in the meane season. as if hee shoulde haue said, If it seeme to long for you to waite for my comming, I will sooner prouēt the same. so. before you shal die, that kingdome of God shall be euident before your eyes, of the hope whereof I command you to depend. This is the naturall sense of the wordes. For that which some doe imagine of Iohn is but a fancy. By the comming of the kingdom of God is meant the manifestation of the heauenly glory, which Christ began at his resurrection, and shewed it more fully, by sending the holy Ghost, and by working maruailous workes: for in these beginnings he gaue his disciples a tast of the newnesse of the heauenly life, when by true and certaine tryals they might know him, that he sate at the right hand of his father.

18. And there came a voice out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved sonne, heare him.
19. And when the voice was past, Iesus was found alone

First, it is to be considered for what purpose Christ tooke vpon him the heauenly glory for so short a time, & had but onely three of his disciples as witnesses of this strange sight. The opinion of some, that it was done to that end, that they might be strengthened against that temptation, which was now: at hand, by reason of his death, is not probable to me. For why should hee haue deprived others of that remedie: nay, why doeth hee expressly forbidde them, that they should not declare what they had seene, before his resurrection: but because the profit of the vision should appeare after his death? Therefore I doubt not but that Christ would declare that he was not drawne to his death against his will, but went willingly to the same, that hee might offer vp a sacrifice of obedience to his father. This knowledge came not into the disciples mindes, vntill Christ rose againe. Neither was it necessary for them at that time to conceiue that diuine power of Christ, which they should know conquering vpon the crosse but they are taught against another time aswell for their owne sakes as for ours least the infirmite of Christ should offend any man, as though it were by necessity or constraint, that hee should suffer. For it is euident that it was easie for Christ to exempt his body from death, as to adorne it with heauenly glory. Therefore wee be taught that hee was subject to death, because his will was so: and that he was crucified, because he offered himselfe. For that same flesh, which being offered vpon the crosse lay in the graue, could haue bin free from death & the graue, when as it had now bene partaker of the celestially glory. But wee are also taught, that so long as Christ was conuersant in the worlde in the shape of a seruant, and that his maiestie was hid vnder the infirmitie of the flesh, nothing was withdrawne from him: because that he humbled himselfe of his own free will: but now the resurrection taketh away the vaile, wherewith his power was hidden for a time. Further, it was sufficient for the Lord to chuse three witnesses: because that by the lawe that number was prescribed for proouing any matter, Deut. 17. 6. The difference of the time ought not to offend vs. Math. and Mar. do number sixe whole dayes which passed betweene: But Luke, saying that it was done almost eight dayes after, comprehendeth as well that day wherein Christ spake that, as the day wherein he was transfigured. Therefore we see that they do agree very well in one sence vttered in diuers words.

2. And was transfigured before them. Luke sayeth that this came to passe, when hee prayed: and by the circumstance of the place and the time it may be gathered that he prayed for this that he obtained, that a visible shew or demonstration of his godhead might be reuealed in the brightnes of a new shape: not that hee had need to aske by prayer of any other, for that he had not, or that the will of the father was to be doubted of. but that in the whole course of his humilitie, if hee did any thing as God hee referred it to his father: and his purpose was to stirre vs vp by prayers. But in this transfiguration the disciples did not see Christe altogether in that excellency, that hee is in now in heauen, but hee onely gaue them such a taste of his great glory, as they were able to abide. Then his face shone as the sunne: but now it farre exceedeth the brightnesse of the sunne: Then an vnwonted brightnesse shone in his apparrell, now without apparrell the maiesty of his Godhead shineth throughour his whole body. So God in times past appeared vnto the fathers, not such as he was in himselfe, but as they were able to abide the beames of his great brightnesse: for Iohn sayth, 1. Io. 3. 2. that the faithfull shall not see him as hee is before that they bee made like vnto him.

Now there is no cause for any man to dispute subtilly of the whitnesse of his garments, or of the brightnes of his face, when as this was not a full reuealing of his celestiaall glory: but he partly gaue a taste in figures, of that which they were not yet able wholly to conceiue.

3. Moses and Elias appeared vnto them. It is demaunded, whether Moses and Elias were verily present, or that the disciples saw onely the likenesse of them, as the Prophets did oftentimes see the visions of things absent. Though the matter bee disputable on both sides (as men say) yet it is more probable in my iudgement, that they were brought in deede into that place. Neither is there any absurditie in it, seeing that God hath both bodies and soules in his hand, at his pleasure to restore the dead to life for a time.

And Moses and Elias rose not then for themselues: but that they might bee present there with Christe. If any manne demaunde againe how the Apostles knewe Moses and Elias, whome they hadde neuer seene: The answer is easie: for sith God brought them to appeare, hee gaue them also signes and Markes whereby they might bee knowne amongst them. And this was by an extraordinary manner of reuelation, that they certainly knew them to be Moses and Elias.

But why these two appeared rather then any other of the company of the holy fathers, that reason ought to satisfie vs, that the lawe and the prophets had no other purpose nor end but Christ. For it made greatly for our fayth, that Christ came not without testimony, but was before commended of God. Neither doth that reason displease me, which was wont to bee brought, that Elias was especially taken, to represent all the Prophetes: nor though hee left nothing in writing, yet was hee the chiefe next vnto Moses: he restored the religion of God, which was corrupted: yea, hee was without comparison an especiall auenger of the lawe and true holynesse, being nowe almoste extinguished. That they appeare with Christe, and talke together is a signe of consente. But what their talke was Luke onely reporteth: namely, that they talked of the manner of his departure, which remained for him at Ierusalem. Further this must nor bee retrained to their priuate persons, but rather to that office, which was before enjoyed then. For it was the will of God, though they hadde bene nowe long dead, and had performed the course of their calling, that they should yet againe confirme with their voyce that which they had taught in their life: that wee might knowe that the saluation promised to the holy fathers in the sacrifice of Christe is common to vs. Nowe, when as the olde Prophetes propheted of the death of Christe: hee (which was the eternall wildome of God) sate in the secrete throne of his glory: Whereof it followeth that he was not to bee clothed with flesh subiect vnto death, but that hee freely submitted himselfe thereunto.

4. Master, it is good for vs to be heere. Luke reporteth that Peter sayde so when Moses and Elias were gone: whereby wee gather that hee was a frayde least that by their departure they shoulde loose that sweete and blessed sight. And though it is no meruaile that Peter was so delighted with that pleasur sight, that all other things being despised, the onely enjoying of that satisfied him, as it is said in the Psal. 16. 11. That the fulnesse of ioy is the countenance of GOD: yet this was a preposterous desire of his: that hee vnderstoode not the ende of the vision: then that hee foolishly made the seruantes equall with the master: thirdly hee erred, when hee woulde make transitorie Tabernacles for menne to dwell in, which were already receiued in to the celestially and Angelicall glory. I say hee vnderstoode not the ende of the vision. For, when hee heard Moses and Elias say, that the time of the death of Christe was at hande, as a manne amazed at that sight, which was but momentary, hee dreamed the same to be eternall.

What meaneth this, that the kingdome of Christ should be by this meanes included into so narrow a rounth of twentie or thirte foote? where was the redemption of the whole Church? Where was the fellowshippe of eternall saluation? This also was a very penterse iudgement, to imagine Elias and Moses to bee fellowes with the Sonne of God: as if it were not necessary that all menne shoulde bee brought vnder, that hee alone may bee extolde. Now, if Peter is content with his lotte, why doth hee thinke them to haue neede of any earthly supplies; at the sight of whom he thinketh himselfe so happy? I therefore two of the Euangelistes doe very well note that he knew not what he said.

Marke

Marke addeth that cause for that they were affrayd. Neither was it the will of God, that the Apostles should at any time profit further then to behold the Godhead of his sonne for a moment, as it were in a lively glasse. Afterwardes in successe of time he shewed them the frute of it, and corrected their want of iudgement. Therefore Marke declareth that Peter being astonied, spake as a man altogether amazed.

5. Behold a bright cloud. A cloud was put before their eyes, that they might know that they are not yet fite to behold the brightnesse of the heavenly glory: for when as the Lord gaue some tokens of his presence, he added withall some vailes, to suppress the boldnes of mens wisedome: so now that he may instruct his disciples in humilitie, he withdraweth from their eyes the beholding of the celestially glory. Also this admonition doth appertaine to vs, that we should not desire, to breake into those secretes, which passe our senses: but rather that e- uery manne doe soberly containe himselfe within the measure of his fayth Further, this cloud should be in stead of a bridle to vs, least that our curiositie become more wanton then is meete. The disciples also are admonished that they must returne to their accustomed warfare, and that they must not promise themselves a triumph before the time.

There came a voice out of the cloud. And this also is worthy to be noted, that the voice of God sounded out of the cloude, but there was neither body nor face seene. Therefore let vs remeber that warning that Moses gaue, Deut. 4 15. God appeared not in any visible shape, least that we being deceiued, should think him to be like vnto man. It is true that the holy fathers in times past saw sundry shapes, whereby they might know God: yet he alwayes abstained from such shewes as might yeeld any occasion or prouocation to make Idolles. And truly, sith the minds of men are bent more then is meete they should be, to grosse fantasies, it were hurtful to put oyle to the lampe. This was a most notable manifestation of the glory: whē as he calleth vs vnto him out of the cloud with his owne voice, how absurd it is for vs to go about to make him to be present before our eyes in a stock of wood or stone? Therefore let vs learne by faith alone, & not with fleshly eyes to pierce to that light, which we cannot come neare, wherein God doth dwell. But the voyce came out of the cloude, so as the disciples knowing that it came frō God, might receiue the same with such reuerence as was meete.

This is my sonne. I doe willingly subscribe to their iudgement, which thinke that here is a secrete opposition betweene Moses, Elias and Christe, as if that Christe shoulde commaunde his disciples to bee content with the onely sonne: for that name sonne is Emphaticall or very forcible, whereby he is extolled about the seruants. Also Christe is here adorned with two titles no lesse honourable then profitable to our faith, namely, welbeloued Sonne, and also Maister. In that the father calleth him beloued, in whom he is well pleased, hee declareth him to be the Mediatour in whom hee reconcileth the world to himselfe. When he commandeth to heare him, he maketh him the chiefe and only doctour of his Church. For when as it was his purpose to note him from all others, as by these words we doe truly and properly gather, by nature he is his only sonne, in like maner it is to be obserued, that he alone is beloued of the father, that he is made the only doctour, that all authoritie might rest in his power.

If any manne will except against this, asking whether God loueth Angels, and menne, or no: the answer is easily made, the fatherly loue of GOD which hee beareth to Angelles and to menne, commeth from that fountaine. Neither is the sonne therefore beloued of the father, that other creatures should be hated: but that hee might impart with them, that which was proper to himselfe. Though the estate of vs and of the Angelles is diuers. For these were neuer estranged from God, that they shoulde neede a reconciler: but we by sinne were enemies, vntill Christe reconciled him vnto vs. Yet that is alwayes certaine that God is mercifull to both, so as he embraceth vs in Christ, for the very Angells could not be iyned to God without a head. Now, when as the father speaketh heere, and distinguisheth himselfe from the sonne, it followeth that they are distincte in persons, though the essence and maiesty is one, and the same.

Hearc him, I shewed before that the Church is called backe by this word to the only doctour Christ, that it might depend only of his mouth. For though Christ came to confirme the law and the Prophets, yet he so holdeth the chiefe roume, that by the brightnesse of his Gospell, he swalloweth vpe those sparkes which shone in the olde Testament: for hee is the sonne of righteousnesse, at whose comming it appeared to be full day. And this is the reason why the Apostle sayeth in the first chapter to the Hebrewes, God who at sundry times, & in diuers maners in old time spake by the prophets, spake in these last dayes by his beloued sonne. Furthermore at this day Christ is no lesse heard in the lawe & the Prophets then in the Gospell, that the authority of a maister, might wholly rest vpon him, euen as he challengeth the same to himselfe alone, Matthew 23. 8. And hee keepeth not his prerogatiue safe, except that all mens tongues keepe silence. Wherefore it is necessary, that whatsoeuer menne haue deuised, shoulde be ouerthrowne and cast downe, that he might keepe vs vnder his doctrine. And he doth daily send forth doctours, but such as doe purely & faithfully deliuer that which they should learne of him, and not such as doe mixe the Gospell with their owne additions. In summe, no man is a faithfull teacher of the Church, except that he be both Christes disciple, and also bring others to him to be taught.

6. And when the disciples heard this. It was Gods will to strike the disciples with this feare, that hee might the better imprinte the remembraunce of the vision in their hearts. In the meane season we see how great the infirmitie of our flesh is, which is so afrayde at the hearing of the voyce of God. The cause why the wicked doe either scorne at it, or contemptuously despise it, is, because God doth not effectually touch them. But it is necessary that the Maiestie of God should cast vs downe as soone as wee feele him. But Christe afterwarde doeth his office, raising vp them that are throwne downe: for therefore came he downe to vs, that by his direction the faithfull might without feare appeare in the presence of God: and his Maiesty which otherwise consumeth all fleshe, shall be no more terrible vnto them.

Furthermore, hee doeth not onely comfort them in woorde, but also confirmeth them by touching. That afterwarde it is sayde, that they saw onely Christe, tendeth to shewe that the glory was tied to the lawe and the the Prophets but for a time, that onely Christ might continue glorious. For if we will vs the helpe of Moses rightly, he must not be rested vpon, but we must apply our diligence, that by him wee may bee led as it were by the hande vnto Christ, whose minister he is together with all the rest. This place also may be applied to the ouerthrowing of their superstitions, which doe not onely sette Christ equall with the Prophets and Apostles, but doe so ioyne him with their common halie aintes, as if that hee were as any one of their number. But the graces of God doe shine in his Saintes to a far other ende, then that they should forceably take vnto themselues part of the honour due vnto Christ. And the fountaine of this error might haue bene noted in the Disciples themselves: for as long as they were feared with the maiestie of God, their munes wandered in seeking after men: but when Christ had comfortably raysed them vp, he onely was seene of them. For if we haue that comfort in vs, wherewith Christ taketh away our feares, all those foolish affections which doe draw vs hether & thether, shall vanish away.

Mathew 17.

Marke 9.

Luke 9.

9. And as they came downe from the Mountaine Iesus charged them saying: Shewe the vision to no man, vntil the sonne of man rise againe from the dead.

10. And his Disciples asked him saying: Why then say the Scribes, that Elyas must first come?

11. And Iesus answered, & sayd vnto them: certainly Elyas must first come, and restore all things.

12. But I say vnto you that Elyas is come already, & they knewe him not: but haue done vnto him what soeuer they would: likewise shall also the Sonne of manne suffer of them.

13. Then the Disciples perceiued that he spak vnto them of Iohn Baptist.

9. And as they came downe from the mountaine, hee charged them that they should tell no man what they had seene, saue when the Sonne of man were risen from the dead againe.

10. So they kept that matter to themselues, and demanded one of another, what the rising againe from the dead should meane?

11. Also they asked him saying Why say the Scribes, that Elyas must first come?

12. And he answered, and saide vnto them: Elyas verily shall come first, and restore all things: and as it is written of the sonne of man hee must suffer many thinges, and bee set at nought.

13. But I say vnto you, that Elyas is come (and they haue done vnto him, what soeuer they would) as it is written of him.

36. And they kept it close, and tolde no manne in those daies any of those thinges which they had seene.

9. And as they came downe from the Mountaine. We haue shewed before why the time was not as then fully come for the publishing of that vision. And truly there should haue beene no credite giuen to the disciples, except that Christe had giuen at his resurrection a more euident token of his glory. But after that the diuine power shewed it selfe openly, that momentanie beholding of his glory began to haue place, that it might euidently appeare euen when he was most abased, that yet his Godhead remained sound with him, though it was couered vnder the vaile of the flesh. Therefore he doth not without cause command his disciples to hold their peace, vntill he should arise from death.

10. And his Disciples asked him, saying. As soone as there was mention made of the resurrection, the disciples doe thinke that the kingdome of Christ should begin: for so doe they expound this saying, that the worlde should know him to be the Messias. For they imagined another matter of the resurrection then Christ meant, as appeareth by Marke: They disputed amongst themselves, what the rising againe from the dead should meane. It may be that that table began then to spring, which is holden at this day for a certaine Oracle amongst the Rabbines that the coming of the Messias should not be after one maner: for first, it should be meane and base: but shortly after his royall and kingly dignitie should follow. And this errour hath some colour of likelihood in it, for it sprang of a true principle. The Scripture declareth that the Messias should come twise: for it promisseth that he should be a redeemer, that should with the sacrifice of himselfe wash away the sinnes of the world.

And to this purpose do belong those prophesies of Zach. 9. 9. Reioyce O Sion: Behold thy king cometh, poore, sitting vpon an Ass, &c. and of Esay 53. 2. Hee hath neither soueraine nor beautie, when wee see him: hee was without sounne, and like to a Leper, that we should not desire him. Then he propoeth him as a conquerour of death, who should make all things subiect vnto him. But wee see howe the Rabbines doe depraue the sincere doctrine of the scripture with their inuentions. And as all things were very much corrupted at the coming of Christ, so it is to be supposed that the people had this ansie also amongst them. It hath bene shewed twise or thrise howe grossely they erred, about the person of Elias. It may be that they also meant maliciously and subtilly, vnder pretence of Elias to derogate from Christ. For when as Elias was promised as a forerunner to the Messias, who should prepare the way before him: it was easie for them to lay this prejudice vpon Christ, that hee came without Elias: euen as the deuill at this day enchaunteth the Papistes almoste with the same subtiltie, that they should not looke for the day of iudgement, vntill that Elias and Enoch should appeare. It may verely bee supposed, that the Scribes had deuised this snare of purpose, that they might discredit Christe, as if hee wanted the cheife signe and note of the Messias.

11. Certainely Elyas must come. We haue shewed other where whereof this errour sprang amongst the Iewes. For in restoring the decayed estate of the Church, Iohn Baptist should be like to Elias, and Malachy gaue that name also vnto him: that was rashly taken of the Scribes, as if that the same Elyas the Thesbite should returne againe into the worlde. Now CHRISTE declareth that Malachie prophesied nothing in vaine, but that that his prophesie was naughtily wrested to an other purpose, as if he should have said. the promise of the coming of Elias was true, & it was also fulfilled: but now haue the Scribes refused Elias, whose name only they doe obiect falsely against me. And the reformatiō is attributed to the Baptist, not that he performed the same, but because that in a continuall course he deliuered that to christ, as from hand to hand to be performed which he had begun. And because the Scribes had reiected Iohn without a cause, Christe admonisheth his disciples that there is no cause why they should be hindred with their crafty deceits: further, it must seeme no strange thing vnto the, if they take the same liberty to reiect the master, & they did before to reiect the seruant. And least any man should be troubled with the strangenes of the matter, the Lord declareth that they were both for. told in the scriptures: namely that the redeemer of the world should be reiected of the false & vngodly teachers, as well as Elias his forerunner was.

Because that Marke is fuller, and setteth downe the seuerall poyntes plainly, wee will follow the course of wordes set downe by him. And first he doth euidently declate wherefore Christe became now sharper then he was woonte to be, whereas he exclaimeth against the Iewes, as people vnworthy to bee any longer borne withall for their frowarde malice. Wee know howe gently hee was woont to vse them, yea though they dealt importunately with him. The father here sueth for his onely sonne: very great necessitie vrgeth him, modestly and humbly he sueth to Christe for his mercy. Why then is he of a sodaine more earnest against them, then he was accustomed, and saith that they are not to bee borne? Because the reason of so great seueritie is not set downe by Matthew and Luke, some interpreters were deceiued, which thought that Christe rebuked here either his disciples, or the childes father. But if wee doe well consider the whole course of the history, as it is set downe by Marke, it shall be easie to iudge that Christ was rather offended at the malice of the Scribes, then so roughly to reprocue the ignorant and the weake. When as in the absence of Christ the lunatike child had been brought forth in the middest amongst them, it seemed to be a very plausible occasion for the Scribes to quarrell, & they willingly tooke it. They are therefore earnest with the disciples, that if they haue any power, they should shew it in healing the childe. It is likely that the disciples tryed, and could not bring their purpose to passe: so the Scribes boast as conquerours, and they doe not onely scorne at the disciples, but they quarrell against Christ, as if that his power were decayed in their person. But this was a most abhominable vngodlines, ioyned with like ingratitude, maliciously to suppress so many miracles, whereby they hadde learned howe great power Christe had: for of set purpose they endeouored to quench the light set before their eyes. Wherefore Christ exclaimeth against them not without cause, that he can beare no longer with them, and calleth them a faithlesse and crooked nation: for they shoulde by so many former instructions haue at least profited thus farre, not to seeke occasion of quarelling.

MAR. 14. Hee sawe a great multitude. No doubt but the Disciples were accounted as iesting stockes, as the enemies to the truth are woonte with their bragges to make much, euen of nothing. The Scribes therefore by their their troublefome dealing, layd the disciples open to be scorned of many. And yet it seemeth that some were not euill affected: for as soone as they see Iesus, they salute him: yea, his presence pulleth down the insolencie of the Scribes, in so much that being demanded whereof they disputed they held their peace.

17. Maister, I have brought my sonne. Mathew noteth another kinde of disease then Marke doth: for he saith that the man was lunatike, Yet they do both agree in these two points, that he was dumbe, and at certaine times was driuen into rages. But they are called lunatike, which either at the wane of the Moone haue the falling sicknes, or are troubled with a giddinesse. Neither doe I hold that which Chrysostome imagineth, that this name was inuented by the subtiltie of Sathan, that he might blot with infamie the good creatures of God: for certaine experience teacheth that these diseases doe increase and decrease according to the course of the Moone: yet this letteth not, but that Sathan may adde his forces to such naturall meanes. Therefore I thinke that this man was not deafe and dumbe by nature, but that his tongue and eares were possessed by Sathan. Furthermore, when as the weaknesse of the braine and sinewes made him subiect to the falling sicknesse there was a greater mischief added by Sathan himselfe. Heereof it came to passe, that he euery where sought his owne destruction, then, that he lay all to torne, that he falleth downe as one without life, and like vnto a dead man. And heereby wee learne howe many meanes Sathan hath to hurt vs, except he bee driuen away by the hand of God. As many infirmities as there are of the flesh and of the soule, which wee thinke to be innumerable, so many dartes doe they yeelde to Sathan to annoy vs. Therefore we are more then blockish, if so miserable a condition of ours, doe not prouoke vs to prayers. And heerein doth the incomparable goodnesse of God shewe it selfe, that when we are beset with so diuers dangers, yet hee preferueth vs vnder his defence: especially if wee consider with how great a desire our enemy is inflamed to destroy vs. But this comfort should also come into our minde, that Christ came to bridle his madnesse, and that wee doe therefore remaine safe amongst so many dangers, because our heavenly medicine is of more force then all our dangers. The circumstance of the time maketh also to this purpose: the father answereth that his sonne hath bene thus miserably tormented euen from his youth. If Sathan haue so great libertie giuen him vpon that tender age, what shoulde not wee feare, which by our owne sinnes doe make our selues meete for such deadly blowes, and which doe minister weapons to our enemy, and vpon whom hee coulde enter as into his owne right, if his desire were not restrained and ouerthrowne by his wonderfull power.

M A T. 17. O generation faithlesse, Though Christ seemeth to direct his speech to the father of the lunatike, yet it is not to be doubted, but that he had respect to the Scribes, as I taught a little before. For it is certaine that the simple and weake were not rebuked, but they which being inclosed in their owne malice, doe stubbornely resist God. Therefore Christe denieth them as worthy to be borne with all any more by him, and threatneth that he will shortly diuorce himselfe from them. But nothing worse can fall out, then that hee should forsake vs.

And

And this is no small reproofe, that they should so proudly refuse the grace of his visitation, where is also to be noted that men are to be handled diuersly, euery man according to his inclination: for when as hee allureth them that are apt to be taught with all gentleness he beareth with the weake, and doth also moderately stirre vp the slow, he sparcth not these crooked serpents, whom he seeth not to be cured with any remedies.

MAR. 20. Aspene as the spirit saw him. That the deuill rageth more vehemently vpon the man then he was wont, it is no maruell: for the nearer the grace of Christ sheweth it selfe, and the more effectually it worketh, the more outrageously Sath infaireth: for he is stirred vp with the presence of Christ, as with the sound of a trumpet, and he moueth what tumults hee can, and stirreth as much as he is able. It behooueth vs to meditate this before the time, leaſt that our faith be troubled, as oft as at the appearance of the grace of Christ, this our enemie ariseth against vs with more violence then hee was wont. Yea, another thing moreouer is heere to be noted, the true beginning of our healing is to be so thoroughly afflicted, that we shall be but little from death. And also, that the Lord kindleth a torch or light at the furious rage of Sathan, to shewe forth his grace: for when as men were astonished at that horrible sight, thereby the power of Christe which presently followed, might bee the better discerned of them.

21. Of a childe. Heereby wee gather that this was not inflicted as a punishment for the sinnes of the man: but was the secret iudgement of God. It is certaine that the infantes when they come first out of the wombe of their mother, are not innocent before God and guilelesse, but Gods scourges haue some time secret causes, and that for the tryall of our obedience. Neither do wee otherwise yeelde that honour that is due to God, then if wee doe reuerently and modestly adore his iustice, euen when hee is hidden from vs. If any man desire to know more matter, he may search in that place of the ninth chapter of Iohn: neither this man hath sinned, nor his parents.

22. And if thou canst doe any thing, helpe vs. Wee seee howe little honour hee yeeldeth vnto Christ: for hee thinking him to bee some prophet, whose power is finite within measure, hee commeth vnto him doubting. But the first foundatiō of faith is to embrace the immeasurable power of God. And it is the first entrance to prayers, to extoll the same about all lettes, so that wee may be certainly perswaded that wee pray not in vaine. And because that this man thought of Christ no otherwise then as of a man, his false opinion is corrected for it behooueth that he should beleue, that he might bee capable and fit to receiue the grace desired. Christe doeth not plainly reprove the man in his answer: but turning backe againe vpon him another way that which hee had spoken euill, hee sheweth him his fault, and teacheth him to seke a remedy. For this exception: If thou canst beleue, is as much as if he should haue said. Thou desirest me to helpe thee if I can doe any thing: But thou shalt finde in mee a fountaine of power, that cannot be drawne drie, if that thou bringest a measure of faith large enough. Heereof may bee gathered a profitable doctrine which generally belongeth vnto vs all. The Lord is not the let, that the great boundlesse of his goodness floweth not from him vnto vs: But it must bee

imputed to the narrow straites of our faith, that it stilleth downe to vs as it were drop after drop: nay, oft times we cannot feele a drop, because that our vnbeleife stoppeth vp our heart. But in vaine would some subtle men shew the selues here, as if Christ would teach, that man could beleue of himselfe, when as he had no other purpose, then to cast vpon men the fault of their owne weakenes: so oft as they doe weaken the power of God by their owne vnbeleife.

23. All things are possible to him that beleueth. It is not to be doubted but that Christ taught that the fulnes of al good things was giuen vnto him of his father and that any kind of helpe cannot be hoped for from him a'one otherwise, then as from the very hand of God, as if he should haue sayd: onely beleue, & thou shalt obtaine. But how faith shall obtaine any thing, we shall see a little after.

24. I beleue Lord. Hee sayth that he beleueth, and yet confesseth himselfe to be an vnbeleuer, though these two seeme to be contrary, yet ther is no man which hath not the trial of it in himselfe: for where as there is not a perfect faith any where, it followeth that they are in part vnbeleuers: yet so God of his mercie pardoneth vs, and accounteth vs faithfull for that little portion of faith. Yet it behoueth vs, diligently to shake of the dregs of infideliuie which doe sticke in vs, and to strue with them, and to craue of the Lord that he would correct the: and as oft as we are in this conflict to flie to him to helpe vs. If we well consider what is giuen to euery man, it shall easily appeare that there are very fewe that haue an excellent faith, few that haue a meane faith, and that the most haue but a small measure.

Mathew. 17

Mar. 9.

Luke 17

19. Then came the disciples to Iesus apart, and sayd: Why could not wee cast him out?

20. And Iesus sayd vnto them: Because of your vnbeleife: for verily I say vnto you, if ye haue faith as much as is a graine of mustard seed, ye shall say vnto this mountain, remove hence to yonder place, and it shall remove: and nothing shall be vnpossible vnto you.

21. Howbeit this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting.

28. And when he was come into the house, his disciples asked him secretly why could not wee cast him out?

29. And hee sayd vnto them, This kinde can by no other meanes come forth, but by praiere and fasting.

5. And the Apostles sayd vnto the Lord: increase our faith.

6. And the Lord said: if yee hadde faith as much as a graine of mustard seede, and should say vnto this Mulberrie tree, plucke thy selfe vp by the rootes, and plant thy selfe in the sea, and it should euen obey you.

19. Then came the Disciples. The Disciples do maruayle that the power which once they hadde is taken from them, when as they deprived themselves thereof through their owne faulte. Therefore Christe assigneth this want to their vnbeleife, and that sentence which hee touched before, hee rehearseth againe, and profeuteth more at large that nothing is impossible to sayth. It is certaine that it is an hyperbolicall kinde of speache when as he sayth, that by faith trees and mountaines should be remoued. Yet the summe tendeth to this purpose, that God will neuer leaue vs, so that wee woulde open the doore to his grace. Neither is his meaning, that God will giue whatsoeuer commeth rashly in our minde or thought: nay, when as nothing is more contrary to faith, then the rash and vnaduised vowes of our flesh, it followeth that where faith raigneth, euery thing is not confusedly desired, but that which the Lord alloweth. Therefore this sobrietie must bee holden, that wee desire not more then that which he hath promised vs, and that our prayers be restrained to that rule he set downe. If any man object that the disciples knewe not whether it pleased the Lord that the Lunatike should bee healed, the answer is readie, that these things befell through their owne fault. For Christ now speaketh of a speciall faith, which had his secret forces as the present matter required. And this is that faith whereof Paul maketh mention in the 1. Cor. 12. 9. Then how came it to passe that the disciples were spoiled of that power of the spirit, which they had before for the working of miracles, but that they had choaked it with their owne slouthfulnesse? But that which Christ spake of a particular faith according to the circumstance of the place, appertaineth to the common faith of the whole Church.

21. This kind goeth not out, In this saying Christ doth not reprove their sluggishnesse, that they might know that they had neede of no common faith: for otherwise they might haue excepted, & they were not altogether without fayth. Therefore the meaning is that euery faith sufficeth not, when the battell is to be fought hotly with Sathan, but it requireth strong forces. And he prescribeth prayer as a remedie to the weakenesse of faith, whereunto he adioyneth fasting as a helpe. You, sayth he, tender exorcismes come forth as it were to fight with a shadow, or to battell in sport: but you haue to deale with a stout champion, who will not be ouercome but with a great & sharpe fight. Therefore faith must be stirred vp with prayer: and because you are colde and slow to prayer, the helpe of fasting must also be added. Hereby it doth evidently appeare how ridiculously the Papiſts doe of fasting make a medicine to driue away deuils, when as the Lord applyeth it to no other purpose, the to stirre vp a desire to prayer. When as he sayth that kinde of deuill can not be cast forth by any other meanes then by prayer and fasting, the meaning is, where as Sathan hath taken deepe rootes, & hath had a long possession, or where he walketh with an vnbrideled libertie, it will be hard and much a doe to get the victorie, and therefore wee must strue with all our forces.

Matth. 18.

1. The same time the disciples came vnto Iesus, saying: Who is the greatest in the kingdome of heauen?

2. And Iesus called a little childe vnto him, and sette him in the midst of them:

3. And sayd, verily I say vnto you: except ye be con-uerted, & become as little children, yee shall not enter into the kingdome of heauen.

4. Who soeuer therefore shall humble himselfe as this little childe, the same is the greatest in the kingdome of heauen.

5. And who soeuer shall receiue such a little childe in my name, receiueth me, they shall kill him, but after that he is killed, hee shall rise againe the third day. 32. But they vn-derstood not that saying, & were a fraid to aske him. 33. After he came to Capernaum, & when he was in the house, he asked them, what was it that ye disputed among you by the way.

34. And they held their peace:
for by the way they reasoned among themselues, who should be the chiefe.

35. And he sate downe and called the twelue, & sayd to them:
If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and ser-uaunt vnto all.

36. And he tooke a little child, and set him in the middes of the,
and tooke him in his armes, and said vnto them,

37. Who soeuer shall receiue one of such little childrenne in my name, receiueth mee: and who soeuer receiueth mee: receiueth not me, but him that sent me.

shall bee deliuered into the hands of men.

45. But they vnderstood not that word: for it was hidde from them, so that they could not perceiue it:
and they feared to aske him of that worde.

46. Then there arose a disputation among them, which of them should be the greatest.

47. When Iesus sawe
the thoughtes of their heartes, hee tooke a little childe, and sette him by him,

48. And sayd vnto them:
Who soeuer receiueth a little childe in my name, receiueth me: and who soe-uer shall receiue mee, receiueth him that sent mee:
for hee that is least among you all, he shall be great.

22. As they aboade in Galile. The nearer the time of his death approached, the ostner Christ warneth his disciples, least that feareful sight should weaken their faith. This speach was vsed a little after that the myracle was wrought. For Mark saith that he went from that place into Galile, that he might liue quietly there in the meane time. for he had determined to come to Ierusalé at the solemne day of the sacrifice, because he was at the next passcouer to be offerd vppe himselfe.
And though they had bin often admonished of this matter before, yet they are no lesse troubled, then if they neuer had heard any thing of it before. The opinion which they had taken before, doeth so much preuaile, as that it darkeneth their minds in the most cleare light. The Apostles had imagined amongst theselues, that the kingdom of Christ should be quiet & pleasant: they thought that alfoone as it should be shewed forth, it should bee receiued with the allowance of all men: there was nothing more incredible then that the priests and Scribes, & others the chiefe of the Church should be against it. Therefore they being in errour do not admit any thing that is said on the contrary part: for Marke sayth they knew not what the Lord ment. But whereof commeth this ignorance, when as his woerde was so manifest and so plaine, but that that vaine illusion hadde covered their mindes as with a vaile, that they durst not aske any further: though it may bee partly attributed to a certaine reuerence, yet I thinke not but that they held their peace as menne being oppressed with sorrowe, and stricken with that absurditie which they hadde imagined to themselves. Wherefore this shame is not altogether to bee prayed, which nourished a perplexed doubt and a corrupt sorrow. In the meane while a secret seede of godlinesse, rather then any manifest knowledge of the truth, tied them to Christ, that they shoulde not depart from his schoole. There was some beginning or roote of fayth and of true vnderstanding planted in their hearts, so that the zeale of following Christ was far from that implicite faith of the Pupils: but because they had not as yet proceeded to farther the know'edge of the nature of the kingdom of God, and of the promised renewing in Christ, I do say that the desire of godlynes did rather appeare in them then any certaine knowledge. Hereby we gather what was in them worthy either of prayse or of reprehension. But though their blockishnesse is not to bee excused: yet there is no cause why wee should maruell that so expresse and euident a declaration of the crosse and ignominie of the maister, was vnto them a riddle: not onely because it was contrary to the glory of the sonne of God to bee refused and to be condemned, but because there was nothing more vnlikely, then that the grace promised peculiarly to the Iewes, should be reiected of the gouernours of the same nation. And because the great horror of the crosse, wherewith they were suddenly taken, excluded them from the comfort of the hope of the resurrection which was added: let vs learne that so ofte as mention is made of the death of Christ, to comprehend the whole 3. dayes together, that the death and buryall may leade vs vnto the happy tryumph and new life.

1. The same time the disciples came. It appeareth by the other two, that the disciples came not to Christe of their owne free will: but when as they had priuily reason'd the matter by the way, they were drawne out of their denne into the light. But there is no absurditie in it, that Matthew hasting to Christes answers, doeth not set downe the whole course of the history, but passing by the beginning, doeth summarily declare why Christ reprobued that foolish desire of soueraigntie amongst the disciples. But when Christ inquireth of the secret speech, and vrgeth the disciples to confesse, that which they desired to haue suppressed: wee are taught to beware of all emulation, bee it neuer so secreete. Further, the circumstance of the time is to bee noted: the foretelling of death had made them sadde and doubtfull: yet as if they had heard of some fond fables, or had a poetickall cup of faine I drinke begun to them, they doe presently striue about the supremacie. How cometh it to passe that so great carefulnes shoulde so speedily vanish away, but that the mindes of men are giuen so much to ambition, that they forgetting the present warfare, being deceiued with a false imagination, doe straight steppe to the triumphs? If the remembrance of that so lately spoken, was so soone forgotten of the Apostles: what shall become of vs, if we bid the meditation of death farewell for a long time, and giue our selues to slouthfulnesse, to carelesnesse, or idle speculations. But it is demanded what occasion of trouble the disciples had? I answere, that flesh doth willingly shake off all trouble, and letting passe all cause of heauines, doth take hold of that which was spoken of the resurrection whereof the contention arose amongst them being thus careless.

And

And because they doe eschewe the former parte of the doctrine which is vnpleasant to the flesh, God suffereth them to erre in the resurrection, that they might dreame of that which should not come to passe, that Christ by preaching onely, shoulde get himselfe a kingdom which shoulde bee earthly, that should presently grow to great wealth and prosperitie. But in this question there was a double faulte: for the Apostles dealt very preposterously, while they reiecting the care of warfare wherunto they were called, as souldiers that had well deserved, they desire rest, and seeke to haue rewardes giuen them with honor before the time. And secondly they dealt ill in this, that whereas they ought to haue bent themselves together with one consent, mutually to helpe one another, and to desire for the price, no lesse for their brethren then for themselves, through a alitious ambition some of the endeoured to preuent the rest. Wherefore, that our course may bee allowed vnto the Lord, let vs learne patiently to beare the burden of the crosse that is laid vpon vs, vntill the full time come for vs to be crowned: further as Paul exhorteth, Rom. 12. 10. In giuing honour, go one before another. The vaine curiositie of these men at this way is like to the former fault, which leauing the lawfull course of their calling, doe leape before their time aboute the heauens. The calling vs in the Gospell to his kingdom, sheweth the way that leadeth thither. But these winged men, not thinking of faith, of patience, of calling vpon God and other exercises, doe dispute what is done in heauen: but this is as much, as if any man about to take a journey diligently inquiring of the situation of his Inne or lodging, mooueth not one foote forward: for when the Lord commandeth vs to walke vpon the earth, who so euer doth curiously dispute how the dead doe sit in heauen, doeth hinder himselfe from comming into heauen.

2. And Iesus called a little childe The sum is, whosoever desire greatnes whereby they may be aboue their brethren, shalbe so far from obtaining the same, & they cannot sticke to the vtmost corner. And he reasoneth of the contrary, because that only humilitie doth extoll vs. And because that outward things set before our eyes do moue most, he setteth before them a figure of humility of a yong childe. For that he comāndeth his to become like to a childe, is not stretched generally to al things. We know that in children many things are corrupt wherfore Paul would not haue vs to be children in vnderstanding, but in malice whom otherwise in vnderstanding, he comāndeth to be of a ripe age. But because that infants do not yet know, what is to be preferred aboue others, that they should strue about superiority, by their example Christ would blot out of their minds, those things which prophane men & children of the world, do alwayes discourse of the pleasure of honours, least any ambition should stir them vp. If any man except that infants euen from the wombe haue pride grafted in them, so that they woulde haue themselves to bee most accounted of, and most cared for: the answere is easie. Similitudes must not be too exactly nor narrowly sifted, to haue them agree in all pointes. But because there doth yet raigne so great simplicitie in infantes, that they knowe not the degrees of honours nor the swellings of pride: therefore Christ doth fitly and aptly propose them for an example. And to this purpose appertaineth that conuersion wherof he maketh mention: namely, that the disciples had now framed themselves too much to the common maners of men, and therefore that they might come to the right make, their course must be turned backward. Eucry man desireth the first or second place for himselfe: but Christ alloweth no man, no not in the lowest place, except that he forget superiority, and humble himselfe. And on the contrary he sayth that they shall be greatest which doe humble themselves, least that we should thinke that we loose any thing, when we doe willingly leaue all greatnes. And hereof may be gathered a short definition of humility namely that he is truly humble, who neither challengeth any thing vnto himselfe before God, nor contemptuously disdaineth his brethren, nor desireth to be seen higher, but satisfieth himselfe to be accounted one of the members of Christ, desiring no other thing, then that the head may be onely exalted.

5. And who soeuer shall receiue. Christ now doth metaphorically call the children which laying aside all loftines, do frame themselves to modesty and subiection: and that is not stand in stead of a comfort, least submission should be hard & troublesome vnto vs, whereby Christ doth not only receiue vs into his own protection, but commendeth vs also to men. And by this means the faithfull are taught how they should each esteeme of others, while euery man submitteth himselfe. For how is the mutuall friendship cōmonly nourished amongst the children of the world, but while each doth beare with anothers couctousnes? Therefore the couctouser any man is of glory, the more boldly he taketh authoritie vnto himselfe, & he may be extolled, & that the lowly should be scorned & disdained. But Christ cōmandeth & the more any man doth hūble himselfe, the more he should be honoured. And that is the meaning of that saying which is added in Luke, Neither yet doth he cōmand that they which are worthily despised, should be the more esteemed: but they which are void of al pride, & do make no account to be abased. Luk 17

6. But who soeuer shall offend one of these litle ones which beleeye in mee, it were better for him that a milstone were hāged about his necke & he were drowned in the depth of the sea. 7. Who be vnto the world because of offences: for it must needs be that offences shall come, but woe bee to that man, by whom the offence commeth. 8. Wherefore if thine hand or thy foote, cause thee to offend, cut them off, & cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halte or maimed, then hauing two hands, or two feet to be cast into euerlasting fire. 9. And if thine eye cause thee to offende, plucke it out, and cast it from thee it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, then hauing two eyes, to be cast into hell fire.

10. See

42. And who soeuer shall offend one of these litle ones that beleeye in me, it were better for him rather, that a milstone were hanged about his necke, and that he were cast into the sea. 43. Wherefore if thine hand cause thee to offende, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, then hauing two hands, to goe into hell fire, that neuer shall be quenched. 44. Where their worme dieth not, and the fire neuer goeth out. 45. Likewise if thy foote cause thee to offend, cut it off: it is better for thee to goe halte into life, then hauing two feet to be cast into hell, into the fire that neuer shall be quenched.

46. Where their worme dieth not, and the fire neuer goeth out.

47. And if thine eye cause thee to offende, plucke it out: it is better for thee to goe into the kingdome of GOD

1 Then said he to the disciples: It cannot be auoided but that offences will come, but woe be to him by whom they come. 2. It were better for him that a great milstone were hāged about his necke, & that he were cast into the sea, then he should offend one of these litle ones.

10. See that yee despise not one of these little ones: for I say vnto you, that in heauen their angels salwaies behold the face of my father in heauen with one eye, then hauing two eyes to bee cast into hell fire. 48. Where their worme dieth not, and the fire neuer goeth out.

6 But who soeuer shall offend. This seemeth to be added for the comfort of the godly, least their estate should seeme troublesome vnto them, if the world doth despise them: for this doth much hinder them from humbling theselues to this voluntary modesty: because they thinke that by this meanes they shall become contemptible, yet it is hard if we be not only loathed, but also trode vnder foete of proud men. Therefore christ encourageth his disciples with this comfort, that if the world despise their basenes, yet God doth not neglect the. Yet it also seemeth to tend to an other end: for the strife began of their superiority in honour. Wherof it might easily be gathered, that the apostles were infected with a wicked desire to be aloft. Also it cannot be, but that he should be reprochful to his brethren, whoseuer pleaseth himselfe too much, or desireth to be preferred before all men. To heale this disease, christ denouiceth a horrible punishment, if any man in his pride shall cast down poore men, already humbled of their own accord. But he comprehendeth more vnder this word Offence, then if he had forbidde the contempt of the, though it cannot otherwise be, that any man should carelesly offend the weake: but because he yeldeth not that regard & honor vnto the that he should. Now when ther are sundry kinds of offences, yet what kind of thing an offence is, is briefly to be considered. If through our default any man either stumblith, or is brought out of a right course, or is hindred, him we are said to offend. Therefore whosoever desireth to escape this punishment which Christ denounceth so severely, let him reach his hand vnto those little ones which are holden as abjects before the world, & helpe the to run their course wel. For christ commendeth the vnto vs, that they might be to vs an example of willing humility: euen as Paul giueth this rule to the children of god, Ro. 12. 16. that they should make theselues equal to the of the lower sort. Also in the 15. 1. that no man should please himselfe. And because christ set down that kind of punishment, which was the most fearful & wherewith most heinous offences were punished, we do thereby gather how deare & precious they are to god, which are vile & despised before the world. Who be to the world because of offences. This place may be expounded 2. wayes of the doer, as if christ should curse the authors of the offences, & so vnder the name of the world should all vnbeleeuers be comprehended: or or the sufferer, as if Christ should bewaile the euils which he saw to be at hand to light vpon the world for offences: as if he should haue said, no pestilence shall be more dangerous, nor shall bring mo miseries, then that it shall come to pas that many shall be troubled or fall away through offences. And this sense doth better agree with the place: for I doubt not but if the Lord had spokē of offences in the other sense, he would haue spokē more at large: that he might make his more diligent & careful to beware. Therefore least Sathan should take vs or we be aware, the Lord crieth out that nothing is more to be feared of vs, then offences: for as Sathan hath many at hand, so he ceaseth not to throw new before vs almost at euery step, & wee as creatures too weake or sluggish, do easily fall at the. So it cometh to passe that there are but few that doe make any meane proceedings in the faith of Christ. And of those few which do enter into the course of saluation, scarce euery 10. doe come to the goale without fainting.

Now, when as by this counsell Christ hath set his terror vpon offences, thus he might make his more vigilant, woe bee to our carcienes, if euery of vs prepare not himselfe valiantly to ouercome them. For it is necessary. That the Lord might the more thanpen the care and diligence of his, hee forewarneth that it cannot otherwise be, but that they must goe through diuers offences: as if hee should haue sayd, it is an euill that cannot be auoyded. So it is a confirmation of the former sentence, for that Christ doth thereby teach how many euils doe follow vpon offences, when as the Church neuer shall bee, nor can bee free from this euill. But he sheweth not the cause of the necessitie: as Paule 1. Cor. 7. 19. speaking of heresies saith, that they must therefore arise, that they which are approued, might be knowe. But this is to be holden, that God would haue men in danger of offences, whether might thereby exercise the faith of his children, and that he might thereby make out the hypocrits, as weedes & chaffe from the pure & cleane wheate. And if any man in all murmur and complaine, that it is absurd for the Lord to giue Satan liberty to worke the destruction of wretched men: it is our part to think reuerently of the secret courses of god: of which this is one, that it is necessary for the world to be troubled with offences.

But woete to that in by whome offences doe come. After that hee exhorted his to beware of offences, he inuicigheth againe against the authois of them: and that his threatening may bee the more forcible, hee addeth that neither the right eye, nor the right hand are to be spared, if they giue vs occasion of offence. For I doe take it that this was added to amplify the matter, as if he should haue said, offences are to be resisted so diligently and constantly, as that it is rather meete to pull out the eyes, and to cut off the handes, then that you should nourish the offences. For, if any man shall doubt to lose any of his members, with this fauouring or sparing, hee casteth himselfe into destruction. There ore howe horrible vengeance remaineth for them, which destroy their brethren with offences. But, because these two verses were expounded before in the fit Chap, it was sufficient now to touch the purpose, why Christ rehearseth the same sentence in this place.

10. See that wee despise not one of these little ones. Because that pride is the mother of reproach, and contempe bringeth forth boldnes to offend, Christ vpon vrgent cause, that he might giue a remedy in tyme conuenient for the healing of this disease, forbiddeth the despising of little ones. And certainly, as we touched euen now, whosoeuer shall haue a right regarde of the brethren, will neuer easily bee brought to giue offences. To the same purpose also tendeth this clause of Christs speech, wher to hee applyed the beginning: namely, that wee must striae in submissiō and humblenesse amongst our selues: because that God embraceth the little ones with a singular loue. But it were too absurde for them to be despised or not to be regarded of any mortall man, whom God hath in so great estimation. Further, he proueth his loue by this, that the Angelles which are the ministers of their saluatiō, doe familiarly enjoy the countenance, and behold the face of God. Though in my iudgement, he woulde not simply teach how honourably God doeth deale with them in appoynting Angelles to bee their keepers, but also threateneth them that contemne them: as if he should haue sayde, their contemners shall not goe free, whose Angels are neare at hand to seeke reuenge. Therefore let vs beware how their saluation be vile in our sight, for the procuring where of the Angels haue their charge. That some do take this place, as if God should assigne proper Angels to euery of the faithfull ones is of no force: for the words of Christ doe not signifie any such thing, that one Angell should be alwayes appointed to this or to that man: and it disagreeeth from the whole doctrine of the Scripture, which declareth that the Angels do pitch their tents about the godly, and that the charge is not given to one Angell alone, but to many, that they should defend euery of the faithfull, Psal. 34. 8. Therefore let that fancy goe of the good Angell and the bad, and let it suffice vs to know, that the charge of the whole Church is committed to the Angels, that they may helpe all the severall members of the same, as necessitie and vse shall require. If any man demaunde whether the Angels, though by nature they are aboue vs, are yet in degree inferiour to vs, because they are appointed to be ministers to vs: I answer, there is no cause of let why they should not yeelde the obedience to God, in that free grace of his, which he bestoweth vpon vs, though so it comineth to passe, that they are called ours, because they apply themselues to helpe vs.

Luke. 15.

11. For the sonne of man is come to saue that which was lost.

12. How thinke yee? If a manne haue an hundred sheepe, and one of them be gone astray, dooth he not leaue ninty and nine, and goe into the mountaynes, and seeke that which is gone astray?

13. And if so be that he finde it, verily I say vnto you, he reioycesth more of that sheepe, then of the nintie nine, which went not astray.

14. So is it not the wil of your father, which is in heauen, that one of these little ones should perish.

1. Then resorted to him all the Publicans and sinners to heare him.

2. Therefore the pharises & Scribes murmured saying, he receiueth sinners, & eateth with them.

3. Then spake hee this parable to them, saying,

4. What manne of you hauing an hundred of sheepe, if hee lose one of them, dooth not leaue ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, vntill he finde it?

5. And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his shoulders with ioy.

6. And whē he cometh home, he calleth together his friends & neighbours, saying vnto them, reioyce with me: for I haue found my sheepe, which was lost.

7. I say vnto you that likewise ioy shall be in heauen for one sinner that conuerteth, more thē for ninty and nine iust men, which neede none amendment of life.

8. Either what woman hauing ten peeces of siluer, if she lose one peece, doth not light a candle and sweepe the house, and seeke diligently till she finde it?

9. And when she hath found it, she calleth her friends & neighbors, saying, reioyce with me: for I haue found the peece, which I had lost.

10. Likewise I say vnto you, there is ioy in the presence of the Angels of God, for one sinner that conuerteth.

11. For the sonne of man. Now Christ also by his owne example exhorteth to giue honour euen to the weake and abiect brethren. For he came not from heauen as a redeemer to saue onely them, but also for the dead, which had bene lost. But it is two vile a thing for vs to loath them, whom the sonne of God hath set so much by. Neither if the weake ones haue faultes, which might bring them in to contempt, is our pride therefore to be excused: for they are not to bee esteemed after the value of their owne vertues, but for Christes sake: after whose example whoso will not frame himselfe is too slowward & proud.

12. Haue theye? Luke maketh a further rehearfall of the occasion of this parable: namely that the Scribes murmured against the Lord, whom they saw daily conuersant with sinners. Therefore Christes will was to shew, that a good teacher must take no lesse paines to recouer those, which were lost, then to preserue those, which are vnder his hande. Though the similitude proceedeth in Matthew: namely, that the disciples of Christe should not onely be friendly entertained: but their faultes are to bee boone with, so as wee may endeavour to bring them that wander into the way. For though it fall out that they doe sometimes goe astray, yet because they are sheepe, ouer whom God hath set his owne Sonne to bee their shepheard, it behooueth vs to gather them from going astray, so farre must wee bee from putting them to flight with vnkindnesse, or from taking liberty to drive them away. For to this purpose belongeth that saying, heede must bee taken that wee destroy not that, which God woulde shoulde be saued. That which Luke reporteth tendeth somewhat to a diuerse end: because all mankinde is Gods, they are to bee gathered which are strangers, and as great ioy is to bee made, while they that were lost returne to good, as if any man should beyond all hope recouer that, which hee was fory should be lost.

L V. 10. There is ioy in the presence of the Angels. If the angels do reioyce among themselves in heauen, when they see restored into their company, that which was lost: it becometh vs that are in the same and like estate with them, to bee partakers of the same ioy. But how is it, that hee sayeth, that the Angels doe reioyce more at the repentance of one wicked manne, then at the preferuance of many righteous, whome nothing more delighteth then a continuall and iust course of righteousnes? I answer, though it shuld more agree with the desires of the Angels, (as it is also more to be desired) that men should alwayes continue in pure integritie: yet because the mercy of God doth more appeare in the deuiance of a sinner, who now had been giuen ouer to destruction, and had fallen off as a rotten member from the body, he attributeth to the Angels after the manner of men, the greater ioy for this good vnllooked for or vn hoped for. Further, he doth specially restraine the worde repentance to the conuersion of them, which were wholly false from God, as that they now rise from death to life. For otherwise there ought to be a continual meditation of repentance through the whole life: neyther is any man exempted from this necessitie, when as their seuerall finnes doe stire all menne to a daily exercise of the same. But it is one thing amongst offences, or falles, or errours, to goe forwarde to the goale, when thou art entred into the course: and it is an other thing, to call a man home from errour: who was altogether out of the way, or to beginne a right course from the prisons. They neede not such repentance, who haue now begun to frame their life after the rule of Gods lawe, that they might begin to liue holyly and godly though it be necessary for them to sigh vnder the infirmities of their flesh & to labour to reforme and correct them

Luke. 15.

11. Hee sayd moreover, A certaine man had two sonnes,
 12. And the yonger of them sayde to his father, Father giue me the portion of the goodes that faileth to me, So hee deuided vnto them his substance.
 13. So not long after, when the younger sonne had gathered all together, he tooke his iourney into a farre countrey, and there he wasted his goodes with riotous liuing,
 14. Now, whē he had spent all, there arose a great dearth throughout that land, & he began to be in necessity.
 15. Thē he went and claued to a citizen of that country, and he sent him to his farme, to feede swine,
 16. And hee would faine haue filled his belly with the huskes, that the swine eat, but no man gaue them him.
 17. Thē he cāe to himself, & said, how many hired ser-uants of my fathers haue bread inough, & I dy for hunger
 18. I will rise and goe to my father, and say vnto him,
 19. Father, I haue sinned against heauen, and before thee,
 20. And am no more worthy to bee called thy sonne: make me as one of thy hyred seruants.
 21. So he arose, and came to his father, & when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compa-sion, and ranne, and fell on his necke and kissed him.
 22. And the sonne sayde vnto him, Father, I haue sinned against heauen, and before thee, and am no more worthy to bee called thy sonne.
 23. Then the father sayd vnto his seruants, bring forth the best robe, & put it on him, and put a ring on his hand and shoos on his feete,
 24. *And bring the fatte calfe, and kill him, and let vs
 eate and bee mery.*
 25. For this my son was dead, & is aliue againe: and he was lost, but he is found. And they began to be mery.

This parable is nothing else but a confirmation of the former doctrine. And in the former part of it there is shewed, how ready and willing God is to forgiue sins: and in the other, how maliciously and peruerfly they doe, which do murmur at his mercy, which we will handle after in that place. And vnder the person of a prodigal yong man, who through lust & riotous expēses being brought to extreame pouertie, returned in all humility vnto his father, against whom he had bin inuiouous and disobedient, Christ describeth all sinners, who loathing their owne madnes, doe apply themselues vnto the grace of God.

And

And vnto a humane father, who not onely forgiveth the offences of his Son, but runneth willingly forth to meete him, he compareth God, who is not satisfied in pardoning them that aske forgiveness, except he doe also preuent them of his fatherly kindnesse. Now we will consider the particular poyntes.

12. The younger of them sayd. Here is first de'cribed a token of vngodly folly in a young man, in that he desiring to depart from his father, thought not himselfe well, except hee might haue free libertie to wantonnes, without checke or controlement of his father. Vnkindnesse is also added to the former, in that he forsaking the olde man he doeth not only deprive him of those duties which in right hee oweth him, but also spoyleth and diminisheth his goodes. Then followeth a riotous living in pleasure, and vnriled wickednesse wherein he wasteth all his goodes. By so manifolde finnes he had deserued, that he should finde his father neuer to be appeased towards him. And it is not to be doubted but that the great goodnesse of God and his incomparable fauour is described vnto vs vnder this example, that no outragiousnesse of finnes shoulde driue vs with feare from the hope of obtayning forgiveness. It is no fonde interpretation if any man shall say that they are like to this foolish and frowarde young man, who abounding with the Lord with great plentie of good things, yet being moued with a blinde and giddie couetousnesse, would part with him, that they might be free away from him: as if it were not more to be desired to liue vnder the fatherly care and gouernance of God, then to haue all the kingdoms of the earth. But because I feare least this allusion bee to subtilis, I will be satisfied with the litterall sense: not that I finde fault with them, that vnder such a figure reprove their madnesse, which thinke they shall liue happily to haue somewhat of their owne, that they might bee rich of themselues without the heauenly father: but because I doe nowe keepe my selfe within the boundes of an interpreter. But Christ heere declareth what vseth to befall to young men, when they follow their owne will: for they being voyd of counsell, and riotous in liuing, are vnmeete to rule themselves where feare & shame restraineth them not, it cannot be but that they should cast themselves headlong whether soeuer pleasure shall cary them, and being full of dishonestie, they make hast to vile pouertie. Afterward he describeth the punishment, which by the iust iudgment of God, remaineth for the most parte of such prodigall wasters: namely, that their goodes being wickedly wasted, they shoulde bee thoroughly pinched with hunger, and because they knewe not how to vse thriftily, abondance of the best bread, they shall be driuen to feede vpon acornes and huskes. To be short, that they becoming swines fellowes, shoulde thinke themselves vnworthy of mans meate: for this is a hoggish deuouring, wastefully to spoyle that, which was giuen for the preservation and maintenance of life. That some doe subtilly expound this to be a iust plague of vngodly loathing, that they for hunger, should goe to the huskes, which refused the pleasurable bread in the household of the heauenly father, doe speake very truely and profitably, neither doth any religion forbid the vse of this similitude: but in the meane season it must be considered what allegories doe differ from the naturall sense.

16. He woulde faine haue filled his belly. It declareth that for hunger he no more thought vpon his former dainties. Neither when hee gaue this kinde of meate to the swine could he want. That saying of Cyrus is notable, who, when in his flight he had bene long fasting, being somewhat refreshed with meate and browne bread, sayd, that he neuer tasted so sauiory bread before: so necessitie compelled this young man, whereof mention is now made, to haue a stomacke to the huskes. The reason is added: because no manne gaue vnto him. For the copulative shuld in my iudgement be reioined into a word causall. Neither is this spoken of the huskes, which were by him: but I vnderstand it, that no man had compassion of his want. For no man thinketh him selfe bound to the prodigall, which wast their owne goods without regard: nay, because they were wont to spoyle all things, nothing is thought should be giuen them.

17. Then hee came to himselfe. Here is a meanes described vnto vs, whereby God calleth menne to repentance. If they would willingly bee wise, and would yeeld themselues to be taught, hee would allure them more gently: but, because they frame not to obedience, except they bee tamed with corrections, he chastiseth them the sharplier. Therefore hunger was the best scholemistres for this young manne, whom plenty and fulnes made so outrageous and disobedient. Being taught by this example, we must not thinke that God doth deale cruelly with vs, if at any time he lay greater troubles vpon vs: for by this means he teacheth the frowarde and them that are drunken with pleasure, obedience. Further, what misery soeuer we suffer, is a profitable calling of vs to repentance. But as we are slow, so doe we scarce at any time comē to a right minde, except wee be driuen to it by extreame miseries. For vntill that troubles doe oppresse vs, and that desperation doth pricke vs, the flesh doeth alwayes lift vpp it selfe in pride, or at the least resist good thinges. Whereby wee gather that it is no meruile, if that the Lord do deale oftentimes violently & doubleth his blowes vppon vs, to breake our frowardnesse, and as it is in the prouerbe, hee driueth hard wedges into hard knottes. It is also to bee noted that hope of a better estate, if he returned to his father, prouoked the yong man to repentance. For no greatnes of punishments shall ouerthrow our sinnes, or make vs displeas'd with our sinnes vntill some profit doe appeare. Therefore as the young manne by hope of his fathers kindnes is moued to seeke for reconciliation: so the knowledge of the mercy of God must be the beginning of our repentance, which shall moue and stirre vs to hope well.

20. When hee was yet a great way off. This is the chiefe poynt of the parable, If men which by nature are desirous of reueng, and hold their owne right too fast, are yet moued with a fatherly loue, so as they do louingly forgieue their sonnes, and of their owne freewill seeke out those lost wretches: God, whose great goodnes exceedeth all the lones of fathers, will bee nothing harder to vs. And certainly heere is nothing spoken of an earthly father, that God doeth not promise of himselfe. Before they cry, saith he, I wil heare Iſa. 65. 23. That saying also of Dauid is well knowne, Psal. 23. 5. I haue sayde I will confesse my vnrightheousnesse vnto the Lord against my selfe, and thou forgauest the punishment of my sinne. Therefore as this father is not onely easie to be entreated at the prayers of his sonne: but goeth out to meete him comming, and before hee heareth any one woorde, he embraceth him all torne and deformed as he is: so God looketh not for longe entreatance: but as soone as the sinner determineth to cōfesse his fault he doth willingly meete him. But it is a filthy quarrell of theirs, which do hereof gather, that the grace of god is not bestowed vpon sinners, before that they doe preuent the same with their repentance. Here say they is proposed to vs a father ready to forgiue, but it is after the sonne hath determined to returne to him. therefore God doeth not regard nor bestow his grace vpon any others then them, which begin to seeke the same. It is true, that it is required that the sinner should be grieved in conscience and displeas'd with himselfe, which should obaine forgiuenes: but they do very euil gather hereof, that repentance, which is the gift of God, doeth proceed from men of the proper motion of their own heart. And in this behalfe is a mortall man very fondly compared with God: for an earthly father cannot renew the peruerse heart of his sonne with the secret instinct of the spirit, as God doth of stony hearts make fleshy. To conclude, it is not handled in this place, whether man conuerted vnto God, returneth of himselfe: but onely vnder the figure of a man is commended the fatherly kindnes of God, and his readinelle to grant forgiuenes.

21. Father, I haue sinned against heauen Here is another part of repentance noted: namely, a feeling of sinne ioyned with sorrow & shame. For he that is not sorry that he hath sinned, and hath not his offence before his eyes, will rather attempt any thing, then that he will thinke to returne to a good course: therefore it is necessary that a loathing of a former estate shoulde goe before repentance. But there is great weight in this speach, that it is sayd that the young man returned or came to himselfe: for who so followeth the wandering errors of his desires, is carryed into a forgetfulnes of himselfe. And certainly, the violent motions of the flesh are so wandering, that who soeuer giueth ouer himselfe vnto the, shall vanish a way as a man departed or gone out from himselfe. Therefore the transgressours are commaunded to returne to their heart, Isa. 46. 8. There followeth also a confession, not such as the Pope hath framed, but such as the son doth therewith reconcile vnto him his offended father: for this humility is very necessary for the redeeming of offences. This maner of speaking, I haue sinned against heauen and before thee, is as much as if it had bin sayde, that God was offended in the person of an earthly father. And certainly nature it selfe teacheth this, that who soeuer lifteth vp himselfe against his father, doth also vngodly arise against God, who maketh children subiect to the parents.

22. Bring forth the best robe. Though (as it hath beene often sayd) it were a fond thing to search all small poyntes in parables: yet the letter shall not here be wrested, if we say that the heavenly father doth not onely so forgiue our sins, that he burieth the remembrance of them: but also restoreth those gifts whereof we were deprived: so as he spoyling vs of them againe, doth chaatite our vnthankfulnesse, that with the reproach and dishonestie of the nakednes, he might driue vs to be a shamed.

Luke 15.

25. Now the elder brother was in the field, and when he came and drew neere to the house, he heard melody & dauncing.

26. And called one of his seruantes, and asked what what those things meant. 27. And he said vnto him Thy broiher is come, and thy father hath killed the fatted calfe : because he hath received him safe and sound. 28. Then he was angry, and would not go in: therefore came his father out and intreated him. 29. But hee answered and sayd to his father, Loe, these many yeares haue I done thee seruice, neyther brake I at any thy commandement, and yet thou neuer gauest me a kid, that I might make mery with my freindes. 30. But when this thy sonne was come, which hath deuoured thy goods with harlots, thou hast for his sake killed the fatte calfe. 31. And he sayde vnto him, sonne, thou art euer with mee, and all that I haue is thine. It was meete that we should make mery, and be glad : for this thy brother was dead, & is aline againe, & he was lost, but he is found

This last part of the parable accuseth them of vnkindnes, which maliciously would restrain the grace of God, as if they enuid that miserable sinners should attaine saluation. For we know that the pride of the Scribes is here restrained who doe not thinke that the reward due to their deserts is not payed them, if that Christ shoulde admit the Publicans and the common sorte of people to the hope of eternall saluation. Therefore the summe is, if we desire to be accounted the sonnes of God, those faultes of our brethren, which hee fatherly remitteth, we must brotherly forgiue. They that thinke that the people of the Iewes are described vnder the figure of the elder son, though they do it not without some reason, yet they seene to me not sufficiently to marke the whole course of the text for of the murmuring of the Scribes there arose a speach, as if they were troubled at the kindnes of Christ towards miserable men, which had beene loose liu. rs. Therefore he compareth the Scribes, which swelled with arrogancy to thristie and modest men, who alwayes well regarded their household estate by liuing honestly and sparingly : yea, hee compareth them to obedient sons, who all their life time doe patiently beare the authority of the father. And though they were altogether vnworthy of this prayse, yet Christe speaking after their sense, by concesson imputeth vnto them this fained holines for a vertue. As if he should haue said, although I should grant vnto you that which you do fallly brag of, that you haue alwayes beene obedient sonnes vnto God, yet their brethren must not so proudly and cruelly bee cast off, when they repent from their wicked life.

28. Therefore came his father out. In these words he reproveth the intolerable pride of hypocrites, that they must be intreated of the father not to enuy at the mercy shewed vnto their brethren. Further, though God doth not entreate, yet by his example he exhorteth vs to beare with the faults of the brethrē. And that he may cut off all excuse from their wicked rigor, hee doeth not onely bring in hypocrits speaking, whose false boasting might be refused : but also if any man shall wholly discharge all duties of godlines towards his father : yet he denieth him to haue any iust cause of complaint, for  $\bar{\delta}$  his brother is forgiuen.

It is certaine that the sincere worshippers of God are alwayes free and voide from this malitious affection: but the purpose of Christ is to shew, that hee is vnrighteous that enuierth his brother receiued into fauour, although he woulde not giue place to the Angels in holines.

31. Sonne, thou art euer with me. There are two cheife pointes in this answer the first is, that there is no cause why the Elder should bee angry, while he seeth that he is not indamaged by the receiuing of his brother into fauour: and the other that he hauing no regard of the saluation of his brother is grieued and sorry for the ioy conceiued of his returne. All mine, sayth hee, are thine, that is, though thou hast yet taken away nothing from my house, thou hast lost nothing for all things remaine safe for thee. Further, what doth our ioy offend thee, whereof thou shouldest haue beene a companion? For it is meete to reioyce for that thy brother, who we thought had bin lost, is in safety, and returned home againe. Wee must note these two reasons: for neither doe we loose any thing, if God doe kindly receiue into fauour them, which by their sinnes had beene estranged from him, and it is a hardnes without godlines not to be glad, when wee see our brethren restored from death to life.

15. Moreover, if thy brother trespass against thee, go, & tell him his fault betweene thee and him alone, if he heare thee, thou hast wonne thy brother.

16 But if hee heare thee not, take yet with thee one or two, that by the mouth of two or three witnesses e- uery word may be confirmed.

17. And if hee will not vouchsafe to heare them, tell it vnto the Church, and if he refuse to heare the Church also let him bee vnto thee as an heathen man and a Publicane.

18. Verily I say vnto you, whatsoeuer yee bind on earth, shall bee bound in heauen, and whatsoeuer yee loose on earth, shall be loosed in heauen.

19 Again, verily I say vnto you, that if two of you shall agree in earth vpon any thing, whatsoeuer they shall desire, it shall be giuen them of my father, which is in heauen.

20. For wheretwo or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them.

3. Take heede to your selues: if thy brother tres- passe against thee, rebuk him and if he repent forgiue him.

15. If thy brother trespass against thee. Because hee had spoken before of bearing with the infirmities of the brethren, now hee sheweth more plainely howe, and to what ende, and howe farre they are to bee borne with. For otherwise it had beene a ready objection, that offences cannot otherwise bee auoyded, but that euery manne shoulde winke at the faultes of other menne, and so shoulde sinne bee nourished by bearing with it. Therefore

Christe prescribeth a meane betweene both, which neyther shall offende the weake too much, and yet shall be apte for the healing of their diseases. For feruentic compounded to the nature of a medicine is profitable and prayse worthy. In sum, Christ commandeth his disciples so to forgiue one another, that yet they endeouour to correct their faultes, which must be wisely obserued: because that nothing is more difficult then to spare and fauour men, and freely to reprehende their faultes. All men almost do leane to the onefide, so that either they do deceiue one another with deadly flatterings, or else they strike them to hardly, whom they should heale. But Christ commendeth to his disciples mutuall loue, which should be farre from flattery. Hee onely commandeth them to season their admonitions with moderation: least, if they be too austere and hard, they should ouerthrow the weake. And he expressly setteth downe three degrees of brotherly correction: the first is, that he which hath sinned, shoulde bee admonished priuately. And the second is, if he shew any token of stubbornesse, that he be againe admonished before witnesses. The third is, if he preuaile nothing this way, that hee bee deliuered to the publike iudgement of the Church. And this is the purpose, which I spake of, least that charitie be broken vnder pretence of feruent zeale. Further, because ambition doth cary away the most part of men, so that they are too desirous to spread the offences of their brethren, Christ doth in time meete with this fault, commaunding vs to couer the faultes of our brethren as much as we can. For who so are delighted with the shame and infamy of the brethren, it is certaine that they are caryed away with hatred and malice: for if there were any charity in them, they woulde haue regard of the shame of the brethren. It is yet demanded, whether this rule doeth generally extend to all sinners. For there are very many, which will allow no publike reprooves, vntill the offender be first priuately admonished. But there is a manifest restraint in Christes wordes: for he doth not simply and without exception commaund that who soeuer sinneth, should be admonished or reproued priuately, and without any witness: but he would haue vs to trie this way, when wee are priuately offended: not because the matter is our owne, but because it is meete that we should be wounded with sorrow, as oft as God is offended. Neither yet doth Christ speake heere of suffering iniuries: but he doth generally teach vs, so to imbrace and vse louing kindnes amongst vs, least by handling the weake ones more sharply, wee should loose them which were to be kept. Therefore this clause against thee, doth not note an iniury done to some one man, but distinguisheth betweene secrete and manifest sinnes. For, if any man sinneth against the whole Church, Paul commaundeth that hee should bee publicly reproued, so that hee woulde not haue the very Elders spared. For of them by name doth Paule giue Timothy charge, that by publike reproouing them before all men, they might bee made a publike example to others, 1. Tim. 5. 20. And certainly it were a ridiculous thing, that he which offended, so that his offence were openly knowne to the publike offence of the brethren, shoulde bee admonished of euery one of them: for, so if a thousand knew it, he should be admonished a thousand times. Wherefore that distinction, which Christ expressly maketh, is to be kept, that no man by making secrete offences common, should rashly and without necessity defame his brother.

If hee shall heare thee, thou hast wonne. Christ confirmeth his doctrine by the profit and fruite that shall come thereof. For it is no small matter to get a soule to God, which was in bondage to Sathan. And wherof cometh it to passe, that they which are false, do seldome repent, but because that they being handled odiously, and as enemies, doe harden themselues in obstinacy? Therefore nothing is better then gentlenesse, which reconcileth to God them which hadde false from him. And he that doth intemperately runne into a fonde fauouring the offender, doth willingly loose the saluation of his brother, which he had in his hand. In Luke Christ commandeth vs expressely to bee satisfied with a private admonition, if our brother be thereby brought to repentance. Heereby is also gathered how necessary it is that there be amongst the faithfull a free and mutuall libertie of reproofing one another. For, when as euery one of vs doeth offend often euery day, it were extreame crueltie by our silence and dissimulation to betray the saluation of them, whom by a friendly reproofe we might deliuer from destruction. For though that successe doth not alwayes follow, yet doth there lie a great guiltinesse vpon him, who neglecteth the remedy prescribed by the Lord for the preseruacion of the saluation of the brethren. It is also to be noted, that the diligenter we are to performe this duty, the more the Lord doth yeelde ouer his owne honour to vs. For one man cannot conuert another, it onely belongeth vnto him: yet doth he adorne vs with this vnderferued title that wee doe gaine or winne a lost brother.

16. If he heare thee not, take yet with thee. The second degree is, that hee which behaued himselfe stubbornly towardes one man, or woulde not abide to be taught, should bee admonished before witnesses. Some doe here obiekt that it is in vaine to call witnesses, if wee haue to deale with a man that is disobedient and rebellious, for hee will bee so farre from being bent to acknowledge his fault in their presence, that he will more wickedly deny the same. But this knotie shall bee easily loosed, if thou wilt distinguish betweene a kinde or manner of denying, and of flypping backe. Hee that precisely denyeth the deede, and sayeth, that hee is falsely and slanderously charged, is to bee let alone: for it shall bee in vaine to vrge him by calling him before witnesses. But, because the mooste parte of men doe eyther frowardly scorne, or impudently excuse that which they had done wickedly and vngodly, vntill they bee brought before greater authority, it shall bee profitable to obserue this course towardes them. Also the saying of our Sauour must so be vnderstoode, as it appeareth by the word he vseth, which signifieth to reprove. To reprove, is to conuince by euident demonstration. And how should I reprove him, that stoutly denyeth the whole matter. For hee that hath so hard a browe, as to denie the offence committed, shutteth vp the way against the second admonition.

Nowe wee vnderstand against whom Christ would haue vs to vse witnesses, that the admonition may haue the more weight and the greater effect. But there is no absurditie in it, that he doth bend Moses wordes somewhat into another sense. Moses forbiddeth to giue iudgement of a matter vnknowne, and setteth downe this as a lawfull meanes of triall, that by the testimony of two or three, euery word may stand or be confirmed.

Christ alluding to that lawe, sayeth, that the cause is euident, where two or three witnessess doe arise to condemne the manne, especially that the iudgement of the Church may be the riper. Neither is there any cause why he should complaine of iniury, for being brought forth into the light, which refused to heare two or three.

17. Tell it vnto the Church. It is demaunded what hee meaneth or vnderstandeth by the name of the Church. For Paule, 1. Corinthians, 5. 5. commaundeth the incestuous Corinthe to bee excommunicate, not of any chosen number, but of the whole company of the godly, and therefore it may seeme probable that the iudgement was heere referred to all the people. But because that then ther was as yet no Church, which hadde giuen their name to Chriite, nor any such order appoynted, and the Lorde himselve speaketh as of a manner vsed and receiued: it is not to bee doubted, but that hee alludeth to the order of the olde Church, as also in other places he applyeth his speech, according to the manner knowne amongst them. When he commaundeth, Matthew 5. 23. that the gift, which wee woulde offer bee leste at the Altar, vntill wee may bee reconcyled to the offended brother, it is not to bee doubted, but that hee woulde by the present forme and manner of worshipping of GOD vnder the lawe, teach vs, that wee cannot pray rightly, nor offer any thing to God, so long as wee are at discorde with the brethren. So therefore nowe dooth hee looke into the fourme of disciplyne receiued amongst the Iewes: for it were absurde for him to appoint the iudgement of the Church, when as yet there was none.

Also when as the authoritie of excommunication amongst the Iewes was in the handes of the Elders, who represented the person or state of the whole Church, Chriite dooth then very aptly appoynt, that they which haue sinned, should at length be openly brought before the Church, if they do either proudly despise, or scoffingly scorne at priuate admonitions. Wee knowe that after the Iewes returned from the captiuitie of Babylon, they hadde a chosen counsell, which they called Synhedrim, in Greeke Synedrion, whereunto the censure of manners and doctrine was committed. This government and this brydle to keepe froward and vnttractable men in order was lawful and approued of God

If any manne except that all thinges were corrupt and out of order, at the comminge of Chriite, so that that tyranny shoulde bee accounted nothinge lesse then the iudgement of the Church: The answer is easie: though the manner of their dealing was defiled and corrupted, yet was the order worthily prayseed of Chriite, as it hadde beene in tymes past deliuered by the Fathers. And when as shortly after hee erected a Church, the corruption being taken away, hee restored the pure vse of excommunicating. Yet it is not to be doubted, but that the order of disciplyne, which flourished vnder the kingdom of Christ succeeded in place of that Elder. And certainly, when as the prophane nations hadde a shadowe of this rite of excommunicating, it appeareth that God had put this into the minds of men frō the beginning, that if any were vncleane and defiled, they shoulde bee driuen from the lioly exercises.

Therefore it was a vile and shamefull thing for the people of God to bee altogether without that discipline, wherof there was remaining some shew amongst the Gentiles. And that which was obserued in the lawe did Christ translate to vs: because that wee and the auncient fathers haue one and the same cause. But it was not the purpose of christ to send his disciples to the Synagogue, which when it willingly nourished filthy corruptions in her bosome, it excommunicated the true and sincere worshippers of God. But hee declareth that that order shoulde bee holden in his Church, which hadde bene holly appoynted vnder the law. That which is presently added of the Heathens and Publicans confirmeth the interpretation that I brought. For because the Heathens and the Publicans were then much hated and abhorred amongst the Iewes, vnto them hee compareth menne that are vncleane and incurable, which will obey or yeeld to no admonitions. It is certaine that he would not haue giuen this precept to the Heathens, of whome the Church should be gathered, that they shoulde flie from themselves: Neither is there any cause at this day why the faithfull should abhorre the Publicans. But Christ, that he might the better be vnderstoode, borrowed that manner of speech, which was presently vsed in his owne country. But the meaning is, that wee shoulde haue nothing to doe with the contemners of the Church, vntill they repent.

18 What soeuer yee shall binde. Hee rehearseth the same woordes nowe, which hee vsed before in the sixteene Chapter: but in a diuerse sence. For there his purpose was to confirme the authority of doctrine, and heere he appointeth discipline, which is adioyned to doctrine. There Christe sayd that the preaching of the Gospell shoulde not be in vaine, but that it shoulde bee a sauour either to life or to death: here hee sayeth, though the wicked do scorne the iudgement of the Church, yet it shall not bee in vaine. This distinction must bee holden, that hee speaketh there of the woorde preached, and heere of publike censures and discipline. But let the readers seeke for the reason of binding and losing from thence. This is the summe, who soeuer hauing committed a sinne, doeth humbly acknowledge his faulte, and entreateth, so that hee obtaineth forgiveness of the Church, he is not absouled only of men, but also of God. Againe, who soeuer scorneth the reproofes and threatnings of the Church, if he be condemned of the same, that iudgement shall be confirmed in heauen, which was giuen by men.

If any man obiekt that God by this meanes should be as an vader iudge, without a voyce of his owne, but must subscribe to the iudgement of mortall menne: there is an answer ready. For christ doth not so defend the right of his Church, as that he would thereby diminish his owne right and his fathers: but that hee would thereby rather sanctifie the maiesty of his word. For as in the sixteene Chapter his will was not to establish generally euery doctrine, but that which came out of his mouth: so neither in this place doth he say that euery iudgement shall be established and ratified, but that, wherein he himselfe is president and chiefe: and that not only by his spirit, but also by his word.

Whereof it followeth, that menne doe God no prejudice, while they pronounced nothing but from his mouth, and doe faithfully endeouour themselves onely to execute that, which he had commanded. For though Christ is the onely Iudge of the world, yet he would in the meane season haue the ministers of his word to denounce and proclaime the same. Further, he would haue the Church to deliuer his iudgment: So he derogateth nothing fro himselfe by vsing the ministry of men, but he alone loofeth and bindeth. Yet hereof ariseth a question, when the church tollerateth many hypocrites, & also absolueth many, which pretende a faygned repentaunce, whether it bee apparaunt that such bee absolued in heauen. I aunswere, that the speech is directed to none other, then to such as doe rightly and sincerely reconcile themselves, to the church, For he that would giue comfort, and take away feare from fearefull and trembling consciences, he sayth, that whosoever shall sinne, if they be receiued into fauour with the Church, are freed from guyltinesse beefore God. For hee appoynted this as a pledge of heauenly grace, which nothing pertaineth to hypocrites, which do peruert the right vse of reconciliation.

And there ariseth hence no small hope vnto the godlye, when as they heare that their sinnes are blotted out before God and angels, as loone as they obtaine forgiveness of the Church. In the other parte there is no ambyguirie of the meaning of Christ. For, when as stubborne & proud men are ready vnder this pretence to despyse the iudgement of the church, as vngodly knaues, they doe often very boldly appeale to the tribunall seate in heauen. Christ, that he may with terrour breake their pryde, saieth, that their condēnation is ratified in heauen. In the mean while he encourageth his to a iust and righteous seueritie, least they should giue place to the wicked frowardnes of them which refuse or shake off all discipline. Heere is also to bee seene how ignorantly the Papistes, doe wrest this place, to colour all kind of tyranny. It is certaine that the right and authoritie of excommunicating is giuen vnto the church, and all men of a right minde doe confesse the same: but whether that euery man, or that one that is not called by the Church, but created by the horned and disguised beaste, may according to his pleasure send forth their vain and empty crackes of excommunications, according to their pleasure? But it is manifest that the lawfull gouernment of the Church was committed to the Elders, not onely to the ministers of the word, but to them also, which of the people were ioyned to them to be censors of the word. Yet they not contented with their former impudency, induoured to proue out of this place, whatsoeuer burdens they layd vpon the people to be borne. I speake not of that, that the moste wicked enemies of the Church doe vnworthily vsurpe, and by violence take vnto themselves, the authority which was granted vnto the Church: I onely say, when Christe spake not, but onely of correcting of sinnes, they which by their lawes insnare soules doe no lesse foolishly then wickedly abuse his testimony.

It is of the same sorte of branne, that vnder this pretence they defende their auricular confession. For though Christe appoynted that they shoulde be reconciled to the Church, which by their faulte were brought to the publike iudgemente: yet was it not his will to lay a lawe vpon all menne, that they should vnburden them of their sinnes in the eare of a sacrificer . But their fancies are so friuolous, that it is not necessary to stand any longer to confute them.

19. Again, I say vnto you. He confirmeth the former sentence: because God will not onely giue the spirite of counsell and wisdom to them that shall aske it: but he also will cause that whatsoeuer they shall doe out of his word, should want power and effect. But he ioyning consent to the prayer, declareth howe soberly and reuerently the faithfull shoulde behaue themselues in all their holy actions. The sinner must be admonished, and except hee giue place to that reproofe, he must be excommunicated. Here it behooueth not only to aske counsell of the holy mouth of God, that nothing be done but according to his word but also it is meete to begin with prayers. Whereby that which I taught before appeareth more euidently, that there is no licence giuen to men to doe what so euer they lust, but God is placed as a reuenger of the gouernement of the church that he might defend and sanctifie the iudgementes, whereof he is the authour. In the meane season, while the faithfull doe meete, they are taught to ioyne their petitions and generally to pray together, not onely to testifie the vnitie of faith, but that God would heare the desire of them all. Therefore, as G O D doth often promise oserwhere that he will heare the priuate prayers of euery man: so here Christ adorneth publike prayers, with a singular promise, that he might thereby stirre vs vp the more earnestly to exercise the same.

20. Where two or three are gathered in my name. This promise stretcheth further then the former. For the Lord declareth that hee will bee present as oft as two or three shall be gathered in his name, that hee may direct them with his counsell, and bring to prosperous successe whatsoeuer they shall take in hande. There is no cause therefore why they should doubt, which deliuer ouer themselues to be ruled by him, but that they shall feele by his presence that profite and fruite they shall desire. But sith it is an inestimable good thing, to haue Christ the cheife and presidente in all our affayres, as againe nothing is more miserable then to bee without his grace: this promise should bee no small spurre to vs, that wee might godlyly and holyly ioyne together amongst our selues. For whosocuer eyther neglecteth the holy assemblies, or negligently separateth himselfe from the brethren, or behaue himselfe carelesly in preserving vnitie, doth hereby declare that he maketh no account of the presence of Christ.

But first it must be prouided, & they which desire to haue Christ present, should bee gathered in his name. But the definition of this clause must also bee noted, that the wicked do no lesse falsely and impudently then wickedly make his holy name as a cloake to their conspiracies. Therefore except we will cast Christ forth to their scornes, and together ouerthrow that which he here promised: first, it must be known what this saying meaneth: namely, that they which are gathered, all lettes, being cast away, which hinder vs from comming to Christ, shoulde come sincerely to Christe, and yeelde to obey his worde, and suffer themselues to bee gouerned by his spirite. Where this simplicitie taketh place, it is not to bee feared but that Christe by his blessings will openly declare, that the company is not gathered together in vaine . Wherein the grosse folly of the Papistes doth bewray it telfe. They cry that their counsels cannot erre, and therefore that all their decrees must bee holden : because that as oft as two or three are gathered together in the name of Christ, he is in the midst of them. But first it were to be demaunded, whether they came together in the name of Christ or no, of whose faith, doctrine and affection it is to be doubted. While the Papistes doe omitte or hide this, who seeth not that the difference between the holy and prophane assemblyes, are subtilly confounded by them, that the power of doing any thing may bee transferred from the Church to the sworne enemies of Christ? Therefore let vs knowe, that none but the godly worshippers of God, which doe sincerely seeke Christ are comforted heere with hope, that they should not doubt of his presence. And the bastarde and vnfruitfull counsellers, which weaue webbes of their owne braynes, beeing lefte, Christe will alwayes remaine as chiefe with the doctrine of his Gospel amongst vs.

Matth. 18.

21. Then came Peter to him, and sayde, maister, how oft shal my brother sinne against me and I shall forgine him? vnto seuen times?

22. Iesus sayde vnto him, I say not to thee, vnto seuen times, but vnto seuen times seuen times.

23. Therefore is the kingdome of heauen likened vnto a certaine king, which would take account of his seruants.

24. And when hee had begunne to reckon, one was brought vnto him, which ought him ten thousand talents.

25. And because hee had nothing to pay, his maister commaunded him to be sold, and his wife, and his children, and all that he had, and the debts to be payde.

26. The seruaunte therefore fell downe, and besought him, saying, maister, appease thine anger toward me, and I will pay thee all.

27. Then that seruaunts maister had compassion and losed him, and forgaued him the debt.

28. But when the seruaunt was departed, he found one of his fellowes, which ought him an hundred pence, and he layd handes on him, and tooke him by the throat, saying, pay me that thou owest.

29. Then his fellow fell downe at his feete, and besought him, saying, appease thine anger to wardes me and I will pay thee all.

30. Yet

Marke.

Luke 17.

4. And though hee sinne againste thee seuen times in a day, and seuen times in a day turne againe to thee, saying, it repēteth me, thou shalt forgine him.

30. Yet hee would not, but went and caste him into prison, till he should pay the debt.

31. And when his other fellows saw what was done, they were very sorry, and came and declared to their maister all that was done.

32. Then his maister called him, and sayd vnto him, O euill seruant, I forgauē thee all that debt, because thou prayedst me.

33. Oughtest not thou also to haue hadde pittie on thy fellow, euen as I had pittie on thee?

34. So his maister was wroth, and deliuered him to the iaylers, till hee should paye all that was due to him.

35. So likewise shall my heauenly father do vnto you, except yee forgive from your hearts, ech one to his brother their trespassse.

21. Maister, how oft. Peter maketh this obiection according to the common sence and wisdom of the flesh. Naturally it is grafted in all men, that they would haue themselues pardoned, so that if any man do not presently obtaine forgiveness, he complaineth that hee is streightly and vnkindly dealt with: but it is much a dee to finde them that will shewe themselues easie to bee entreated of others, which desire to bee gently dealt with themselues. Therefore, when the Lord exhorteth his disciples to louing kindnes, this doubt came into Peters minde: what shall come of it, if we be so ready to forgive, but that our gentleness shall be a baylight to prouoke them to sinne? Therefore hee demaundeth whether it bee conuenient to forgive them that sinne often. For the number of seuen, signifieth as much as the aduerbe seuen times, & is taken for a great number. As if he should haue sayde, Maister, how ofte wouldst thou haue vs to receiue them that offend into fauour? For it is absurde and vnprofitable that they should finde vs so ready to be appeased. But Christ is so farre from being moued with this obiection, that he expressely sayeth, that there should be no end of forgiving. Neither yet would he appoynt any certaine number, but rather commaundeth that wee should neuer bee weary. Luke doeth somewhat differ from Matthew: for he simply reporteth the commaundement of Christe, that wee should be ready to forgive seuen times yet the sence and meaning agreeth, that wee should be ready and willing to forgive not once, or twise, but as oft as the sinner repenteth. This is the onely difference, that according to Matthew the Lord reproving Peeter, for that he was too straight in that behalfe, increaseth the number hyperbolically, which of it selfe sufficeth to set forth the summe of the matter. Neither did Peter aske the question, whether he should forgive seuen times, for that hee was content to goe so farre, but that by objecting or making a shew of great absurditie, he might draw Christe from his iudgement, as I touched euen now: for he that will be ready to forgive seuen times, will also be appeased at the seuentie offence.

But out of Lukes woordes there ariseth an other question; because Christ

Christ doeth not commaunde to forgiue, but when the sinner doeth turne to vs and shall testifie his repentance: for by this meanes hee seemeth to graunt his liberty to deny mercy and forgiuenesse to the wicked. I answer, offences are forgiuen two wayes. If any man doe me an iniury, and I laying aside the desire of reuenge, doe not cease to loue him, but in stead of iniury, I bestow a benefite vppon him: though I thinke hardly of him as hee deserueth, yet am I saide and accounted to forgiue him. For when God commandeth vs to do well to our enemies, he doth not therefore presently require, that wee should allow those things in them which hee condemneth: but hee woulde onely haue our mindes free from all hatred. In this kind of forgiuenesse it is not to be looked for, that he which hath offended should come of his owne accord to appease vs: so that it behoueth vs to loue them, which of set purpose exasperate vs, which refuse fauour, & heape old offences and new together. The second maner of forgiuing is, when we so receiue a brother into fauour, that we thinke wel of him, and are perswaded that the remembrance of his sinne is blotted out before God. And this is that I gaue warning of before, that Christ doth not here seeke only of iniuries done to vs, but of all kinde of offences. For he would haue them that are fallen to be holpen by our compassion, which doctrine is therefore very necessary, for that by nature we are almost all froward beyond measure: and Satan vnder pretence of seueritie, driueth vs to extreme rigor, so that those miserable men that are not forgiuen are swallowed vp of sorrow and despaire. But it is here againe demanded whether a man is to be credited as soone as in worde he shall proffer repentance. For if this be graunted, it shall of necessitie followe that wittingly and willingly they offend. And where were then discretion, if that without correction any manne might freely scorne at vs euen to the hundred offences? I answer first that he speaketh here of daily offences, for the which euen the best men hath neede of forgiuenesse. Therefore, when as in so great infirmite of the flesh, we haue so dangerous a way, so many sleights & assaults, what should become of vs, if at the second and third offence all hope of forgiuenesse were taken away? Secondly it is to be added, that Christe spoyleth not the faithfull of iudgement, that they should fondly be too credulous at ones woorde: but hee woulde onely haue them righteous and kinde, that they may reach their hande to the repentant: if it appeareth that from the heart they are displeased with themselves for their sinnes. For repentance is a holy thing, and hath need of diligent examination: but as oft as the sinner shall giue a signe of conuersion, Christe would that he should be admitted to reconciliation, least he being ouerthrowne with the repulse, should faint. Thirdly it is to be noted, when any manne hath giuen suspicion of himselfe, because of his lightneite and inconstancie, we may so release him whin he asketh forgiuenesse, that here after wee may marke his maners, least hee despite our patience and kindnesse which proceedeth from the spirit of Christe. For the counsell of the Lorde must bee holden, that they that are fallen must bee holpen with our kindnesse, that they may bee raysed vppe againe. And certainly wee must intreate the goodnesse of our heauenly father, who meeterh sinners a farre off, that hee may call them to repentance. Further, when as repentance is a meruellous worke of the spirit, and the creation of a newe manne, if we despise the same, we do in-ity to God himselfe.

23. The kingdome of heauen is likened vnto a certaine king. Because it is harde to draw vs to mercy: and especially when as many faultes of our brethren are to bee borne with, there doth presently a loathsomnesse creepe vpon vs, the Lord doeth confirme this doctrine, with a most apt and fit parable. The summe, wherof is this, they that will not be brought to forgieue the offences of the brethren, do very euill prouide for themselues, and they make too harde and too straight a lawe for themselues: for they shall finde God as straight and as hard to bee entreated towards them. For the similitude consisteth especially in 3. poyntes: for the maister is set against the seruaunt, a great summe against small or meane thinges, singular clemency to extreme cruelty. For what are wee if we be compared with God? And now what summe is euery one of vs indebted towards him? Lastly, how light are the offences wherewith our brethren be endangered to vs, if our obligation to God be considered? Howe vnworthy therefore of the mercy of God is a miserable wretch loaden with an intollerable burden, who is so hard to be entreated of his fellowes, that hee will not forgieue the least offence? As concerning the wordes the spirituall estate of the Church, is here called the kingdome of heauen: as if Christ should haue said, the case betweene God and man in respect of the soule, and the estate of the spirituall life is at that poynt, as betweene a ciuill earthly master, and his seruants, in respect of mony and the busines of this present life.

25. His maister commaunded him. It were a friuolous thing subtilly to search and sift out euery perticular poynt here: for God doth not alwayes shew his rigour vnto vs at the first, vntill we be driuen to entreate and to sue for forgieuenesse: nay he preuenteth vs with his free goodnes, but hee onely teacheth what should become of vs, if God shoulde vse vs, as in iustice he might. Also, if hee shoulde exacte of vs that which is due, how meete it were for vs to flee to prayers, for this is the onely remaining refuge for sinners. The great difference betweene the summes is also to bee noted: for when as one talent is more then a hundred pence, what are a hundred pence to ten thousand talents?

31. When his fellow seruantes. Though there is no mysterie to be sought in these woordes, yet because they containe nothing but that which nature teacheth, and wee doe daily learne by experience, it is to bee knowne that we shall haue so many aduerfaries and witnesses against vs before God, as there are menne with whom wee lue: because it cannot otherwise be but that such cruelty should be displeasent and odious to them, especially while euery manne is afraid of himselfe, least that shoulde light vpon his owne head, which hee seeth befall vnto another. The question that is demanded out of the sentence following is but in vaine, how God will punish those sinnes which he hath forgieuen: for this is the simple meaning: Though he offer mercy to all menne, yet they are vnworthy to enioy the same, which are such cruell dealers, of whome no pardon may be obtained. But the Papistes are to bee scorned at, while they would draw their purgatory fire out of the aduerbe vntill: for it is euident that Christe here speaketh of eternall death, and not of any temporall punishment, whereby he shoulde satishe the iudgement of God.

Luke

24. And when they were come to Capernaum, they that receiued pole money, came to Peter, and sayd : Doth not your maister pay tribute.

25. He said, yes. And when he was come into the house, Iesus preuented him, saying : What thinkest thou Simon? Of whom doe kings of the earth take tribute or pole money? Of their children or of strangers?

26. Peter sayd vnto him of strangers. Then sayd Iesus vnto him : shen are the children free.

27. Neuerthelesse, least, we should offend them, goe to the sea, and cast in an angle, and take the first fishe that commeth vp, and when thou hast opened his mouth, thou shalt finde a peice of 20. pence : that take, and giue it vnto them for thee and me.

24. And when they were come to Capernaum. The purpose of this hystory must especially be noted : for in that Christ willingly declared his subiection, euen as he had taken vpon him the shape of a seruant : yet withall hee sheweth both by words and by miracle, that he was not so debased either by law or by necessitie, but of his owne free and voluntary submission, that the worlde shoulde esteeme him, as some one of the common people. This was not custome which was wont to be gathered for passage, but a yearely tribute which was imposed vpon the Iewes for euery of their heads, that they shoulde pay that to tyrantes, which they were wont to pay to God alone. For we know that this tribute was set vpon them by the lawe, that by the yearely paiement of halfe a sicke, they should professe God of whō they were redeemed to be their cheife king. When as the kinges of Asia had translated it vnto themselues, it pleased the Romane well to follow their example. So the Iewes being as it were estranged from the gouernement of God, paid to prophane tyrants the holy tribute commanded in the law. Yet it might seeme absurd, that Christ cōming to redeeme the people, could not set himselfe free from tribute. That hee might take away this offence, he taught in words that he was bound thereto, but only of his own free will, and he proued the same by miracle : for hee coulde haue exempted himselfe from earthly Empire, that ruled the sea and fishes.

Your maister. Some thinke that the tolle gatherers vpbraided Christ, as if that he should withdraw himselfe from the common course. For as they were a scornfull and a reprochfull kinde of men, so I thinke that this was reprochfully spoken. For whereas euery man was wont to be seased in his owne citie, we know that Christ had no quiet abiding in any one place. Therefore these men doe demand, whcther he be free from lawes, because that as a wanderer, he goeth about hither and thither. And Peter in his answere made a modest excuse to appease them : Yes sayeth hee, hee will pay. Whereby wee gather that Christ was wont to pay before, because Peter promised it as a thing not to be doubted of. And that they call vpon him, rather then vpon the other, I thinke was for that Christ dwelt with him : for if they had all vsed one lodging, the exaction should haue bene common.

Therefore

Therefore the Papists are to be laughed at, which vnder so frivolous a pretence, do make Peter a companion with Christ in dignitie. He chose him a Vicar say they, and made him in honour like to himselfe, whom in paying of tribute he made equall to himselfe. But by this meanes they may make all swineheards Christes vicars, for euen they payd as much. If that Peters supremacy appeared in paying of tribute, from whence is this immunity which they challenge to themselves? But so it becometh them to be very foolishly fond, which doe so depraue the scripture after their owne pleasure.

What thinkest thou Simon? Christ heerein made a shewe of his diuinity, declaring that nothing is hidden from them. But whereto tendeth his speech? Is it to exempt him and his from subiection to the lawes? So some doe expound it that Christians are free by right: but that they doe freely submit themselues to the common order, because that otherwise humane societie could not be maintained. Yet I thinke this rather to be the meaning: Because it was dangerous, least the disciples should thinke that Christ came in vaine, for that by paying of tribute he might take away hope of deliuerance, he simply sayth that he doeth therefore pay tribute, because that he doth of his owne accorde abstaine from his owne right and power, whereof is to be gathered that nothing is diminished from his kingdome. But why doeth not hee challenge to himselfe that which was his owne? namely, because his maiestie was vknowne to the tribute gatherers. For though his kingdome is spirituall, yet it must be so esteemed of, sith he was the onely sonne of God, that he was also heyre of the whole world, that all things ought to be subiect to him, and to bee brought into order before him. The meaning therefore is, that kings are not therefore appoynted of God to rule ouer mankind, neither hath he established common wealthes, that hee which is sonne, should without respect be brought into the same seruitude with other men: yet, vntill the glory of his kingdome be manifested, he doth willingly abase himselfe to be as a seruant together with others. The Pope doth no lesse foolishly then happily abuse this, that he might free his cleargie from lawes: as though that a shauen crowne could make them the sonnes of G O D, which should be free from tributes and taxes. But Christ had no such purpose, as to challenge himselfe the honour of the kinges sonne, that hee might thereby at the least, obtaine to haue a house free by priuiledge from the common order. Wherfore the Anabaptists doe very ignorantly wrest these wordes for the weakening of the politike estate: for there is nothing more certaine, then that Christ did not pleade for the common right of the faithfull: but tooke onely a similitude from kinges, which together with them of their householdes are free.

27. Cast in an angle. Though I doe grant that Christes bagges were not alwayes full, yet I doe not thinke that he was enforced by want to giue this commandement to Peter: but that he might prooue by miracle, that his dominion reacheth further, then all the kinges of the earth, for he hath the fishes tributaries to him. And wee reade that he did this onely once: for one instruction in his whole life was sufficient. Further, a stater was so much in value as a siccle namely, foure drachmes, or two didrachmes.

Mathew

Math. 19.
 1. And it came to passe, that when Iesushad finished those sayings, he departed from Galile, and came into the coastes of Iudea beyond Iordan.
 2. And great multitudes followed him, & he healed them there.

Marke. 9.
 38. Then Iohn answered him, saying: Master, wee saw one casting out deuils by thy name, which followeth not vs, and we forbade him, because hee followeth vs not.
 39. But Iesus said: Forbid him not, for there is no manne that can do a myracle by my name, that can lightly speake euill of me.
 40. For who soeuer is not against vs, is on our part.

Marke 10.
 1. And he arose from thence, & went into the coastes of Iudea, by the far side of Iordan, and the people resorted vnto him againe, & as he was wont he taught them againe.

Luke. 9.
 49. And Iohn answered & sayd: Master, we saw one casting out deuils in thy name, and we forbade him, because hee followed not thee with vs. 50. Then Iesus said vnto him: Forbid yee him not: for he that is not against vs, is with vs.
 51. And it came to passe, when the dayes were accomplished, that he should be receiued vp: he settled himselfe fully to goe to Ierusalem.
 52. And sent messengers before him: and they went & entred into the towne of the Samaritanes, to prepare him lodging.
 53. But they woulde not receiue him, because his behaviour was, as though he would goe to Ierusalem.
 54. And when his Disciples, James and Iohn sawe it, they sayd, Lord: wilt thou that wee commaund that fire come downe from heauen, and consume them as Elias did?

M A R. 38. Master. Heereby it appeareth that the name of Christe was at then renouaned, so that they vsed it, which were not acquainted with his disciples: or it may be that they abused the same, for I dare not affirme any certaintie of it. It may bee, that the party heere mentioned, embraced the doctrine of Christ, and gaue himselfe to worke myracles not of any euill minde. But because that Christe gaue this power but to certaine choyce preachers of his Gospell, I thinke that he tooke this vpon him vnadvisedly, or rather intruded himselfe into this office. But though he preposterously attempted this, in that he durst imitate the disciples without commaundement, yet his boldnesse was not without successe, for it pleased the Lord by this meanes also to make his name known: as hee woorketh sometime by them whose ministerie hee doeth not allow as lawfull. Furthermore, there is no cause to the contrary, but a man that hath a perticular fayth, may followe a blinde zeale: and so cast himselfe headlong to working of myracles. Now I come to Iohn and to his companions They say that they forbade a manne from working of myracles. Why did they not firste aske whether it was lawfull or no? For they being now vncertaine and in doubt, do aske the maisters iudgement. When of it followeth, that they without consideration tooke vpon them authority of forbidding. Wherefore he is to be condemned of rashnesse, who soeuer shall attempt more then hee knoweth to be allowed him by the woorde of God. Furthermore, Chrites disciples are to be suspected of ambition: for they doe this in defence of the priuiledge of their owne honour. For how cometh it to passe, that they shoulde so dainly.

dainly reſtraine a man with whom they were not acquainted from working of myracles, but becauſe they alone would enioy this liberty? for they do alledge this cauſe, that he followed not Chriſt: as if they ſhould haue ſaide: Hee is no follower of thine as we are: therefore why ſhould he haue this honour?

39. Forbid him not. Chriſt would not haue him forbidden, not that he had ſet him a worke, or allowed his deede, or eſe would haue it allowed by his diſciples: but becauſe that is to be borne with, and to be reiyced at, where God is glorified by any occaſion. So Paul, Phill. 1. 18. though he was diſpleaſed with the euill dealing or ambition of the wanderers, which boacted themſelues with the name of the Goſpell, yet hereioyceth that the glory of Chriſt is ſet forth by this occaſion. And the reaſon is to be noted, which followeth, that it cannot be, that he ſhould ſpeake euill of Chriſte, that wrought myracles in his name: & therefore that was to haue bene accounted as gaine For thereof it followeth, that except the diſciples had bene moie giuen to their owne glory, then ſtudious and deſirous to ſet foorth the glory of the maſter, they would not haue taken the matter ſo grieuouſly, when as they ſaw the ſame ſette forth, and encreaſed other wiſe. Neither yet, whereas Chriſt ſayeth that they are to be accounted as friendes, which are not open enemies, doth he commaund to let the bridle ſlacke to all rath menne to doe what they luſt, that wee ſhould hold our peace, while they according to their pleaſure ſhould ſturre hither and thither, and trouble the whole order of the Church ( for ſuch licencioſuſneſſe muſt be bridled ſo farre as our calling will ſuffer) hee onely denyeth that they doe well, which doe earnestly withſtand and ſtoppe, leaſt the kingdome of God ſhould encreaſe by any meanes. Neither doth he ſo acknowledge them for his, as that he accounteth them of his flocke, which are indifferent betweene enemies and friendes: but the meaning was, that in as much as they hurt not, they doe profite and helpe. For it is a prouerbiall ſaying, whereby wee are warned not to moue warre, vntill we be prouoked to the ſame.

L V K E. 51. When the dayes were accompliſhed. Onely Luke reporteth this hiſtory, which yet is not a little profitable many wayes, for firſt the diuine fortitude and conſtancie of Chriſte in deſpiſing death is heere deſcribed. Then, what great hatred and enmities diſſentions in religion do breede: Thirdly, how the nature of menne is caried to impatience with a rath zeale: Further, how ready and apt it is to followe the falles and faultes of the Saints: Laſtly, wee are taught meekeneſſe by the example of Chriſte. But the death of Chriſte is called a taking away, not onely becauſe hee was then taken from amongſt men, but becauſe that hee departing from the baſe priſon of the fleſh, aſcended vp on high.

He had ſettled himſelfe. Hereby Luke declareth, that when the death of Chriſte was before his eyes, the feare of it being caſt away, he went forwardes to meete the ſame. yet withal he declareth that he did ſtriuie, that as a cōquerour of the terrour, he might boldly offer himſelfe to death. For if no feare had been throwne vpō him, if no difficulty, no ſtrif, no care, to what ſhuld he ſettle his countenance? But becauſe he was neither blockiſh, nor yet caried away with a rath & headie boldneſſe, it behooued him to be moued at that cruel and bitter death: Nay, at that that fearefull and horrible torment, which hee knewe to bee neare ready to fall vpon him from the seuerer iudgement of God: and euen that is so far from darkening or diminishing of his glory, that it is a notable shew and declaration of his loue towardes vs. For not regarding himselfe, that hee might apply himselfe to our saluation, through the middelt of terrours he hastened vnto death, the day and time whereof, he knewe to be neare.

52. And sent messengers before him. It is to be supposed, that he then had a great company of followers with him. The messengers are sent, neyther to prepare pleasant dainties, nor to chuse some beautifull palace, but onely to declare, that a great company of strangers were comming. But they being shutt out and repulled, doe tarie waiting for their maister. Further, we doe heereby learne, that which I noted in the second place, when as men doe disagree betweene themselues in matters of doctrine of Religion, they do easily fall out into mutuall hatred. For it was a signe of most bitter hatred, to defraud the hungry of their meate, and to deny harbour to the weary. But the Iewith religion was so euill thought of, and esteemed amongst the Samaritanes, that they thought them not worthy of any kindnesse which followed it. It may bee, that the greife of the reproach vexed them, that they knewe that the Iewes accounted their temple as prophane, and detested it, and esteemed them as degenerate and corrupt worshippers of God. But when as superstition was once receyued, they forwardly stacke to the same, & with a wicked emulation they contended to defend the same.

At the length the contention grewe so hot, that in one fire it destroyed both their Countries: for Iosephus declareth that it was the firebrande of the warres of the Iewes. And though Christ could readily haue auoyded that enuie, yet he had rather himselfe to be a Iewe, then to get him lodging by an ouerthwart deniall of the same.

54. And when his Disciples sawe it. It may be, the region where they were, put them in minde that they should desire that lightning should fall downe vpon the wicked: for in times past Elias hadde in that place ouerthrowne with fire from heauen the kings souldiours, which were sent to take him, 2. Reg. 1. 10. Therefore it came into their minde, to thinke that the Samaritanes which so vnworthily reiecte the sonne of God, were ordained to the like destruction. And heere wee doe see whether a foolish imitation of the holy fathers doth cary vs. James and Iohn doe pretend the example of Elias: but they cōsider not how much they differre frō Elias, they do not examine the extremitie of their zeale, they looke not to the calling of God. The Samaritanes had the like goodly pretence for their idolatrie, as it is set downe in Iohn 4. 20. but they were both amisse, for that without any regard, they were rather Apes, then followers of the holy fathers. And though it is doubted, whether they thought the power to be in their owne hands, or that they desired Christ to giue it them: yet I doe thinke this the more probable, that they were lift vpp with a foolish hope, thinking themselues sufficiently armed to execute that reuenge, so that Christ would allow of it.

55. Yee know not of what spirit yee are. By this answer Christe not onely restrained the vnbrideled heate in the two disciples, but he also prescribeth a rule to vs all, that we nourish not any such heate in vs. For it behoueth him, who so euer he be that attempteth any thing, that he be well assured with himselfe, that he haue the spirit of God for his authour and his guide, and that hee be led with a right and a pure instinct of him. Feruencie of zeale doth cary many men: but if the wisdom of the spirit be wanting, they become as blubbers and frothe. Also it often falleth out, that the troublesome affections of the flesh are mixed with the zeale, and they which seeme to be most zealous of the glory of God, are blinded with a priuate affection of the flesh. Wherefore, except, the Spirit of God doe guide our zeale, it will not serue for an excuse, that wee attempted nothing but of a good zeale. But the Spirit it selfe shall gouerne vs by counsel & wisdom, that we doe nothing beside our duty, nor beyond our calling, also that we attempt not any thing but wisely and conueniently: Further, he will indue our mindes (euery dreg of the flesh being wiped away) with a right affection, that we desire not any thing but that which God commandeth. Christe also blameth his disciples, for that they were farr from the spirit of Elias, and that they doe wickedly in taking that to themselues which he did. For Elias executed the iudgement of God, which was commanded him by the spirit of God, but these men, not by the commandement of God, but by the prouocation of the flesh, are caried to seeke reuenge. Wherefore the examples of the Saints are no defence to vs, except the same spirit doe dwell in vs, which directed them.

Luke.

3. Then came vnto him the Pharisees tempting him, and saying to him: Is it lawfull for a man to put away his wife for euery fault?

4. And hee answered, and sayde vnto them: Haue ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning, made them male and female:

5. And sayd: for this cause shall a man leaue father and mother, and cleaue vnto his wife, and they twaine shall be one flesh?

6. Wherefore they are no more twaine, but one fleshe. Let no man therefore put a sander that which God hath coupled together.

7. They sayd vnto him: Why then did Moses commaund to giue a bill of diuorcement, and to put her away?

8. Hee sayde vnto them: Moses for

2. Then the Pharisees came & asked him if it were lawfull for a man to put away his wife, and tempted him. 3. And hee answered, and said vnto them: What did Moses command you?

4. And they sayd: Moses suffered to write a bill of diuorcement, and to put her away.

5. Then Iesus answered and sayd vnto them: for the hardnesse of your heart, hee wrote this precept vnto you.

6. But at the beginning of the creation, God made them male & female.

7. For this cause shall a man leaue his father and his mother, & cleaue to his wife.

8. And they twaine shall bee the hardnesse of your heart, suffered to put away your wives, but frō the beginning it was not so.

9. If say therefore vnto you, that who soeuer shall put away his wife, except it be for whoredome and marry another, committeth adulterie: and who soeuer marieth her which is diuorced, doth commit adulterie.

one fleshe: so that they are no more twaine, but one flesh.

9. Therefore, what God hath coupled together, let no man separate.

10. And in the house his Disciples asked him againe of that matter

11. And he sayd vnto them: who soeuer shal put away his wife, & marrie another comitteh adultery agaissther

12. And if a woman put away her husband, and be married to another, shee committeth adulterie.

Though the Pharisies doe lay snares for Christ, and do craftily set vpon him, that they might intrappe him, yet their malice wrought for our profite: as the Lord doeth wonderfully knowe how to turne to the good of his, what soeuer things the wicked doe deuise for the subuersion of true doctrine. For by this occasion was the question answered, which the libertie of diuorcement did bring forth, and there was a certaine law deliuered, of the holy and inseparable knot of Matrimonic. But thereof is taken an occasion of quarrelling, because that the answer could not bee but odious on both sides in respecte of them. They demand whether it is lawfull for a mā to put away his wife for cuery cause: If christ denie it, they will cry out that he doth wickedly abrogate the law. If he affirme it, they will bragge that he is rather a baud, then a Prophet of God, who will so fauour the lust of men. And this they had conceiued in their mindes: but the sonne of God, who knew how to take the wife in their owne subtilty, deceiued them of their hope, and seuerely resisted their vnlawfull diuorcements: yet shewing withall, that hee bringeth forth nothing but that which was agreeable to the lawe. For he concludeth the matter in two pointes: he sayth that the order of creation should be as a law, that a man should keepe his marriage promise as a lawe all his whole life, and that diuorcements were permitted, not that they were lawfull: but because he had to doe with a people that was stubborne, and would not be taught.

4. Haue yee not read. Christ doeth not answer directly to that which is demanded, but hee doeth plainly satisfie the question proposed: as if any man now being demanded of the masse, should faithfully declare the mysterie of the holy supper, and should at the length inferre, that they are sacrilegious and falsifiers, that dare bee so bolde as to adde or to diminish any thing from the pure institution of the Lord, he should openly ouerthrowe the fained sacrifice of the masse. And Christe taketh this rule, God from the beginning ioyned manne and woman together, that they two might make one perfect man. Therefore hee that putteth away his wife, teareth away from himselfe as it were the one halfe of himselfe. But nature suffereth not, that any man should rend asunder his owne body. Hee addeth another argument drawne from the lesse to the greater, the bonde of matrimonic is holier and straiter, then that wherein the children are bound to the parents. But godlinesse tieth the children to the parentes in a band that cannot bee loosed. Much lesse therefore may the husband, renounce his wife. Heereof it followeth that the bande made of God, is broken if a man be diuorced from his wife. And nowe this is the meaning of the wordes. That God the maker of mankinde, made man and woman, that euery man being contented with one onely wife, should not desire any others: for he resteth vpon the number of two, as also the Prophet Malachie, cha. 2.10. when he inueighed against Polygamie, bringeth the same reason, that God in whom ther was aboundance of spirit, so that it was at his pleasure to create mo, yet made but one man: namely, such as is here described of Christ. Therefore the inseparable societie of one husband with one wife, is proued by the order of creation. If any man shall obiect, that by this reason it shall not be lawfull, the firste wife being dead, to take an other: The answer is easie: the bande is not only broken by death, but the second wife is placed of God in the roomth of the former, as if thee were one and the same.

5. For this cause shall a man leaue father. It is doubted whether Moses bringeth in Adam, or God speaking in that place: but whether of the two thou takest, it maketh little to this present place: for it was sufficient to bring the Oracle of God, though it should be spoken by Adam. But hee doth not simply commande him that marrieth a wife, to leaue his father, for so God should be contrary to himselfe, if by Matrimonie he should abolish that honour which he commandeth children to vse towardes their parents: but while comparison is made betweene those duties, the wife is preferred before father and mother. But if any man should send backe message to his father, & should shake off that yoake whereto he is bounde, no man would allow such a monster. Much lesse then shall there be libertie granted to dissolve Matrimonie.

They shall be two in one flesh. By this Polygamie is no lesse condemned, then that libertie of putting away wiuues. For if the knitting together of two be sanctified of the Lorde, then the ioyning eyther with three or foure is adulterous. But Christ as I sayd a little before, doeth apply it otherwise to his purpose, euen thus, that who soeuer should put away his wife, should rend himselfe in pieces: for the power of holy Matrimonie is such, that the husbande and the wife become one flesh. Neither was it the purpose of Christ to bring in the foule & filthy deuice of Plato, but hee speaketh reuerently of that order appointed by God. Therefore let the husband & the wife so liue together, that the one may so nourish the other, euen as the one halfe part of himselfe: and let him so command, as the head of the wife, and not as a tyrant: in like maner let the woman modestly submit her selfe in obedience.

6. That which God hath ioyned together. Christe in this sentence brideleth the lust of men, that they should not by forsaking their wiuues, breake the holy knot. And as he denieth it to be in the power of the man to break matrimony, so hee giueth a law to all others, that they shoulde not confirme vnlawfull diuorces by their authority. For the Magistrate abuseth his authoritie, which sheweth fauour to a mā to put away his wife: yet christ properly bent himselfe to this purpose, & euery man should religiously maintaine the faith which he hath giuen for himselfe, and they which are prouoked by lust or wicked affection to diuorcement:

let them thus think with themselves: who art thou that wouldst take liberty to thy selfe to breake that which God hath ioyned. But this doctrine may also be applyed further. The Papists imagining vs a Church separated from Christ her head, they do leaue vs an vnperfect & a maimed body: in the holy supper where-as Christe ioyned bread and wine, they are so bolde as to deprive all the people of the vse of the cuppe. Against these deuilish corruptions we may oppose: that which God hath ioyned together, let no man put a sunder.

7. Why then did Moses. They hadde thought vpon this quarrell before, if Christe (which was most likely) shoulde require the lawfull vse of diuorcements. For what soeuer God permitteth in his lawe, seemeth to be lawfull, whose onely will maketh the difference betweene good and euill. But Christe meeteth their false enuy with a fitte answer, that Moses graunted this for their frowardnesse, and not as that he should allow it as lawfull. And he confirmeth this saying with a notable reason: Because it was not so from the beginning. Hee taketh this as graunted, when God at the beginning instituted Matrimonic, he established a perpetuall law which should be in force euen to the end. If that the institution of Matrimony is to be accounted as a lawe inuiolable, it followeth that what soeuer declineth from the same, proceedeth not from the pure nature of the same, but of the corruption of men. Yet it is demaunded whether it was lawfull for Moses to permitte that, which of it selfe was euill and corrupt: I answer, that which he did not seuerely forbidde, is vnproperly sayde to be permitted. For he gaue no lawe of diuorcementes, as that he woulde approue the same by his allowance: but when as the wickednesse of men coulde not otherwise be restrained, hee gaue that remedy which was most tollerable, that the man shoulde at the least giue testimony of the chastity of his wife. For the law was not giuen but in fauour of the women, least that after they were vniustly reiecte, they shoulde incurre any slander. Whereby we gather that it was rather a punishment layd vpon the men, then a liberty or permission graunted for the prouocation of their lust. Note also that the spirituall gouernment, doth differ much from the politike and outward order. What is lawfull and meete to be done, the Lorde comprehendeth in tenne woordes: nowe because it may be that many things are not called before the iudgement seate of men, whereof euery mannes conscience reprooueth and conuinceth him, it is no meruaile if politike lawes doe agree vnto them. Let vs take a familiar example, we haue greater liberty to contende by lawes, then the rule of charitie will beare. Why is this so? because right cannot be giuen to euery manne, except there be a way opened to demaunde it: in the meane season the inwarde lawes of GOD sheweth, that that must be followed which charity commaundeth, yet there is heere no cause why Magistrates shoulde be excused for their negligence, if they doe of their owne accorde cease from correctinge of sinnes, or shall omitte those things which the estate of their callinge doeth require. But lette priuate menne take heede, leaste by couering their offences, vnder pretence of lawes, they double their faulte. For the Lorde doeth here by the way blame the Iewes, as if it were not sufficiēt for the to haue their frowardnes born with, or passed by without punishment, except they shuld make God the author of their sinne. If that a rule of liuing godly and holily cannot alway<sup>s</sup> nor euerywhere bee gathered out of the lawes polliticke, much lesse of custome.

9. Isay vnto you. Marke reporteth that this was spoken to the Disciples aparte, when they were come into the house: but Matthewe omitting this circumstance, setteth downe the speech: as the Euangelistes doe often leaue out some circumstance by the way. For they count it sufficient to gather the summs of things. So there is no difference but that the one setteth downe the matter more plainly then the other. And this is the summe: Though the lawe doth not punish diuorcements, which do differ from the first institution of God, yet hee is an adulterer which putteth away his wife, and taketh him another. For it is not in the will and pleasure of manne, to dissolue the faith of Matrimonie, which the Lorde would haue to remaine firme and sure, therefore she is a haile that it supplyeth the rounth of the lawfull wife. But hee putteth an exception, because that a woman by committing whoredome, cutting her selfe as a rotten member from her husband, setteth him at liberty. They which doe deuise other causes, are worthily reiected, because they will bee wiser then the heavenly maister.

They will haue the Leprosie to bee a lawfull cause of diuorcement, because the infection thereof doeth not onely infecte the husbände but also the children. But as I woulde counsell a young man that hee should not touch his wife that hath the Leprosie, so I do not allow him that liberty to put her away. If any man obiecte, that they which cannot liue alone, haue neede of remedy, least they shoulde burne: Isay, that is no remedy, which is without the warrant of the word of God. I adde also, that they shall neuer want the gifte of continencie, if they would deliuer themselues to be gouerned of the Lord: because they follow, that which hee prescribeth. Some manne shall begin to loath his wife, so that he cannot abide to lie with her: shall this euill bee remitted by taking two wiues? An other mans wife shall fall into the palse, or Apoplexie, or shall bee diseased with some other incurable disease: shall her husband reiecte her vnder pretence of innocencie? But we know that they shall neuer want the helpe of the spirite, which do walke in his wayes. For the auoyding of fornication, sayth Paule, 1. Cor. 7. 2. Let euery man marry a wife. Hee that hath done this, though it fall not out according to his desire, hath done his part. Therefore, if any thing want, it shall be amended by the help of God. To go any further, it is nothing lesse then to tempt God. And whereas Paul noteth an other cause, 1. Cor. 7. 2 5. namely, whereas for hatred of godlines, the married persons are reiected of the vnbeleeuers, that a godly brother or suster, is not then subiect to bondage, is not repugnant from the minde of Christ. For he doth not speake there of a lawfull cause of diuorcement, but onely whether a woman continueth bounde to the vnbeleeuing man, after that she is for hatred of God wickedly put away, and cannot otherwise be receined into fauour, thē if she deny God. Whereof it is no meruaile that Paule chuseth rather to bee separated from men, then to be alienated from God. Yet that exception which Christe putteth, seemeth to be in vaine. For if the aduultresse deserueth death, to what purpose shuld he speake of diuorcement?

But because it was the duty of the husband to follow the adultery with iudgements, that he might cleare his house of that offence, whatsoeuer the success be, Christ setteth the husband that conuinceth his wife of vnchastitie free from that bonde: and it may be that amongst a corrupt and wicked people this sinne might raigne with freedome from punishment. As the ouertwharte pittie of Magistrates at this day, driueth men of necessity to put away their defiled wiues because adulteries are not punished. And it is to bee noted, that this law is common and free to both partes, as the bonde of faith is mutual and like. For where as the husband is cheife in other thinges, in respect of the bed hee is equall to the wife, for hee is not maister of his owne body. Therefore, when as the adulterer shall fall away from the knot of matrimonie, the wife is set at libertic.

Hee that marieth her that is put away. This sentence hath bene most corruptly expounded by many interpreters: for they thought generally and confusedly, that it was commaunded to liue sole after diuorcement. So if the husbande should put away the adulteresse, of necessitie they both shoulde liue vnmarried. As if that this were the libertie of diuorcement, onely to lie away from the wife: as if also Christ did not evidently in this cause permit that to be done, which the Iewes were woont generally to vsurpe vnto them selues according to their owne pleasure. Therefore that error was too grosse: for when Christ condemneth him for adulterie that marieth her that is put away, it is certaine that this is to be vnderstoode of vnlawfull and friuolous diuorcements.

Therefore Paule commaundeth them to remaine vnmarried, which are so put away, or to be reconciled to their husbandes: because that matrimonie is not ouerthrowne by brawlinges and dissentiones, as in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, the seuenth chapter, and the eleuenth verse, and that is gathered out of Marke, whereas the wife by name is spoken of, which should depart from her husbande: not that it was lawfull for the wiues so to giue a bill of diuorcement to the husbandes, but that the Iewes were fallen into strange corruptions: but Marke noted the corruption which the Lord reprobued, and then raigned e- uery where, that after voluntary diuorcements they both went forwarde to a newe mariage. Therefore he maketh no mention of adulterie.

Matthew 19.

Marke

Luke

10. Then said his disciples to him: If the matter bee so betweene man and wife, it is not good to marrie.

11. But he sayd vnto them, all men cannot receiue this thing, saue they to whom it is giuen,

12. For there are some chaste, which were so borne of their mothers belly: and there bee some chaste, which be made chaste by menne: and there bee some chaste, which haue made themselues chaste for the kingdome of heauen.

He that is able to receiue this, let him receiue it.

As though the estate of husbands were very hard, that so long as they shall remaine chaste, they should be compelled rather to beare all other things then to depart from them: the Disciples mooued with this answere of Christe doe except, that it is better to bee without wiues, then to be caught in such a snare. But why doe they not againe consider howe straight the bondage of the wiues is, but that the affections of the fleche doeth tie them to themselves and their owne commodities, that despising all others, they onely desire to bee provided for themselves. Yet heere doeth a vile vnthankfulness appeare, that they would refuse the singular gifte of G O D, eyther for feare or wearines of one discomoditie. It were better according to their opinion, to auoyde marriage, then to tie himselfe in a bande of perpetuall fellowshipp. And if God hath instituted Matrimonie for the common good of mankind, though it bringeth some things which are not very acceptable, it must not therefore be despised.

Therefore let vs learne if among the blessings of G O D, there bee any thing which pleaseth not vs, let vs not bee so daintie nor so frowarde, but let vs vse them with reuerence. Especially, wee must take heede of this wickednes in holy Matrimonie: for because it is inwrapped with many troubles, Sathan in deaoureth to vexe it with hatred, and infamie, that he might with draw men from it. And Hierome heerein shewed too euident a token of a malicious and peruerse witte, in that he doeth not onely quarrell at that holy and godly order of life: but what tauntes or reproches soeuer hee canne gather out of prophane writers, hee casteth vpon it, that hee might slander and deforme the beautie of the same. And let vs thinke that what soeuer troubles doe befall in Matrimonie, are accidentall, because they arise of the corruption of men.

Also let vs remember, that sith after our nature was corrupted, it became a medicine or salve, it is no maruaile if a sower taste bee mixed with the sweete. But it is to be seene how the Lord reproveth this foolishnesse. Hee denying all men to be receiuers of this saying, declareth that the choise is not in our hand, as if that wee had authoritie to consult of the matter. If any man thinke it profitable for him to bee without a wife, and so without tryall made, doeth lay a lawe of sinfull life vpon himselfe, is farre deceiued. For God, who sayde it is good that woman be a helpe to man, will punish the contempt of his order: for mortall men doe arrogate too much vnto themselves, while they striue to exempt themselves from the heavenly calling. Further, that it is not free for all men to chuse which they lust, Christ proueth by this, because continencie is a speciall gifte. For when he sayth, all cannot receiue it, but they to whom it is giuen, he plainly declareth that it is not giuen to all men. Whereby their pride is conuincid, which doubt not to arrogate to themselves, that which Christ so plainly taketh from them.

12. For there are some chaste. Christe nameth three kindes of menne that are chaste. They which are chaste by nature, or whiche are made chaste by men, are driuen from Matrimonie by want: because they lacke those partes of a manne. Others hee sayeth are chaste, whiche haue made themselves chaste, that they might the better serue God. These hee setteth free from the necessitie of marriage. Whereof it followeth, that all other which doe abhorre Matrimonie, doe with a sacrilegious boldnesse after the manner of gigantes) fight with God. The Papistes vrging this worde, making chaste, as if men of their owne pleasure, could make lawes of continency, is too colde. For Christe first sheweth that God giueth this to whom he thinketh good. And a little after hee doth againe affirme, that the sole life is rashly chosen, where any man is not indued with a speciall gifte. Wherefore this making chaste, is not subiect to free will: but the plaine meaning is: when by nature some are apt to marriage, though they doe abstaine, yet they tempt not God, because God graunteth them liberty.

For the kingdome of heauen. Many doe foolishly expound it, for the deseruing of eternall life: as if that sole life contained in itselfe some meritorious worship, as the Papists doe faine it to bee an Angelicall estate. But Christ ment nothing els, but that the married ought to haue this ende set before them, that they being free from all cares, might the diligentlier apply themselues to the exercises of godlines. Therefore it is a foolish imagination, to account sole life for a vertue: for God is no more pleased by that, then hee is by fasting, neither doeth it deserue to be accounted amongst those duties which God requireth of vs, but he must looke to an other end: For Christ would expressly set downe, though any man be free from whoredome, yet his sole life is not approued of God, if he onely prouide for his owne ease and delights: but hee is onely hereby excused, if he apply it to a free and quiet meditation of the heavenly life. In summe, Christ teacheth that it is not sufficient, if the vnmarried doe lue chastly, except they do purposely abstain fro it, that they might apply themselues to better exercises.

Hee that is able to receive this let him receive it. By this clause Christe warneth that the vse of Matrimonie must not bee despised, except that in a blinde rashnesse we would cast our selues headlong to destruction: for it behoued him to lay his hand vpon his disciples, whome hee saue runne headlong without iudgement. But this admonition is profitable for all menne: for few in choyce of that kinde of life that they will leade, doe consider what is giuen them of God: but they leape without choyce, whether soeuer their vnaduised heate doth cary them: and I would this had been better heard heretofore. But I know not with what enchauntments of Sathan their eares were stopt, that against nature, and as it were in despite of God, they would lay vpon themselues that snare of perpetuall single life, whom God hadde called to marriage: after, their miserable soules are so caught in the deadly snare of a vow, so that they would neuer out of that pit.

Luke 18.

15. They brought vnto him also babes, that hee should touch them, And when his disciples sawe it, they rebuked them. 16. But Iesus called little children, and forbid them not to come to me: for of such is the kingdom of heauen.

15. And when he had put his hands on them, he departed thence.

was displeas'd, and sayd vnto them: Suffer the little childre to come to me, & forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of god.

15. Verily I say vnto you: who soeuer shall not receiue the kingdome of God as a little childe, shall not enter therein.

16. And hee tooke them vp in his armes, and put his handes vpon them, and blessed them.

led them vnto him, and saide suffer the babes to come vnto me, and for bid the not: for of such is kingdome of God.

17. Verily I say vnto you, who soeuer receiweth not the kingdome of God as a babe, he shall not enter therein.

This history is very profitable, because it teacheth that Christ doth not onely receiue them which do willingly come to him by the motion of a holy desire & faith, but also them which by reason of their age, feele not how greatly they doe neede his grace. There is as yet no vnderstanding in these little children, that they should desire to be blessed: yet he receiueth them louingly and kindly, & with a solempne maner of blessing, he consecrathem to his father.

Their purpose also, which brought the children to christ, should be obserued: for except they had a stedfast perswasion in their mindes, that hee had the power of the spirit in his hand, to poure out vpon the people of God, it had bin absurde to haue brought children to him. Wherefore it is not to bee doubted, but that they desired that his grace might be bestowed vpon them. Therefore for the amplifying of the matter, Luke addeth this word Also, as if he should haue said, after they had tried how many wayes he holpe the that were growne in yeares, they hoped also that children should not go away from him altogether voyd of all the gifts of the spirit, if he should lay his hands vpon the. Also, the laying on of hands (as wee sayd other where) was an auncient & solempne maner of blessing amongst the Iewes: therefore it is no maruell, if they desire Christe to pray for their children by vsing that solempne ceremonie. Yet by the way, when the greater bleisseth the lesse, Heb. 7. they giue vnto him the honour of a great prophet.

13. The disciples rebuked him. If a Diademe hadde bene set vpon his head, they had willingly and with great reioycing accepted it, because that as yet they knew not his proper office. But now they account it a thing vnworthy his person to receiue children: and their errour wanted not colour: for what busines hath so great a prophet and the sonne of God to doe with children. But heere wee learne that these iudges were not vpriight, which esteemed of Christe after the vnderstanding of their owne flesh: for thereof it cometh to passe that they should spoyle him of his proper gifts: and againe would attribute vnto him vnder pretence of honour those things which belong not vnto him. From hence sprang a great heape of superstitions, which brought a faigned Christe into the worlde. Wherefore lette vs learne not to thinke otherwise of him then hee hath taught, nor to put any other person vpon him, then was put by the fathers.

Wee see what befell in Poperie : they thought that they yielded great honour to Christe, if they should bow themselves before a cruell of bread : a stinking abhorination before God . Againe, because they thought it not honourable enough for him to supply the place of an aduocate for vs, they created for them an innumerable sort of patrons : but by this meanes the honour of the mediator was taken from him.

14. Suffer little children. He testifieth that he is willing to receiue little children, and then taking them in his armes, he not only embraceth them, but also putting his handes vpon them, he blesteth them. Whereby we gather that his fauour also reacheth euen vnto this age . Neither is it any euaine : for when as the whole stocke of Adam is shut vp vnder the gultincle of death, it is necessary that all from the greatest to the least should perish, but those, which the one redeemer doeth deliuer . But to driue away that age from the grace of redemption, should be too much cruelty : therefore we do not vnadvisedly hold out this buckler against the Anabaptistes . They deny Baptisme to infantes, because they are not capable of that mistery, which is their signed. We do except of the other side, sith Baptisme is a pledge and a figure of free forgiuenesse of sinnes, and also of adoption vnto God , it may not bee denyed to infantes, whome God adopteth and washeth with the blood of his Sonne . That they object that repentance and newnesse of life is there also figured, is easily answered. For they are renewed by the spirite of God, for the measure of their age, vntill by degrees in time conuenient, that vertue which is hidden in them shall encrease and shew it selfe openly. And that they contend that wee cannot be otherwise reconciled to God, and made heires of the adoption but by faith, we graunt this to be true of them that are growne in yeares : but as concerning infantes, this place proueth it to be false.

Certainly, this imposition of handes, was not a iugling nor an idle shewe, neither did Christ poure forth his prayers into the ayre in vaine & he could not solemnly offer them vnto God, but that he would grant his prayers with out exception. And what should he request for them, but that they might be receiued amongst the Sonnes of God? whereof it followeth, that they were regenerate by the spirite into the hope of saluation. And to bee short, his embracing them declared, that Christ accounted them of his flocke. If that they were partakers of the spirituall giftes, which Baptisme figureth, it were absurde, that they should be deprived of the outward signe. Thirdly, it is a sacrilegious boldnes to driue them farre from the sheepefolde of Christe, whome hee nourisheth in his owne bosome, and to cast them out as straungers, shutting the gate vpon them, whom Christe will not haue to be forbidden. For of such, In this woorde hee comprehendeth aswell the little ones, as them that are like them. For the Anabaptistes doe very fondly exclude children, at whome they should beginne. But in the meane season he taking occasion of this present matter, exhorted his disciples, that laying by malice and pride, they should put on a childish nature. Therefore it is added by Marke & Luke, that no man can enter into the kingdome of heauen, except he be borne like vnto a childe. But the admonition of Paul is to be noted in the former Epistle to the Cor. the 14. chap. & 20. verse. Be not children in vnderstanding, but in maliciousnes.

Matth. 19.
 16. And beholde one came, and said vnto him, good maister, what good things shall I do, that I may haue eternall life?
 17. And he sayd vnto him, why callest thou mee good? There is none good but one, euen God, but if thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commandements.
 18. Hee sayde vnto him which? And Iesus sayde, these, thou shalt not commit adultery, thou shalt not steale, thou shalt not beare false witnesse.
 19. Honour thy Father and Mother: and thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe.
 20. The young man saide vnto him, I haue obserued all these things from my youth: what lacke I yet?
 21. Iesus saide vnto him, if thou wilt bee perfect, goe sell that thou hast, and giue it to the poore, and thou shalt haue treasure in heauen, and come, and follow me.
 22. And when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowfull: for hee had great possessions.

Marke 10.
 17. And when hee was out on the way, there came one running, and kneeling to him, and asked him good Maister, what shall I doe, that I maye possesse eternall life?
 18. Iesus said to him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good, but one, euen God.
 19. Thou knowest the commandements, thou shalt not kill. Thou shalt not steale. Thou shalt not beare false witnesse. Thou shalt hurt no man. Honour thy father & mother.
 20. Then he answered and sayd to him, maister, all these thinges I haue obserued from my youth.
 21. And Iesus behelde him, and loued him, and sayde to him, one thing is lacking vnto thee, goe and sell all that thou hast, and giue to the poore, and thou shalt haue treasure in heauen, and come follow me, and take vp the crosse.
 22. But hee was sad at that saying, & went away sorrowfull: for hee hadde great possessions.

Luke 18.
 18. The a certain ruler asked him saying: good maister what ought I to do, to inherit eternal life? 19. And Iesus said vnto him, why callest thou me good? none is good, save one, euen god
 20. Thou knowest the commandements, I thou shalt not commit adultery. Thou shalt not kill. Thou shalt not steale. Thou shalt not beare false witnes. Honour thy father and thy mother.
 21. And he saide, all these haue I kept from my youth. 22. Nowe, when Iesus heard that, he sayde vnto him, yet lackest thou one thing: sell all that euer thou hast, & distribute vnto the poore, & thou shalt haue treasure in heauen, & come follow me
 23. But when he heard those things, he was very heauy: for hee was merueilous rich.

16. Beholde one came. Luke sayeth that hee was a ruler, that is, a manne of great authority, not one of the common people. Though riches get honour, yet it seemeth that he was esteemed as a graue and a good man. And all circumstances being considered, though he is called a young man, yet I thinke he was one of that sorte, which by a sober and chaste life reuerenced the auncient integrity. And hee came not deceitfully (as the Scribes were wont:) but with a minde to learne: and so as well in woordes, as by kneeling down he declared that he reuerenced Christ as a faithfull teacher. But againe, a blinde confidence in his woorkes hindreth him from profiting vnder Christe, vnto whom otherwise he desired to yeelde himselfe to be taught. So at this day wee see some not euill affected: yet will hardly taste the doctrine of the Gospell: because they are caried away I know not with what shadowish holines. Further, that we may iudge the better of the estate of the answer, the maner of the question must be be noted: for he doth not simply aske by what meanes, or which way he should come to eternall life: but what good should he doe to get it. So hee dreameth of merits, whereby he would make a full recompence for eternall life, wherefore Christ very aptly sendeth him to the obseruation of the lawe, which is the certaine way to life, as I will presently more fully declare.

17. Why callest thou me good? I doe not take this reproofe so subtilly as a great parte of the interpreters doe, as though Christe would secretly instruct him of his godhead. For they doe thinke that these wordes doe signifie thus much, as if he should haue said, if thou knowest no higher thing in mee, then a humane nature, thou doest wrong to giue that title of good to me, which belongeth to God alone. Verely I doe grant, to speake properly, men are not woorthy of so honorable a title, no, nor the Angels: for they haue not a drop of goodnesse of themselues, but what they borowe from God. But Christ had no other purpose, then to bring his doctrine into credite: as if hee should haue sayd: thou doest euill to call me good maister, except thou doest acknowledge me to come from God. Therefore the young man is not heere instructed in the essence of the godhead, but is led to beleue the doctrine. He had now already some affection to obedience: but Christe would haue him to goe further, as to heare God speaking. For (as it is the maner of men, of deuils for the most part to make Angels) they doe generally call them good teachers, in whom they see nothing that is good: And these are as prophanings of the gittes of God. Therefore it is no maruaile if Christ to get his doctrine authoritie doth call the yong man back to God. Keepe the commandements. Some of the old writers haue corruptly interpreted this place (whom the Papists followed) as though that Christe should teach, that by the obseruatiō of the law we could deserue eternal life. But christ considered not what men could doe: but answereth to the question proposed: what is the righteousnes of works, which the law defineth. And certainly, so it must be holden, that God in his law cōprehendeth the way to liue holily and righteously, wherein perfect righteousnes is contained. Neither did Moses vtter this sentence in vaine, He  $\bar{\gamma}$  doth these shall liue therein. Likewite I call heauen and earth to witnesse, that I haue this day shewed you life. Therefore it cannot be denied, but that the obseruation of the law is righteousnes, whereby life may be obtained, if any man were a perfect obseruer of the lawe. But, because wee are all void of the glory of God, nothing shalbe found in the law but cursing: neither is there any other refuge for vs, then to flie to the free gift of righteousnes. Therefore Paul setteth down two sortes of righteousnes, the one of the lawe, the other of faith: the first he placeth in works, but the secōd in the meere grace of Christ. Whereby we gather that this answeere of Christ was of righteousnes, according to the law: for it was meete that the yong man inquiring of the righteousnes of works, should first bee taught, that no man is accounted righteous, but he  $\bar{\gamma}$  satisfieth the law (which is impossible) that he seeing his own infirmitie might flie to the refuge of faith. Therefore I grant, sith God hath promised the reward of eternall life to the obseruers of his law, this way were to be kept, if  $\bar{\gamma}$  infirmitie of our flie the hindered vs not: but the scripture teacheth that it is our fault, so that it is necessary for vs to haue that by gift which wee cannot obtaine by merites. If any man object that the righteousnes in the law is proposed to vs in vaine, wherto no man can at any time attaine: I answer, it is not in vaine, beit is an instruction, whereby we are lead vnto that righteousnes, which is to be had by suite. Therefore Paul, where hee sayth, that the Doers of the lawe are justified by the righteousnesse of the lawe, excludeth all men. Further, this place abolisheth all those fained deuices, which the Papistes inuented for the obtaining of saluation. For they were not onely deceiued in that, y<sup>e</sup> they would binde God vnto them by their good workes, that hee should saue them of dutie or of debt, but while they prepare themselves to doe good workes, the doctrine of the law not regarded, they bend themselves to fained deuotions, as they call them: not that they doe openly refuse the lawe of God: but because they doe preferre the traditions of men farre before it. But what sayth Christ? namely, this worship onely is approued of God, which he prescribeth, because that obedience is more acceptable to him, then all their sacrifices. Therefore who so euer indeuoureth to frame his life to please Christ, while the Papistes are occupied in their triuolous traditions, let him imploy all his indeuour in keeping the commandements of the lawe.

18. Thou shalt not kill. It is maruaile when Christ would haue vs bounde to the whole lawe, why he onely toucheth the second table: but hee therefore doth it, because that by the duties of charitie euery mans mind is best discerned what is in it. Godlines toward God is the cheife: but, because that hypocrites doe often counterfeite the obseruation of the first table, they are best tryed by the second table. Therefore we must know that Christ chose those cōmandements, wherein appeareth a testimony of true righteousnes: yet, by that figure Synecdoche, he noteth the whole by a part. There is no matter in that, that hee setteth the commandement of honoring the parents in the last place: for he regarded not to keepe the exact order. Yet this is worthy to be noted, that hee putteth it in the second table, least any man should bee deceiued by that error of Iosephus, who thought that it appertained to the first table. That which is after added in the ende: Thou shalt loue thy neighbour, is nothing diuerse from the former commandements, but it is a generall exposition of them all.

19. The young man sayde vnto him. The lawe might haue bene deade to him, when as hee dreamed that hee was so righteous: for, except he had flattered himselfe through hypocrisie, this had bene a very good admonition towards the learning of humilitie, to see his owne blottes and faultes in the gattle of the lawe. But he being drunken with a foolish boldnes, carelessly boasted that he had well discharged his datie euen from his childhoode. Paul confessed that he was in the same case, and that he was perswaded that he so liued so long as hee knewe not the force of the lawe: but after that he felt the power of the lawe, hee was deadly wounded thereby. Therefore Christes answere, which followeth was directed to the affection of the manne. Yet Christe required nothing of him but the commandementes of the lawe: but, because the simple rehearfall of them moued him nothing, he discouereth in other words his secret disease of couetousnesse. I grant it is not commaunded in any place of the lawe, that wee shoulde sell all: but when as the ende of the lawe is to drawe menne to the denyall of themselves, and expressly condemneth lust, wee see that Christe had no other purpose, then to correcte that false perswasion of the young man. For if he had throughly knowne himselfe, at the hearing ring of the law rehearsed, hee woulde haue confessed himselfe in daunger of Gods iudgement.

Now, because the simple woordes of the lawe doe not sufficiently conuince him of his guiltinesse, hee declaereth the inward sence in other woordes. For if Christ should now require any other thing besides the commaundements of the lawe, he should be contrary to himselfe. He taught euen now that perfect righteousness was comprehended in the commaundements of the lawe: howe therefore should it agree for him to reprocue the law for default? Further, that protestation of Moses, which I cited before had beene false. Therefore christes meaning was not, that the young man wanted one thing besides the obseruation of the law, but one thing in the obseruation of the law. For, though the law doth in noe place compell vs to sell all: yet, because it bringeth all our corrupt lustes to nothing, because it teacheth vs to beare the crosse, because it woulde haue vs to be ready to abyde hunger and penury, the young man is farre from the full obseruation of the same, so long as he is caried away with the loue of his riches. And he saith one thing wanted, because hee had no neede to speake of whoredome and murther. but hee noteth the speciall disease, as if hee should touch the hyle with his finger. And it is to be noted that he doth not only commaund him to sell, but to giue to the poore: for to reiecte riches were of it selfe no vertue, but a vaine ambition. Crates the Theban is commended by the prophane historiographers, because he cast his money and what precious thinge euer he had into the sea, for that he thought hee could not be safe, except hee destroyed his riches. As though it had not beene better for him: to haue bestowed that vpon others, which hee thought superfluous for himselfe. Certainly, when as charitie is the bond of perfection, hee that defraudeth himselfe and others of the vse of money, deserueth no prayse. Therefore Christ doeth not simply commend the selling, but the liberalitie in helping the poore. Christ also vrgeth further the mortification of the flesh, when he saith follow me: For he doth not only commaund him to giue him his name, but to put his shoulders to the bearing of the Crosse, as Marke doeth expressely expound it. And it was meete that hee should be thus launced: because that when hee was at home, hee was wont to liue pleasantly vnder the shadow and in idlenesse, he had neuer conceiued, or had taste very little, what it should meane to crucifie the old man, and to tame the lusts of the flesh. But the Monkes are too ridiculous, while vnder pretence of this piase, they challenge to themselues the taste of perfection. Firste, it is easie to vnderstand, that it is not commaunded to all menne without difference to sell all. For the husband-man, which is accustomed to liue of his labour, and thereby to nourish his children, should sinne, if hee should sell this small portion of land, not being compelled thereto by necessitie. Therefore it is better to keepe that, which God hath put into our handes, so that wee doe modestly and thriftily maintaine our selues and our household, and giue some part to the poore, then wastefully to spoyle all. But what a goodly selling is this, which the Monkes doe so much brag of? When as a great number, which can not finde foode at home, thrust themselues into monasteries, as into swines sties full stuffed. All men doe carefully spare from themselues, that the idle bellies might be fatted with other mens bread.

A notable change surely, when they being commaunded to giue to the poore that which they rightly possesse, they are not content with their owne, but take away other mens.

M A R. 21. Iesus beheld him, and loued him. That which the Papistes do hereof gather, that good morall woorkes, (which are not wrought by the instinct of the spirite, but goe before regeneration) doe of right deserue, is too childish a deuise. For, if they gather a desert of the loue of God, we may say that frogs and flies doe deserue: because God loueth all his creatures, without exception. Therefore it is needfull to distinguish the degrees of loue. In respect of this present place it shall bee sufficient to know that God loueth none with a fatherly loue, but his owne sonnes, whom he hath regenerate with the spirit of adoption: and by this loue it commeth to passe, that they shall be approued before his tribunall seate. According to this sence, to be beloued of God, and to be iustified before him are both one in signification. But God is sayd somtimes to loue them, whom he neither alloweth nor loueth: for because the preseruati- on of mankind is acceptable vnto him (which consisteth in iustice, equity, mo- deration, wisdom, faith, and temperance) he is said to loue the publike vertues: not that they doe merit saluation or grace: but because they tend to that ende, which he alloweth. In this sence, according to diuers respects, he loued & ha- ted Aristides & Fabritius: for in as much as he had adorned them with an out- ward righteousnes, & that for the common good, hee loved his owne worke in them: yet, because the heart was corrupt, that outward shew of righteousnesse auailed them nothing to the obtaining of righteousnes. For we know that the hearts are purged onely by fayth, & that the spirit of vprightnes is giuen only to the mébers of christ. So the questió is answered, how it could be that christ shuld loue a man that was proud, and an hipocrite, when nothing is more odious be- fore God then these two vices. Neither is it any absurditie that God shuld loue that good seede, which he put into some natures, so that he yet reiecteth the per- sons and the woorkes for their corruption.

M A T. 22. Hee went away sorrowfull. The departure sheweth at length how farre the young man was from the perfection, whereto Christ called him. For how cometh it to passe that he withdraweth himselfe from christes schoole, but because it was a grieffe to him to forsake his riches? But if we be not ready to beare penury, it is euident that luste doeth yet raigne in vs. And this is that, which I said before, that Christ commaunded to sell all, was not an ad- dition to the lawe, but a tryall of the sinne that lay hid. For as euery man is more giuen to this or to that sinne, so by the reprehending of the same he is the more layde open.

Further, this exámple teacheth vs that to continué constantly in christes schoole, it is conuenient to renounce the flesh. This young man departed from Christ, who brought with him both a desire to learne, & modesty: because it was hard for him to leaue that vice, wherewith he was acquainted. The same shall befall to vs, except the sweetnes of the grace of Christ do make all the intisements of the flesh vnfaury to vs. Whether this temptation were but for a time, so y<sup>e</sup> the yong má afterward repented, it is vnknowne: yet by coniecture it is probable, that he was drawne away by his couetousnesse, that he should not profit any thing.

Mar. 10.

23. Then Iesus sayd vnto his disciples, verely, I say vnto you, that a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdome of heauen	23. And Iesus looked round about and said vnto his disciples, howe hardly do they that haue riches enter into the kingdome of God?	24. And when Iesus saw him sorrowfull, hee sayde, with what difficulty shall they that haue riches enter into the kingdome of God?
24. And againe I say vnto you, it is easier for a Camell to goe through the eye of a needle, then for a rich man to enter into the kingdome of God.	24. And his disciples were astonied at his wordes. But Iesus answered againe, and sayde vnto them, Children, howe hard is it for them that trust in riches, to enter into the kingdome of God?	25. Surely it is easier for a Camell to goe through a needles eye then for a rich man to enter into the kingdome of God.
25. And when his disciples heard it, they were exceedingly amased, saying, who then can be saued?	25. It is easier for a Camell to goe through the eye of a needle, then for a riche man to enter into the kingdome of God.	26. Then said they that hearde it, and who then can bee saued?
26. And Iesus beheld them, and sayde vnto them, with men this is vnpossible: but with God all thinge are possible.	26. And they were much more astonied, saying with themselues who then can be saued?	27. And hee sayde, the things which are vnpossible with men, are possible with god
	27. But Iesus looked vpon them and sayde, with men it is impossible but not with God: for with GOD all things are possible.

23. A rich man shall hardly enter. Christ doeth not declare how noysome and deadly a plague couetousnes is, but also howe great hinderance riches doe bring. Marke affwageth the sharpnesse of the saying, while he applyeth it onely to them which put their trust in riches. But I thinke that the former sentence is rather confirmed by these words, then corrected: as if he should say, that it should not seeme maruailous to them, that riche men haue so harde entrance into the kingdome of heauen: for it is a common disease almost of all men, to trust in their riches. This doctrine is also very profitable for all men: namely, to rich men, as that they being admonished before of their danger, should take heede: to poore menne, that they shoulde bee content with their estate, and not so couetously desire that, which will bee more to their harme then to their gain. It is certaine that riches of it selfe do not hinder vs frō following: but (such is the corruption of man) that they which haue abundance canne scarcely escape from drowning themselues therein. So that they which flow with riches are holden bounde by Sathan, as it were in chaines, that they shoulde not looke vp into heauen: nay, they entrench, binde and enthrall themselues wholly to the earth. The similitude of the Camell, which hee addeth a little after, amplifieth the difficultie. for it declareth that rich men do swel & are more puffed vp with pride & vaine boldnes, so that they cannot suffer theselues to be brought into such straites, as God doth keepe his children.

I thinke that by this word Camel is rather noted a great rope for a ship, then a beaſt.

25. And when his diſciples heard it. The diſciples doe maruaile: for this ſhould not make vs a litle carefull, conſidering h̄ riches do ſtop vp the entrance into the kingdome. For which way ſoeuer wee ſhall turne our eyes, a thouſand ſtops wil ſet themſelues againſt vs. But let vs note that they were ſo amafed, that yet they fled not from the doctrine of Chriſt. He of whom mention was made euen now dealt otherwiſe: for the ſtraightnes of the commandement ſo feared him, that he diuorced himſelfe from Chriſt: but though theſe men bee amafed, and doe aſke who then can be ſaued, yet they bende not their courſe an other way, but deſire to vanquiſh the doubtfull hope. So it ſhall profit vs to feare the threatninges of God, ſo oft as hee denounceth any hard or fearefull thing: ſo that our mindes faint not, but rather be ſtirred vp.

26. With men this is impoſſible. Chriſt doeth not altogether ſet their mindes free from all care: becauſe it was profitable for them to vnderſtand how hard it is to aſcend into heauen. Firſt, that they might employ all their endeouours to this purpoſe: then, that they diſtrusting themſelues might ſeek for helpe from heauen. Wee ſee how ſluggiſh and careleſſe we be. What ſhould befall, if the faithfull ſhould thinke that they ſhould walke pleaſantly, through a ſoſte and pleaſant plaine, for recreation? This therefore is the cauſe, why Chriſt doth not extenuate the danger (that he might thereby put his diſciples out of feare) but rather increaſeth it. For, whereas before he had onely ſayd that it was hard, now he ſayth, it is impoſſible.

Whereby it appeareth that they are very prepoſterous teachers, which are ſo afraid to ſpeake hardly, that they giue libertie to the ſluggiſh fleſhe. But it were better to follow the rule of Chriſt, who ſo tempereth his ſpeech, that he might teach men that are throwne downe in themſelues, only to reſeſt themſelues in the grace of God, and withall that hee might ſtirre them vp to prayers. So hee doth wiſely helpe the infirmity of men, not by attributing any thing vnto them but by ſtirring vp the mindes to hope in the grace of God. And by this anſwer of Chriſt is that generall rule reſalled (which the Papiſts gathered out of Hierome.) Who ſoeuer ſhall ſay that the law is hard to be kept, let him be accurſed. For Chriſt doth plainly declare, that it is not poſſible for men to keepe the way to ſaluation, but ſo far as the grace of G O D doeth helpe and directe them.

Peter doth secretly compare himselfe and the other disciples with that rich man, whome the worlde had alienated from Christ: And because they led a poore and wandring life not without reproofe and troubles, neither did there appeare any shew of a better estate in time to come: hee demandeth, and not without cause, whether they haue left all, and followed Christ in vaine. For it were an absurd thing for them to be spoyled, and not to be better recompenced by the Lord. But what were those all things? For, when as they were base & poore men, they scarce had a house to leaue: therefore this bragging might seeme to be ridiculous, And certainly experience sheweth how greatly men doe commonly esteeme of their duties towardes God. As at this day they which were almost ready to begge in popery, doe proudly cast forth that they haue lost much for the cause of the Gospell: yet the Disciples may be excused, for though their estate was neuer gorgious, yet they liued at home of their handie occupations, as the richest of them all. And wee know that poore menne accustomed to a quiet and honest life, are hardlyer drawne from their wiues and children, then those men, which are caried by ambition, or that are drawn hether and thether with the blast of prosperitie. And except there had been some reward layd vp for them, they did very fondly to change the maner of their life. But as they were in this behalfe to be excused, yet herein they offended, that they desire now to see triumph, when they had not yet gone through the warfare.

If at any time wee doe loath and be vnpatient, that the time or triumph is delayde, let vs learne first to consider the solaces, wherewith the Lorde asswageth the bitternesse of the crosse in this worlde: then to stirre vp our selues with the hope of eternall life. For in these two pointes is the answer of Christ contained:

M A T. 28. Verely, I say vnto you. Least the Disciples should thinke they had lost their labour, and repent them of the course they had begun, Christ teacheth them that the glory of his kingdome, which as then was hid, should be reuealed as if he should say, there is no cause why you should faint at this your base estate. For I, who doe scarcely lie amongst the meanest will at the length ascend into a throne of maiestie. Therefore beare a litle, vntill the time of manifesting of my glory shall come. But what doth he then promise them? Namely, that they shall be fellowes of the same glory. For by giuing them thrones, wherein they should iudge the twelue tribes of Israel, he compareth them to Ambassadors, or to cheife counsellors and presidentes, which haue the cheife seates in the king's assembly. Wee know that the Apostles were chosen twelue in number, that so it might be declared that God by the sending of Christ would gather together the dispersed remnantes of his people. This was the cheife dignitie, but as yet it was hidden: therefore Christ deferreth their desires vnto the last manifestation of his kingdome that then they might receiue the fruit of their election. yet it is not to be doubted, but that Christe spake in this place of the latter day. In the regeneration. Some doe referre this point, to that which followeth in the text. So regeneration should be nothing else but the newnesse, which should follow our restoring, while that which is mortall shall be swallowed vp of life, and our weake body shall be made like to the heauenly glory of Christ. But I doe rather referre this regeneration to the first comming of Christ, because the world then began to be renewed, and the Church sprang vp out of the darknesse of death into the light of life. And this manner of speaking is found euery where in the Prophets, and doth very well agree with the circumstance of this place. For the renewing of the Church so often promised, made them hope, for some great happines, when as the Messias should appeare. Christ, therefore that he might take away that error, distinguisheth betwene the beginning & the end of his kingdome:

L V K. 28. You are they. Though Luke seemeth to report this speech of Christ diuersly, and as if it were spoken at an other time: yet I thinke not otherwise, but that it appertaineth to this time. Neither is there set downe a continual Sermon or speech of christ, but diuerse sentences set together without regard of y<sup>e</sup> order of the time, as shall againe be sayd a little after. But he vseth mo words then Mat. for sith the Apostles followed him in his temptations, and continued constant, he sayth that they shall be partakers with him of his glory. It is demanded what he meaneth by these temptations? I thinke that he meant those troubles, where with God generally exercised him and his Apostles. And hee doeth very aptly vs<sup>e</sup> this word Temptations: for euen according to the sense of the humane nature his faith and patience was proued.

29. I appoynted vnto you a kingdome. He doth not onely make them rulers here. but kinges, for hee imparteth with them the kingdome which hee receiued of his father. But there is a greate vehemency in that worde I appoynt, that they shoulde not with a rashe and hotte desire make too much haste to possesse.

possesse that kingdome, whereof hee onely had the lawfull authoritie of ordaining: and he exhorte th them to patience by his example. For though his father had made him a king, yet he is not presētly placed in his glory: nay he humbled himselfe, and through the shame of the crosse hee obtained the kingly honour. To eate and to drinke vppon his table is metaphorically put for this, that they should be followers of all his glory.

M A T. 29. Who soeuer shall forsake. After hee had stirred vp their mindes to hope for the life to come, he also encourageth them with present comforts, and cōfirmeth and strengthneth them to beare the crosse. For though God suffereth his to be much afflicted, yet he doth neuer forsake them, but hee will recompence their sorrowes with his helpes. Neither doth he onely speake to his Apostles, but taking this occasion, hee generally directeth his speech to all the godly. This is the summe: they that shall willingly lose all things for Christes sake, shall yet euen in this life be more blessed then if they had kept all, but the cheife reward is laid vp for them in heauen. Yet that promise of recompensing of an hundred fold, seemeth not to agree with that we see in experience. For they which for the most part are spoyled of parents, or children, and other kinsmen, or are deprived of their wiues, and robbed of their goodes for the testimonie of Christe, are so farre from recouering their owne goods, that as people without company and forsaken, they should painfully and hardly trauell in banishment with great want and poverty. I answer, if any man do rightly esteeme the present grace of God, wherewith he comforteth and lifteth them vp in their miseries, he will grant that is rightly preferred before all the riches of the world. For though the vnfaithfull doe flourish, yet becaute they know not what shall become of them to morow, it is necessary that they should alwayes be doubtful and afraide: neither can they otherwise enjoy their pleasures, but that after a sorte they are amazed at themselves. In the meane season God maketh his merrie, so that the litle good, which they enjoy is more worth vnto them, and farre more pleasant, then if without Christ great aboundance of goods should flowe vpon them. In which sense I take that word was added in Marke with persecutions, as if Christ should haue saye. though the godly in this worlde doe alwayes suffer persecutions, and that the crosse doeth alwayes cleaue as it were to the backe of them: yet the fauce of Gods grace is so sweete, which maketh them so merry, that their estate is more to be desired then the pleasures and dainties of kings.

30. Many that are first. This sentence was added to teach vs to shake off the sluggishnes of the flesh. The Apostles hastied now to their euard when as they were scarce come soorth into the race. And we all are of this disposition almost, that if we haue passed one month in seruice, we all desire to be rewarded and set at liberty, as if wee had beene very seruiceable soldiours, and hadde well demeaned. But Christ exhorte th them that beganne well to goe on forward courageously, and withall he warneth them that runne, and beganne very trustly, that they shall auaille nothinge, if they faynte in the middelt of the race. As Paule also declarcth, all that runne, obayne not the pryce, 1 Corinthians, 9. 24. And in an other place by his owne example, that they shoulde forgette those thinges which are behinde, and to endeour to the other parte of the course, which is before. Philipphians, 3. 13. Therefore as ofte as wee doe thinke of the heauenly crowne, it becommeth vs to be pricked forward as it were with newe spures, that we become not duller hereafter.

Matth. 20.

Marke.

Lanke.

1. For the kingdome of heauen is like vnto a certaine housholder, which wente out at the dawninge of the day, to hyer labourers into his Vinegarde.
2. And he agreed with the labourers for a penny a day, and sent them into his vineyard.
3. And he went out about the third houre, & saue others standing yll about the market place,
4. And sayd vnto them, goe yee also into my vineyard, and what soeuer is right, I will giue you: & they went their way.
5. Againe hee went out about the sixt or nynt houre, and did likewise.
6. And he went about the eleventh houre, and found other standing idle, and said vnto them, why stand ye here all the day idle?
7. They sayde vnto him, because no manne hath hyred vs. He sayd to them, go ye also into my vinegarde, and what soeuer is right, that shall yee receiue.
8. And when euen was come, the maister of the vineyard said vnto his stewarde, call the labourers, and giue them their hyre, beginning at the last, till thou come to the first.
9. And they which were hyred aboute the eleventh houre, came and receiued every manne a peny.
10. Nowe, when the first came, they supposed that they should receiue more, but they likewise receiued every man a peny.
11. And when they had receiued it, they murmured against the maister of the house:
12. Saying, these last haue wrought but one houre, & thou hast made them equall vnto vs, which haue borne the burden and heate of the day.
13. And he answered one of them, saying, friend, I doe thee no wrong: didst thou not agree with mee for a peny?
14. Take that which is thine owne, and goe thy way: I will giue vnto this last, as much as to thee.

15. Is it not lawefull for mee to doe as I will with mine owne? Is thine eye euill, because I am good?
 16. So the last shall be first, and the first last: for many are called, and few are chosen.

Sith this parable is nothing else but a cōfirmation of the sentence going next before, The first shall be last, let vs now see how it is to be applyed. Some interpreters doe gather this to be the summe of it. Because the heavenly inheritance is not obtayned by merites of workes, but is giuen freely, they shall bee all equall in glory. But Christe doeth not dispute eyther of the equalitie of the heavenly glory, or what the estate of the godly shall be: but he only sayth this, that there is no causē why they, which are first in time, should glory or bragge ouer others. For the Lord as oft as he please can call them, whom hee seemed to neglect for a time, & eyther to make them equall, or to preferre them before them which were first.

It should be but foolish curiositie, if any man would exactly discusse all the particular poyntes of this parable. Therefore no more must bee sought, then it was Christes purpose to deliuer. Also we haue shewed already, that he applied himselfe to no other ende, but to prouoke his as it were with continuall spurres to goe forward. We know that sluggishnes doth for the most part arise of too much confidence. So it commeth to passe, that many as if they had got to the ende of the race, doe faint in the midst of the course. Therefore Paule commaundeth vs to forget those thinges, which are behind vs, that we considering what there is yet remaining for vs, shoulde prepare our selues to runne lustily. Yet it shall not bee hurtfull to run through the wordes, that the doctrine may thereby more euidently appeare.

1. For the kingdom of heauen is like. The meaning is, that the same account is to be made of the calling of God, as if any man should hire labourers in the morning for certaine wages, to dresse his vineyard, and then should afterwards send some without couenant, to whom he yet giueth like rewarde or hire. And hee doth therefore make mention of the kingdom of heauen: because he compareth the spirituall life to the earthly, and the reward of eternall life to money, where with men are paid their wages for their labours, which they haue done. Some do subtilly apply this place, as if christ should distinguish between thee Iewes & the Gentiles: for they say that the Iewes were called at the first houre, and had a rewarde promised by couenant: because the Lord promised them eternall life, vpon condition if they performed the law. But in calling of the Gentiles, there was no couenant made especially of workes: because saluation was giuen them freely in Christ. But all these subtilties are to no purpose: for there was no difference in the couenant which God made, but onely in the time, for that they which went into the vineyard in the euening, receiued the same rewarde as they did, which came first. For though God in times past promised in the lawe a rewarde of workes to the Iewes: yet, wee knowe that this tooke not effect: because that no man coulde at any time obtaine saluation by his owne merites. Why then (shall some man say) doth Christ expressly make mention of a couenant, speaking of the first, and sayeth nothing of it when hee speaketh of the other? Namely, that hee might teach that no manne is iniuried by this.

that the latter haue as much honour, as if they had beene called at the first. For in proper speech hee oweth nothing to any man: and of his own right he challengeth of vs (whom he hath tyed vnto himselfe) what (soeuer obedience we are able to yeelde vnto him. But, because he doth freely offer vs a rewarde, hee is sayd to hyre our labours, which otherwise are due to him. Heereof it cometh to passe, that he also calleth the crowne, which he giueth vs freely by the name of a rewarde. Furthermore that he might declare that we haue no cause to quarrell with God, if hee ioyne others with vs, which came long after vs, as fellowes in honour, he boroweth the similitude of the custome of men, who first doe agree of the wages, beefore they sende the labourers to worke. But if any man will hereby gather, that men are created to labour, and that euery man hath his charge inioyned him of God, that men should not be slouthfull and idle, he shall not wrest Chrittes wordes at all. Also it may be gathered, that our whole life is vnprofitable, and may rightly bee condemned for slouthfulnes vntill th wee frame our liues according to the commandement and calling of the Lord. Whereof it followeth that they auayle nothing in toyling, which do rashly take vpon them this or that kinde of life, and waight not for the allowance of their calling from God. Lastly, it is to be gathered out of the wordes of Christ, that they do please god, which do labor to profite the brethren. It seemeth that a peny (which is soe what more in value then foure French Caroleys) was the ordinary hire for a dayes worke. The houres 3, sixe and nine are therefore mentioned: because that the day was wont in times past to be deuided from sunne rising to sunne setting into twelue houres, so was there an other diuision of the day by three houres: so againe did they deuide the night into foure watches. Therefore the eleuenth houre signifieth the end of the day.

8. And when euen was come. There is no mysterie to be sought in this, that the maister commandeth to begin at the last, as though God would crown them first, which were in course of time last. For this deuise should not agree with the doctrine of Paule, who sayth, that they, which remaine at the coming of Christ, shall not preuent them, which slept before in Christ, but shall follow.

Christe nowe in this place setteth it downe in a diuers order: because hee coule not otherwise declare (that which hee after added) that the firste murmured, because they had no more giuen them. Note also that he doth not say that there shoulde be such murmuring at the latter day, but onely denieth that there shalbe any cause of murmuring. For the fained person, which hee bringeth in, in the similitude, giueth no small light to this doctrine, that the liberallie of God is subiect to no complaintes of men, though he adorne with large rewardes the vnworthie, they haue deserued nothing. In vaine therefore doe some imagine, that the Iewes were reprod in these wordes, who were malicious and enuious against the Gentiles. For it were absurd to make such equall in rewarde with the Sonnes of God. And this wickedness lighteth not vpon the faithfull so to murmure against GOD. But the meaning is plaine, that it is free for GOD, sith hee defraudeth no man of his iust rewarde, to bestowe vpon them, whome he lately called with a rewarde, which was vnderferued.

18. So the last shall be first. Hee doeth not heere compare the Iewes with the Gentiles, as he doth otherwhere: nor the reprobate, which fall away from the faith, with the elect, which dee perseuer. Therefore the sentence which is added by some, Many are called, but few are chosen, doth not agree with it. Christe only willed, that as any man is called before others, so he would runne the race with more diligence: then he exhorteth all men to modestie, that some should not preferre themselues before others, but that they should willingly admit the to the common price. The Apostles, because they were the first frutes of the whole Church, seemed to challenge some notable thing to themselues: and Christ denyed them not, but that they shoulde sit as iudges to iudge the twelue tribes of Israel. But least ambitio or vaine confidence in themselues shuld make them swell, they were withall to be warned, that others which were called long tyme after them, should be partakers of the same glory: because God is bound to no man, but calleth freely whom soeuer hee pleaseth, and giueth vnto them that are called, such reward as pleaseth him.

Matth. 10.	Marke 10.	Luke 18.
17. And Iesus went vp to Ierusalem, and tooke the twelue disciples aparte in the way, & said vnto the,	32. And they were in the way, going vp to Ierusalem: and Iesus went before them, and they were amazed, and as they followed, they were as frayde, and Iesus tooke the twelue againe, and began to tell them what things shuld come to him.	31. Then Iesus tooke vnto him the twelue, & said vnto them, beholde, wee goe vp to Ierusalem, and all things shalbe fulfilled to the sonne of man, that are written by the Prophets.
18. Behold, wee goe vp to Ierusalem, & the sonne of man shalbe deliuered vnto the chiefe Priestes, & vnto the Scribes, and they shal codeinne him to death	33. Saying, beholde, wee goe to Ierusalem, and the sonne of man shalbe deliuered vnto the high Priestes, and Scribes, and they shall codeinne him to death, and shal deliuer him to the Gentiles.	32. For he shall be deliuered vnto the Gentiles, and shal be mocked, and shalbe spightfully entreated, and shalbe spitted on.
19. And shal deliuer him to the Gentiles, to mocke, & to scourge, and to crucifie him: but the third day he shall rise againe.	34. And they shall mock him, and scourge him, and spitte vpon him, and kil him: but the third day hee shall rise againe.	33. And when they haue scourged him, they wil put him to death: but the third day hee shall rise againe.
		34. But they vnderstood none of these things: and this saying was hid fro them, neither perceiued they the thinges which were spoken.

Though the Apostles had bin taught before how the Lord should depart, yet because they had not profited as was meet, he rehearseth now againe, that which he had often saide. Hee seeth that the day of death draweth neere: yea, that the time is now at hand, whē he should offer vp himselfe to be sacrificed. & he seeth his disciples not only afraid, but euē astonied with a blind feare. Therefore he exhorteth the to constancy, least they would faint at the temptation. Further, he confirmeth them two wayes, For in that he telleth them before what shoulde come to passe afterwarde, hee doeth not onely strengthen them, least they being compassed with so iaine troubles not looked for, shoulde be ouer throwne: but hee opposeth the manifestation of his Godhead against the offence of the crosse, least that shorte time that hee shoulde be throwne downe shoulde discourage them, whereas they shoulde be perswaded that he was the sonne of God: and therefore the conquerer of death. The seconde reason hee vseth to confirme them, is gathered of the neerenesse of the resurrection. But it is good to looke neerer into the words. Marke declareth that which the other two conceale, and as well the Apostles as other their companions, were heauy, and afraid, before that Christe tooke his Apostles aparte, and tolde them, that hee went presently to the sacrifice of death. But it is vncertaine why they were thus afraid, except it was because they had tryed before, that they had great aduersaries at Ierusalem. Therefore they had rather that Christe shoulde take his ease in some backe place, out of the reach or cast of the darts, then willingly to offer himselfe into the handes of so deadly enemies. And though this feare was many wayes corrupted, yet this was no small token of obedience and godliness, that they followed Christe. It had bene much better, if they had followed gladly and cheereully whether soeuer the sonne of God would haue led them. but this reuerence is prayle worthy, that they had rather abide troubles, themselues, then they would forsake him.

17. Hee tooke the twelue. It might seeme merueilous, when as all had neede of comfort, (for they were all afraid) why hee made onely the twelue priuy of his secreete. But I thinke that he would not therefore speake of it openly, least the rumor thereof shoulde be spread far abroad before the time. Further, when as hee hadde no hope of good to bee wrought presently by his admonition, hee thought it sufficient to commit the same to a fewe which shoulde afterwarde be witnesses of the same. For, as the seede cast into the earth, doeth not presently bring forth fruite, so we know that Christ spake many things to his Apostles, which brought not forth fruit presently. If that hee had admitted all without choyce to this speach, it might haue bene that many for feare would haue fled away, and haue filled the common peoples eares with this rumor. So the death of Christ should haue bin without glory, which he so rashly seemed to go vnto. Therefore he speaketh secretly to his Apostles: & yet he chole not thē as such as were fit to profit thereby, but (as I touched euen now) that they might afterward be witnesses of the same. But Luke dealeth more fully in this behalfe: for hee doth not only declare that Christ foretold these things, which were at hand: but the doctrine which he added withal, that those things, were fulfilled in the sonne of man, which were written by the Prophets. For this was the best remedy to overcome the temptatiō to haue some marks or notes euen in the shame of the crosse, wherby the prophets had noted the promised saviour. Now it is not to be doubted, but that the Lorde shewed also out of the Prophets, what profit they should hope for by his death. For the Prophets doe not onely teach that Christ should suffer: but they adde the cause, that he might reconcile the world to god.

18. Beholde, wee goe vpp to Ierusalem. Heereby wee perceiue that Christe was armed with diuine force for the conquering of the terrors of death. who witting & willing hastened to meete death. For why shuld he without cōpulsion

goe to that bloody butchery : but because the inuincible power of the spirite, vanquishing feare, hadde exalted him aboue all humane affectiōs. But in that he toucheth the circumstances more nearly, he doth therein giue a more euident declaration of his Godhead. For he could not by his humanity gesse, that after he was condemned of the Priests and Scribes, hee should bee deliuered to the Gentiles, that being entreated with spittinges vpon, and other reproches, he should be beaten with whips, and at length be caried to the punishment of the crosse. And it is to be noted, that though the Lord knew the infirmity, yet hee would not hide the most grieuous offence. For as we sayde before, there could nothing haue befallen more to the shaking of the mindes of the godly, then to see all the holy order of the Church against Christ. Yet to deceiue or to beare with their infirmity, he spareth not, but doth freely declare the matter it selfe, & sheweth the maner how to ouercome the temptatiō. that is, that they shuld certainly looke for the resurrection : but because it was necessary that he shuld first die, he appoynteth thē by hope in the meane season to waite for their triumphe.

24. But they vnder stood none of these things. What blockishnes was this not to vnderstand those things which Christ tolde them so plainly and familiarly, of no high nor hidden matter: but such, as they of theiues might haue conceiued some suspition of. But here it behooueth also to remember, that which I spake other where, they were therefore holden in so great ignorauce, because that when they had imagined that they should haue a ioyfull & a happy iourney, they accounted it for a great absurdity, that Christ should so reprochfully bee crucified. Whereby wee gather how much the mindes of men are bewitched with such false imagination, wherefore we must be the more heedfull, least we being tangled with such deuises, become blinde in the light.

shall drinke in deede of the cuppe that I shall drinke of, and bee baptised with the baptisme wherwith I shall be baptised. 40. But to sitte at my right hand, & at my left is not mine to giue: but it shall be giuen to them, for whom it is prepared.

This history containeth a notable spectacle of the vanity of man. For it teacheth that true & godly zeale is often mixed with ambition or some other corruption of the fleshe: so that they which follow Christe, doe looke some other where then becommeth them. Further, they doe wander farre out of the way, which are not content with Christ alone, but seeke this thing or that thing besides him and his promises. Neither is it sufficient to apply the mind simply to Christ at the first, except there be alwayes a continuance of the same puriue: because that corrupt affections doe often creepe vpon vs in the midste of the race, and draw vs backe into some crooked path. As it is credibly to bee supposed that Zebedeus two sonnes professed Christ sincerely at the first: but when they saw themselves in no small credit with him, and here mention made that he is toward a kingdom, their mindes are presently carried to a wicked desire, and they loath to remaine simply in their office. If this befalleth to the two chiefe disciples, it behooveth vs to walke very carefully, if we will not fall from the right course. Especially where any apt occasion offreth it selfe, heed must be taken least the couetousnes of honours shuld infect or poyson the desire of godlines. But though Mat. & Mark do somewhat differ in words, yet they agree in the substance of the matter. Mat. sayth that Zebedeus wife came & made request for her sonnes, that they might be placed first in the kingdom of Christ. Mark bringeth in them making the request themselves. But it is probable that they being ashamed to do it themselves, did craftily set their mother forwardes, who might the more boldly demand it. But that the motion came from them, it is gathered of this, that Christ answereth them, and not the mother. Also that the mother humbly shewed that she had somewhat to aske, before she would utter what she had in her minde. And they also in Marke doe generally condition, that they would haue graunted them what soeuer they shoulde desire. This fearefull insinuation testifieth that they thought euill of it themselves.

21. In they kingdome. This was praise worthy in Zebedeus sonnes, that they hoped for some kingdome of Christ, whereof there appeared not then so much as the least shew. They see him despised vnder the base state of a seruant, yea they see him despised and loathed of the world, and subiect to many reproofes: yet they perswaded themselves that shortly he shoulde bee a glorious king, because hee had so taught them. Sure a singular example of faith: but we perceiue hereby how quickly the pure seede degenerateth into corruptions, as soone as it is settled in our hearts: for they imagined the shadow of a kingdom, & presently they fall away and seeke for the chiefe rouses. Therefore, sith this wicked & vile couetousnesse sprang after a generall beginning of faith, which of it selfe was worthy to be prayfed, we must pray vnto God that he would not only open the eyes of our minds, but also that he would continually direct vs, and hold vs in the right way. He must also be intreated, that he would not onely giue vs faith, but that he would keepe vs pure from all mixture.

22. You know not what you aske. This their folly is to be condemned into two poyntes: first, for that they ambitiously desired more then was meete, then for that they imagined a vaine fantasie in stead of the celestiaall kingdom of Christ. Concerning the first, whoeuer not satisfied with Gods free adoption desireth to be aloft, goeth beyond his calling, and by thrusting himselfe in, further then is meete, becommeth vnthankfull vnto God. Nowe it were too ouerthwart a course to measure the spirituall kingdom of Christ, by the vnderstanding of our flesh. And certainly, the more such idle speculations doe delight mans vnderstanding, so much the more they must be auoided: as see the bookes of the sophisters, full of such vaine deuises.

Can you drinke of the cup. That he might reprove their ambition, and withdraw them from their corrupt desire, he setteth before them the crosse, and all the trouble which the children of God must passe through. As if hee should haue sayd: haue you so much leisure from the present warfare, that you now appoint an order for the glory and pompes of the triumph? For if they had bene earnestly giuen to follow their calling, they had neuer giuen place to this wicked imagination. Wherefore Christ in this sentence commandeth them which doe greedily snatch at the price before the time, to bee occupied in meditating the exercises of godlinesse. And certainly, ambition is best suppressed with this bridle, because that our estate is such while we wander in this world, that it behoueth vs to shake off those vaine delights: the enemy sometime setteth vpon vs with secret sleights, and those very many, and sometime he assaulteth vs with open force. Is not he worse then a foole, who amongst so many deaths doeth carelessly delight him in a fantasied triumph? The Lord commandeth his to be sure of the victory, and to triumph in the midst of death, because that otherwise they should not be encouraged to fight manfully: but it is one thing for a man in hope of a reward promised from God, to bend himselfe to fight chearefully: and to apply himselfe with all his force to this purpose: and it is another thing for men vnmindfull of the warres, forsaking the enemy and neglecting the dangers, to runne before vnto the triumph: which should haue bene wayted for vnto the time appointed. Note also that this preposterous speede, doeth for the most part draw men from their calling. For euen as the moste coward in battle doeth most greedily desire the pray: so in the kingdome of Christe none doe more desire the supremacie, then they which doe most flee all trouble and labours. Therefore Christ doth rightly tie them to their standing, that are pushed vp with vaine glory. But the summe is, that the crowne is prepared for none but them which strue lawfully: and especially, that no man shall liue and raigne with Christe, except hee bee a partaker of his sufferings and death before.

By the worde Baptisme, the manner of the Metaphore doeth plainly appeare: for wee knowe that the faithfull are instructed by Baptisme, to deny themselues to crucifie the olde man, and also to beare the crosse. It is to be doubted whether the Lord by the word cup, alluded to the misterie of the holy Supper : but because that then it was not yet in vse, I doe rather take it for the measure of afflictions, which God assigneth to euery man. For because that the Lord according to his pleasure layeth his burden vpon euery man, euen as the householder deuideth and parteth his portions amongst his household, therefore it is sayd that he giueth them his cup to drinke. But there is no small comfort in these wordes to alay the bitteresse of the crosse, while that Christ doth ioyne himselfe with vs in the same. For what is more to be desired, then to haue all things in common with the sonne of God? For by that meanes it cometh to passe, that those things which at the first shew seeme to be deadly, doe worke for our saluation and life. And who soeuer desireth to bee altogether without the crosse, how shall he be accounted amongst the disciples of Christe, who refuseth to be baptised with his baptisme? for this is nothing else then to withdraw himselfe from the first rudiments. And now as oft as baptisme is mentioned, let vs remember that we are baptised of this condition, and to this end, that wee should beare the crosse vpon our shoulders. Iohn and Iames doe brag very lustily, that they are readie to drinke of the cuppe, in the which the bolde confidence of the flesh appeareth : for when wee are without the reach of the dartes, wee seeme able to doe any thing. And that which befell shortly after, discovered their rashnesse. Yet this good was in them, that as menne ready for both estates, they offer themselues to beare the crosse.

23. Ye shall drinke in deede of my cup. Because they were his disciples, it was necessary that they should be made like their maister. And Christ telleth them before, what should come to passe afterwards, that they might arme theselues with patience: & vnder the person of these two men, he speaketh to his disciples. For though many of the faithfull haue that lot to die peaceably, & not a violent and bloody death, yet it is comon to al (as Paul Ro. 8 teacheth) to be made like to the image of Christ. Therefore they are all their life, as sheepe led to the slaughter.

It is not mine to giue. Christ by this answere derogateth nothing from himselfe : but only declareth that this office was not enioyned him of the father, to assigne euery man a distinct and proper seat in heauen. Hee came, that hee might gather all his into eternall life : and this ought to suffice vs, that there is an inheritance for vs purchased with his blood. But in what degree some shall bee placed aboue others, neyther is it our parte to enquire, neither would God that Christ should reueale it to vs, but that it should bee deferred vnto the last reuelation. Now wee vnderstand the purpose of Christ, that he disputeth not heere of his owne power, but onely woulde haue the ende considered wherefore hee was sent of the father, and what belongeth to his calling. And therefore he maketh a difference betweene the secreete counsell of God, and the office of teaching committed vnto him. A profitable admonition, teaching vs to be soberly wise, and not to endeuour our selues to breake into the hidden mysteries of God, and especially that wee bee not aboue measure, in searching the estate of the life to come. For it doeth not yet appeare, 1. Iohn 3. 2. what wee shall bee, vntill God shall make vs like vnto him. But it is to bee noted, that there is not an equalitie amongst the children of God, after after they shall bee receiued into the heavenly glory, but hee rather promisseth that degree of honour to euery one of them, to the which they are ordained by the eternall counsell of God.

Matth. 20.

24. And when the other tenne heard this, they disdained at the two brethren.

25. Therefore Iesus called them vnto him, & saide: ye know that the Lordes of the Gentiles haue domination ouer them, and they that are great, exercise authoritie ouer them.

26. But it shall not be so among you: but who soeuer wil be great among you, let him be your seruant,

27. And who soeuer wil be chiefe among you, let him be your seruant.

28. Euen as the Sonne of man came not to be serued, but to serue, and to giue his life for the ransom of many.

Marke 10.

41. And when the ten heard that they began to disdaine at Iames & Iohn.

42. But Iesus called the vnto him, & said to them: ye know that they which delight to beare rule among the Gentiles, haue domination ouer the, & they that bee great among them, exercise authority ouer the. 43. But it shall not be so among you: but who soeuer wil be great among you, shall be your seruant.

44. And who soeuer wil be chiefe of you, shall be the seruant of all.

45. For euen the Sonne of man came not to be serued, but to serue, & to giue his life for the ransom of many

Luke 22.

24. And there arose also a strife among the, which of them should seeme to be the greatest.

25. But he sayde vnto them: The kings of the Gentiles raigne ouer them & they that beare rule ouer them, are called Grauous Lords.

26. But you shall not be so: but let the greatest among you, be as the least: & the chiefe, as he that serueth.

27. For who is greater, hee that sitteth at table, or he that serueth? Is not hee that sitteth at table? And I am among you, as hee that serueth.

24. When the other ten heard this. Luke seemeth to referre this contention to another time. But whosoever shall wisely consider that 22. chapter, shall easily perceiue, that those speeches spoken at diuer times, were wrytten vp together with out regard of order. Therefore that contention for superiority, whereof Luke maketh mention, sprang from the fountain, that the sonnes of Zebedeus, ambitiously sought for the chiefe places in the kingdom of Christ. And yet the other hadde no iust cause to disdaine them: for when as the two were sharply reprobued for their foolish ambition, so that they went away from Christ with shame, what hurt tooke the other ten, by that foolish desire of theirs, which they obtained not? For though there was iust cause giuen the of emulation, yet the repulse of the others should haue appeased the. But the Lord would by this occasion discouer the disease that lay hid in the. for there was not one of the which would willingly giue place to the others, but euery man nourished secretly in himselfe the hope of the superiority. For it cometh to passe, that they enuy & contend amongst theselues: yea, that wicked desire raigneth in all men. If that this vice was grafted in base and obscure men, & brake out vpon light and almost no occasion: how much behoueth it vs to take heede, where there is woode for the hidden fire to burne, or matter to worke on. Therefore we see that ambition waxeth hotte amongst the mighty and honourable, and sheweth the flame, fair farre and wide, except the spirit of modesty doe quench from heauen, that pride that sticketh in the nature of man.

25. Ye know that the Lords of the Gentiles haue domination ouer them. First it is said that Christ called them vnto him, that he might reioice them apart. And we do gather hereof, that when they were ashamed of their desire, they did not openly complaine, but there began a secret whispering & grudging, and every one of them did secretly preferre himselfe aboue others. Further, he doth not generally declare how deadly a plague ambition is, but simply teacheth that there is not a more foolish thing, then to strue about nothing. For he declareth that there shall be no such superioritie in his kingdom as they did strue for. They therefore are deceiued, which doe stretch this saying to all the goodly in generall, when as Christ onely teacheth of that matter in hande, that the Apostles were very fond to make any question of degree, of power, or of honour in their estate and calling: for the office of teaching where to they were appointed, had no likelihood with the Empires of the world. I graunt that this doctrine as well appertaineth to priuate men as to kings and magistrates for no man deserveth to be accounted of the flocke of Christ, but he that hath so profited vnder the schoolemaster of humilitie, so that he will arrogate nothing to himselfe, but humbly applyeth himselfe to maintaine brotherly loue.

This is true, but the purpose of Christe was (as I sayde) to put a difference, between the spirituall regiment of his Church and earthly empircs, least the Apostles shoulde apply themselues to courtly graces and fortunes. For as every one among the nobles is beloued of kinges, so hee climeth vppe to wealth and office. But Christe sette Pastours ouer his Church, not to beere a Lordly rule ouer them, but to minister. So the errour of the Anabaptistes which doe bannish kings and Magistrates from the Church of God, because Christe sayde they were not like his disciples, is ouerthrowne: for the comparison is not made heere betweene Christians and prophane meane, but betweene offices. Note also, that Christe regarded not so much the persons of the menne, as the estate of the Church. For it might come to passe that hee which shoulde be the Lorde of a towne or of a Cittie, might also for necessitie execute withall the office of teaching. But it was sufficient for Christe to declare what the office Apostolicall woulde beare, and what was against the same. Yet it is demanded why Christe who appoynted distinct orders in the Church, refuseth all degrees in this place. For hee seemeth so to overthrow all, or at the least to make them equall, that none shoulde be lift vppe aboue others. But the course of nature teacheth vs a farre other order. And Paul describing the gouernement of the Church, forehearseth diuers offices of the ministerie, that he preferreth the office of the Apostles before the office of the Pastours: and he commanded Timothie & Titus without doubt by the commaundement of God, to be aboue others in authority I answer, if we search al things thoroughly, kings then selues doe not rule rightly and lawfully, except they serue: yee herein the office of the Apostleshippe differeth from the earthly gouernement, for that kinges and magistrates are not hindered by their seruice, but that they may rule and be ouer their subiectes with royall glory and pompe. So David,

Dauid, Ezechias, and such like, when as willingly they became the seruants of all men, yet were they adorned with the Scepter, Diademe, Throne, and other such Ensignes. But the gouernement of the Church admitteth no suche thing: for Christ gaue no more allowance to the pastours, then  $\hat{y}$  they should bee ministers, and that they should also together abstaine from Lordly gouernement.

Heere is also to be noted, that this is spoken rather of the thing it selfe then of the affection. Christ separateth his Apostles from the degree of kinges, not because it was lawfull for them to lift vpp themselves aboue kinges, but because there is a great difference betweene the estate of kinges, and the office of the Apostleship. Therefore when as it behooueth them both to bee humble and lowly, the Apostles must alwayes looke what forme of gouernement the Lord hath appointed vnto his Church.

As concerning the wordes, where Mathew sayeth, the Kinges exercise authoritie ouer them; Luke sayth, they are called gracious Lordes, or bountifull, both meaning one thing. As if hee should haue sayd: Kings flow in wealth, and haue abundance of riches, that they might bee bountifull and liberall. For though kings reioyce more in their power, and had rather to be feared, then to be loued yet they desire to bee praysed, and to bee accounted bountifull. Whereof they haue in the Hebrew tongue the name beuntifull, so called of giuing or bestowing: for the customes & tributes are payed them to no other end, but that they may haue sufficient for their necessary charges of their honour and glory.

26. It shall not be so among you. It is not to be doubted but that Christe reproveth the foolish imagination wherewith he saw the Apostles deceiued. It is foolishly and fondly done of you, to imagine that you shall haue a kingdome, which I abhorre. Therefore, if you desire to serue me faithfully, you must think vpon another course; that euery one of you doe earnestly apply themselves to serue others: But hee speaketh vnproperly, commanding him that will be greatest, to become a seruant, for ambition will not suffer him to serue and submitte himselfe to the brethren. I grant that they which doe aspire to honour, doe vse a seruile flatterie, but their purpose is nothing lesse then to serue. But the meaning of Christ is plaine: for sith euery man is caried away with the loue of himselfe, he sayth that this affection must be otherwise altered. As if hee should haue sayd: Let this be your onely greatnesse, excellency and dignity, to submit your selues to the brethren: let this also be your superioritie to be the seruantes of all.

28. As the Sonne of man. Christ confirmeth the former doctrine by his owne example, because he had willingly humbled himselfe, and taken vppon him the estate of a seruant, as Paule also teacheth, Phil. 2. 7. Further, that hee might more euidently declare howe farre he was from such ambitious pompe, he calleth them backe to his death: as if hee should haue sayde: Because I haue chosen you in honour next vnto my selfe, corrupt ambition prouoketh you to desire to raigne. I (after whose example you should frame your life) came not to lift vp my selfe, or to take vpon me any kingly dignitie: but doe rather take vpon mee the shame of the crosse, together with the base and contemptible estate of the flesh.

If any man object that Christ was therefore exalted of the father, that every knee should bow before him, is easily answered, for that he now sayth, is to be referred to the time of his humiliation. Therefore it is added by Luke, that he was so conuersant amongst them, as if he were their seruant: not that hee was inferiour to them, either in shewe or in title, or in deede (for he would be acknowledged for their master and Lord) but because he humbled himselfe to so great lowlinesse, so that he submitted himselfe to beare their infirmities. Furthermore, it is to be remembered, that he compareth heere the greater with the lesse, as he doth in Iohn 13. 14. If I which am your Maister and your Lord, haue washed your feete, much more ought you to doe this one to an other.

To giue his life for the ransome of many. Christ doeth therefore make mention of death (as wee sayd) that he might withdraw his disciples from that peeuishe fantasie of an earthly kingdome. In the meane while, is the force and fruite of the same aptly and very well expressed, while he sayth that his life should be the price of our redemption. Whereof it followeth that our reconciliation with God is a free gift, the ransome whereof is no where else to be found, but in the death of Christ. Therefore in this one word, is ouerthrowne what soeuer the Papists doe prattle of their filthy satisfactions. Furthermore, when as Christe should ransom vs to himselfe by his death, so that this submission whereof hee speaketh, is so faire from derogating from his great glory, so that it greatly adorneth the same. Hee speaketh of Many not definitely for any certaine number, but for diuers. because he opposeth himselfe against all others. And in this sense is it taken in the Epistle to the Rom. 5. 15. where Paul speaketh not of any one sort of men, but it comprehendeth all mankinde.

Mat. 20.

Matke 10.

Luk 18

29. And as they departed from Iericho, a great multitude followed him.

30. And behold, two blinde men, sitting by the way side, when they heard that Iesus passed by, cried, saying, O Lord the Son of Dauid haue mercy on vs.

31. And the multitude rebuked them, because they should hold their peace: but they cried the more: saying, O Lorde, the sonne of Dauid, haue mercy on vs.

32. Then Iesus stood still, and called them:

What

46. Then they came to Iericho: and as hee went out of Iericho with his Disciples, and a great multitude, Bartimus the sonne of Timeus, a blinde man sate by the way side begging.

47. And when he heard that it was Iesus of Nazareth, he began to cry and to say: Iesus the son of Dauid haue mercy on mee.

48. And many rebuked him, because he should holde his peace: but he cried much more, O sonne of Dauid, haue mercie on me.

49. Then Iesus stood still, and commanded him to be called: & they called the blinde, saying to him: Be of good comfort: arise, he calleth thee.

50. So he threw away his cloke, and rose and came to Iesus.

51. And

35. And it came to passe, that as hee was come neare vnto Iericho, a certaine blinde man sate by the way side begging.

36. And when hee heard the people passe by, he asked what it meant.

37. And they sayd vnto him that Iesus of Nazareth passed by. 38. Then he cryed, saying: Iesus the sonne of Dauid haue mercy on me.

39. And they which went before, rebuked him & hee should holde his peace, but he cryed much more. O sonne of Dauid, haue mercy on me.

40. And Iesus stood still, and commanded him to be brought vnto him. And when he was come neare, he asked him:

41. Saying

What will yee that I should doe to you?
 33. They sayde to him: Lord, that our eyes may be opened.
 34. And Iesus moued with compassion, touched their eyes, & immediately their eyes receiued sight, & they followed him

§ 1. And Iesus answered and saide vnto him: What wilt thou that I do vnto thee
 And the blinde sayde vnto him: lord that I may receiue sight.
 § 2. Then Iesus said vnto him: Goe thy way, thy faith hath sau'd thee. And by and by, hee receiued his sight, and followed Iesus in the way.

41. Saying, what wilt thou that I doe vnto thee? And he said, Lord, that I may receiue my sight.
 42. And Iesus sayd vnto him: receiue thy sight, thy faith hath sau'd thee.
 43. Then immediately hee receiued his sight, and followed him praying GOD: and all the people, when they sawe this, gaue prayse to God.

29. And as they departed thence. Olander seemeth very subtilly, to make of one blinde man foure. But his deuise is very friuolous. Because he sawe the Euangelistes differ in many wordes, he imagined that hee gaue one blinde man his sight at his entrance into the city: but the second and two others had their sight giuen them, when Christ departed thence. But all the circumstances doe so agree, that no wise man will belecue that they entreate of diuerse hystories. For ( that I may omit the rest ) when they that followed Christe, endeouored first to make him hold his peace, and sawe him healed beyond their expectation would they so soone haue attempted the like in the other three? But it is not needefull to follow euery point, out of the which eucry man may gather easily, that they doe set down one and the same hystorie. But the difference offendeth them, for that Matthew and Marke doe say that the myracle was wrought vpon one or two blinde men, as Christ went out of the Citie: And Luke maketh mention that it was done before he came into the Citie. Then that Marke & Luke doe speake but of one blinde man, and Mathew addeth two. But sith we know that this doeth often fall out among the Euangelistes, that in setting down one and the same hystorie, one letteth passe that which is reported of the other, and againe, that is more plainely expounded by one which is passed in silence by the other: it must seeme no newe nor straunge thinge in this present place. And I doe suppose that the blinde man cryed out as Christe came toward the Citie: but sith hee was not hearde then, because of the noyse, hee gate him into the way, at his comming out of the Citie, and then at length Christ called him.

So Luke beginning at the very beginning, doeth not prosecute the whole hystorie, but passeth ouer the time of Christes tariance in the citie: and the other two doe onely touch the time which was nearest to the myracle. And it may bee coniectured, that Christe oft times for the tryall of the faith of men, doth sometimes deferre them, and so hee tryed this blinde man. The seconde knotte is easily loosed: for wee haue scene in an other place before, that Marke and Luke reported, that one man possessed with a deuill was healed, where Mathew nameth two, euen as in this place, & yet they disagree not. But it may rather be coniectured, when one blind man at the first sought for help of Christ an other was moued by his example, and by this occasion two receyued their sight. But Marke and Luke doe speake of one onely, eyther because hee was more knowne then the other, or beccause the power of Christe was as notably shewed in one as in two. And surely, Mark seemeth to speake of him that was so well knowne, and therefore setteth downe as well his owne name as his fathers. For he doth not commend either his birth or his wealth: for hee was of the meanest sort of the people, a begger. Wherby it appeareth that the miracle wrought vpon him, was the more notable, because that his calamitie was commonly knowne. And this seemeth to mee to be the reason, why Marke & Luke doe onely name him, and say nothing of the other, who was as an inferiour addition. But Mathew who was as an eye witnesse, would not omit this other, though he was not so well knowne.

29. O Lord the sonne of David, haue mercy on vs. I sayd euen now, that one of these began to cry: but the like necessitie doeth easily driue the other to ioyne himselfe also with him. Also, they giue no small honour to Christ, in this that they desire him to haue mercy vpon them, and to helpe them. For they were perswaded that he had helpe and remedie in his hand, which they needed: but their faith is more to be maruailed at in this, that they confesse him to bee the Messias, whom wee know the Iewes noted with this title. Therefore they flie to Christe, not onely as to some Prophet, but the onely authour of saluation, which was promised of God. The crying doth shew the vehemency of their affection: for when they knew that their wordes were odious to many, that regarded not the honour of Christ, their earnest desire ouercame their feare, so that notwithstanding they freely lifted vp their voyce.

31. The multitude rebuked them. It is maruaile that Christes disciples, which followed him for dutie and reuerence, would driue these poore wretches from the grace of Christe, and as much as in them lay, stopt the passage of his power. But this commeth oft times to passe, that the greatest number of them, which professe the name of Christ, do rather hinder and stay vs from comming to him then call vs to him. If Sathan wrought by godly and simple men, which followed Christe for some religion, to bee a hinderance to these two blinde menne, howe much more will hee bring his purpose to passe by hypocrites and faithlesse menne, if wee take not diligent heede to our selues? Therefore wee haue neede of constancy, whereby wee may passe all stoppes and hinderances: yea, the moe stoppes Sathan layeth in our way, the more it behooueth vs to bende our selues earnestly to prayer: as wee see these blinde men doubled their cry.

32. What will ye that I shall doe? He doth louingly and gently aske, what they desire. For he had determined to graunt their requests: for it is not to bee thought, but that they praied with a special motion of the spirit. For as the Lord will not deliuer all men from bodily diseases: so doth he not allow them simply to pray after their pleasure. There is a rule prescribed vs, what we should aske, and how, and in what respect: it is not lawfull to decline from the same, except the Lord by the secret motion of the spirit, teach any peculiar and speciall petition. But Christ asketh them this question, not so much in respect of their priuate cause, as in respect of all the people. For wee knowe that the worlde denoueth the blessings of God without sense, except it be moued & stirred vp.

There-

Therefore Christe by this sayinge, stirreth vpe the multitude there present to obserue and marke the myracle, as he doth also moue them with a visible signe, while he openeth their eyes with touching them. When Matthewe sayeth that Iesus hadde compassion of them, it is not the participle of that verbe, which he vsed euen now in the person of the blinde manne. They besought Christe of his mercy, that hee woulde helpe them miserable creatures: but the Euangelist now declareth, that Christ was not onely moued of his free goodnesse to heale them, but because he was moued to sorrow and grieue together with them for their cuill. For the Metaphore is borrowed of the bowelles, where in humanitie and mutuall compassion resteth, which stirreth vs vp to helpe our neighbours.

M A R K E. 52. Thy faith hath saved thee. By the word faith, he doth not only name the hope of recouering of his sight, but a deeper perswasō that this blind man had, in this that he acknowledged Iesus to be the Messias promised of god. Neither is this to be thought to bee a confuse knowledge, for we haue seene before, that this confession was taken out of the lawe and the Prophets. For the blinde man did not rashly call Christ by the name of the sonne of Dauid, but receiued him for such a one, as he was taught by the promise of God, shuld come. But Christ ascribeth it to faith, that the blind man receiue his sight: for though the power and grace of God doth sometime extend euen to the vnbeleeuers, yet no man vseth his benefites rightly & profitably, but hee which enjoyeth the same by faith, nay, the vse of the gistes of God, is so farre from profiting the vnfaithfull, that it is rather hurtfull. Wherefore this saluation, whereof Christ maketh mention, is not restrained to the outward health, but also comprehendeth the curing and sauing of the soule. As if Christ should haue saide, that the blinde man had obtained by sayth, that by Gods mercy hee should haue his request graunted. If that the Lord in respect of sayth, bestoweth his grace vpon the blinde man, it followeth that he was iustified by sayth.

M A T H. 34. They followed him. This was a signe of thankfulnessse, that the blinde menne applyed themselues to follow Christ. And though it is vn-certaine, whether they did tary long in this office and calling: yet it was a token of a thankfull minde, to shew forth the grace of Christ in this iourney to many. Luke addeth that the people gaue the glory to God: which maketh for the assured prooffe of the myracle.

Luke 9.

1. Nowe, when Iesus entred and passed through Iericho,
2. Behoulde there was a manne named Zacheus, which was the chiefe receiuer of the Tribute, and hee was rich:
3. And hee sought to see Iesus, who he should be, and could not for the prease, because hee was of a low stature,

M m 2

4. What's

4. Wherefore he ranne before and climed vp into a wilde figge tree, that hee might see him: for hee shoulde come that way.
5. And when Iesus came to the place, he looked vp, and saw him, and sayde vnto him, Zacheus, come downe as once: for to day I must abide at thine house.
6. Then he came downe hastily, & receiued him ioyfully.
7. And when all they saw it, they murmured, sayinge, that he was gone in to lodge with a sinfull man.
8. And Zacheus stood foorth, and saide vnto the Lord: Beholde, Lorde, the halfe of my goodes I giue to the poore: and if I haue taken from any man by forged cauillation, I restore him foure folde.
9. Then Iesus sayd to him: This day is saluation come to this house, for as much as he is also become the sonne of Abraham.
10. For the sonne of manne is come to seeke, and to saue that which was lost.

Hereby it appeareth that Luke was not very curious in obseruing the order & course of times. For after that he hath declared the myracle, he now rehearseth what befell in the time of Iericho. And he saith, when Christ offered him selfe to all men, walking by the wayes, there was one Zacheus, who was very desirous to see him. For this was a signe of his great desire, that he climed vp vpon a tree, when as rich men for the most parte are proude, and challenge a shew of grauity in themselues. It may bee that other also desired the same: but Luke especially maketh mention of this man, rather then of any of the other, partly in respect of the estate of him, partly in respecte of the wonderfull conuersion of the man so sodainly wrought. And though Zacheus had not as yet faith planted in him, yet this was a certaine preparation to the same. For he could not so earnestly desire to see Christe without a heauenly instincte: especially to that ende, as it presently appeareth. For it is certaine, that some of a vaine curiositie came to see Christe from places farre distant: but it appeareth by the successe, that Zacheus had the seede of godlinesse in his minde. So the Lord before he manifesteth himselfe vnto men, doth often inspire them with a blinde affectiō, whereby they are caried to him, whome they haue not yet knowne nor seene. And though they haue no certaine apparant reason why they doe so, yet he deceiueth them not: but reuealeth himselfe in time vnto them.

5. Zacheus, come downe at once, for this day I must. An example of grace worthy to be remembered, in that the Lord preuenteth Zacheus, and taryeth not for his bidding, but of himselfe seeketh entertainment at his house. We know how odious & how detestable the name of a Publican was, & that doth Luke shortly after declare. Therefore it was great kindnes of the sonne of God to come to him, whose company the cōmon people abhorred, and that before hee was bidden. But it is no meruaile that hee doeth him this honour, whome hee had drawne vnto him by the secreete motion of the spirite before : for it was a more excellent gifte, to dwell in his heart, then to enter into his house. And by this speach hee declareth that men which doe sincerely desire to knowe him, shall neuer seeke him in vaine. For Zacheus obtaineth muche more then he hoped for. Further, the force and direction of the holy Ghoste doeth more plainly appeare in this, that Zacheus obeyed so readily, and came so speedily from the tree, and receiued Christ with ioy. For though he had not as yet a perfect faith, yet this readinesse to learne, and obedience, was a beginning of faith.

7. When all they sawe it. The inhabitants of the towne doe murmure, and so it may be that some of them that followed Christ, did, because that he went in to a man dis famed and of an euill name, yet when no manne bad him. So, when as the world neglecteth the grace of God offered vnto it, it murmureth and grudgeth that it is bestowed vpon others. But let vs see how far their grudging is from equitie: they thinke it an absurd thing that Christ should make that account of that wicked manne. For Sinner is not taken heere in the common sense, as in diuers other places: but it signifieth a man of a filthy and notorious euill life. Let vs grant that Zacheus was such a man: yet it must first bee considered, for what purpose Christ chose to lodge at his house. For while they murmured without the doore, god mightely shewing the glory of his name within confuted their wicked cauill. For the conuersion of Zacheus, was a wonderfull worke of God: yet there was no iust cause why they should speake so infamously of Zacheus. Hee was a receiuer of custome: and of it selfe it was not wicked to gather customes. but the Iewes were odious and enuious against that sort of people, because they thought it not meet for them to be tributaries. But what maner of man soeuer Zacheus was Christ was yet to be praysed, and not to be blamed for his kindnesse for helping this miserable manne: in that hee brought him from destruction to saluation. For that offence feared him not, but that he went forward to doe that which his father commanded. And it behooueth all the ministers of the Gospell to haue this courage, that they should make more account of the saluation of one soule, then of the murmuring words of all the wicked, and therefore, though they see their deedes and al their sayings subiect to scanders, yet they should not cease from their office.

8. And Zacheus stood forth. Christes worke may bee iudged of by this comming forth: but men make such preposterous haste, that they leaue no place to God. Also Zacheus conuersion is described by the fruiues and the outward signes, because it was probable that he increased his wealth, by the hindrance of many men, he is readie if he hath defrauded any man, to restore foure fold: furthermore he bequeatheth halfe of his goods to the poore. Some man might in deede haue bestowed all his goods vpon the poore, whose liberalitie yet might be nothing accounted of before God: but though heere be no mention made of the inward repentance, yet Luke meaneth that this godly purpose which hee commendeth in Zacheus, sprang from that lively roote. So Paule speaking of repentance, exhorteth vs so to behaue our selues, that menne may thereby vnderstand that wee are become better. Let him that steale steale no more: but let him rather lab our and worke with his hands, that hee may haue to helpe the poore and needie, Ephes. 4. 28. Therefore wee must begin at our heart, but our repentance must be shewed by our workes. But let vs note that Zacheus would not offer to God a portion of those things which hee had gotten by spoyle, as many rich men doe give a part of their thestes to God, that they might haue the more libertie to spoyle afterwarde, and they may goe free for the wrongs they haue done before. But Zacheus doeth so sacrifice the one halfe of his goodes to God, that hee also recompenceth what iniuries so euer he hath done. So Zacheus is not onely ready to satisfie any thing he had gotten by fraud, but he imparteth his lawfull patrimonie with the poore: whereby he declareth that he is turned from a wolfe, not onely into a sheepe, but also into a shepherd. And now amending the faultes before committed, he renounceth those euill practises here after: as God requireth of his this first, that they should abstaine from all offence. But Zacheus doth not of necessitie binde others to follow his example, and to spoyle themselves of the one halfe of their goodes: but that rule onely must be kept, which the Lord prescribeth, that wee should yeelde our selues and all wee haue, to holy and lawfull vses.

9. This day is saluation come to this house. This testimonie which Christ giueth to Zacheus, declareth that he did not dissemble: neither yet doth he ascribe the cause of saluation to his good workes: but because that conuersion was a sure pledge of the adoption of God, hee doeth thereby gather very well, that that house should inherite saluation: and this doe the wordes also signifie. For because Zacheus was one of the children of Abraham, hee argueth that his house should be saued. Further, it is necessary that he which would bee accounted amongst the children of Abraham, should follow his faith: yea, the scripture giueth this commendation properly to faith, for that it putteth the difference betweene the naturall children of Abraham, and strangers. Therefore wee must knowe that that is principally commended, which is the cause wherefore his good workes doe also become acceptable to God. Neyther is it to be doubted but that Christes doctrine went before the conuersion of Zacheus. Therefore that was the beginning of saluation, the hearing of Christ teaching of the free mercy of God, of the reconciliation of men with him, of the redemption of the Church, and by faith to receiue that doctrine. Because that House is the masculine gender in Greeke, this place may be expounded two wayes. The olde interpreter referreth this to Zacheus: which iudgement I do also like best. Erasmus had rather translate it, that the house it selfe was the childe of Abraham: which though I doe not resell, yet I doe thinke that it is most aptly applyed to Zacheus. For while God adopteth the householder, hee also promiseth that hee will bee God of his whole house, by right the saluation reacheth from the head to the whole bodie. But this word Also, or And, is of importance: for Christe declareth that Zacheus is no lesse the childe of Abraham then the other Iewes, which in their pride despise him. And least his former life should seeme to haue shut the gate of saluation against him, hee reasoneth of his office, and prooueth that there is nothing in this change, that should offende any man: because hee was sent of the father to saue them which were lost.

Math. 25.

14. For the kingdom of heauen is as a man that going into a strange cōuntry, called his seruants, & deliuered to thē his goods. 15. And vnto one he gaue 5. talents, & to an other two, and to an other one, to euey man after his owne habilitie, & straight way went from home. 16. Then he that had receiued the 5. talents, went and occupied with them and gained other five talents.

17. Likewise also, hee that receiued two, he also gained other two. 18. But hee that receiued that one, went and digged it in the earth, & hid his masters money. 19. But after a long season, the maister of those seruants came and reckened with them. 20. Then came hee that had receiued five talents, and brought other five talents, saying: Maister, thou deliueredst vnto mee 5. talents: beholde, I haue gained with them other five talents.

21. Then his Maister sayde vnto him: It is well done good seruaunt & faithfull: thou hast bene faithfull in little, I wil make thee ruler ouer much enter into thy maisters ioy.

22. Also hee that had receiued two talents, came and saide maister, thou deliueredst vnto mee two talents: beholde I haue gained two other talents with them. 23. His maister said vnto him: It is well done, good seruaunt and faithfull. Thou hast bene faithfull in little, I will make thee ruler ouer much, enter into thy maisters ioy.

24. Then he which had receiued the one talent, came and saide: maister, I knew thou wast an hard man, which reapest where thou sowedst not, and gatherest where thou strawedst not:

25. I was therefore afraid, and went and hidde thy tallent in the earth: behold, thou hast thine owne.

Luke 19.

11. And whiles they heard these things, he continued & spake a parable, because he was neare to Ierusalem, & because also they thought that the kingdō of God should shortly appeare. 12. He said therefore, a certaine noble man went into a far cōuntry, to receiue for him a kingdō & so to come againe: 13. And he called his ten seruants, and deliuered ten pieces of mony, and sayde vnto them, occupy till I come. 14. Now his citizens hated him, & sent an embassage after him: saying, wee wil not haue this mā to raigne ouer vs. 15. And it came to passe when he was come againe, and had receiued his kingdō, that he cōmanded the seruants to be called to him, to whō hee gaue his mony, that hee might know what euey man had gained.

16. Thē came the first, saying. Lord thy piece hath encreased ten pieces.

17. And he said vnto him: wel, good seruaunt: because thou hast bin faithfull in a very little thing, take thou authority ouer x. cities. 18. And the secōd came, saying: Lord, thy piece hath encreased 5. pieces. 19. And to the same he sayd: Be thou ruler ouer 5. cities. 20. So the other came & said: lord, behold thy piece which I haue laid vp in a napkin. 21. For I feared thee, because thou art a strait man thou takest vpp that thou laidest not downe, and reapest that thou diddest not sow.

22. Thē he said vnto him, of thy own mouth will I iudge thee, O euill seruaunt: Thou knowest that I am a strait manne, taking vpp that I laid not downe, & reaping & I did not sowe.

23. Wherefore then gauest thou my mony into the banke, that at my cōming I might haue receiued it with vantage? 24. And said vnto him: thou euill seruant and slouthfull, thou knewest that I reape where I sowed not, and gather where I straxed not. 27. Thou oughtest therefore to haue put my money to the exchangers, and then at my comminge, should I haue receiued mine owne with vantage. 28. Take therefore the talent from him, and giue it vnto him which hath ten talents. 29. For vnto euery man that hath, it shalbe giuen, and he shall haue aboundance, and from him that hath not, euen that he hath shalbe taken away.

30. Cast therefore that vnprofitable seruaunte into vtter darkenesse: there shalbe weeping & gnashing of teeth.

24. And he said vnto them that stood by, take from him that picce, & giue it him that hath ten pieces,

25. ( And they sayde vnto him, Lord, he hath ten pieces: )

26. For I say vnto you, that vnto all them that haue, it shall be giuen: and from him that hath not, euen that hee hath, shall be taken from him.

27. Moreover, those mine enemies, which would not that I should raigne ouer them, bring hither, & slay them before me.

28. And when he had thus spoken, he went forth before, ascending vp to Ierusalem.

L V. 11. And whiles they heard these things. This was a wonderfull thing, that the disciples being so oft admonished of the death of Christ, doe passe ouer to a kingdome. And this was a double errour: first that they dreamed of a blessed rest without affliction, then that they valued the kingdome of God after their owne fleshly vnderstanding. Whereby it appeareth how small and darke their faith was: for though they had tasted of the hope of the resurrection, yet that taste was so little, that they had not any thing certainly and firmly of Christe as they should. They beleue that he is the redemer, which was promised in times past, by whome they hope the Church shall be renewed: but that knowledge doeth presently vanish into fantasies, which doe either peruert or darken the force of his kingdome. But nothing is more absurd, then that so many a Impositions giuen them, shoulde be forgotten without profite. This truly was a heattly blockishnes in them, not onely to remaine secure and carelesse, but to hast as it were to the triumph, when as Christ had so lately and expressly tolde them, that his bitter and shamefull death was at hand.

12. A certaine noble man. Matthe we not regarding the order of the times, placeth this parable amongst others. But because his purpose was from the beginning of the 22. chap. to gather together the last speeches of Christ: there is no cause why the readers shuld much seeke what was spoken the first, the second or the third day, within so short a time. Now it is worth the labour to note, what Matth. and Luke doe differ amongst themselves: for when he toucheth onely one part, this latter toucheth two. Thus they doe both sette do. vne, that Christe is like to a noble manne, who going into a farre country to get a kingdome, deliuered his money to his seruants to occupy, and so forwards. But that other part is only touched by Luke, that his subjects abused the absence of the prince, moued a tumult, that they might shake off his yooke from them. Christ in both points bent to this, that the disciples were far deceiued, in that they thoght that they shoulde now haue a kingdome established, and that they went nowe to Hierusalem, presently to erect a glorious estate of the same. So the hope of a present kingdom being taken away, he exhorteth them to hope and patience. For he telleth them that they must abide many troubles a long time, & carefully, before they shall enjoy that glory, which they so earnestly gape after.

Into a farre country. Whereas the Disciples thought that Christe went euen then to take possession of his kingdome, he reprocueth this error first: because hee must take a long journey to get him his kingdom. Further, they which hunt after curious poyntes, doe subtilly dispute what that farre country should meane. I suppose that Christe ment no other thing, then his long absence from the time of his death, vntill his last comming. For though he sitting at the right hand of his father, hath obtained the rule ouer heauen and earth, and since he ascended into heauen all power is giuen, that every knee shoulde bow before him: yet, because hee hath not throughly brought all his enemies vnder, nor yet appeared as iudge of the worlde, nor manifested his glory, it is not vnaptly sayde that hee is absent from his, vntill hee returne againe furnished with a new kingdome. It is true that hee raigneth now, in that he regenerateth his into a heauenly life, and reneweth them after the image of God, and accompanieth them with Angelles, while hee gouerneth his Church by his word, preserveth it by his might, enricheth it with the gistes of the spirit, cherisheth it with his grace, and sustaineth it by his power: and to bee short, hee bestoweth vpon it what soeuer is necessary for the saluation of the same, while hee stayeth the rage of Sathan, and of al the wicked, & bringeth all their deuises to nothing: but because this manner of gouernment is hid from the eyes of the body, the manifestation of the same is properly deferred vnto the latter day. Therefore when as the Apostles did fondly take holde of the shadow of a kingdome, the Lord sayth that he must seeke the kingdome a farre off, that they might learne to abide that delay.

13. He calleth his ten seruants. The number of the seruants, is not so much to be rested vpon, as the summes of money. For Mat. speaking of diuers summes, containeth the more plentiful doctrine for that christe doth not lay the like burden of tranell vpon all men, but committing a small sum to one, hee maketh another ruler ouer more. They both agree in this, that Christe after a sort goeth a journey into a far country from his, vntill the last day of the resurrection: but in the meane while it is not meete that they should sit idle & do nothing: for euery particular man hath a certaine calling laid vpon him, wherein he should exercise himselfe: therefore they ought to apply their busines, that they might diligently further the Lords worke. Luke saith simply, that euery mā hath a piece of money giuen him, because that whether the Lord committe vnto vs more or less, euery man shall giue a like account for himselfe. Matthew (as I sayde) dealeth more fully and plainly, for he speaketh of distinct & severall portions. For we know that the Lord doth not giue to al men without difference, the like measure of gifts, but diuideth the diuersly as he thinketh best, that some shuld excel others, 1. Cor 12. 7. & Eph. 4. 7. Also we must know, that what gift soeuer the Lord bestoweth vpon vs, is committed vnto vs as money, that some gain should arise thereof. For there is not a viler thing, then that the graces of God (the force whereof consisteth in the fruit of them) should lie buried, & not be applied to some vnto

M A T. 15. To euery man after his owne ability. Christ doth not in these words distinguish nature from the gifts of the spirit. For there is no power nor ability, which is not to be acknowledged to be received from God. Therefore whosoever would part with God, shall leave nothing for himselfe. The what is the meaning of this, that the maister gaue to euery man more or lesse after his owne ability? That is, because God, as he hath disposed euery man, & adorned him with naturall gifts, so also doth he lay this or that vpon him, exerciseth them in doing of this or that, he callith them forwardes to diuers callings, he furnisheth them notably, for the worke, & giueth occasion for them to be occupied in. But the Papists are to be laughed at, while they do hereof gather that the gifts of god are bestowed vpon euery man, according to the measure of his deservings. For though the old interpreters vsed this word verue, yet he ment not that God would bestow vpon men, according as they should behaue themselves, and get the prayse of vertue: but only as the maister should esteeme them fit. And we know that God findeth no man fit, vntill he hath made him so. And there is no ambiguitie in the Greek word Dunamis, which Christ vseth.

20. He which had five talents. They are said to gaine, which do profitably employ what soeuer God hath lent with them. For the life of the godly is aptly compared to gaying by occupying, for they ought to deale to and fro for the maintenance of societie amongst themselves. And the industry which euery man applyeth in the occupying of the gift committed to him, & the calling it selfe, the faculty of well doing, and the other gifts, are accounted for marchandise: because they belong to this vse and end, that there may be a mutuall fellowship amongst men. And the gaine wherof Christ maketh mention, is the common profit, which setteth forth the glory of God. For though God doth not enrich nor encrease our works, yet as euery man doth profit most his brethren, & doth profitably apply for their saluation the gifts, which hee hath receiued of God: so is he sayd to profit or to gaine to God himselfe. For the heavenly father doth so much account of the saluation of men, that whatsoeuer is employed that way, he would haue it reckoned amongst his accounts.

Further, least wee shoulde waxe weary of well doing, Christe sayeth that their labour shall not bee in vaine, which doe exercise themselves faithfully in their calling. Luke sayeth that hee was made ruler ouer five citties, which hadde gayned five peeces: by which wordes he declareth that the glory of his kingdome shall be farre otherwise at his last comming, then it now appeareth. For now we labour and trauell as it were about the businesse of one absent, but then he shall haue great aboundance and store of honours in his hand, wherewith he will royally sitte vs vpp. The manner of speach set downe by Matthew is more simple and playne, Enter into thy maisters ioy: wherby hee declareth that faithful seruantes, whose labours hee shall allow shall be made partners with him of the blessed aboundance of all good things: but it is demanded what hee meaneth by this, which is added, Take the talent from him, & giue it to him that hath ten: for then all maner of occupying shall cease. I answer, that must be remembred, which I spake of before: they doe amisse, which do curiously search euery perticular poynte. But the naturall meaning is, that though slouthfull and vnprofitable seruants are now furnished with gifts of the spirie spirit, at length they shall be spoyled of all, that their wante and shamefull pouertie may turne to the glory of the good. Christe sayeth, that these slouthfull seruantes doe hide either their talent or peice in the earth. because they wil take no paines, while they prouide for their owne pleasures and ease: as we see many while they giue themselues to themselues and to their owne commodities, they doe flye all duties of charitie, and haue no respect of the common profite.

 Where it is sayd that the maister after his returne called his seruantes to an account, as the good may hereby receiue comfort, because they knowe that their labour is not in vaine: so againe it striketh no small terrour to the slacke and slouthfull. Therefore let vs learne before the Lorde commeth and reckoneth with vs, to reckon with our selues euery day of our owne accord.

24. I knew that thou wast an hard man. This hardnesse appertaineth nothing to the summe of this parable: and they doe gather a fond fancie, which do here dispute, how austerely and straightly God dealeth with his. For it was as farre from Christes purpose heere to note any such rigour, as to prayse vsuries, when as hee bringeth in the maister, speaking thus: Thou oughtest to haue put my money to the exchangers, & at the least it might haue increased by vsury. Christ onely declarcth that no excuse shall serue for their slouth, which both suppress the giftes of God, and consume their age in idlenes. Whereby wee doe also gather that no kind of life is more commendable before God, then that whereof some profite doth arise to the so. ietic of men. This sentence, To euery one that hath, shall be giuen, is expounded before in the thirteene chapter.

Also in the eight Chapter before, we haue taught, that the vtter darkenes is opposed to the homelight. For when as in olde the suppers were kept in the night, and had many torches and lampes to light them, Christ sayth, that they which are cast out of the kingdome of God are cast out into darkenes.

LVKE. 27. Moreouer, those mine enemies. In this second parte hee seemeth specially to reprocue the Iewes, yet hee toucheth all, which in the absence of the maister doe bend themselues to fall away. And Christe purposed not onely to terrifie such with denouncing of horrible vengeance: but also to keepe his in faithfull obedience. For it is no light temptation to see the kingdome of God shaken with the faithlesnesse and rebellion of many. Therefore that wee might remaine quiet amongst so many tumultuous stirres, Christ sayeth, that hee will come againe, and will bee reuenged at his comming of that vngodly falling away.

going down of the mount of Oliues, the whole multitude of the disciples began to reioyce, & to prayse god with a loud voice, for ai the great works & they had seen, 38. Saying blessed be the king & cometh in the name of the Lord: peace in heauen & glory in the highest places.

Christ sent for the Assē by his Disciples, not because he was weary of the journey, but to an other ende. For sith the time of his death was now at hande, his minde was to shew, what should be the nature of his kingdome.

He

He beganne to do ſo at his baptiſme: but this remained to be ſhewed towards the end of his calling. For why ſhould hee thus long abſtaine from being called king, and now at the length of himſelfe profeſſeth himſelfe to be a king, but becauſe hee is not farre from the ende of his race? Therefore the time being neere of his departure into heauen, he openly began his kingdome vpon earth. But this pompe had been very ridiculous. if it had not answered to the prophetic of Zachary. Chriſte challenging a kingly honour to himſelfe, entreth into Ieruſalem, riding vpon an Aſſe, a royall ſhew I warrant you. Note alſo that he had borrowed the Aſſe of another. Nowe in that he wanted a ſaddle & other furniture, ſo as his diſciples were compelled to lay their cloathes vpon it, was a token of vile and ſhamefull pouerty. He had, I graunt, a great company following him, but of what manner of men, but ſuch as vnaduſedly had runne to him out of the next villages? There are many ioyfull ſhoutes heard: but of whom? namely, of poore men, and of the baſeſt ſort of the people: as if he had of purpoſe ſet himſelfe to be ſcorned of all men. But becauſe he was to doe two things together, as to giue ſome ſhewe of his kingdome, and to teach that it is not like to earthly empires, nor ſtandeth in the tranſitory riches of this worlde, it was meete that he ſhould hold this very courſe. Yet this alſo might ſeeme a ſonde thing to prophane men, if God had not declared before by his Prophet, that there ſhoulde come ſuch a king to reſtore the ſauing health of his people. Therefore leaſt the contemptible eſtate of Chriſte ſhoulde hinder vs from beholding his ſpirituall kingdome in this ſhewe, let vs alwayes haue that heavenly Oracle before our eyes, wherewith God more adorned his ſonne vnder that contemptible ſhew of a begger, then if he ſhuld haue ſhone with all the enſignes of all the kinges of the earth. Without this ſauce this hiſtory will neuer bee fauoury to vs: therefore Matthews wordes are of great weight, when he ſayeth, that the ſaying of the Prophet was fulfilled. For when he ſaw that menne which are too much giuen to glorious and pompous ſhewes, can hardly be brought by their owne wiſdome of the fleſh to profit any thing by this hiſtory, hee leadeth them from the ſimple beholding of the thing to the cōſideration of the prophetic.

2. Goe into the towne. He borrowed not the Aſſe to eaſe him in his journey: for beeing come as farre as Bethanie, hee might eaſily haue gone the reſt of the journey on foote. But as kinges goe vppe into their Charets that they may bee ſeene a farre offe: ſo the Lorde woulde by this meanes mooue the people to looke vppon him, and by ſome token to ratifie the cries of his followers, leaſt any man ſhoulde thinke that they gaue him the honour of a king againſt his will. It is vncertaine from whence the Lorde commaunded them to bringe the Aſſe, but that it is ſuppoſed from ſome countrey village. For it is very ridiculous that ſome doe allegorically expound it of Ieruſalem. As vnapt alſo is that allegory which they doe coyne of the Aſſe and the Colte, they woulde haue the Aſſe to bee a figure of the Iewiſh people, which had benee before brought vnder and accuſtomed to the yoke of the lawe: and that the Colt whercon neuer manne had rydden repreſented the Gentiles. And that Chriſte did therefore firſt ride vppon the Aſſe, becauſe hee was firſt to begin with the Iewes: and that then he ſhifted ouer to the Colt, becauſe that he was alſo also in the second place set ouer the Gentiles. And Math. seemeth to note his riding vpon them both. But considering this figure Synecdoche is so often vsed in the scripture, it is no meruaile if he name two for one. But it plainly appeareth by the other Euangelistes, that hee ridde onely vppon the Colt. And Zachary taketh away this doubt: for because of the familiar vs of the Hebrew tongue, hee cleareth one thing wise. And anenye shall finde. Least he should hinder the disciples from yeelding a ready obedience, the Lord speedily answereth to these questions. And first hee telleth them that he sendeth them not at aduerture, when hee sayth, that at the first entraunce of the towne they shoulde finde a young Assle with his damme, then that no man should hinder them, but that they should bring him, so that they answered that he had neede of it. And by this meanes he proued his Gothead For it belongeth to God alone to know that, which is absent, and to bend the heartes of menne to yeeld consente. For though it might haue beene, that the owner of the Assle hauing no euill opinion of him, would willingly graunt it: yet to say whether hee should bee at home or no, or whether he would then lend it him, or whether he would giue credit to those men vnknowne to him, it was not in mortall men to say. And as Christe strengtheneth his disciples, that they might be the readier to obey: so wee see how dilligent and ready they saw themselves in obeying. And the successie declareth, that this whole matter was gouerned of God.

5. Tell ye the daughter of Sion. This is not in Zachary word for word: yet the Euangelist doth aptly and fitly apply that to all godly teachers, which God gaue in com mandement to one Prophet to declare. For this was the onely hope, whereupon the children of God shoulde stay and strengthen themselves, that the Redemer should come at the length. And therefore the Prophet teacheth that the comming of Christ should bring full and perfect matter of reioycing to the faithfull. For because God is not otherwise mercifull to them, but by putting a Mediatour betweene them, and the same Mediatour is he which deliuered his from all euils, what can there be without him, that can comfort men lost by their owne sinnes, & oppressed with miseries. And as Christ being absent, it is of necessitie that we shuld be altogether ouerwhelmed with sorow: so againe the Prophet telleth the faithfull, that they haue iust cause to reioyce, when the Redemer is presēt with thē. And though he comendeth Christ with other titles, as that he is iust and furnished with saluation: yet Mattheu tooke but that one poynt, which serued for his purpose, namely, that he shuld come poor or meeke, that is vnlike to earthly kings, which excell in royall and pompous estate. And this is added as a token of his pouerty, that he should ride vpon an Assle, or the Colt of an Assle. For it is not to be doubted, but that hee opposeth this meane manner of riding, against a princely pompe.

6. The disciples were. It is already spoken before, that the disciples are here commended for their diligence and readines to obey. For the authority of Christe was not so great that his bare name shoulde suffice to moue straungers. Alto it was to be feared, least they shuld be charged with theft. Therefore it doth hereby appeare, how much they credited the maister, in that they answered not againe, but trusting to his promise, they hasted to execute that which they were commaunded.

Let vs also learne by their example, to goe through all lets and hinderances, that we may obey the Lord in those thinges, which he requireth of vs. For all lets set aside, he shall finde passage, and he will not suffer our endeour to be in vaine,

8. And a great multitude. The Euangelistes doe heere declare, that the people acknowledged Christ as a king. But it might seeme to bee but a iest, that the simple people by cutting downe of boughes, and spreading of garmentes in the way, should giue to Christ the vaine title of a king. Yet as they did this in earnest, and testified their obedience from their heart: so Christ accounted the as fit herauldes or proclaymers of his kingdome. Neyther is ther any cause why wee should maruaile at such a beginning, when as at this day also he now sitting at the right hande of his father, euen from his heauenly throne calleth obscure men, by whom his maiestie is set forth in base maner. That they cut downe the boughes of Palmes (as many interpreters doe gesse) according to an auncient and solemne cuitome of that day, I see no probabilitie nor likelihood. But it rather appeareth that they were moued with a so daine instinct of the spirite, to giue this honour to Christ, when as the disciples, which were examples of this matter to the rest of the multitude, had thought of no such thing: and this also may be gathered out of Lukes wordes.

9. Osanna the sonne of David. This prayer is taken out of the Psalme, 118. 25 Mathew also doth purposely set downe the Hebrewew wordes, that wee might knowe that these greetings were not rashly giuen to Christ, nor that the Disciples spake at randon without regarde, what wordes soeuer came vpon their tongues end: but they reuerently followed that forme of prayer, which the holy Ghost by the mouth of the Prophet had taught the whole Church. For though he speaketh there of his kingdome, yet no doubt, but that he had speciall regard and would haue others to haue regard to that eternal succession, which the Lord had promised him. For he had prescribed vnto the Church a perpetuall order for prayer, which was also vsed, when the wealth of the kingdome was decayed. So it came to passe by custome, that they eucry where vsed these wordes in their prayers for the redemption promysed.

And Mathewes purpose was (as wee touched euen now) to set downe in Hebrew a verse notably and commonly vsed, to declare that the people acknowledged Christe to bee the Redeemer. The pronounciation of the words is somewhat altered: for it should rather haue bene sayd, Hoschia: na saue, I beseech but we know that the words can scarcely be translated into an other tongue, but that somewhat of the sounde must bee chaunged. And the spirit did not onely teach the old people to pray for the kingdome of Christ, but also prescribeth the same rule vnto vs now. And when as God will not raigne but by the hande of his sonne, the same is noted in these wordes, when wee saye, Thy kingdome come, as it is more plainly declared in the Psalme. Furthermore, this praying to God, that hee would preferue his Sonne our king, wee graunt that this kingdome is not erected by manne, nor vpholden by the power of menne: but standeth inuincible by his defence from heauen.

He is sayd to come in the name of God, which doth not intrude himselfe, but taketh the kingdome at the commaundement and appointment of God

which is more certainly gathered out of Marke, where there is another crie set downe, Blessed be the kingdome that commeth in the name of the Lord of our father Dauid. For so they say in respect of the promises: because the Lord had sayd that he would at the length deliuer that people, and had appointed the meane of the restoring of the kingdome of Dauid. Then we see that the honour of the Mediatour, from whom the restitution and saluation of all things was to be hoped for, is attributed to Christ. But when as they were common, rude & simple people, which called the kingdome of Christ, the kingdome of Dauid, hereby we learne that this doctrine was commonly knowne, which at this day seemeth to be so strang & hard, because they are but litle exercised in the scriptures.

In Luke are these few wordes added, Peace in heauen, and glory in the highest places. Wherin there is no difficulty, but that they answer not to the song of the Angels, which we had in the second chapter. For there the Angels assigne the glory to God in the heauens, and peace to men vpon the earth: heere the peace aswell as the glory is referred to God. Yet in the sense there is no diuersitie. For though the Angels do shew the cause more plainly, why it was meete that glory should be song to God: (namely, because that by his mercy men enjoy peace in this worlde) yet the meaning is all one, of that, and this that the multitude now sayth, that peace is in heauen: for we know that miserable soules can other wise haue no peace in the world, except God reconcile himselfe vnto them frō heauen.

41. He wept vpon it. When as Christ desired nothing more, then to discharge that office layd vpon him by his father, and hee knew that this was the ende of his calling, to gather together the lost sheepe of the house of Israell: he desired that his comming might be to the sauing health of all men. This was the cause why he being moued with mercy, wept for the destruction of the city of Ierusalē which was at hand. For when he considered that it was chosen of God to be the sacred seate, wherein the couenant of eternal saluation should rest, & the sanctuary frō whence saluation shuld proceed into the whole world: it could not bee but that he should greatly bewaile the destruction of it. Also, when he should see the

the people which he had adopted into the hope of eternall life, miserably to perish through their owne vnthankfulness and malice: it is no maruaile if he could not refraine from teares. Some thinke it an absurditie that Christe shoulde bewaile that mischeife, which hee coulde haue remedied, but this knot is easily dissolued. For as hee descended from heauen, that by taking vpon him the flesh of man, he might be a witnesse and minister of the saluation of God: so tooke hee vpon him indeede humane affections, so farre soorth as was meete for the calling he had taken vpon him. And that must alwayes be wisely noted, what person hee taketh vpon him when he speaketh, or labourth for the saluation of men, as in this place, that he might faithfully fulfill the commandement of the father, it was necessary for him to seeke that the fruite of redemption might extende to the whole body of the elect people. Therefore for so much as hee was appointed a minister of saluation to this people, he bewayled their destruction in respect of his office. Hee was God, I grant: but as oft as hee supplied the office of a teacher, his Godhead rested, and after a sort hid it selfe, leatt it should be any hinderace to him in doing the office of a Mediatour. But by this weeping he declared, that he did not onely loue them brotherly, for whose sake hee was made man, but that God had also powred into his humane nature the spirite of a fatherly affection.

42. O, if thou hadst knowne. This speach is patheticall or affectionate, & therefore abrupt. For wee knowe that they which are moued with vehement affections, can viter but halfe their meanings. Note also that two affections are mixed heere together. For Christ doth not only take pitie of the destruction of the citie, but he also reprimoueth this vnthankfull people of a haynous offence, in that they refusing saluation offered them, pulled willingly vpon them the horrible iudgement of God. And the copulatiue which is put between is very forceable. For Christ doth secretly compare Ierusalem with the other cities of Iudea & of the whole world, in this sense: If thou also, which hast a speciall priuiledge about the rest of the world, if thou (I say) at least, which art a celestiall sanctuary vpon the earth hadst known. Presently there followeth after an other amplification gathered of the time. Though hetherto thou hast wickedly, vngodly and stubbornly behaued thy selfe against God, now at the length, it were time for thee to repent. For he sheweth that the day is now come, which was ordained before in the secret countell of God, and spoken of before by the Prophetes for the saluation of Ierusalem: This is the acceptable time (sayth Eiaias, 49. 8. and 2. Cor. 6. 2.) This is the day of saluation. Seeke the Lord while he may be found call vpon him, while he is neere, Esay, 55. 6. By this word peace he noteth after the Hebrew phrase all points of happines. He doth not simply say that Ierusalem knew not her peace, but those things which belongeth to peace: for it faileth often out, that men are not ignorant of their happynes: but the way & meanes (as they say) they know not, they are so blinded with malice. But sith this reproofe is mixed with mercy, let vs note that the excellent gifts menne are indued with, the greater punishment are they woorthy of, because that to their other sinnes is added a sacrilegious profanation of the heavenly grace.

Secondly, let vs note that the neerer God approacheth vnto vs, and proffereth the light of sound doctrine if we neglect this occasion, we are so much the lesse to be excused. The gate of saluation is alwayes open: but because he sometime is silent, it is no smal nor common benefit, when as he calleth vs vnto him with a loud voice and familiarly: and therefore there remaineth the sharper, reuenge for that contempt. But now are they hidde. This is not spoken for the lessening of the fault of Ierusalem: for her wonderfull blockishnesse is noted as a shamefull cause, why shee could not see God being present. I graunt that it becometh onely vnto God to open the minde of them that are blind: and no man can be able to see the miseries of the heauenly kingdome, but he whom Godlyghteneth inwardly with his spirite: but they are not therefore worthy of forgiuenesse, which pei. i. he through their owne beasty blindnesse. Christ also purposed to take awaye the offence, which otherwise might bee a hinderaunce to the r. i. and weake. For when as the eyes of all menne were cast vpon that cittie, the example of that Citie was of great importaunce of both sides cyther to worke mischeife or to doe good. Therefore least theyr incredulitie and pride contempt of the gospell should hinder any man, it is condemned of filthy blindnes.

43. The dayes shall come vpon thee. Nowe taking vpon him, as it were the person of a iudge, hee rebuketh Ierusalem more sharply. So also the Prophetes though they lamented with teares their destruction, for whom they ought to be carefull, yet they gather their courage and hearts, and fall to seuerethreatnings: because they know that not onely the care of the saluation of men was laied vpon them: but also that they were appoynted preachers of Gods iudgements. Further, he sayeth that Ierusalem for this cause should suffer horrible punishments, because shee knew not the time of her visitation: that is, they contemned the redeemer which was sent them, and did not embrace nor accept his fauour. Now let the cruelty of the punishments which they suffered terrifie vs least we with our sloathfulnes do put out the light of saluation, but let vs be carefull to receiue the grace of God: yea let vs speedily runne fourth to meere it.

Math. 21.

Marke. 11

Luke 19.

10. And when he was come into Ierusalem, all the Citie was moued, sayinge, who is this.

11. And the people sayde this is Iesus the prophet of Nazaret of Galile.

12. And Iesus wente into the temple of God, and cast out all them that solde and bought

11. So Iesus entred into Ierusalem, and into the temple and whē he had looked about on all things, and now it was euening, he went forth vnto Bethania with the twelue.

12. And on the morrow, when they were come out from Bethania, hee was hungry.

13. And seeing a figg tree a farre off, that had leaues, hee went

39. Then some of the Pharisyes of the company said vnto him, master, rebuke thy disciples.

40. But he answered and sayde vnto them, I tell you, that if these shoulde holde their peace, the stones would cry.

A litle after-45. Hee wente also into the bought in the Temple, and ouerthrewe the tables of the money changers, & the seats of them that sold dones.

13. And sayd vnto them, it is written, mine house shall bee called the house of prayer: but yee haue made it a denne of theeues.

14. Then the blind and the halte came to him in the temple, and he healed them.

15. But when the chiefe Priestes and Scribes sawe the meruailes that hee did, and the children crying in the temple, and saying, Hosanna, the sonne of David, they disday-ned:

16. And sayde vnto him,
hearest thou what these saye?
And Iesus sayde vnto them, yea: reade yee neuer by the mouth of babes and sucklings shou haue made perfecte the praysse?

17. So hee lefte them, and went out of the Cittie vnto Be-thania, and lodged there.

18. And in the morninge, as he returned into the Cittie,
he was hungry.

19. And seeing a figgetree in the way, hee came to it, and founde nothing thereon, but leaves onely, and sayde to it:
neuer fruit grow on thee hence forwarde. And anon the fig-tree withered.

20. And when his disciples saw it, they meruailed, saying, how soone is the figtree withered?

21. And went to see if hee might finde any thing thereon: but when he came vnto it, he found nothing but leaues: for the time of figs was not yet.

14. Then Iesus answered & sayde to it: neuer manne eate fruite of thee hereafter while the worlde standeth: and his disciples heard it.

15. And they came to Ieru-salem, and Iesus went into the Temple, and beganne to cast out them, that solde and bought in the Temple, and ouerthrewe the tables of the money chaungers, & the seates of them that solde dones.

16. Neither would he suffer that any manne shoulde carry a vessell through the temple.

17. And hee taughte, saying vnto them, is it not written, mine house shall bee called the house of prayer vnto all nations?
but you haue made it a denne of theeues.

18. And the Scribes and high Priestes hearde it, and sought how to destroy him: for they feared him: because the whole multitude was astonied at his doctrine.

19. But when euen was come,
Iesus went out of the citie.

20. And in the morninge as they passed by, they saw the fig-tree dryed vp from the rootes.

21. Then Peter remembered, and said vnto him, maister, behold, the figgetree, which thou cursest is withered.

22. And Iesus answered and said vnto them, haue sayth in God.

the temple, and beganne to cast out them that solde therein, and them that bought.

46. Saying vnto them, it is written, mine house is the house of prayer, but yee haue made it a denne
of theeues.

47. And he taughte daily in the temple. And the high priests & the Scribes and the chiefe of the people sought to destroy him.

48. But they could not finde what they might do to him: for all the people hanged vpon him, when they heard him.

23 For

21. And Iesus answered and said vnto them, verily I say vnto you, if ye haue faith, and doubt not, ye shall not only do that, which I haue doone to the figtree, but also if you say to this mountaine, take thy selfe away, and cast thy selfe into the sea, it shall be done;
